But to go to China or India from England a century ago entailed a long, tedious, and perilous voyage; it was the same to the South Seas. Hence the conditions of missionary life are now all different. In the old time the missionary might work his way from point to point, but that is impossible now. Solitary men used to cross over from England or Scotland to the Continent, mount a mule, ride off into the forest, make a clearing, win the friendship of some chief, and get hold of a few youths to whom they communicated the story of the Gospels. Thus the Gospel passed into Germany and Friesland. Sometimes it came to a country by means of a captive Christian snatched away from his home; he blessed his captors with the Word of Life; thus the Goths were evangelised. But in order to reach lands at the other side of the world, some of them difficult of approach, it was necessary to bring the resources of civilisation into play. If the early Christian used the grand old Roman roads, there was no reason why the Englishman should not use the appliances of his times. At first the sailing vessel, then the steamboat and the telegraph. Modern missions have wisely pressed every discovery they could use into the service of the Gospel.

J. P. G.

(To be continued.)

The Field and the Sower.

By REV. J. G. GREENHOUGH.*

He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world, the good seed are the children of the Kingdom.—Matt. xiii. 37, 38.

WE have here disclosed the ever-present missionary thought, the breadth and universality of Christ's interests, saving thoughts, and sympathies. The mind which seemed on most occasions bent upon and wholly engaged with the limited healing and teaching work that lay immediately before it, was all the while stretching itself out through immeasurable regions of service and labour. It is wonderful how from the very beginning He combined the nearer claims with the remoter outlook, the passing touch with the worldwide view, the love of the individual with anxiety for the race, the pity for the single lost or suffering soul with a compassion and a longing which flung their mantle of mercy and healing over all the nations of men. The eyes which seemed to be concentrated on the little land of Israel were really going over all the earth, searching among all the tribes of men for the sheep which were one day to compose the one flock under the one Shepherd. He claimed to be the Christ, but He rarely called Himself the Christ, because that meant the Messiah of the Jews; the name which He gave Himself and loved best was "Son of Man," because that made Him the property of all.

To have the mind of Christ is to have the mind which grasps the home field and foreign field in one, which yearns to save the one soul close at hand, and burns with fervent desire to save the world, which prays in the same breath for the outcast within a stone's throw of one's daily walks and for the heathen outcasts thousands of miles away. We have but a partial vision of Christ when we follow Him in his limited walks, and not in his illimitable thoughts, when we confine our prayers and philanthropies to the immediate circle in which we move, when we hear only the cries for help which beseech at our own doors, and are deaf to the moans and sighs and million-toned sounds of anguish which come from afar. None can know the depth of Christ's love who do not feel its breadth, and to be in close fellowship with Him is to let our pities go wheresoever He goes, and that is everywhere.

In these words our Lord expresses his grand conception of the essential oneness of the human family. The sower "is the Son of Man." He is of no nation, because all nations are as one to Him; the Jew is forgotten in the race. "The field is the world"; there is the same receptive soil everywhere. Humanity is one in its capacities and needs, which are universal, all-comprehending terms. Everywhere there are essentially the same emotions, the same longings and regrets; everywhere the same selfish elements, and thoughts which are higher than self. Everywhere there is some sort of conscience, some imperishable sense of right and wrong. Everywhere the heart of man is a surging sea of unrest and unsatisfied yearnings, and voluminous depths of hope. Everywhere man confesses by a hundred unmistakable signs that he cannot live by bread alone. Everywhere he is a praying creature, building altars, shrines, and temples, believing in the Unseen, and groping in the darkness for the feet of God. Everywhere man is a sinning, fallen being, unable to rise of himself; yet a receptive and infinitely improvable being, who may be purified and lifted up and redeemed; waiting in the darkness for the light which will make his world new; waiting in the slumber of his degradation for the kiss of the Prince of Truth to awaken him to a sense of dignity, and start him on some higher path.

Man at his highest reach is ever a falling creature, unless upheld continually by the grace which raiseth him. Without Christ, in the very centre of our civilisation man descends to the level of the savage, and almost lower. When the power of the Cross is not felt, very splendours become the cloak of a hideous shame, and our wealth and culture drag in their train rottenness and corruption. There are godless haunts both in Whitechapel and Belgravia, whose vices would put the barbarian to the blush; and there is no need to go to Africa, or any further than London or Paris, to see how deep down man can sink when he has no belief in God to hold him up. Take Christ away from our modern life, and all its brilliance, genius, intellectual power, and philosophical sentiments would not save it from rapid degeneration into polished licentiousness and brutality, or into a whitened sepulchre full of dead men's bones.

Our Lord also shows us here the immeasurable scope of his purpose, or, if we may so express it with due reverence, the grandeur, magnificence, and sublime comprehensiveness of his ambition, which claimed all for Himself. "The field is the world," nothing less than that. All need it in the same measure and degree: there can be no true vision of God without it, no soul cleansing and purity, no renewed nature, no immortal love, hope, and joy, no real human dignity, no ascending power, and no salvation. And this is the very essence of Christian thought and belief. It is the basis of all mission work, as it is the foundation of our personal trust and assurance. Our religion brooks no competitors. It is not one among many, it is the one. To doubt that is to deny our Lord's Divinity, and make his Cross of none effect. There may be faint shadows and problematic guesses of the true, but the true is revealed in one face alone. If the new doctrine of comparative religions touches his absolute supremacy, we reject it as blasphemy. There are books written entitled, "Christ, and other Masters." To me there is an irreverence in the very phrase, there is a covert attack on his Divine claims. We know no master that may be named alongside Him. One is the Master, and we assert for Him the mastership of the world.

If Jesus is not the only Saviour, He is no Saviour at all. If He is not the absolute truth and the whole truth, we are not sure that there is any truth in Him at all. On this every devout Christian takes his stand. If there is no other foundation on which we can build our hopes, neither is there any foundation save in Him for others. If He is not a necessity to the world, we might do without Him. Could you do without Him? Imagine the horror of great darkness which would pass across your vision if He were gone. Picture the gloom of Heaven above, the tastelessness of all human joys, the destruction of all human hope. Think of the barrenness of life, and the unrelieved awfulness of the grave. Even to hint at such a thing is to make you feel as if something were about to break within your heart. From yourselves you get the answer to the question, What is the world without Christ? You know that the world without Him is dead, because to you He is life, and you would rather die than lose Him; and you know that there is no other name given under Heaven whereby we must be saved. And surely all to whom his name is dear, who have felt his sceptre of love laid upon their wills and affections, and yielded themselves to his mastership, are one with Him in his world-embracing purpose; they are ever thrilling and burning with impassioned desire to bring all other hearts under his rule, they are one with Him in his searchings and his pities. There is in them a sense of unsatisfied longing and of very pain, because of all those places in the earth which have not yet heard the sound of his feet, and those millions of souls to whom his voice is still unknown; and they are ever praying the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth more labourers into that great harvest field which Jesus called "the world."

Blind at Peking.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be glad to hear that Rev. W. H. Murray is back at his post at Peking, as hopeful and energetic as ever in the prosecution of his good work for both blind and sighted. Although the war last year brought everything to a standstill, his scattered and blind scholars have now returned; and he is greatly cheered by finding that several missionaries have established classes, in which their converts have been most successfully taught to read and write by his marvelously simple system, which has now been adapted for the use of persons endowed with sight, as well as for the blind, for whose benefit it was at first devised.

I may remind your readers that it is a system in which the 408 sounds of Mandarin Chinese are represented by numerals. Hence it is called the Numeral-Type; and books in this type are printed by the blind students, both for their own use and that of their sighted brethren. As the duller old men and women, field workers, have already succeeded in learning to read and write fluently in periods varying from one to three months, it is evident that this invention is calculated to prove of the utmost value to illiterate converts in all Provinces where Mandarin Chinese is spoken; and as this is the language of about three hundred millions of the inhabitants of China, it must be admitted that the field open to Mr. Murray and his pupils is a pretty large one, and surely all who desire to spread knowledge of the Gospel in that vast land may well, not merely wish him success, but also do what in them lies to further his very up-hill work.

Last year, while Mrs. Allardyce and Miss Goode utilised the war scare as a good opportunity to revisit their home in Australia, they received several most interesting letters from the farm-women who had come to the London Mission in Peking the previous winter, there to be instructed by Blind Hannah, and who (some after one month, the others at the end of three months) had all returned to their homes rejoicing in being able to read and write as fluently as their literary countrymen can do after years of study of their own difficult hieroglyphics.

There is one matter sorely trying to even so patient a man as Mr. Murray, namely, that the rebuilding of his house is still postponed. In 1892 the dilapidated old Chinese house (which was on the little property when it was bought for the Mission) was condemned as being unfit to live in, its inhabitants being literally washed out of it, their goods destroyed, and lives endangered by the violent annual downpour of rain. It is in this really unsafe house that Mr. Murray is now living, with his wife and six little ones. Prices for labour, bricks, timber, etc., have risen so much since the war, that the modest dwelling that was sanctioned by the Home Committee cannot now be put up for less than £750.

It may be that some friend may be raised up, able and willing to secure the adjoining property (value about £2000), with its excellent Chinese houses all ready for use, and thus also securing abundant space for the development of the printing works of the Blind School, instead of everything being cramped as it is now.—F. FAITHFULLY YOURS,

CRIEFF, N.B. CONSTANCE F. GORDON-CUMMING.

* Notes of sermon at the City Temple on behalf of the London Missionary Society.

Letters from S. Africa.—18.

FROM BLOEMFONTEIN TO MORIJA.

WE left Bloemfontein at seven a.m. in a cart-and-four, and arrived at Thabanchu at two, where lunch had been hospitably provided for us by Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Dugmore. Our good friend Mr. Scott had written to his brother minister, who is the superintendent of a long-established Wesleyan mission, and we were sent on our way with a good man's benediction.

The Wesleyans are doing good work in South Africa. I have met with several thoroughly earnest evangelical and evangelistic men among their ministers.

Our journey was continued in another cart-and-four, a superior turn-out, kindly sent for us by Mr. Bateman, manager of of Messrs. John Newberry and Co. The life of Mr. Newberry is a romance in which alms-deeds and answered prayer (as in the case of the centurion of Cæsarea, Acts x.) are principal factors. He is a large shareholder in the Kimberley Mines, and those who read between the lines may recognise a reference to him in a previous letter.

THE LEEUW RIVER MILLS

Mr. Bateman is well known in evangelistic circles in England. He has been in his present important position less than three years, but he is evidently a right man in a right place, carrying out at once the enlightened business principles and the beneficent Christian purposes of Mr. Newberry, who in England and Africa is esteemed very highly in love for his work's sake.

I may mention the providential arrangement by which they were brought together. Mr. Bateman was seeking a position, and was led to insert an advertisement in THE CHRISTIAN—the only occasion of his doing so. Nothing came of it for a week or two, and he thought that this might not be the way in which he was to find what he desired. Mr. Newberry, however, chanced, very unusually, to scan the advertisements that week, and his eye rested on that of Mr. Bateman. It at once impressed him as coming from the man he wanted, and the engagement was soon completed.

Self-supporting missions are always an interesting subject. I think it has been found that a Christian missionary cannot with advantage become a trader; but a business man may with great advantage conduct his business on the purest Christian principles; and a business so carried on may and will become

A MISSION OF THE HIGHEST ORDER.

This is the case at Leeuw River Mills. As a business establishment it stands A1. A meeting for the English employés in Mr. Bateman's house, and usually conducted by himself, from 7.30 to 9 on Sunday evenings, is highly appreciated. I greatly enjoyed this meeting on two occasions, when I had the privilege of being present and taking part in it. Mr. and Mrs. Bateman are respected and beloved as Christians, no less than as directing business and household affairs.

Mr. Newberry has also provided a building for the coloured people, with an evangelist and pastor. A number of them are in church fellowship.

I need not say that the natives are treated in every respect as fellow-creatures ought to be—and that is saying a great deal. When a "boy" (they are called "boys" in South Africa, without reference to age) leaves the mills, he is always glad to come back again.

From Leeuw River Mills we proceeded to MORIJA, IN BASUTOLAND.

The friends of Rev. H. M. and Mrs. Dyke will be glad to know that although feeling the weight of years, and no longer able to be actively employed in the work, they are in fair health. It was a joy to meet them once more. We parted with the consciousness that our next meeting will be in the Home above.

We were welcomed by the brass band of the Mission, consisting of a body of stalwart young Basutos, who played several tunes in capital time and harmony, concluding with the National Anthem, as became loyal subjects of our gracious Queen.

This Protestant French Mission is superintended at Morija, its headquarters, by Rev. R. Henry Dyke, son of the aged couple to whom I have above alluded, and who for many years bore the burden and heat of the day. During our visit there was a conference of the brethren in charge of the various stations of the mission, nearly all of whom were present, so that although unable to see the other stations I had the advantage and pleasure of meeting the brethren engaged in the conduct of them.

No mission in South Africa is better organised or doing better work. Their schools are admirable, and their discipline and order exemplary. There are 223 scholars on the roll at Morija, and 7000 throughout Basutoland. The average attendance is seventy per cent.

The mission has been in existence about sixty-five years, and has now about 14,000 on the church roll. There remain, however, 200,000 heathen to be evangelised. Twenty or more European missionaries and about 250 native workers are endeavouring to overtake this mass of heathenism, and in preparing teachers who will go to the tribes around, where millions are without any knowledge of Christ. Men trained at the institutions in Basutoland are preaching the Gospel in Cape Colony, Orange Free State, Transvaal, Mashonaland, Bechuanaland (which is now part of Cape Colony), Delagoa Bay, and even to the Barotsi, north of the Zambesi.

In the day school, questions in arithmetic, and on Scripture history, Old and New Testament, were answered without hesitation. The teacher, Nathani, is the son of the oldest convert of the Mission. He was trained in Morija, and has never been away but for two short visits, and then he was eager to return.

A Theological School was commenced in 1882 for the training of native ministers. There is also a Girls' Industrial School at Thaba Bosigo, intended to elevate the position of woman in the tribe, by showing what a young girl may become when properly trained.

Rev. R. Henry Dyke says, in his "Switzerland of South Africa: an Account of Gospel Work in the Land of the Basuto" (1s. Morgan & Scott), that this and other missions are slowly but surely undermining heathenism. I believe they are. As one of the referees of the mission, I am glad to be able, from personal knowledge, to speak warmly in its praise. If our visit in any way strengthened the missionaries' hands in God, our own souls also were abundantly refreshed.

Since writing so far, I have received a letter from Mr. Dyke, in which he says: "The school gives satisfaction. From time to time something occurs to encourage us. This week it is one of the unconverted young men making a surrender to the Lord. Last week it was one of our teachers in receipt of £30 a year declining to leave his work for a salary offered him of £90. This is a rare case, and has given me much joy."

THE VISIT OF REV. C. H. YATMAN TO CAPETOWN, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., has been richly blessed of God. The arrangements were ably organised by Mr. W. G. Sprigg, the secretary, who leaves to-morrow, with Mr. Yatman for Mafeking, Kimberley, Johannesburg, and other towns. May God preserve their going out and their coming in, and may his power accompany their message!

Capetown, April 29.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Neglect of Christian Privileges.—A committee of the Church of Scotland reports an increase of non-church-going. The "lapse" is declared to be as great in the west ends of cities as in the east ends. There is a growing tendency in the young people of the fashionable quarters of cities to self-indulgence; Sunday is becoming more and more a day of mere idling, even a short time for church being grudged.

London P.S.A. Work.

THE annual demonstration of the London P.S.A. Federation at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, May 13, was opened by a conference in the afternoon, when Mr. Sunderland, the leader of a very large P.S.A. at Birmingham, introduced the subject of "The Mission of the P.S.A. Movement Inside the Churches." Rev. W. Bolton and Rev. H. F. Stead, M.A., also spoke, dealing with "The Mission of the P.S.A. Outside the Churches." A discussion followed.

In the evening a public meeting was held. Although the attendance was somewhat small, excellent addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Stephen (hon. sec. of the Federation), F. Hibbert, J. T. Parr (who had many interesting features to report from the Surrey Chapel P.S.A.), H. J. Shirley (Fulham), and others. The chairman, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., also bore testimony to the value of the movement.

London unfortunately has not yet taken hold of this P.S.A. movement with the thoroughness which obtains in some parts of the country, where it is not uncommon to have a membership of 700, 800, or even, in one or two cases, exceeding 1000. The largest membership in London is at Christ Church, Westminster-road (Rev. F. B. Meyer), and although the total number of P.S.A.'s in the metropolis is somewhat small, yet all report good work, and a forward movement. In connection with one or other of the various London gatherings, the following practical "helps" were noted:—Penny banks, labour bureau, clubs for men and women, music classes, recreation clubs, and other movements to brighten the lives of the people.

Throughout all the speeches there was expressed a very definite desire to use the movement as a means to bring the people under the sound of the Gospel, and it was satisfactory to find that the most successful P.S.A.'s were those where the Bible-lesson was definitely included in the programme from week to week.

Industrial Home, Venice.

THIS work (says a correspondent) has quietly gone on for fifteen years. As an Industrial Home for boys, it seeks to teach them useful trades, and to impress upon their minds the true dignity of labour. At the same time it is carried on with the object of leading the boys to Christ. It was begun by Mrs. Hammond, who still remains at its head. It has proved itself to be of God, by the blessing He has bestowed upon it. The Home now receives fifty boys, chiefly orphans, who are boarded, clothed, and carefully taught the work of the carpenter, the wood-carver, the printer, the book-binder, the shoemaker, and the ironworker. The spiritual blessing has been great.

If friends knew how easily many of the beautiful and useful articles made at the institute could be sent to England, by parcel post, they would become willing purchasers. Price lists would be gladly forwarded by Mrs. Hammond. Many reasons are leading that lady to feel that the time is approaching when she must give over the management into the hands of another. Earnest prayer is being made that God will choose some servant to whose care she may entrust it. At present she remains in Venice, and would be delighted to answer any letter addressed to her at 923, Canareggio, S. Giobbe, Venice.

Central Soudan Mission.

MR. and MRS. HERMANN HARRIS have returned to England from Africa. They purpose to spend the next twelve months in this country as organising secretaries, making known the characteristics and needs of the Soudan. Mr. and Mrs. Harris will be glad to receive invitations to conduct short missions, drawing-room meetings, etc., where they may speak on the need of the Holy Spirit, personal consecration, and responsibility to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Mr. Harris (St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.) writes:—"We hope by God's grace and blessing to go ahead, to thoroughly reorganise our Mission, to secure fresh workers, and to make arrangements for their being properly prepared and tested at a Training Home in England before they come to Africa."

Brothers Weaver in Glasgow.

THE month of April, with alternating shower and sunshine, has been a good month at Cowcaddens, and more fruitful than any April of recent years. Increase of natural light usually makes our work more difficult; the transition from the gloom and shadow of winter and early spring into lengthened days bring us smaller audiences of the class we are most anxious to reach. This April has been an exception, to some extent.

The announcement that the Brothers Weaver were to begin with us on April 5 awakened very considerable interest. The telegram announcing the serious illness of their beloved father, Richard Weaver, and the postponement of the mission for a week, was received with great regret. It was too late to make other arrangements. The Evangelisation Society, and Mr. W. J. Taylor, in the most generous way, laid us under special obligations by taking up the work. Several interesting cases of decision were recorded for the week.

The mission of the Brothers Weaver was begun on April 12, afternoon and evening. At the very first service there were some striking cases, especially of backsliders who were restored, and at the evening service there was very marked blessing. The church was crowded in every part, and the attention and interest were very intense, especially as Mr. Bewley F. Weaver described his father's last hours, and the triumphant notes ever and anon breaking forth amid paroxysms of pain and seasons of suffering. During the week the Bible readings, as well as the evening meetings, were largely attended, and cases of decision occurred at both services, Tuesday night being very specially a season of the Spirit's power. The following Sabbath evening brought a large congregation again, with increasing interest and blessing, which continued during the week, culminating on Friday evening, when the Mission closed.

The Brothers Weaver are able and earnest evangelists, and they are wonderfully blessed. Mr. Frank Weaver has a voice of great compass and strength, and his rendering of the Gospel in song furnishes a delightful and powerful addition to the service. Mr. Bewley Weaver has a great deal of his honoured father's spirit and method, while he is a clear and instructive expounder of Scripture. We have had the greatest possible joy and comfort in their work. We have as yet come into personal contact only with a portion of the result, but are satisfied the harvest will be both large and lasting.

WILLIAM ROSS.

WYND CHURCH.

The evangelists began a mission in this church on Sabbath, April 26, and continued for a fortnight. There had been much prayer for blessing by the church before the mission began, and all through its course the awakening converting power of God was visibly in the midst. The plain, direct, powerful addresses of Mr. Bewley Weaver, the tenderness and pathos of the Gospel appeal as sung by his brother, the deep and solemn interest of the large congregations assembling night after night, and the number of inquirers, recalled the experiences of Mr. Moody's first visit to this country.

It was deeply regretted, alike by the evangelists and by the local Christian workers, that the state of Mr. Bewley Weaver's health compelled him to retire for a period of rest, when the interest, and fruitfulness of the mission were still on the increase. A service of thanksgiving was held in the church on Wednesday last week, attended by many young converts and backsliders to whom God had restored the joy of his salvation. J. RIDDELL.

The "John Williams," of the London Missionary Society, left Sydney on March 31, for New Guinea and the other L.M.S. stations in the Pacific. She takes back five missionaries to their respective stations, Rev. H. M. and Mrs. Dauncey, of the L.M.S., and the following connected with the Wesleyan Missionary Society: Mrs. Fellows, Mrs. Fletcher, and Miss Tinney. She has a larger quantity of stores than usual for the stations, and has on board timber for building the houses of students and of native teachers at the new training college at Kapakapa, which is under the care of Rev. Dr. Lawes; also building material for other mission stations in New Guinea. At the valedictory service on the ship there was a very large gathering of ministers, students and friends, not only Wesleyan and Congregational but from other churches besides.

The Gospel at Epsom Races.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

WE are looking forward to another period of labour at the great Epsom Races, which take place on June 2, 3, 4, and 5. The crowds are so immense, the rush for godless pleasure so keen and absorbing, the open wickedness and blasphemy so saddening to Christian men, while the gambling evil ensnares so many thousands of all ranks and almost all ages, that courage and faith in no common measure are needed by all who would "stand up for Jesus" at such a time.

Nevertheless, the committee of the Open-Air Mission believe the call to this service to be imperative. Nearly forty years of experience have done something to instruct us as to the best methods of labour, the use of sanctified repartee in personal dealings with men, and the books and tracts most readily taken.

I most earnestly plead that your readers will "take shares" in this arduous enterprise by contributing the funds so urgently needed to carry it out, and by remembering the work in prayer. About sixty men will be employed during the four days, and several of them will begin operations on the preceding Saturday evening with a special view of reaching the gipsies who encamp on the Downs in anticipation of the races.

The cost of purchasing more than 100,000 attractive books and tracts, of the evangelists' travelling and other expenses, and of providing board and lodging, is very great, and our ordinary funds are not able to bear the strain.

FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

RACECOURSE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Nix, of the Racecourse Mission, writes:—I suppose, at the very lowest estimate, two millions of persons will visit the Downs during Epsom races. Is not this a call to Christians to do something to save some? The people will be there, let us see to it that the Gospellers are there to greet them. The Racecourse Mission has now been on the Downs for five days every year during the last six years. God has blessed the preaching, singing, and personal testimony. God has used our efforts in the salvation of some in whose hearts sin, greed, and lust reigned. He has done this in the past, and will do it again. This a call to every Christian reader. If you are a man, and can come, do so, for we want 100 men, full of faith, love, and the Holy Ghost, ready to do anything for God and the salvation of men. If you cannot do this, we want £60 in cash to pay for the tent, and towards this we ask you to send us as much as you can. We also want 5000 Penny Gospels, which the people are delighted to read; also half a million of tracts that put the simple Gospel in a nutshell. We also need provisions of all kinds. Let every Christian do what he or she can; but above all pray for those who will be engaged in the work. Address communications to Josiah Nix, 31, Rochester-rd., Camden-road, N.W., and provisions, tracts, etc., to O. L. Heatley, St. James's Hall, Royal-rd., Kennington, S.E.

Quests.

SHALL I wander afar for my life's chief joy,
To the side of the summer sea?

Or climb to the crest of the mountain peak?

Or bask on the lowland lea?

And attune my heart to the harps of May,

With their wild notes fresh and free?

Shall I revel in songs of the festal hall?

In communion of mind with mind?

In bowers of a lover's paradise,

Where heart with heart is twined?

Is all I can give or receive of earth

The blessing I need to find?

The storms will shatter the glassiest sea,

And the clouds will darken the bill;

The leaves of summer will fade and fall,

And hearts shall in death lie still;

While the mourners weep o'er their broken shrines,

With their altars black and chill.

Nay; but let me go down by the way of the Cross.

Through the portal of water and blood,

To the end of the quest, to the perfect rest

For the heart in the heart of God—

Where the purest flowers of the earth are abloom

On the borders of the road.

Donegal.

J. K.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 31.

DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM FORETOLD.—Luko xxi. 20-36.

GOLDEN TEXT (verse 33).

THIS address was spoken by our Lord on Tuesday evening of Passion Week, after his last words had been uttered in the temple. For the occasion of the address see 5-7, and Matt. xxiv. 1-3. The subject of it as given in Luke is the destruction of Jerusalem, and the great judgment at his second coming, of which that was the type. Verses 8-19 describe the troublous times immediately preceding the destruction of Jerusalem; verses 20-24 are occupied with the destruction itself; verses 25-36 with the coming of the Son of Man.

Explanatory (20, 21).—It may appear like giving impossible counsel to warn the disciples to flee when the armies compass the city. How would escape be possible at such a time? Yet it must be remembered that the first siege took place in A.D. 66, under Cestius Gallus; but that he, for some unknown reason, withdrew his army. As a matter of fact, the Christians did escape, and found refuge in Pella, a town of Decapolis, beyond Jordan. It is said that not one of them perished in the siege. They found their safety in obedience to Christ's word. Apply the lesson. "Vengeance" (22), i.e., punishment for the sins of the people. The Romans, and indeed the people themselves, by their own turbulence and fury, were God's instruments of judgment. Again and again the Scriptures had foretold this, so that the people were without excuse. Warnings of coming doom should prompt to repentance. If disregarded, the fulfilment of "all things which are written" is sure. Again, let the lesson be applied to those who disregard the warnings that concern us. "But woe, etc." (23). It is impossible to exaggerate the horrors accompanying the siege. Amid the densely-crowded city pestilence and famine did their deadly work, until parents treated their children with neglect and cruelty. (24) It is said that over 1,000,000 perished during the siege, and that 97,000 were taken captives. To-day, the Jews are scattered among "all nations." There are "3,000,000 in Russia, 1,644,000 in Austria, 562,000 in Germany, 105,000 in Turkey, 63,000 in France, 92,000 in Great Britain, and 250,000 in New York."—Cambridge Bible. "The times of the Gentiles" cover the whole period of Gentile monarchy represented in Nebuchadnezzar's vision (Dan. ii.). Until that period has run its course, Jerusalem will "be trodden down of the Gentiles."

(25) These signs are regarded by some as figurative expressions denoting great social and national commotions. But it is not improbable that they are literal descriptions of the remarkable signs which will introduce the end. (27) Only a literal personal coming of the Son of Man could be a fulfilment of these words. (See Acts i. 11). (28) For the meaning of the word "redemption" see Rom. viii. 23; Eph. iv. 30. (32) "Generation" here means probably the Jewish nation.

The lesson enforces the counsel, take heed (34), watch and pray (36), for these reasons:

(1) The coming of the Son of Man is sure. The fulfilment of one part of the prophecy leaves no doubt as to the other.

(2) It will be sudden and unexpected (35). The hour cannot be fixed. Like the Flood in Noah's day and the destruction of Sodom in Lot's day, it will come when men are not aware.

(3) It will find many unprepared (34). Could anything be more alarming than the words of Rev. vi. 15-17?

(4) It is possible to be ready for it. The signs of its approach may be welcomed by those who are prepared (28, 36; 1 John ii. 28). To be ready either for this event or for death keeps the heart at rest. When John Wesley was asked how he would live if he knew that he would die the next day, he answered, "Just as I intend to live now. I should preach this evening at Gloucester; and again at five to-morrow morning; then ride to Tewkesbury; preach in the afternoon; meet the societies in the evening; at ten retire to my own room; commend myself to my Heavenly Father; lie down to rest; and wake up in glory."

Female Orphan Home.—A large number of friends assembled at the Home at Tangle Park, Hampton, on Saturday last. The Home was founded in 1869 by Mr. Joseph Stevenson, for the care of orphan children, under religious influences. It cares for about seventy young girls, from the ages of four to sixteen. Mr. Albert A. Head drew attention to the Christlike work of caring for the orphan, and made a strong appeal for increased support. The secretary, Mr. Daniel Cooper, stated that fortunately they were able to keep out of debt, but it was a source of regret to the committee to have to refuse many cases because of their small income.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 24.

"AHAB DID YET MORE TO PROVOKE THE LORD TO ANGER THAN ALL THE KINGS OF ISRAEL THAT WERE BEFORE HIM."—1 Kings xvi. 33.

HIS sin was very aggravated, largely through the influence of Jezebel, his young and beautiful wife, who introduced the abominations of Phœnician idol-worship. This is why he is said to have exceeded his predecessors in wickedness. They broke the second commandment, and worshipped Jehovah under the form of a calf. Ahab and Jezebel broke the first, and chose other gods—Baal, the sun, and Ashtoreth, the moon. The inveterate love for this idolatry was connected with licentious rites with which these deities were served. What wonder that the land became corrupt when the fountains of its religious life were polluted at the source!

The connection between the declension of the spiritual life and the licence of impurity is very close. As the apostle Paul tells us in Romans i., the men that refuse to retain God in their knowledge are given up to the working of passion, and as they yield to passion they lose the sweet clear impression of the truth and nearness of the Christ. The first, second, and third thing to be said to young people on venturing out into the world, corrupt through many deceitful lusts, is, Be pure. The poet says that God's angels lacquer the holy soul. We know, however, that this must be the work of God's Spirit Himself, dwelling within us as light and fire. When the living Christ indwells the temple of the soul, the brute forms of evil are driven out; and when the heart is pure it sees God. Let the eye be single, and the whole body shall be full of light.

MONDAY, May 25.

"I HAVE COMMANDED THE RAVENS...A WIDOW WOMAN... THERE."—1 Kings xvii. 4-9.

We must be where God desires. Elijah spoke of himself as always standing before the Lord God of Israel, as though he were a courtier in the royal Palace. And he could as distinctly stand before Him when hiding beside Cherith, or sheltering in the widow's house at Zarephath, as when he stood erect on Carmel, or listened to the voice of God at Horeb. Wherever you go, and whatever ministry you are called to undertake, glory in this, that you never go to any greater distance from God.

If we are where God wants us to be, He will see to the supply of our need. It is as easy for Him to feed us by the ravens as by the widow woman. As long as God says, Stay here, or there, be sure that He is pledged to provide for you. Though you resemble a lonely sentinel in some distant post of the missionary field, God will see to you. The ravens are not less amenable to his command than of old; and out of the stores of widow women He is as able to supply your need as He did Elijah's, at Zarephath.

How often God leads us into seclusion and solitude! It is by the murmuring brooks of nature that we have our deepest lessons. It is in the homes of the poor that we are fitted for our greatest tasks. It is beside couches where children suffer and die, that we receive those preparations of the heart which avail us, when the bugle note summons us to some difficult post. Always remember that wherever God places you, God is pledged to you. The manna always falls where the cloud broods.

TUESDAY, May 26.

"SO AHAB WENT UP TO EAT AND DRINK, AND ELIJAH WENT UP TO THE TOP OF CARMEL."—1 Kings xviii. 42.

Such differences obtain still. The children of this world and the children of light are manifest. What though the bodies of four hundred and fifty prophets lay slain in the gorge of the Kishon; or that by one great act Elijah had hewn down the upas tree, the deadly influence of which had corrupted Palestine, or that the long-expected rain was in the air, yet Ahab must eat and drink. These are the things which the children of the world seek after. Their god is their belly, they glory in their shame, they mind earthly things. Watch and pray, lest you enter into this temptation. Let appetite be kept well in hand, your servant, not your master; and see to it that you are capable of such profound and absorbing interest in the things of the Kingdom of God, as to count the gratification of physical desire unworthy to be compared with the high delights of service, prayer, and communion with the unseen.

Though he must have been exhausted with the excitements and efforts of the day, Elijah must spend the evening hour with God. Though he knew that the rain was near, he felt that his prayers were a needful condition for its bestowment. Though any part of Carmel might have become his oratory, he sought the lonely solitudes of the summit with the outspread sea before him, that his soul might hold undisturbed vigil, and that he might see over the wide expanse of the ocean the first tokens of the coming answer. His attitude denoted his humility. His repeated injunction to the lad, his perseverance. His success approved his faith.

WEDNESDAY, May 27.

"BEHOLD, AN ANGEL TOUCHED HIM."—1 Kings xix. 5.

In all probability the angels often touch us, when danger is near, threatening our health and life, or when foul fiends step up to us with hideous temptation. They find us out especially when, like Elijah, we are alone and depressed, when nervous depression has crept about our hearts, and we long for death to end our long and weary strife. It was the lament of a holy soul on the verge of eternity, that he had made so little of the ministry of God's holy and tender angels.

It was very lovely for God to deal thus with his servant. We might have expected rebuke or remonstrance, chiding, or chastisement, but we would hardly have expected such loving gentle treatment as this. Is this the man who defied Ahab and all his priests? Is he not as frail and impotent as any? Nay, but God read beneath the surface depression, and detected the strong fountains of courage and devotion that lay beneath, only waiting to be called again into intense manifestation. He knew his servant's frame, and recognised that he was dust. He knew how to distinguish between the passing overstrain of the body, and the heroic temper of the spirit. So, He understands us in our fainting-fits.

Whenever these angel fingers touch you, whether directly or through the medium of loving mortal hands, you will always find the cake and the cruse of water. God never awakens us to disappoint us. It is an infinite pleasure to Him to awaken his loved ones to good things, which they had not anticipated. Will not dying be something like this! Jesus will touch us, and we shall awake in his likeness—satisfied.

THURSDAY, May 28.

"AS THY SERVANT WAS BUSY HERE AND THERE, HE WAS GONE."—1 Kings xx. 40.

This was likely enough to happen on a battle-field. It would not be possible to hold your prisoner, and to busy yourself about other things at the same time. It would seem that this man made a great mistake to concern himself about a number of trifles, when so serious a matter as his own life depended on giving all his attention to the custodianship of the prisoner entrusted to his care. But is it not thus that men miss the main end of life?

Busy here and there, and life is gone.—Many spend their days in mere trivialities. Like children they dig in the sand; like the butterfly they flit from flower to flower. A round of visits, a few novels, a good many hours of light gaiety; vanity, fashion, and amusement, these fill their days, and the days flash by, and life is gone. They have nothing to show for it. They have spent its priceless hours in laboriously doing nothing.

Busy here and there, and the chance of saving others is gone.—Lives touch lives, for the chief purpose, that one should influence the other. But too often we deal only with superficialities, busying ourselves in the slightest interests, but not seeking the real salvation of the soul of those with whom we associate. The dance, the game, the business relationship, monopolise our thought, and our friends are swept from us in the eddying whirl of life's battle, and are gone.

Busy here and there, and the knowledge of God is gone.—Remember how the birds caught away the seed of the kingdom, and be sure that, in the same way, the cares and riches of this world and the lusts of other things may enter in, and destroy the impression made on the heart. The ephemeral interests of life press hard on its real interests. Things that are seen and temporal obliterate the unseen and eternal.

FRIDAY, May 29.

"AND AHAB SAID TO ELIJAH, HAST THOU FOUND ME, O MY ENEMY."—1 Kings xxi. 20.

Ahab got his garden of herbs, but he had Elijah withal, who stood at the gate like an incarnate conscience. Men may get the prize on which they have set their heart, but if they have obtained it wrongfully, the conscience of the wrong done will haunt them, and take away the pleasure on which they counted so much, and ultimately bring them like a quarry to the ground.

We count our best friends to be our enemies, as Ahab did Elijah. The cloud that lights Israel is darkness to Pharaoh; the angel that protects Jerusalem, slays the host of Sennacherib: the gentle love which anoints the Saviour, instigates in Judas a jealousy which ends in murder. The God who shows Himself merciful to the merciful is froward to the froward. The cause of the alteration is to be sought within ourselves. The sun that melts wax hardens clay, but the difference is in the clay. To the widow of Zarephath, Elijah was an angel of light, whilst to Ahab he was an enemy. The difference lay in their hearts, the one being holy and loving, the other dark and turbid. What you are, determines whether Elijah will be your friend or enemy. The very lighthouse rock will be hostile to the ship that will not heed its warning. This is the sin that hath never forgiveness.

This word "sold thyself" is very awful. It underlies Goethe's tragedy of Faust, in which the soul sells itself to the devil for so many years of worldly pleasure. Alas, that men sell themselves for nought! A few promises which are never kept, are the price for which men commit the deed of blood against the Son of God and themselves.

SATURDAY, May 30.

"A CERTAIN MAN DREW HIS BOW AT A VENTURE, AND SMOTE THE KING OF ISRAEL BETWEEN THE JOINTS OF THE HARNESS."—1 Kings xxii. 34.

Every man we meet is clothed in armour; in other words, we all cover ourselves with plates on which to receive the thrust of accusation and reproach. "I only do as others." "I do not see any special harm in it." "My father did it before me." "I cannot help it." Such are some of the plates in the armour of the soul, and our work becomes abortive in so many instances, because we are content to belabour the plates, instead of striking home to the one place where the armour-joints are. Successful soul-winning depends on discovering the vulnerable part of a man, and striking there. But all this demands a very special discernment of spirits, and anointing of the Holy Ghost. Only so can we detect where best to bring about conviction, and make men know their need of the Gospel of God's grace.

Several conditions must be fulfilled. (1) Study well your own heart. (2) Be a deep student of the biographies of Scripture. Because every type of human character is delineated in Holy Writ. (3) Open your heart to the Holy Ghost, through whom alone you can discern spirits. He is a discernor of the thoughts of the heart, and will teach you to cut to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow of the soul and spirit.

[459]

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 20).

- 1.—v. 29, Solomon.
- 2.—v. 16, spoken by Christ in a parable.
- 3.—v. 20, a sick woman.
- 4.—v. 7, disciples.
- 5.—v. 8, the multitude.
- 6.—v. 11-12, the king and one of his guests.
- 7.—v. 6, John the Baptist.
- 8.—v. 50, Bartimæus.
- 9.—v. 5, the angel at the sepulchre.
- 10.—v. 7, Jesus and Mary.
- 11.—v. 22, the father and the prodigal son in the parable.
- 12.—v. 4, the angels at the sepulchre.
- 13.—v. 44, Lazarus.
- 14.—v. 7, Simon Peter.
- 15.—v. 58, Saul and Stephen.
- 16.—v. 39, Dorcas and Peter.
- 17.—v. 8, Peter and the angel.
- 18.—v. 13, Paul and Timothy.
- 19.—v. 2, rich men.
- 20.—v. 4, Peter speaking to wives.
- 21.—v. 14, the multitude of the redeemed.

No. 20 (first list).—Correct answers received from:—

Una Bell, Gertrude Ashbury*, Daisy Phillips, Enid Campbell*, Bertha Courtenay, Dollie Salt*, Marion Wilson, H. S. Dunbar, Maude Bryant, Melbourne, and Myrtle Perry, Elsie King*, Winnie Shaw, Marjorie Taylor*, Louisa Northcott, Violet Broxholm*, Edith and Sissie Mosson, Henriette Frizelle, Elsie Howell, Douglas Parkes, Susie Keen, Evelyn Foley, Dorothy Morrison, Muriel Palmer, Hilda Schaeffer, May and Harold Putook, Agnes Seth, James Matthews, R. H. and William Williams, Leonard*, and Lindsay Browne, Dorothy and May Vickers*, Edward and Doris Turner*, Ethel and Kathleen Light, Dorothy Arbuthnot, Elsie Hatcher*, Edwin Peters, Charles Bewdley*, Madeline Irwin, George Malory, Eric Annesley, Catherine and Martha Rogers*, Gordon Remington, Theodora Spencer, Kenneth Dunbar, Arthur Daw, Jack Irwin, Harold Stevenson, May Dring, Madge Cullen, Juliet Haines, Millicent and Wallace Bentley, Betty Stocks, Dorothy Cooper, Percy and Cecil Colett, Annie Cole*, Florrie and Bell Dance*, S. C. Morgan, E. J., May, and Willie Gilson*, Emily Bridgewater, Ethel Smith, Stuart Elliott*, Helen and Philip Willoughby*, Edith Cole*, Muriel McDougall, Maggie, Kate, and Bessie Fletcher, Rose Brant*, Annie Tawse, Alfred and Mary Greenacre, Winifred Nash*, Evelyn Shaw, M. F., Edith Harris*, Arabella Oswald, James Wick, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer*, Charlie Milledge, Helen Beckett, Mary Plumb*, Maggie Woods, Annie Cooper*, Daisy Groves*, May Pell*, Nellie Dowsett, H. Morris, Florence Judd, Clara Barnes, David Penman, Edward and Arthur Llewellyn, Nettie Drew, Louisa Dundas, Helen Jordan, Agnes Head*, Hofman Scott, Aline Izett, Victor, Willie, Nellie, and Florence Hellerby*, Bessie Scantlebury, Mary Tilley*, Edith Hayward, Flora and Marion Brighton, Lizzie Turner, Robert Reeves, Thos Guinness, Jack and Vernon Clarke, Mary Hull, Effie McCallum, Olive Tritton*, Hugh Tufnell, Phillis and Noel Wright*, Marion Spooner, Cecil Bradford*, Ethel Williamson.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 21).

1. Whose son was Abraham?
2. What promise did God make to him when he dwelt in Haran?
3. Why was Abraham's name changed?
4. How did Abraham treat his three visitors who came to him in the plains of Mamre?
5. How many times did Abraham pray that Sodom and Gomorrah might be spared?
6. How was his faith tried?
[Children under twelve may stop here.]
7. Give the reference in Hebrews to this.
8. What did Abraham buy from the sons of Heth, and why?
9. How old was Abraham when he died, and where was he buried?
10. Write out the verse in James ii. referring to Abraham.
11. Who was Melchizedek?
12. Give reference to him in the New Testament.

Personal Paragraphs.

Some of my young friends have been kind enough to send me boxes of flowers from time to time, and others have painted texts on small cards, etc. For all such thoughtful acts I must express my hearty thanks, and they have made me think that among the hundreds of little readers of this page there must be many who could do a good deal in this direction, not for myself personally, but through me for poor children suffering in hospitals or in their own homes. I shall be glad to receive on their behalf any number of bunches of flowers, with a text tied to each, packed in boxes, for distribution among the poor little ones who seldom see a flower, much less have one to call their own.

I notice that some children have given up the Searcher this quarter because, having failed a few times, they will not now be able to compete for next prize. Others say, "Whether I get a prize or not, I like doing the questions, because they teach me something about the Bible." I think you will agree that this last is the best motive, because a prize may be lost or forgotten in time, but the lessons learned from God's Word will be valuable all through your life.

HENRY HULL.—I am sorry to hear of the illness of your little ones. I shall hope to hear better news soon. LIZZIE SHINE.—Many thanks for your acrostics, but they do not deal with Scripture subjects. FRANK H. IDDS.—Answer the questions every week according to instructions given above them. ETHEL FIELDER.—Thank you for your interesting letter. R. EARDLEY BELL.—I am glad to use anything really suitable. MAGGIE MAILER.—Your interest is very encouraging. I hope you will be encouraged in your own work. "In due season we shall reap if we faint not." THOMAS RAYNER.—Many thanks for poem. NELLIE DREW.—Prizes are given in the last week of the quarter. Only those can compete who have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

A. G. T. GUINNESS writes: "I have two gold-fish; one of them died. I found it dead the first time I did these questions." Poor fish! JEANIE SCOTT (Canada) writes: "My sister Mia has been ill with spinal complaint for two years, and has had to lie on her back." Will my little friends pray for her? NINA COOTE.—Thank you for telling other children about the "Bible Searcher." I hope many of my nieces and nephews will do the same.

(For notice of Children's Special Service Mission see page 22).

UNCLE TOM.

Rev. John McNeill in Bedford.

THIS evangelist has passed a busy and blessed week in the charming town of Bedford. Throughout the past winter Mr. McNeill has chiefly confined his visits to the more populous of our English provincial cities. Bedford, though not coming in this category, has claims of a special kind. It has attracted to itself many residents of the leisured and independent classes, such as retired Indian officers; moreover, it is a great educational centre. A united committee embracing all the evangelical denominations in the town made requisition of Mr. McNeill's services, and the past week's meetings must have more than rewarded them for the special effort.

The spacious Corn Exchange was the scene of the daily gatherings from Sunday, May 10, to Sunday last, inclusive. It was thought that the Moravian Church might accommodate the afternoon audiences, but these also had to be moved to the Corn Exchange. The crowds that flocked into that building day by day and night after night, in the sultriest weather, proved once more the magnetic power of the Gospel message when it is presented in Mr. McNeill's winsome and powerful way. He still finds in the Bible narratives an exhaustless mine of expository illustration. We know nobody in the field of evangelism to-day, who, in the same degree, can make these old time stories live again when translated into the modern vernacular of the fireside and the market-place as Mr. McNeill does. A visit to a few of his meetings should convince the most critical that it is pessimism of the most hollow and pernicious sort to say that the old Gospel of the three R's has in any wise lost its ancient hold on the hearts and consciences of sinful men and women.

A member of our staff, who spent last Sabbath in Bedford, thus records his impressions:—

Many delightful and refreshing memories were called up by Mr. McNeill's meetings of the afternoon and evening in the Corn Exchange. They were the closing meetings of the mission, and were in all respects a striking tribute to the evangelist's unique gifts as a Gospeller. The place was packed on both occasions, standing-room and all. The heat, especially in the evening, was something phenomenal, but hundreds of people were only too glad of the chance of standing throughout a discourse that lasted a full round of the minute hand of the clock, without showing signs of weariness or inattention. It was a sight worth going a long way to see, and irresistibly brought to mind the words of our Lord, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." For that is eminently what Mr. McNeill does in all his addresses—lifts up and sets forth the living, ever near, and omnipotent Christ, as a full Saviour, a daily Keeper, a constant Companion and Friend.

The subject of the afternoon address was one well suited for the close of a mission—the working out of our own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Every clause of this famous passage provided a wealth of priceless and triumphant teaching, that fell upon the eager ears, and must surely long abide in the memories of the hearers. The exposition of the phrase "Our own salvation" was especially fine. In a few master strokes of description he showed how we cannot call any earthly possession really "our own." Our property may "go up in a fiery chariot, and come down in a shower of soot." Our wealth may take wings and flee away "without leaving any address." "The wife whom we fondly regard as our very own, may be taken from us, and we walk with broken heart behind her coffin,"—this with a pathetic thrill of personal experience in it. And so on; while the congregation were smiling and shedding tears by turns. "Our own salvation" freely gifted by God, and worked out by the power of the indwelling Christ, no man, and no circumstance, can take from us. It was a marvellously strengthening utterance.

For the last meeting of all Mr. McNeill rehearsed the story of Zaccheus, the case-hardened renegade tax-exactor—how he saw Christ; how Christ killed him with kindness; how Christ went to the house of the sinner (in spite of the murmurs of the self-righteous hypocritical Pharisees); how Zaccheus has long since been received into the house of his Saviour. All this and much more, told out with the help of every limb of the preacher's body and every fibre of his being, was as splendid and effective a piece of Gospel realism as could be imagined. We only wish that more preachers exercised like directness of appeal. It is a rare treat to listen to such discourses, which strike deep into the hearts and convictions of the audience in a manner too seldom experienced. Before closing, Mr. McNeill invited those who had received blessing of any sort during the mission to write to him in Glasgow, where he will be resting for a week. We should say that he will receive a good many responses, judging from the fact that, after the proceedings were over, it took the evangelist the best part of an hour to shake hands and give a parting word of counsel to those who thronged around the platform for this purpose. Among those who did so were some who had evidently been badly hit by the sermon. The folks in Bunyan's town will long remember Mr. McNeill's visit. He has drunk deeply into the spirit of the great Puritan tinker-theologian with whom the Bedford of the past is so closely associated, and made some telling citations from "The Pilgrim's Progress."

Mr. McNeill will conduct a short mission at Cambuslang, near Glasgow, next week, and early in June will close his winter's work with a twelve days' visit to Harrogate.

Perpetual Pentecost.

God's twice-told promise hath fulfilment met
In this his "afterward"! his seal is set
On Christ-cleansed souls; his Spirit is world-wide,
Out-poured on those who love the Crucified.

Christ's "brothers," doing God's high will, stand forth

To tell that mighty love from south to north.
What matter if sometimes their speech be crude,
Imperfect, so they be of God endued.

Christ's "sisters," too, the mystic baptism prove,
And veiled in meekness at his bidding move;
Nor fear the witness-bearing this involves,
The practical results of high resolves.

So God perpetuates his Pentecost,
The once-outpouring of the Holy Ghost!
He rests on willing heads in tongues of fire,
And giveth utterance to the heart's desire.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

Village Work.—Mr. C. E. Matthews, of Birkenhead, hon. sec. of the Wirral Villages Evangelistic Band, reports much encouragement in connection with the past work of this band in the villages between the Mersey and the Dee. They have now resumed work for the summer. Since they began work similar village bands have been formed in the district.

The Scripture Gift Mission.—Two beautiful additions have been made to the publications of this Mission, both in the small size, for general distribution: The Epistle to the Romans in English, and the Gospel of John in Modern Greek. The former, with its striking new sketches made in Italy and the Holy Land, will be greatly prized by Christian workers, especially among Roman Catholic populations, who may gather from its pages the true Apostolic teaching. The Greek Gospel is also beautifully printed, and will be specially welcome to workers in the Levant. The Mission sends a thousand copies of the former for £4 10s to any place in the United Kingdom, and of the latter for £5 5s to any part of the world, carriage paid. The manager of the Mission is Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-church-yard, E.C.

Rev. C. D. Helm, OF MATABELELAND.

"INSTEAD of the fathers, shall rise up the children." Modern missions have existed long enough for the children, if duly qualified and called by the Holy Spirit, to fill the fathers' places. Mr. Helm is an African missionary by descent. His father and grandfather were in the field, his grandfather on his mother's side was also a missionary. The subject of our sketch was born in South Africa in 1844, and became a member of his father's church. Desiring to be trained for missionary work, he came to London, and studied at New College, St. John's Wood. The London Missionary Society accepted him for service, and appointed him to Matabeleland in 1873.

Thirteen years previous to his arrival, Dr. Moffat had, with great labour, established a station at Inyati, and then twelve years later than that Rev. J. B. Thomson had opened a second station at Hope Fountain, which is ten miles from Bulawayo. Mr. Helm was first at Inyati for a very short time; then he proceeded to Hope Fountain, where he has laboured for twenty years. Mr. Carnegie has been his colleague for thirteen years.

It is a hard soil he has to cultivate. The country was first visited by Moffat when Mosilikatse ruled it with a rod of iron. The old chief was suffering from dropsy, and Moffat prescribed for him with much success. At the end of three months the missionary decided to return home to Kuruman, but he did not leave the Matabele without earnestly setting before them the supreme value of eternal things. Two years later he was constrained to visit the old chief again for the purpose of persuading him to receive missionaries. Had Moffat himself been able to stay he would have been welcome, but this was out of the question, therefore Mosilikatse threw in the way numerous vexatious obstacles. Overcoming these, Moffat set to work with vigour on building houses, and at the end of six months, when they were finished, he preached for the last time to the chief and his men, adjured them to stand by the missionaries, and with much feeling bade them farewell.

The history of Lobengula, Mosilikatse's son, is fresh in the memory of the public. His territory fell, at his death, into the hands of the Chartered Company.

For twenty-seven years Mr. Sykes laboured at Inyati with unshaken faith and undiminished zeal, but could hardly count one convert. During all Lobengula's reign there was the same barrenness at Hope Fountain. One cause would appear to have been in the savage nature and in the cruel deeds of the people, who were a terror to the neighbouring tribes. They would make a raid toward the Zambesi, capture a village and slay the men; hang the children feet upward on a transverse beam, light a fire underneath them, and burn them to death; take the old women to carry their burdens, force them forward to their destination, and then either kill them or turn them adrift to die. Matabeleland has been a habitation of cruelty.

Another difficulty with which the missionaries have had to contend has been the wandering habits of the people, who would stay long enough to exhaust the soil of their gardens, and make the settlement positively pestilential with impurities, and then go forward to another place. Bulawayo is a dozen miles away from the place it occupied some years ago. There are no large towns such as Khama had at Shoshong, and has now at Phalapye; the people are greatly scattered. Among them it is computed that there are 5,000 Europeans.

Mr. Helm has steadily worked on amid the physical and moral plague of this people, creeping in at the doors of their miserable huts, to visit the sick and dying; teaching their children where they could be gathered together; seeking to restrain their violence; and to guide their steps into the way of peace. And it has not been without its results; for whereas, at the first, Mrs. Helm had to sit and watch any article she had washed until it dried in the open air, it can safely be left now. There have even been martyrs for Christ's sake. One young man was condemned by a witch-doctor, bound, and thrown to the wolves. Another young man was clubbed to death in the missionary's presence, because he refused to go back and live as a heathen in his native town. Until the present outbreak the people were friendly and trustful as they had never been in Lobengula's or Mosilikatse's time; from thirty to forty children were regularly attending the day-school; and on Sundays the chapel was quite full with "earnest, anxious-looking faces." When the war with Lobengula broke out Mr. Helm's house was looted, and this time it has been burnt, and his property destroyed. Mr. and Mrs. Helm are now having their much-needed furlough in England.

Mr. Helm and his coadjutor, Mr. Carnegie, strongly desire to have some Christian artisans to teach the boys industrial arts, and at least one lady missionary to take charge of the women and girls, also some trained native teachers at the various smaller settlements. One such teacher can be obtained for £40 a-year, and four of them would meet the present need. Surely this dark land will get workers enough, and will yet turn to the Lord.

Sheffield.—For the past eighteen summers open-air services have been held in the Roe Wood, in connection with the Young Men's Bible-class, Pitmoor. This season's campaign was started on Sunday, May 3. These services have been a means of bringing the Gospel to many hundreds of people who resort to those woods on the Sabbath, but who would otherwise never hear the message of salvation. The prayers of all Christians are asked, that these services may be made a great blessing during the coming summer months.

From Rev. David Baron.

IT is close on a month since, accompanied by Rabbi Lichtenstein, I left London on my eleventh mission tour; and I am sure that the many friends at home who are following us with their prayers will be cheered with the news, and praise the Lord with us, for opening a wide and effectual door for us to witness for the Lord Jesus Christ among the Continental Jews.

We commenced with a special mission to Jews and Christians in Holland, and the ten or twelve days we spent there will ever be remembered by us. There were about 100,000 Jews in that small country, of whom nearly one-half are in Amsterdam and the rest are scattered all over the land. In relation to the Gospel, the Dutch Jews have always been supposed to be the most hostile and inaccessible, but even from among these, remarkable and bright trophies have been won for Christ and his truth. The conversion of men like Dr. Capadose, who became so eminent after his conversion, as a pillar of the Church; and of Da Costa, Holland's great author and poet, as well as others whose names are not so prominent in the annals of this world, but are written in the Lamb's Book of Life, is a great encouragement to the friends of Israel in the Netherlands to persevere in their prayers and efforts. At the present time, I was delighted to learn from Mr. Korff and Mr. Van Os (the two missionaries of the "Nederlandsche Vereeniging voor Israel"), there are as many as thirty believing and baptized families in Amsterdam alone.

Our first meeting in Amsterdam was most encouraging. The large building by the Amstel, which was converted by the late Dr. Schwartz from a theatre into a church capable of sitting 1,500 people, and which still belongs to the F.C. of Scotland, though they have no mission there now, was packed from floor to ceiling, and what cheered us most was to see such a large proportion of Jews. It was a magnificent meeting, and the power of the Lord was present with us. Rabbi Lichtenstein's account of how the Lord led him in his old age to a knowledge of Himself, after being forty years a teacher in Israel, made a great impression, and proved a blessing to Jew and Gentile. I followed with an address on the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow, both our addresses being interpreted into Dutch by Mr. Van Os.

In Haarlem, in the church of the Moravians; in Utrecht in a large hall; in The Hague, in the Nieuwe Kerk (one of the oldest and largest churches in Holland, situated quite close to the Jewish quarter, and where there gathered an assembly of about 1,800 people, among them many Jews); in Leyden, in the magnificent Marekerk; and in Rotterdam, in the ancient and huge Prinzen Kerk, we had crowded meetings, and exceptional opportunities of extolling Christ and preaching his Gospel to Jews and Gentiles. At our last meeting in Rotterdam, a considerable proportion of our audience (which numbered according to one of the pastors present altogether about 2,000) were Jews, among them some of the most prominent men in the community. At the close, a well-known Jewish advocate and two or three other Jews came to the vestry, and we had a very interesting discussion. Before parting, the advocate said, "Gentlemen, if Christianity had always been presented to us in the way you did to-night, all the Jews would have become Christians centuries ago."

We left Holland on April 25, and, after breaking our journey in Nuremberg and Passau, where we had opportunities for testimony for Christ among Jews and Gentiles, we arrived in Vienna April 30. On May 6 I parted from Rabbi Lichtenstein in his own home in Budapest, and, accompanied by Pastor Gordon, started on my journey for Transylvania and Roumania, but of our experiences since we left Holland I hope, God willing, to write you again.

DAVID BARON.

Grosswardein, Hungary, May 7.

MAY MEETINGS.

London Missionary Society.

THE annual public meeting of the London Missionary Society was held on Wednesday evening last week in the City Temple, Mr. D. Herbert Roberts, M.P., in the chair. The report which was submitted, was described as the "first report of the second century." The total receipts of the year for all purposes was £190,906. Of this amount £49,202 was received in contributions towards the Special Centenary Fund, leaving as the income of the Society for ordinary purposes, £141,704, against £139,822 in the previous year. The amount already promised for the Centenary Fund is £102,199, of which sum £88,091, had already been received. Addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Macgowan (China), W. G. Brookway (India), and R. Wardlaw Thompson (foreign secretary).

A second meeting was held on the following morning (Thursday) in Exeter Hall, specially for the consideration of native agency and women's work. Though not large, the audience was influential, being for the most part composed of ladies to whom the special subject could not but appeal with peculiar strength.

The chair was occupied by Mr. JOHN WILSON, M.P., who spoke of the greatness of the work and its abiding obligation upon the Church. Rev. GEORGE COUSINS, editorial secretary, followed, maintaining that experience has shown that if the work of the Society is to be carried on effectively in any part of the world, there must be unmarried lady missionaries as well as married missionaries and their wives. As to the native workers, they have been largely used in all the fields in which great numerical results have been obtained, notably in Polynesia, Madagascar, and India. He asserted the urgency and need of a great reinforcement of this agency without delay.

Rev. J. G. HAWKER, of Belgaum, spoke on the work among women in India. He described, at the outset, the degraded position and ignorance of the millions of Indian women; not as the result of accident, but, through injunctions having religious authority, are they unable to read or write. Seventy-six years ago there were no girls' schools in India; now, consequent upon missionary enterprise, about three-quarters of a million of women and girls are able to read, or are learning to do so. But then about a hundred and twenty-eight millions of women and girls are ignorant of their letters; in short, only about one in two hundred has the most elementary education. Speaking of the social sorrows of India, Mr. Hawker held that, having interfered with Thuggism, suttee, and infanticide, the Government should now refuse to be a party to the iniquitous marriage laws—should refuse to give them legal sanction or support. The poor women, whose lives are filled with frivolity and swayed by superstition, exercise a tremendous influence, and are able effectually to hinder educational and Gospel work. The entry of missionary ladies is not difficult, but the result of their efforts is marvellous. The girls in the schools already believe the Gospel history; the character of Christ, so glorious, pure, and true, takes in their hearts the place which is occupied by vicious and impure divinities in the case of their elders in the zenanas.

Mrs. ARMITAGE, in an impressive address, spoke of the home and its influence. The Oriental races have built up the home on a basis of slavery rather than freedom. In view of the teachings of history, it is doubtful whether woman and home could be emancipated on any basis but that of the religion of Jesus Christ. Emancipated woman without Christ is a sight to make angels weep. In conclusion, Mrs. Armitage appealed for a great extension of woman's work in India and China, urging the Christians of England to feel pity for the women of the East.

Rev. C. G. SPARHAM, of Hankow, dwelt upon types of native workers in Central China, showing how pious and brave, patient and devoted are some of the colporteurs and evangelists.

Rev. W. J. WOODS, secretary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, told the story of Jamaica, and described the progress of the Gospel in the island. In company with Mr. Barrett, he recently visited the churches, and his testimony was that the coloured people have proved themselves worthy to be placed side by side with any Christian people in the world. The opinion he had formed was that before long native agency alone should be relied on in that field. Meantime, he appealed for two white ministers to guide the work.

[462]

The Protestant Alliance.

THE Protestant Alliance had a field-day on Friday last in the Queen's Hall, W. To begin with, there was a subscribers' meeting in the afternoon, presided over by Dr. Kennedy Moore. This was followed by a conference of subscribers and friends. Mr. R. Scott occupied the chair, and several addresses were delivered. Rev. W. Sinden urged Protestants to know their creed and stand by it. Deputy Surgeon-General Partridge dwelt upon the importance of children being carefully taught, and warned against error. The "Hundred Texts" used by the Irish Church Missions he commended as calculated to form a good basis of Evangelical instruction. Mr. H. C. Maughan, of Glasgow, followed, calling attention to the growth of Romanism and Ritualism in Scotland.

Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, of Dartford, showed that, by timely energy on the part of Protestants, Papists may be prevented from capturing public positions. By way of illustrating the activity of Romanism in West London, Mr. E. H. Garbett stated that Protestants have been waited upon personally in Westminster, and urged to join the Church of Rome. He maintained the Pagan origin of Popish practices. His words on the latter point were seconded by the next speaker, Col. Acklom, who deplored the degree to which the bishops have deserted the Protestant standard. Finally, Mr. Walter Walsh gave details of full-blown Romish teachings and ceremonies in Anglican churches at Southwark and Kennington.

In the evening a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny. The addresses dealt in a large measure with the education question in its present acute phase, also with the treachery of the Ritualistic party in the Church of England, and the growing power of Rome. The CHAIRMAN, in some terse remarks, said that men had got into the Church of England whom God never called to be there. Under the most solemn sanctions they had undertaken to tell one Gospel, but have given themselves up to preach another. Such men hold the citadel, and unfortunately they cannot easily be got at by those to whom they should minister.

Rev. Dr. KANE moved a resolution against aid from national funds being given in maintenance of Roman Catholic or Ritualistic education, and advocating the right of popular management and control of all schools receiving State aid. He rejoined that the Reformation could not be overturned; a Bible-reading people could scarcely help being Protestant. His address was interwoven with points of political controversy; in fact, he spoke (as Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who followed him, said) as an Irishman, a Tory, and a Churchman.

Accordingly, Mr. PERKS proceeded to speak as an Englishman, a Radical, and a Methodist. He intimated that Cardinal Vaughan, who had been flitting about the lobbies of the House of Commons, had sent to all members of the House a document on the education question, thus obtrusively taking the lead in a noisy system. He asked that the rural population should not be given into the hands of ecclesiastics. The resolution thus presented was carried with acclamation.

Canon O'CONNOR examined the pretended interest of Rome in education, showing that the policy of the Papists is to neglect education where they can, but when they must have it, to get education into their own hands. Mr. W. JOHNSTON, M.P., having appealed for renewed Protestant enthusiasm,

Rev. Dr. GRATTAN GUINNESS denounced Romanism and Ritualism as branded with God's indignation in Holy Scripture. He held that the Reformation was a return to primitive faith and practice, and that Ritualism is seeking to undo the work of the Reformation, and drag England back to the dark ages. He lifted the subject from the realm of politics to the region of Scripture teaching, alike as to the system as a whole and as to its several outstanding features. God's judgment has been declared against Rome; and any church that is identified with her will share her wickedness and her doom, be partaker of her sins and of her plagues.

Evangelical Alliance.

THE annual conversazione was held on Tuesday afternoon, 12th inst., at the House of Rest, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, which Miss Mason had again kindly placed at the disposal of the council. During the serving of refreshments in the dining-room it was interesting to observe the number of different nationalities and denominations of Christians represented. Here was an Armenian in his brilliant native costume, and by his side a missionary fresh from Jerusalem. On the other side of the room were two gentlemen whose complexions betrayed them as Easterns, one coming from the land of the Shah and the other from Syria, and these brethren were busily engaged talking with some Germans. Again, in a group we noticed friends from Austria, Finland, and the heart of Africa.

The Pillar Room, in which the meeting was held, was crowded to overflowing, but many were missed from the gathering who are usually found at this reunion of the Alliance. Sir Wm. Willis took the chair, and prayer was offered by Bishop Taylor. In a few opening remarks, the chairman expressed devout thankfulness to God for divine guidance and blessing upon the operations of the Alliance during a year of very onerous and anxious labour, particularly in connection with efforts on behalf of persecuted Christians in Armenia and Russia.

Much interest was evidently felt in the brief resumé of the year's varied work given by Mr. A. J. ARNOLD, the general secretary. This covered a field of world-wide extent; it was cheering to hear of steady growth in the membership of the Alliance at home, with increased desire for affiliation on the part of branches abroad. The universal week of prayer, and God's merciful dispersal of the war-clouds with which the year opened; the recent season of special supplication for oppressed Armenian Christians; the reception by the Emperor-King of Hungary of a deputation from the Alliance in connection with the millennial celebration at Buda Pesth; and the condition of the Stundists, in view of the Czar's pending coronation. These were some of the momentous topics necessarily treated with extreme brevity in the course of the secretary's statement.

Rev. A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE spoke in warm terms of the main object which dominates the diversified operations of the Alliance, namely, the promotion of Christianity. He emphasized the fact that the union of Christian hearts is an essential condition of the outpourings of the Holy Ghost upon work for Christ. Rev. H. N. MITCHELL expressed his belief that the Alliance remained decidedly Evangelical in spirit as well as in name.

Details regarding arrangements for the celebration of the Alliance Jubilee were given by Mr. ARNOLD. On Sunday, June 28, sermons will be preached in many churches and chapels of the metropolis. The meetings, constituting the Tenth International Conference of the Alliance, will commence on Monday, June 28, at Exeter Hall, and will be continued on Tuesday and following days of the week, at Mildmay Conference Hall.

Rev. HASTINGS KELK, from Jerusalem, gave some account of his work for Christ in that city, mentioning incidentally that the Week of Prayer observance there is marked by petition to God in Arabic and German, as well as in English. His work embraces various agencies with the one object of bringing the Gospel to bear upon all classes of Jews. Mr. FREDK. ARNOT recounted the stirring story of his memorable pioneering in Africa. Much of what he said is already matter of familiar history in the records of missionary enterprise; but there was abundant evidence in the facts he stated to show that the Gospel is the same power unto salvation in Central Africa as it is here at home. The interior of the country is opening to missionaries in a very cheering manner, and there is real need for prayer that more truly God-sent men should come forward for the work. Mr. K. BEHRENIAN, an Armenian pastor, was the last speaker.

The Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

THERE was a large attendance at the Mansion House on Tuesday afternoon last week, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The LORD MAYOR presided, and in introducing the speakers, said that from small beginnings the Society had achieved considerable success, and the income for the past year was £66,975. It was satisfactory to find that the work of the Society was to a large extent preventive, but it was strange that in such a country as this such a Society should be required at all. During the year 52,442 children had been reached. There were 209½ cases in which the Society felt bound to prosecute, and these cases affected 5000 little victims of violence and neglect.

SIR RICHARD WEBSTER congratulated the Society on the state of the finances, the formation of a reserve fund, and recognition as a national institution. Over and over again, in the House of Commons and elsewhere, he had been told that the statements made with regard to the cruelty practised on children were exaggerated. He had heard them described as "hysterical statistics," and it was said that isolated cases were brought forward to prove a general state of affairs which did not exist. Unfortunately, it was only too true that parental affection in many cases did not exist, but that in its place were some of the worst forms of cruelty. It had been said cruelty to children was only to be found amongst the poorest and lowest classes, but this was not true, and hence the necessity of a powerful organisation which made its influence felt in all quarters.

MR. H. H. BEMROSE followed with a few sympathetic words. MR. J. A. PICTON, in moving a resolution approving of the expansion of the Society, urged that the wear and tear and constant worry of life in a civilised country, together with the fact that we had drink shops whilst savages had none, led to much of the cruelty shown by parents in England to the children.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

SINCE its formation three years ago this Union has amply justified its existence. At the well-attended annual meeting in St. Martin's Town Hall last Thursday evening, an encouraging account of the year's work was read. The number of federated associations is now 168, being an increase of twenty-eight during the year. Earnest and fruitful work has been done throughout the country by deputations and organisers, while drawing-room assemblies have helped to spread the temperance cause in the upper ranks of society. Mention was made of the value of the official organ, Wings, in propagating the work.

LADY E. BIDDULPH, who has been elected by the council President of the Union, filled the chair, and gave an able address. After some references of a personal nature, she touched on various aspects of the great drink question. She did not believe that the cause has lost by the results of the last general election. As to the Royal Commission on licensing, she urged that temperance advocates should watch it carefully and be ready to prove all the propositions advanced with reference to the traffic. The recent uprising of municipal vigilance in Liverpool was noted as an example of what can be done under the existing laws to lessen the evils caused by strong drink.

All the succeeding speeches were of real substance and most helpful in their presentation of facts or arguments. Mrs. Brooks, Hon. Secretary, told something of what had been attempted during the year. Some of her weighty sentences were quite epigrammatic. "We find it so hard to take the people away from the drink; so we try to take the drink away from them." "A sober Sabbath is a boon that we have a right to demand in a Christian country." "It is better to put a fence at the top than an ambulance at the bottom." As one of the members of the new commission the remarks of Mr. J. H. ROBERTS, M.P., were of special interest. Like the president he was not disheartened by the reverse at the last election. He evidently means to make the most of the opportunity afforded by the Commission in probing the drink evils to its roots and seeking to find a remedy. His appeal to the Christian churches to come to the front in the prosecution of temperance work was most telling. A co-legislator in the person of Mr. T. P. WHITTAKER, M.P., added some notably encouraging facts as to the progress made in the last generation. He made a strong point in protesting against the employment of barmaids, a thing that has never been tolerated in free America.

Perhaps the most interesting utterance of the evening was that of Countess SCHIMMELMANN, who fairly captivated the audience by her artless and heartfelt narrative of Gospel and temperance work among the rough fishermen on the Baltic coast. Her speech was notable in the special prominence she gave to the power that comes from trust in Jesus Christ in overcoming the drink crave. In this respect her words supplied an evident lack in the other addresses. Referring to her experiences in this country, the Countess very pathetically repeated the words of a Rotherhithe policeman to her, who said that the degraded women of that locality had never had anyone to show them sympathy or point them to a better way, or they might have led different lives. Last of all came Miss CONNELL, of Gateshead-on-Tyne, who was really eloquent in pleading the claims of the little children.

Mrs. Mary Davies charmed all ears by her mellifluous vocal music. One of the songs she sang was Browning's famous stanza:—

The year's at the spring; the day's at the morn.
The lark's on the wing; the snail's on the thorn.
God's in his heaven; all's right with the world.

A conference was held the following day, when excellent papers on different departments of work were read.

Religious Tract Society.

AMONG the comparatively few historic institutions which serve Evangelical truth both at home and abroad, the Religious Tract Society occupies a worthy and commanding position. It has now reached its ninety-seventh year. To tell the story of its useful career is not needful, while to give any idea of its blessed and varied ministry, educational and religious, would be quite impossible. This institution is, in truth, the handmaid of all the churches, and by its admirable publications, serial and otherwise, it has become a household name throughout the civilised world.

The annual meeting, held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, was as bright and pleasant as its long list of predecessors. The orchestra was occupied by children from the Hornsey Board Schools and the King Edward Industrial Schools, who gave a selection of pieces under the direction of Mr. J. Frank Proudman. There was also an interesting exhibition of musical drill by girls of the King Edward Ragged Schools, Spitalfields.

DR. S. G. GREEN, one of the secretaries, presented the report, from which it appeared that the circulation during the year, in sales and grants, had been 39,551,300, including tracts to the number of 13,192,150; while from foreign depôts and societies, aided more or less by the Society, the number may be set down at 20,000,000. The grand total is thus nearly 60,000,000. The number of new publications for the year reached 602, of which 207 were tracts. Numerous additions have been made to the valuable "Present Day Tracts" series. One of the tracts issued has been Dean Farrar's "Shall we Unite with Rome?" a vigorous and timely protest against Romeward tendencies observable in many directions. The Society feels it increasingly important, both in its larger and smaller publications, to assert and defend the principles of Evangelical Protestantism.

In connection with the examinations in Scripture knowledge for scholars of the London School Board, 283,543 presented themselves for examination in November, and the Society co-operated with Mr. Peek in presenting 1149 prizes, besides 2484 certificates. It was announced that Mr. Peek has now proposed, in co-operation with the Society, to extend the system to other School Boards of the kingdom, and has placed a considerable sum with the committee for that purpose. In conclusion, Dr. Green said that amid the new demands on public attention they were solicitous that those to whom the truth was dear should, with unrelaxing effort, promote the circulation of a literature whose one aim is to point unceasingly to Jesus Christ.

A hearty address was delivered by Mr. C. E. TAITTON, M.P., who presided. He held that there is an increasing call for the labours of the Society. Ministers, district visitors, and open-air preachers, or any who tries to win souls for Christ, acknowledge the debt they owe to the Society for the provision of Christian literature. He trusted that the Society would get a fresh impetus in its desire to spread the truth in the uttermost parts of the earth. Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND followed, pointing out that all classes, including soldiers, sailors, policemen, and navvies, were brought into touch with the Society.

Much of what is praised as literature savours not of heaven and of God, but of Satan and hell. The Religious Tract Society provides a powerful antidote. The Leisure Hour and Sunday at Home still appeal to those who are careful as to the literature they place on their tables. In concluding his address, Mr. Buckland commended the Society as an agent for the propagation of sound theology. The Society does not encumber faith with superstition, but confines itself in the main to the presentation of the simple truths of the Gospel.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. G. G. Warren, of Hankow, and Rev. T. Boyd, of Edinburgh, the latter acknowledging Scotland's obligation to the Society.

The annual breakfast of the Society was held at Cannon-street Hotel on Tuesday. We are reserving our report until next week.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

THIS institution celebrated its eighty-ninth anniversary in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Monday week under the presidency of Lord Kinnaird. The past year has been one of marked prosperity, the receipts showing a gratifying increase, with an expenditure, however, in pensions, at the rate of £2000 per annum more than last year, the increase in the income has been much more than absorbed, and in order that current income may equal current expenditure, at least £2000 more are needed in subscriptions.

LORD KINNAIRD said that some of them looked forward to the time when, by the superior wisdom of their rulers, a national system of pensions would be established for the benefit of the deserving, aged poor; but while they were waiting for Parliament to do that, they themselves desired to supply the pecuniary needs of as many as possible of those who were suffering, not as a result of improvidence, but of sheer misfortune.

MR. J. H. HALLETT, Brighton, said that though the Institution was aged, it was by no means in a state of decay, but was more fruitful in good works now than it had been at any time. There was something about the Society that appealed to their sympathies with very peculiar force. The Church of Christ had a special obligation resting upon it to support the poor, and particularly so the godly and aged poor.

REV. DR. WAINWRIGHT described the work of the Society as blessed, glorious, and beneficent. MR. H. M. BOMPAS, Q.C., spoke of what he considered to be one special charm of the Society—the fact that it made no distinction, on theological grounds, of candidates applying for pensions. He believed it was the absolute and uncompromising duty of all Christians who had the means so to do to support their fellow aged poor of Christ's fold as circumstances required.

REV. FULLER GOOCH warmly commended the Society, with its 1374 pensioners in all, including those in the four Homes, to the sympathy and support of all. Addresses followed by Revs. Dr. White, E. Mitchell, and others.

London Female Guardian Society.

THE annual meeting of this useful institution was held on Wednesday, May 13, at its Training Home, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. Lord Kinnaird presided, and addresses were also given by Rev. H. Norwell and Mr. D. Marshall Lang. A most interesting report of work done and cases treated was submitted to the assembly, a salient feature of which was that no less than two-thirds of the betrayed girls who have been received and helped to make a new start in life, were between sixteen and twenty-one years of age. Very careful statistics are kept by the secretary, which go to prove that the victims of this class of sin are almost wholly drawn from the class of domestic service, and of these the great proportion are "generals," showing the manifold temptations which these are subjected to.

The money-producing faculties of these girls while in the Training Home is an interesting feature, and well maintained. The Home possesses a very commodious and well-equipped laundry, in which the inmates have earned no less than £454 during the past nine months. The funds of the society unhappily show a deficit of over £230, which must be made up by the increased liberality of those Christian friends who support this much-needed class of charity.

It should be explained that all inmates who accept the hospitality of this charity are maintained for a considerable period—about eighteen months, during which time every effort is made by the management to effect a total moral reformation and spiritual training of the girls; and when the fresh return to society takes place a complete outfit of wearing apparel suitable for domestic service or other occupation is provided by the Home. It is gratifying to note that in very many instances the "helping hand" thus extended is fully appreciated, as numbers of letters attest.

Irish Church Missions.

A SERIES of meetings in connection with the anniversary of this society was held on Tuesday week. The report read at the morning meeting stated that three new centres had been opened during the past year, while work had been recommenced in Belfast after a lapse of five years.

Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., who presided, said that two years ago he had had the privilege of spending a fortnight in Ireland, during which time he had seen something of the work of this society in the depths of Dublin. And to the end of his days he would thank God for the encouragement to faith, for the sense of the work of his Holy Spirit, for the mingled boldness and spirituality, the order and power which had seemed to him in every department to pervade that work.

After an address by Rev. A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE, who dealt chiefly with education in Ireland, Rev. P. B. JOHNSON spoke of the increased work of the society in Dublin. He was glad to notice that there was a growing sense of responsibility for spreading the Word among Roman Catholics. Valuable as the work of the society was, they must not forget that the work of individuals was equally valuable, and he knew of many cases of Roman Catholics converted through the earnestness of individuals. There was a maid-servant in a family he knew well who began to attend their services and read the Bible. The priests heard of it and put pressure upon the father. One night he came to the house intoxicated, at the instigation of the priest, and demanded that his daughter should return with him. She declined, whereupon he lifted his black-thorn and said he would smash her face if she did not. He also threatened her mistress. At last the girl went, and the priest made her go down on her knees and confess to him. "How is it your eyes were closed?" he asked. "My eyes were not closed," she replied, "they have been opened." The girl was locked up, but in a fortnight escaped to his house. She obtained a situation in a Protestant family, and some time after it was discovered, quite by accident, that she was busy spreading the Truth among Roman Catholic servant-girls. She had recently offered to go out to China in a missionary's family, and had been accepted.

Rev. T. W. H. JACOB and Mr. A. B. STONEY also spoke of what they had witnessed in Ireland.

U.K. Band of Hope Union.

THE forty-first anniversary of this useful society was held on Wednesday, May 12, at Exeter Hall. At the breakfast meeting Mr. W. S. Caine received a cordial welcome. A well-attended conference was held in the afternoon, and in the evening the large hall was packed with enthusiastic total abstinents, under the genial sway of Sir George Williams (president of the Union).

Mr. CHARLES WAKELY presented an abstract of the report, which was of a very encouraging nature. The work among the young had progressed in every department and in all lands during the year, and at the date of the report over 22,000 Bands of Hope were affiliated to the Union, with nearly three million members. The income during the year amounted to about £4500. London has received special attention at the hands of the executive, and a large number of special meetings have been addressed by the agents of the Union. An interesting feature was noticed in the children's written reports of the lectures, nearly 180,000 papers having been submitted. Conferences in various centres, systematic work in the schools, the "village campaign," with visits to training ships, refuges, orphanages, etc., helped to swell the total of useful activities on behalf of the proper training of the young in all classes of society on this important matter of abstinence.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS was particularly happy in his brief "chairman's speech." He had a few words of golden advice to the young people present, and gave his opinion as to the best way of dealing with the drink—"stop before you begin." He trusted that some amelioration of the conditions surrounding the traffic would be vouchsafed by the Government—even if nothing more than to shorten the hours of sale.

Rev. Dr. R. M. THORNTON gave a bright and stirring speech of commendable brevity. He had experienced the blessing of prohibition in Canada, and would like to see the system extended to this country. His successor on the platform was CANON WILBERFORCE, who, in a very earnest address, urged that the importance of this work among the young people should be the means of uniting all parties to the support of the movement. Intemperance was dangerous to the child, and the children should be protected by all who had brains to think, and hands to sign the pledge. Rev. DINDALE T. YOUNG (Manchester) also gave an eloquent address, which was much appreciated.

During the evening a choir of about 500 children sang brightly and well some temperance action songs, the determination expressed in "Fight the wrong" (when a united and decided stamp of 500 feet "brought down the house") was especially enjoyed. The conductor (Mr. G. W. Hardwidge) is to be congratulated on signal success in this feature of the gathering.

Presbyterian Missions.

SPEAKING comparatively, the Presbyterians in London are a feeble folk; yet they can manage to fill the greater part of Exeter Hall for a missionary anniversary. The meeting on Friday evening had for its president Lord OVERTON, who, as a Christian peer, has been in large demand in that capacity this spring. In his speech he vigorously exploded the fallacy that we ought to postpone foreign missionary effort till all the home heathen have been evangelised. Speaking as a Scotchman, he suggested that English Presbyterians might take a practical interest in Scottish missions to Africa, in return for the help that his countrymen render to English missions in China. Later in the meeting he acknowledged that this in a measure had been done.

The chief Chinese centres of work in connection with this mission are at Amoy, Swatow, and Formosa; while at Singapore, and at a station in India, agents are at work. Ten hospitals represent the medical missions; that at Swatow had as many as 7400 patients in 1893. Fifty-six European agents are at work, with 117 native evangelists. The income for the year was a little over £20,000.

"Progress in every department" was the keynote of a spirited address by Rev. P. J. MACLAGAN, of Swatow. The converts there he declared to be at any rate genuine, if not extremely numerous. He magnified the value of the medical mission part of the work. The influence and activity of the native Christians are also a great factor in spreading the Gospel. According to Mr. MacLagan the outlook in China is full of hope. A warm welcome was given to the next speaker, Miss GRAHAM, who has been working at Chinchow. She said that they were seeing miracles of grace in China, all the more wonderful in view of the natural degradation of those who are the subjects of them. Helplessness and hopelessness are the two great characteristics of heathendom in China. Some touching samples of Christ's power to deliver these people from the bondage of sin, to implant a spirit of love, and to endure persecution, were recited by Miss Graham to the deeply interested audience. Most potent arguments they were for such work.

As a representative of the C.M.S., Mr. EUGENE STROCK thanked the Presbyterians for some excellent men they had given to that Society—e.g., Dr. Elmslie, of Cashmere, and Mackay, of Uganda. His words were chiefly an earnest pressing home to the Master's great commission. Instead of rejoicing over three new missionaries, let them send forth three hundred fresh workers; then they might begin to rejoice. He, too, furnished some splendid testimony from personal observation as to the triumphs of the Gospel.

A most interesting sketch of the Student Volunteer Movement was given by Mr. DONALD FRASER, of Glasgow, who is about to proceed to Livingstonia. There has been, as the outcome, he said, a new spirit of missionary interest in the colleges of England and America—a fresh spirit of prayer, of Christian fellowship, and of zeal for the salvation of other students. The movement is spreading to the European Continent. The spirit of consecration, manifested at the recent Liverpool Conference, was felt by the European delegation very markedly. Mr. Fraser's recollections of the Conference and some of its immediate outcomes were extremely interesting. He said he had lately returned from a tour of the colleges in France, Switzerland, Holland, and Germany, and Scandinavia, and everywhere there were signs of God's working in the hearts of the students.

Mr. C. T. STUDD closed the speaking with a stirring address. The collection amounted to £106.

Navy Mission Society.

COLONEL R. WILLIAMS (C.M.S.) presided at the annual meeting of this organisation, held in the Convocation Hall, Dean's Yard, on Tuesday week. The Hon. and Rev. Robert Grimston, secretary, read the annual report, which showed that the past twelve months had been a time of growth in all departments of the work, and at the present moment the society was giving money in aid of a larger number of agents (forty-seven) than at any previous time during its history. Among the great works engaging attention was the Keyham Dock, which, it was expected, would employ some 3000 men for seven years. Great companies and employers were sympathising with the work of the society, and helping it with increasing liberality. One leading engineer had testified that he could see a very marked difference for the better in the life, as a whole, upon public works. The speakers at the meeting included, besides the chairman, Hon. and Rev. E. C. Glyn, Rev. S. R. Thornton, and Colonel Hunt, each of whom spoke, with regard to the work carried on, in terms of the warmest praise.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THE jubilee meetings of this Society, held on Tuesday, proved full of interest. The series began with a noon devotional meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aldersgate-street, when Mr. M. H. Hodder, who presided, spoke of the value of the work, and Mr. and Mrs. Hill made brief statements as to answered prayer and tokens of blessing.

In the afternoon a meeting was held at the headquarters of the Society, St. George's-street, E. Miss Weston, who presided, warmly supported the claims of the work, and gave an interesting talk on her own and other efforts for the welfare of sailors. The secretary, Rev. G. J. Hill, followed with a statement, from which it appeared that the society maintained sailors' Institutes, Rests, and Bethels in London, and on the coasts of Sussex, Devon, Cornwall, Lancashire, Cumberland, Isle of Man, Scotland, and Ireland. With regard to the financial position 1000 more subscribers were needed to increase the income to meet the annual expenditure. Amongst the subsequent speakers were Rev. Dr. Newman Hall, Admiral Grant, and Rev. T. E. Damerell.

In the evening a meeting was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, Sir George Williams presiding. Amongst the audience were many sailors, British and foreign.

Rev. G. J. HILL reported an advance all along the line. The society had opened work in Scotland, and established new Rests at Maryport and on the Sussex coast. An immense number of visits had been paid to ships, bags of books had been liberally supplied, and a great many conversions had been recorded. The balance-sheet gave the income of the general fund as £2366, and the expenditure as £2540. This deficiency added to that of last year made a balance on the wrong side of £400. There was also a debt of more than £2000 remaining on the new headquarters' building.

Canon BARKER, who began by announcing that his father-in-law was Sir James Ross, the Arctic explorer, said that he liked the Society because it was unsectarian. He hoped the time would come when there would be only one sect, but in the meantime, so long as all were built upon the one foundation, they could join hands and wish each other God-speed in their work.

Rev. CHARLES SPURGEON would not believe what the pessimists said about the degeneracy of sailors. He maintained there was backbone still left in Jack. Sailors always reminded him of Daniel. His father once asked him why Daniel was not eaten by the lions, and when he had not a ready answer, his father said, "Because he was two-thirds backbone and the rest grit."

Admiral GRANT, who announced that he was celebrating his sea-going jubilee, gave many instances of improvement in both the Royal Navy and mercantile services. This was largely due to Miss Weston's influence, and to the influence of societies like the Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

Medical Missionary Association.

THE annual meeting of the friends of Medical Missions was held on Thursday afternoon in Lower Exeter Hall. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, read a portion of Scripture, and dwelt on the authority for Medical Missions, indicating that possibly the slow progress of the Gospel might be due to the neglect of this double ministry. As to the work being done in the Training House, 49, Highbury-park, it is more encouraging than ever. Touching reference was also made to the beloved Dr. William Lockhart, just gone home. The presidency of the Association, thus vacated, has been offered to and accepted by Dr. George Saunders, a veteran in M.M. service.

The report, which is printed in full in the May issue of Medical Missions, describes the object of the Association as the advancement of medical missions, and this it seeks to do, largely by training suitable men. The year began with fourteen resident students, five have gone forth, and four new men have been admitted. Good news has been received of former students now in the mission field. Details are given of the Islington and St. Pancras Medical Missions, the Children's M.M. Society, and other operations at home and abroad. Some of the salient features in this report were touched upon by Dr. J. L. Maxwell, who called special attention to the newly-formed M.M. Crusaders' Union, intended to arouse wider and more intelligent interest in Medical Missions.

Dr. W. HUNTLY, of Rajputana, said that the U.P. Church of Scotland had for many years endeavoured to send out medical missionaries, and the results in Manchuria and India had abundantly demonstrated the value of healing-preaching as a mission agency. His own service had been mainly in native states, and his account thereof abounded in interest and illustration. It was delightful to hear the testimony of a Mohammedan: "I am convinced that the coming of missionaries to India has made India to live."

Dr. HENRY SOLTAN referred to experiences in China and India, and showed how on every hand the missionaries were eager to have medical missions opened. He hoped to see a fresh start made and many fresh men sent out. In the course of a rapid sketch of a recent tour in India he showed how urgent the need is both among natives and among the aboriginal tribes.

Mr. L. B. BUTCHER, secretary of the Students' Volunteer Union, gave some particulars of the progress this movement is making among students, and from these a large addition to the ranks of missionaries must be expected within the next few years. Large numbers are volunteering at home and on the Continent, and America, and even in India and Australia.

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

THE Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee held their annual meeting on Friday at Grosvenor House. Rev. J. Grant Mills read the report, which expressed gratitude at the present attitude of the Colonial Secretary in reference to the liquor traffic with native races, and referred to the strong expressions of opinion of the natives of the West African Colonies in depreciation of the traffic, to the satisfactory issue of Khama's visit to this country last autumn, and to the fact that the Canadian Government had sent an executive force to the territories on the Alaska border, with a view to protecting the Indians from the liquor traffic.

The Duke of Westminster dealt with the action of the European Powers in regard to the liquor trade in Africa, while Dr. Horton showed the disastrous results of the traffic in hindering the Gospel.

Working Girls in London.

FRIENDS of this movement held their annual meeting for praise and prayer at Garfield House, 8, T. 200-square, W., on Thursday afternoon. Lord KINNARD presided. Tremendous forces for evil exist to-day (he said), and we must stick to this work. Such Homes are greatly needed and appreciated by young girls. Mr. JOHN SHRIMPTON, the hon. director, said the work, though of a silent character, was most wonderful. It was a work of social and religious effort; the zeal displayed on the part of the girls in attending the weekly meetings was remarkable. He added the Homes were never more popular than at present.

Rev. Prebendary WEBB-PERLOE gave an eloquent address on the Ascension of Christ, the day being Ascension Day. Rev. F. B. MEYER also strongly endorsed the work.

Church Zenana Missionary Society.

THE annual meetings of this Society were held in Queen's Hall, which was well filled. The report reviewed the position of the Society at home and abroad; and mentioned specially that a Medical Mission has been opened at Quetta, under Dr. Charlotte Wheeler. The reports of the Village Itineration during the cold season in many parts both of North India and the Punjab, as a rule speak of eager listeners. Interesting accounts of the open confession of Christ in baptism have been received from several stations. The total number of baptisms reported is above the average. In Tarn Taran the coming-out of a young woman was made the occasion by the Arya Somaj for a fierce outbreak of hostility. At Peshawar, on the contrary, opposition is dying down, women are coming freely to the hospital, and the ladies are being welcomed in the district. The number of missionaries and assistant missionaries is now ninety, the Bible-women (including twelve supported by the British and Foreign Bible Society) 217, and the native teachers and workers 420. The committee have sent out twenty-three new missionaries during the past year, raising the net total in home connection to 185.

Col. WILLIAMS, who presided, opened with a sympathetic address. Mrs. PHILLIPS, formerly of Hing-wa, dwelt on the appalling need of China; while Miss LING, of Ootacamund, made similar entreaty for India, and especially for the Todas and other hill people.

British Jews' Society.

THE fifty-third anniversary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews, was held on Thursday evening, in Lower Exeter Hall, Mr. R. Scott-Moncrieff presiding.

The report read by the secretary, Rev. John Dunlop, dealt with finance, showing the urgent need of larger help, and calling for 10,000 annual guinea subscriptions. As to the work it appeared that the society has twenty-six missionaries and many voluntary helpers engaged in spreading the truth of the Gospel. It has mission stations in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. It supports schools for the young, and its agents conduct Bible-classes, etc. It has medical missions, and the committee are very anxious to establish one at each station. New Testaments, portions of Scripture, and tracts in various languages have been distributed. The Gospel has been preached to the Jews, in Mission Halls, in their own homes, in coffee-houses. It has two homes for aged Christian Israelites. The reports from the mission fields at home and in foreign lands testify that great and glorious things have been accomplished, that the Gospel has been preached to multitudes, thousands of whom have listened to it gladly, and many of whom have publicly confessed their faith in Christ.

In consequence of the great length at which the report was read, with minute details and declamatory passages, but little time was left to the speakers.

Mr. RICHARD CORX, J.P., read the financial sheet, showing a balance in hand, but urging strongly that from two to three thousand pounds more should be raised annually in order to increase the staff.

The CHAIRMAN said that the acquaintance he had gained of the state of things in Palestine led him to feel that God is leading Israel as directly as He did in past ages in the wilderness. Never in the history of the race has there been such a critical time in regard to that nation. They are, though scattered, more numerous than ever. Moreover, never before has there been such a remarkable going out of the hearts of Jews to Jerusalem. His own observations in '81 and '94 showed that numbers of poor Jews are constantly coming from every part of the world. There are now about 50,000 Jews in and around Jerusalem, whereas fifteen years ago there were about 15,000. In Palestine the numbers have increased in the same period from 40,000 to about 100,000. Another remarkable feature is the springing up of villages and well-cultivated spots here and there. These and other signs show a turning of the hearts of the people towards Zion.

Rev. A. A. ISAACS made special reference to persecutions in Russia and Armenia, and dwelt on the dispersion and ingathering of Israel. Rev. P. McF. MACLEOD feared that one reason why Christians and Christian churches are so backward in taking up the cause of the Jews is an unwillingness to allow the Jew that priority which is assigned in the purpose of God. Another reason may be that there is no common and clear testimony borne by the churches to the coming of our Lord. Moreover we shall never have a vital interest in the Jew till we have a mighty revival of spiritual life in the churches. After a few words by Dr. Pringle, Rev. L. Rosenberg, one of the Society's agents, gave an account of a mission tour in South Russia.

The Bible League.

THE annual meetings of this Society were held at Mildmay Conference Hall on Tuesday, 12th inst. The report, read by the hon. sec., Rev. John Tuckwell, outlined the work undertaken during the past year, the conferences and meetings held, and the changes which have taken place through the departure of Rev. John Urquhart for Scotland. Col. Morton presided at the evening meeting. Rev. A. R. Fausset, D.D., delivered a masterly address on "The Inspired Word, the Church, and the Canon." Rev. H. Graham Thwaites delivered an address on "The Study of the Word of God," basing his remarks on the four words in one of the collects, "Read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest." His utterance was most helpful and deeply appreciated. Rev. John Urquhart explained his position in leaving the Bible League for an appointment in Scotland, and gave an account of Christian work in that country and the terrible havoc being wrought by the Higher Criticism in the churches.

Colonial Missionary Society.

THE City Temple was well filled with the supporters of this Society on Thursday evening. Sir DONALD CURRIE, M.P., who spoke from personal knowledge of various fields, made a strong appeal for increased support for the Society, and drew special attention to the South African field. Dr. PARKER made a stirring speech. He declared that England would never be right as regards politics until fully right in religion, and said, "We must take 'God and humanity' for our motto, and them with the symbol of the Cross we would win the earth for Jesus." Dr. GUINNESS ROGERS gave a short history of the Society which is specially called to work in the colonies. England has the high honour of being able to influence the world at large "for Christ."

The meeting was also addressed by Dr. Herber Evans and Dr. G. S. Barrett. Dr. Barrett spoke at length of the work in Jamaica which the Society has recently taken in hand. He also spoke of the work in Africa, and pointed out that the English people must support it for their children's sake.

The Salvation Army.

THE City Temple was crowded on the evening of Tuesday week by Salvationists and their friends, in connection with the Prison-gate section of the Army's work. Mr. Herbert Gladstone, M.P., who presided, spoke of his contact with the work of the Army when at the Home Office, and on the Prisons Commission, and gave testimony to the enthusiasm of the Army in taking up a work which the Government had left undone. The Government had been wrong in not making bolder experiments with a view to reclaiming prisoners from crime.

The vigorous speech of General Booth which followed was heard with intense interest. There was a great deal of talk, he remarked, about the dying criminal, who was saved, but he wished people would do a little more for the living one. The present system was invented to manufacture criminals at the greatest possible cost. In their Army Home, since its foundation, 2007 men and women had been received. Eighteen per cent. were unsatisfactory, twenty-four per cent. were uncertain, though they had reason to know that about half of these afterwards turned out well.

Theatrical Mission.

THE annual meeting was held at the Institute, Macready House, Covent Garden, on Tuesday, May 12th, the Dean of Norwich in the chair. Mr. Alfred B. Harding gave a brief synopsis of last year's work, and drew special attention to the good that had been effected by the Letter Mission and Visitation. The chairman commended strongly the work of the mission. Speaking as a non theatre-goer, he said we must all feel that those whose vocation it is to amuse the public are exposed to very special temptations; as earnest Christians we are bound to do what we can to help them to live a Christian life.

Hon. Conrad Dillon pleaded for increased support, and commended highly the temperance portion of the work. Mrs. G. S. Reaney gave several telling illustrations of good which from her own experience had been done through the means of the Letter Mission.

Colportage and Colporteurs.

THE men employed by the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association have this week been keeping their annual festival. This year all of the agents of the Society have been invited to visit London for a brief holiday, board and lodgings being provided. During 1895 sixty-three colporteurs effected sales to the amount of £7665, and although this was less by £460 than seventy-three men sold in the year preceding, the average per man is considerably higher. The total number of publications distributed in the twelve months is not far short of three-quarters of a million.

The band of colporteurs attended the services at the Tabernacle on Sunday, and met in conference on Monday morning and afternoon. The president, Rev. T. SPURGEON, showed the men that their work was twofold—to sell books and save souls, and impressed on them the necessity of being “kept.” Dr. J. A. SPURGEON referred to colporteurs’ trials at work and at home, and thought that they should be happy in their work.

Pastor T. Spurgeon presided at the meeting in the evening. Mr. Carpenter, the hon. secretary, gave the annual report. In reference to the service undertaken, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon showed that an admirable work had been done; and that though the figures were not so large as last year, they were more satisfactory than he had ever known them. The work was really a battle for the fireside; for whatever the children got at school it was more important what they got at home. Colportage represented one of the greatest blessings the church could confer on the people; and it was work a pastor could not do. He urged the people to pray for its extension, and to contribute towards its support.

The Royal Academy.

DEAR SIR,—Last week I visited the Royal Academy in London, and regretted much to see the many utterly indecent pictures exhibited. It is, I fear, but a sign of the times that our nation submits to such degrading subjects being forced upon their attention.

I remember well when it was only in the picture galleries on the Continent that right-minded people were offended in this way, but now, year by year, I notice the increase in our English galleries of this class of painting. I can but hope that the leaders of Christian thought will protest against this abomination.—Yours faithfully,

THOS. ROWLAND FOTHERGILL.

7, Calverley Park-gardens, Tunbridge Wells,
May 18.

The Shepherd's Bush and Hammersmith Branch of the Protestant Alliance held a most successful meeting on Tuesday week at Christ Mission Church, West Kensington. Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, who presided, said that many seem “neither hot nor cold.” General indifference prevailed. But there was a zealous remnant. Christ's witnesses—i.e., Protestants—must have zealous hearts. They were to be “a peculiar people,” to tread the narrow road, and to be in the right sense of the word “narrow-minded.” They must unflinchingly maintain the truth of God, caring nothing for human inventions, and the taming down of Divine revelation. Addresses followed by Messrs. Farrington on “The Educational Question,” T. Paul on “The Inquisition,” and H. Hicks on “Rome Rule.”

Children's Hospital, Jerusalem.—Dr. Sandreczky, in the report for last year, says: “The work done was greater than in any former year, notwithstanding the fact that our small establishment is in immediate proximity to numerous large hospitals. My two helpers, my daughter and the Arab nurse, as well as myself, were gladdened by many cases of successful treatment. This was most encouraging, and made the constant and hard watching and nursing comparatively easy. The number of persons admitted was 506, 180 of whom were boys, 157 girls, and 106 mothers. Most of the patients were Arabs and fellahs (or peasants), and only sixteen were townspeople. Classified according to their respective religions, there were 351 Moslems, eighty-five Orthodox Greeks, six Romanists, seventeen Protestants, thirty-nine Jews, six Copts and Abyssinians. Amongst the patients were many children from various missionary stations round the Holy City, sent to us by Christian workers whose labours we were able to help forward a little. On the other hand we wish to express our obligation to those missionary ladies who knew Arabic, and who visited the little sufferers and talked to the mothers.”

[426]

A North Pacific Mission.

REV. J. B. McCULLAGH, of the Aiyansh Mission, Nass River, British Columbia, writes to us:—

The work of our Mission this winter among the Indians has, by God's blessing, been very successful. We have been here now since 1883, and this is the first time I have noticed the formation of a Christian ideal in the minds of the Indians, and this ideal seems to be forming on the Gospel lines of holiness of life and consecration to the service of Christ. It is interesting to notice the efforts of these infants in Christ, to bring the various details of their life into accordance with their growing conception of the truth. Personal cleanliness, domestic decency, feminine modesty, and a sense of shame at habits which a few years ago passed muster as the ordinary polish of life, indicate true growth within.

I have never pursued the civilisation of the Indians as a work outside and apart from Christianity. If civilisation is to be real, it must be the result and outcome of the teaching of Christianity. And thus it is with the civilisation of these Indians, which is growing at such a rate as to call for special guidance and direction. We have now a legally constituted council in the village, and a code of useful bye-laws and sanitary regulations, and a small force of village police. Order and regularity are beginning to make their appearance in Indian life. To give this movement a healthy direction I issue a hectographed weekly paper, in addition to what my time allows me to do at the printing press. This weekly organ (!), which is entitled the “New People,” deals with matters affecting hygiene, domestic economy, useful and simple arts and industries, with an occasional parable or cut at some social or individual failing.

The majority of our people can now read and write in the vernacular, so that all the “literature” I can create and produce is eagerly devoured. We could now profitably employ a mechanical missionary on the printing press alone, yes, and an assistant with him; and I am persuaded that, by the blessing of God, such work would accomplish wonders in a few years. The most important work now in hand is the translation of the New Testament. Since our return from England in 1892 I have succeeded in erecting a steam saw and planing mill, a very fine school-house—which, for the time being, we use as a church—and have also rebuilt the mission-house, which was partially destroyed by fire in 1894. We hope to complete our new church in time to open in October next. Further, the Indians have erected about eighteen shapely and comfortable dwelling-houses, while about ten more are under the plumb.

The Indian Department of the Dominion Government no longer supply the Missions with medicines for the benefit of the Indians, so that in the medical line, in which we used to be strong, we are weak. The Mission now numbers about 140 adherents, of whom eighty-eight are communicants. God is graciously blessing this work, which, from a human point of view, is most difficult.

India's Greatest Need.

AN Indian correspondent of the Boston Congregationalist says:—

“A long experience in this land leads me to the conviction that India needs not so much the efforts of a number of imported peripatetic lecturers, however distinguished they may be, as it does the burning appeals of spiritually-minded and spirit-bearing souls. A dozen such men could do much more good to young India than a hundred profound and eloquent lecturers. India is in danger of being intellectualised to death. What we need is more heat rather than light. I do not wish to depreciate any effort at giving to India western and Christian thought. I only desire to emphasise the supreme fact that the greatest and most urgent need of this land to-day is not thought but life—even the direct life of the indwelling spirit of God.”

The same writer asserts that, having studied the movement since its incipency in India, he is prepared to maintain that, in proportion to the money expended, efforts put forth, and lives sacrificed, no mission in the same time has had less success in India than the Salvation Army.

Pure Water Abroad.

DEAR SIR,—Will you permit me to give my testimony as to the possibility of procuring good drinking water abroad, derived not only from personal experience in France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, etc., on the continent of Europe, but also on all three of the other Continents? Not that the liquid supplied has always been of ideal purity, but that I have never suffered in any way from having remained throughout staunch to my pledge to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as beverages, though I must confess to the charge of a somewhat immoderate use of drinking water.

In almost every large town on the Continent I have been surprised at the quality of the supply, regarding which I have invariably made enquiry of local people other than hotel proprietors, who can hardly be considered disinterested persons. Wherever there has been the least doubt, I have felt safer in using aerated water as likely to be the best procurable on the spot, or when doubt was strong, Apollinaris or Hunyadi, or other mineral water. When these were—very rarely—not procurable, or insufficient, I have had my drinking water boiled for at least ten minutes, and, if need be, filtered. In such cases tea has always been my stand-by, a small boxful, of a decent quality, being always ready in my handbag.

For filter, let me warn tourists against all stone or charcoal block systems after they are once clogged, and work slowly. The block must then be thrown away, and replaced by a new one. For this reason the filters that can be re-charged in a few moments with fresh charcoal, giving an absolutely new medium as soon as required, are far preferable. All others soon become sources of danger instead of protection. The filtering, when needed, should precede the boiling, unless soup is required, though it is astonishing how often this natural order is thoughtlessly reversed. A pocket or small table filter can easily be carried in the lunch basket. It is well to inform the waiter, on arrival, of your teetotal principles before he begins to recommend the cellar, and to insist, on that account, on having the water-bottles on the table and in the bedroom thoroughly well washed and refilled for your use. It is no use telling me that wine is purer, for I have seen how wine is made, and have trodden the wine-press myself in Spain.

When one is driven by thirst to doubtful water, the best plan is to rinse the mouth well and gargle, or even to wet the face, neck, and hands as well. Careful mouth-washing after rich food is an invaluable ally to the total abstainer, and is invariably practised by Mohammedans, the abstemious races of India, and many others. Before filtering muddy water, a little alum will precipitate much of the suspended matter, and so will other substances less convenient in travelling.

On country excursions there is no preparation like a bottle of cold unsweetened tea, just bitter enough to prevent a mouthful being swallowed after the thirst is quenched. I have found an average of one pint a day sufficient for long rides in the sun in summer. Thus with a little care the subtle excuse of bad water is disposed of, an excuse which does much more evil than we hear of in England. I am convinced that more travellers suffer from eating too much meat, and that too fast, than from the water, and from inattention to the regular performance of digestion, which is an invaluable index. My own custom is to eat in every land the local food, with such exceptions as pigs, carnivorous things, putrid (not rare), and shell-fish,—and I have been duly thankful in every clime for the best of health and good sleep.—Yours sincerely,
J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending May 30, 1896.—Sun., May 24, Acts iv. 23-37; Mon., May 25, v. 1-16; Tues., May 26, v. 17-32; Wed., May 27, v. 33-42; Thurs., May 28, vi. 1-15; Fri., May 29, vii. 1-16; Sat., May 30, vii. 17-29.

Children's Special Service Mission.
Mr. Hutchinson, Stothope, Lincs., May 28; Kilburn, May 30 to 31. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Norwich and neighbourhood, to May 22. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Alyth, N.B., to May 23. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan, Walsham-le-Willows, to May 21; Hopton, May 21 to 28. Mr. W. S. Seyler, S. John's, Hoxton, May 27. Mr. E. Hughes, Waltham Abbey, May 31 to June 5. Mr. Hankinson, Padworth, Reading, May 21; Victoria Park, June 2. Mr. Herklotz, Doncaster, May 21; York, May 22; Calverley, May 23; Leeds, May 24; Manningham, May 28; Tadcaster, May 29; Leeds, May 30; Christ Church, Harrogate, May 31. Mr. J. E. C., Surrey Gardens Memorial Hall, Walsworth, to May 23.

Women's Congress in Paris.

AN International Women's Congress was recently held in Paris, which attracted a great deal of attention in the daily Press. Moral and social questions of great importance were discussed, specially as bearing on the position of women, and many excellent resolutions were voted. But, sad to say, a spirit of hatred against God manifested itself throughout all the sittings, and on the only occasion when one voice was raised in professing faith in God and the obligation of obedience to his laws, an indescribable scene of excitement followed.

One morning a statement had been made to the effect that many of the women employed in the shops of Paris were obliged to be on their feet, Sunday and week-day alike, from early morning till late at night, except at meal-times.

Miss de Broen, who had been asked to be present at the Congress because of her well-known labours among the working-classes in Belleville, seized this opportunity to move a resolution in favour of Sunday rest, which she emphatically declared to be necessary for the moral and bodily welfare of the family and the prosperity of the country, and above all to be a commandment of God!

It was at this moment, when she pronounced the name of God, that the most violent exclamations of hatred and blasphemy arose from all parts of the building, men and women alike participating in this demonstration against a belief in God.

Several of the daily papers commented on the occurrence, and though by no means advocating Sunday rest, or even any religious belief whatever, yet their remarks have by no means been hostile to Miss de Broen herself; on the contrary, her courage in declaring her faith in God, in the face of so much opposition, have won for her the respect of all, and helped to make her work more widely known.

From different sides also expressions of sympathy and gratitude have been addressed to Miss de Broen, for the courageous attitude taken by her at the Congress, as one letter, amongst others, from a Roman Catholic society, says: "She alone dared to pronounce from the platform the name of our Lord, by too many misrepresented in this Congress."

Truly, Christian friends in England will feel the importance of maintaining such a work as Miss de Broen's in the midst of this confessedly infidel population. Yet the Mission is sadly crippled for want of funds, and we would earnestly solicit the prayers and the help of God's own children on behalf of our sister and her work for Christ, that her heart may be gladdened by being enabled to seize the countless opportunities which God has given her to spread the glorious tidings of salvation through a living Saviour.

Miss de Broen's address is 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris. B.

Gospel Tent and Bible Carriage Work.

God has graciously helped me to carry on the Gospel Tent Missions for twenty-two summers, and the Bible Carriage work for eleven years. There are yet many villages and green lanes, commons and hamlets, hill-sides, glens, and valleys waiting to be traversed by the feet of those who bring "good tidings of great joy." My experience has taught me that no better way can be found to accomplish this than by Gospel tents, Bible carriages, and open-air testimony.

The first tent we sent forth last year was pitched in the village of Broughton, where faithful testimony was borne. Corsham was next visited by a tent, where again "the old, old story" was told. Another tent was erected in the populous suburb of Bedminster, but only a few services were held before it was blown to ribbons by the gale. A successful series of several weeks' Gospel services were conducted in another tent at North Common, where many souls were brought into the light and liberty of the Gospel. At Chester Park, Fishponds, also, we were privileged to erect a thirty-feet circular tent.

As several of our tents are now become too old and rotten for repairs, I should feel thankful to be in a position to secure three new circular tents of thirty feet diameter, which I could get made under my own superintendence for the sum of £60. Our Bible carriage work has given us much encouragement, in the fact that sixty-four villages and hamlets have been visited within a radius of twenty miles of Bristol, and much precious seed scattered, with signs following. The expenses during the year for the Gospel Tent and Bible Carriage Mission amount to £391 11s. 9d.

JAMES A. VICARY.

Wellington Lodge, 63, Ashley-road, Bristol.

Peeps into Poor Homes.

IT was Sunday afternoon, bright and springlike, and the calm of the Day of Rest was unbroken in the pleasant London suburb until we turned into the high road, where loaded trams and holiday-makers broke the stillness and made the air resonant with the sounds of toil and revelry. We branched off into a little side road, and presently entered a cottage home, where, in a small back room on the ground floor, lived the widow and her five children whom we had come to see.

A fair young creature she was, almost too weak to stand, for the pink-and-white morsel of humanity which presently lay upon our lap was only a fortnight old, and its entrance into the world had nearly cost its widowed mother her life. She told me, bit by bit, her story. For a year and a-half she had been the breadwinner, her husband being out of work. When the work came he fought desperately against the disease which had laid hold of him. We listened to the details of the death agony when the sufferer sent his wife from the room that she should not witness the final rending of flesh from spirit, and the incidents of the dark days that followed. We let the poor woman tell her tale, and then we listened to further heart-confidence, given spontaneously, "O, miss, whatever would poor creatures do if they couldn't pray? I knelt down there when my poor husband went, and got such an answer, and I feel sure that in some way good will come out of this dreadful trouble." A few words of sympathy, a little temporary help; then we reluctantly resigned the tiny baby, and wended our way home.

Do you think this is a rare story? Would that it were! In the next street there is a crippled mother, rich only in faith and love, dependent upon the bread of charity. She and her husband are semi-invalids, totally incapable of earning anything, and living on dry bread for days together. In an adjacent street a paralysed man and his wife are eking out the barest existence, the church of which both are faithful members paying the weekly rental. The woman has become a perfect wreck through the overwork and hardship of her life. A stone's throw from this couple are two sisters who are maintaining a respectable appearance; what is underneath the shabby-genteel exterior, who dare say? One is a sufferer who must bear her cross till death releases her from the cruel anguish of living. The other, brave, patient, and hard-working, keeps the little home together, and by day and night nurses the invalid sister.

Such stories are before us at all times, and we would fain lay their pathos and need on the hearts of many who in all humility are asking:—"Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

ANNIE F. PERRAM.

38, West Bank, Stamford Hill, N.

"The British Chautauqua."

"THE History of the First British Chautauqua," is the title of an attractive little pamphlet which has just been published, giving a descriptive account of the proceedings of the first "Chautauqua" ever held in this country. We are glad to see the record of the gatherings, which will never be forgotten by those who were privileged to take part in them last summer, now brought together in this more permanent form. The place of meeting was Pwllheli, on the shores of Cardigan Bay.

The booklet, which is illustrated by several photographs, gives a clear and succinct account of the rise of the Chautauqua movement in this country, and may be obtained (2d.) from Mr. Percy C. Webb, (Association for the Promotion of Home and Foreign Travel), 41, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

We shall duly announce some particulars of the gatherings for 1896, which will again be held in North Wales.

Chinese Women.—In a recent letter Mrs. Dalziel, writing from Shanghai, says:—"The native population in the foreign settlements of Shanghai is largely on the increase. I am told there are over 240,000 where we labour with our Bible-women, sowing the seed, telling out the story of God's love. The people are well disposed, inviting us to sit with them in their homes, courts, or alleys, wherever they may be at work. Large numbers of women are now employed in making match-boxes. We are thankful for this new employment, which largely takes the place of idolatrous paper making, and gives us better opportunities. We are greatly encouraged that so many are willing to listen. Crowds of little children form a large part of our congregation, and are not forgotten. Thousands of Gospel leaflets have been distributed among men."

The Deaconess House, Jerusalem.

AS some friends do not seem to have received the notification telling them of our change of headquarters for "The Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission" and its household, from Jerusalem to the north of the land, we beg them to remember this for the future. The Lord has given us a possession at Baakleen, a large town in the heart of the country of the Druses, a people little known hitherto, whose religion is secret, and who are neither Jew, Moslem, nor Christian. For our house in the Lebanon we ask the sympathy and prayers of the Lord's people.

Called to the Holy City in 1888, to give the message of the Gospel to the women there, we were privileged to be the pioneers of women's work in Jerusalem. We are no longer needed there, as many Christian women are carrying on the glorious labour, and we have removed our household to where the work of women for women is much needed and is unknown. Unsolicited by us, we have been given "a large room" for work; we have a house containing six ladies, also a dispensary, and premises in which we are ministering to the sick. For this cottage hospital we need funds, and for the extension generally of the work. We had an attendance of over 2000 patients last year at the dispensary. There are no opportunities for telling "The Story of Jesus," like those given the nurse at the bedside of the sick. A dispenser is urgently wanted at Baakleen; she must be a trained nurse, an earnest Christian, and able to acquire a language.

We cordially thank our friends who remember the Deaconess House at Jerusalem, through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN, and we ask them to remember our change of quarters. We have itinerating work in Palestine, where a nurse's services are required.

143, Clapham-road, S.W.

M. LLOYD.

Seamen at Grand Canary.

A VERY interesting work is being carried on at the Institute for Seamen at Port Luz, Grand Canary. A letter has lately been received from Mr. Searle, giving details of the work. No less than 2723 ships called at Las Palmas during 1895. These vessels were of every nationality, and their crews amounted to 80,000 men. Mr. and Mrs. Searle find many opportunities of speaking personally to the men, when they visit the ships, although the noise and bustle connected with coaling and the getting in of provisions often prevent regular services being held.

The great event of this year was the visit from the troops on their way to Ashanti. Mr. Searle went on board the ships distributing tracts, and papers, and Gospels to the men. The work at the Institute itself consists of Gospel meetings and Bible-readings, temperance addresses, etc. The reading-room is open daily, which proves a great attraction. Unfortunately this work is not adequately supported. Many readers must have special interest in our sailors. Will they show it in a practical way by sending help to the secretary, Miss L. Stephens, Tyingham, Beckenham, Kent.

Sedgley Home Mission.

THE annual report of the Sedgley Temperance Home Mission shows vigorous work and genuine results in special mission operations, street preaching, and other agencies. Tracts have been widely distributed in Sedgley itself, and in surrounding parishes and villages, where the state of things spiritually is spoken of as deplorable. The writer says:—

"My fellow-labourers were most devoted and zealous in the summer out-door services. The meetings were mostly well attended, and an intelligent attention paid, especially at Upper Gornal, where we are persuaded much blessing was given. Gospel books and tracts were freely distributed, and we have been informed that the same has been much used of God. We always missioned in the Bull-ring on Sunday evenings previous to our service, for the purpose of urging upon the many assembling there the wisdom and duty of attending some place of worship. The pledge has been in fair demand, but unless this step is followed by yielding to the Holy Ghost, that convicts all men of sin, and issues in regeneration of the heart, it is an uphill fight, and generally ends in failure."

The superintendent of this useful mission is F. A. Homer, Esq., J.P., Sedgley, Dudley.

The Y.W.C.A.

FOUR Association Homes have been formed in India, and the work is spreading.

An excellent report was presented by the secretary at the annual meeting of the Wigan branch.

A sum of £33 was raised at the annual missionary sale of work held at Richmond for the support of their own representative in China.

The annual meeting of the Newport branch was held on the 8th inst. The report showed the work to be proceeding very satisfactorily.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Southampton branch was presided over by Mr. R. C. Hankinson. Miss Digby gave an interesting address on the work generally, and Miss Skirrow followed with a description of the work carried on among factory girls in London and elsewhere.

At the annual social gathering of the Upper Norwood and West Dulwich branch, Rev. R. C. Joynt presided, and spoke on the four letters forming the name of the Association. Lord Overton gave an earnest address, which was listened to with deep attention, on the influence of young women.

The annual meeting of the Dundee Y.W.C.A. was held on the 7th inst. The membership numbers 830, showing an increase of 160. All the branches were reported to be in a flourishing condition. Over 500 girls had received instruction in cookery, laundry work, and sewing. Lady Kinnaird has been elected hon. president for the ensuing year.

At the third annual meeting of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch, Dr. F. Montague Miller took the chair, and pleaded the cause of the Association. Addresses were given by Hon. Emily Kinnaird and Rev. R. Owen Johns. An encouraging account of the work was given by the secretary, and throughout the meeting was hopeful and stimulating.

The annual missionary conference of the South of England division of the Y.W.C.A. was held at Salisbury on May 12 and 13. As we were brought face to face with the awful midnight darkness of heathen lands, with their 840 million souls, the majority of whom have never even heard the name of Jesus, we realised the tremendous responsibility resting upon us as those to whom God has committed the stewardship of his Gospel. In the report of the work of the missionary department it was stated that out of 190 branches of the Y.W.C.A. in the south of England there are at present 134 members working in the foreign field. E. H. B.

The Y.M.C.A.

At the annual meeting of the Nottingham Y.M.C.A. the Sheriff of Nottingham presided, and addresses were delivered by the Archdeacon of London and Mr. J. H. Putterill.

At the half-yearly conference of the South-Eastern District Union, held at Folkestone, the hon. district secretary reported that the general condition of the district was encouraging, and in all the more important centres there had been a forward movement.

The annual business meeting of the Trowbridge branch was held on the 12th inst. The president (Mr. J. Poynton Haden) occupied the chair, and there was a full attendance. The report showed evident signs of progress during the past year. The various agencies at work had been well sustained.

A gathering of special interest has just taken place in the Abbey Hall, Reading, when the members of the two Associations met, at the invitation of Mr. Leonard Sutton, to bid "God-speed" to two members of the Valpy Street Association, who had been accepted for foreign missionary service, and were about to proceed to the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society and to the C.M.S. College at Clapham.

The half-yearly conference of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. District was held on Tuesday, May 12. Mr. Newett (district secretary) presided. Reports were given for Ashton, Bury, Lytham, Macclesfield, Manchester, Southport, Waterfoot, Warrington; also an interesting account of the resuscitation of the Y.M.C.A. at Blackburn. Mr. R. H. Fisher read a paper on "Y.M.C.A. Athletic Clubs," which was followed by discussion, and an interesting conversation on Y.M.C.A. matters.

Mr. J. Campbell White, secretary of the Calcutta Y.M.C.A., has been on a visit to this country in aid of a building project for his Association. In a comparatively short space of time friends of Y.M.C.A. work in England and Scotland have contributed £5000 in aid of the scheme, and £4000 has been promised in America, so that the undertaking is already practically secure. When this and the Madras building have been erected, the three largest Associations in India (Bombay having possessed its own building for a number of years) will have premises suitable to their important and promising work.

The British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s, to be held in Derby, June 16 to 19, will be of considerable interest. The subjects on 17th include "The Bible in the Association," by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., with papers in connection by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas and Messrs. W. M. Oatts and H. B. Wilson. A session will be given on the same day to "Aggressive Agencies"; while in the evening a men's demonstration will be addressed by Dean Lefroy, Sir R. Webster, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Thursday will be given chiefly to "Missions," with a sermon by Archdeacon Sinclair. Various auxiliary operations will also receive attention.

[468]

Mr. Luther D. Wishard, the representative of the foreign work of the American Y.M.C.A. executive, and one of the prime movers in the Christian Collegiate enterprise, sailed with Mrs. Wishard from Southampton on Saturday (16th inst.) en route for South Africa, where he will attend several Y.M.C.A. and student conventions. Mr. and Mrs. Wishard have been staying for some weeks in Edinburgh for change and rest, and while there suffered severe bereavement by the loss of their little child. Mr. Mott, Mr. Wishard's colleague, after a very successful tour in India, has gone on to Australia in behalf of the Y.M.C.A. Collegiate movement.

Christian Endeavour.

A C.E. cruise on the Norfolk Broads has been arranged by Endeavourers in Derby.

The Birmingham and District Union now embraces seventy-five societies, with 4700 members.

The Devonshire Endeavourers have had a grand and rousing convention, in which many of the local ministers took part. Over a thousand young people are connected with the Union.

Rev. D. F. Mackenzie, the new president of the Scottish Union, has been visiting Aberdeen and Inverness to stir up interest in Endeavour work, especially in Free Church circles.

Dr. F. E. Clark writes:—A few months since it was proposed that a "World's Christian Endeavour Prayer Chain" should be formed. The links in this chain promise to pray for each other and the worldwide cause of Christian Endeavour. Immediate and most surprising was the response to this suggestion. Letters are pouring in upon me from all parts of the world, asking that their writers might be enrolled; and most touching have been the simple faith and trust in God revealed by these letters. Already more than 7000 are enrolled in this prayer chain.

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

A MEETING on behalf of the Christ Church Mission to East London took place on May 9. The Dean presided, and among those present were the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Bishop of Reading.

Oxford is looking forward to the summer eights, which commence next Thursday. Training has been going on for some weeks. These races attract large numbers of visitors to Oxford, and efforts are made by means of tracts to reach some of them, and also those who row in the races.

The Bishop of Newcastle preached the University sermon on Sunday.

The University Missionary Union had the pleasure of hearing Canon Taylor Smith, of West Africa, at their meeting last week.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission by Mrs. Baeyertz in Kirkdale, Liverpool, May 17 to June 1.

—For an eight days' mission in Deptford, conducted by Henry Hull, late Royal Horse Artillery.—For special services at Frampton-on-Severn, by Mr. Opie Rodway, Sunday, May 24, and for Mr. Rodway himself, who has not been able to hold a mission through ill health since last October, that he may be able to continue work.—For blessing at meetings on Whit Sunday and Monday at Great Wakering, Essex, by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander.

The Wanderers' Home, for inquiring and believing Jews, Bristol, is under the direction of Rev. J. M. Eppstein, who writes in the report for last year: "Forty inquirers have been admitted as inmates into the Home, and have had the opportunity to study the Word of God free from persecution and immediate care. Besides these we have had outside inquirers, thus making altogether forty-eight under instruction for from three to four months. Of the forty-eight above mentioned, only thirteen were baptized, twelve are still on probation, and twenty-three have either left of their own accord or were dismissed as unsuitable. Among those who apply to be received into the Home, and who are sometimes recommended to us by missionaries at a distance, there are some who come for the loaves and fishes; some expect at once to be made missionaries, but when they find that no temporal advantage can be gained, and that our only object is the salvation of their souls, and seeking to bring them to Christ, they become restless and leave." The address of the Home is 7, Park-place, Clifton.

Scottish Notes.

THE new Scottish monthly, The Northern Evangelist (from which we clip one or two items for this column), makes an excellent start. We trust it will be extensively circulated in the remote Highland parishes, where vital Christianity has not a little to hinder its progress. The publishers are Messrs. Milven Brothers, Inverness.

Another new periodical is the Free Presbyterian Magazine, the organ of the "Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland," which seceded from the Free Church in consequence of the passing of the Declaratory Act. The first issue contains, inter alia, a sermon portentous for its length and its divisions and subdivisions. The magazine is published by Mr. McNeillage, 121, Great Western-road, Glasgow; price 2d.

The Northern Synods (says The Northern Evangelist) have this year done a great deal of useful work. Most of the time was spent in the discussion of questions bearing on the religious and moral life of the people. The reports on the spiritual life of the congregations were, on the whole, thought to be encouraging, but intemperance still continues to be the gravest evil. The question of the Sabbath occupied much attention, and a very grave view was taken of the inroads on the integrity of the Day of Rest.

Mr. T. M. Pratt, who held meetings for the young at Dingwall, had also a series of twelve meetings in Inverness, in connection with the Free High Church. Mr. Pratt's use of the black board and lime light was very much appreciated by the children, and evidence of their deep interest was manifest in the large gathering who attended the last meeting. Mr. Pratt stated he had received hundreds of letters from young people giving their names and addresses, testifying to their receiving Jesus through these services, and desiring to follow Him. Some of these testimonies were very bright and encouraging.

Dr. Pierson's last week's meetings in Scotland were marked by much blessing. In Glasgow great audiences gathered in St. Andrew's Hall and the Christian Institute, and profound impressions were made by his addresses. After leaving Glasgow he went to Stirling, and thence to Kirkcaldy, and the closing meetings were held in Waddington and Hamilton. Particularly deep was the impression made in the three latter places, in which ministers of all the great Presbyterian churches were present, and who, as well as the spellbound audiences, were greatly impressed as Dr. Pierson sought to lay for the basis of a grander effort for missions the necessity of a higher standard of Christian living.

Irish Notes.

THE General Assembly's missions have had a successful year in India, where there were 135 baptisms during the twelve months; the communicants have increased from 462 to 520.

The Bishop of Derry (Dr. Chadwick) has taken part in a most successful series of missionary meetings in Londonderry and the neighbourhood, and a great stimulus has been thereby given to missionary enterprise.

The Methodist statistics for the year have been published, and show that eight districts, Dublin, Waterford, Limerick, Sligo, Derry, Clones, Belfast, and Portadown, report between them a net increase of 433. Two districts, Cork and Enniskillen, report a decrease of sixty-three.

The Colportage Association of the Presbyterian Church, which now employs forty agents, is doing an excellent work. Last year the colporteurs paid nearly 124,000 visits, and held about 50,000 religious conversations, while the total sales amounted to over £1941. The number of Bibles and Douay Testaments sold during the year was nearly three times as many as that disposed of two years since.

Southsea Convention.—This well-established gathering of Christians will assemble for the fifteenth year, June 1 to 5. The convener, Rev. F. Baldey, Vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea, states in his circular that the claims of heathen and Mohammedan lands will be specially brought before the conference. There is a very full list of well-known speakers.

Prayer.—One word—one little word—of prayer—how light a thing it seems!—and yet that one word has passed from earth to heaven, it has knocked at the gates of the City of God, and has found instant admittance there; its voice is heard above the song of cherubim and seraphim; it cleaves its way through all the shining throng that surrounds the eternal throne; it reaches the heart of God Himself; it "moves the arm that moves the world." O wonder and mystery of prayer! O power with God—power over God to prevail—how is it that in our unbelief we use so seldom this mighty power that God Himself has placed in our hands?—Dr. Barrett.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE,

SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	24dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	24dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MR. GLADSTONE, in the course of his articles on the "Future Life," in The North American Review, gives his views on the future of the unrighteous in the next world. He is strongly of opinion that the doctrine of retribution has not its true place in present-day preaching.

Can it be warrantable, that the pulpit and the press should advisedly fall short of the standard established by the Holy Scriptures, and not less uniformly by the earliest and most artless period of hortatory Christian teaching?.....I sometimes fear that we have lived into a period of intimidation in this great matter.

Mr. Gladstone proceeds to point out the tendency towards fixity that character always shows in its ripening process, and to the law of the moral as well as natural world which demands that suffering should be conjoined with sin. Universalism he rejects emphatically, as conflicting with the doctrine of sin against the Holy Ghost. There is something strangely impressive in this treatment of the great future by one of the greatest minds of the age, as it stands on the brink of the other world.

The spectacle of a millionaire rhapsodising in praise of poverty is somewhat unusual. In this attitude, however, Mr. Andrew Carnegie figures in Cassell's Family Magazine. He draws an enthusiastic picture of the blessings of a humble home, and of the contrast between the close and helpful fellowship of parents and children in such a case, and the position of the children of rich men, who are attended by servants and taught by governesses.

The poor boy who has in his father his constant companion, tutor, and model, and in his mother—holy name—his nurse, teacher, guardian angel, saint, all in one, has a richer, more precious fortune in life than any rich man's son can possibly know, and compared with which all other fortunes count but little.

Would it not be well for those who sacrifice their home-life in an intense struggle to become rich to ponder these words? There are thousands of men who subject everything to their desire to leave their families "well-provided-for," and who consequently scarcely see their children at all during the process. It might be news to them to be told they are giving up the substance for the shadow, and yet that is strictly true. Wealth that impoverishes life of its sweetest companionships, and most precious training, is poverty; and poverty that affords opportunity and time for these higher functions of family life is surely the best wealth.

There is now at least a temporary cessation of hostilities among the Cornish fishermen and their East Coast brethren. The cause of the dispute was the action of the latter in fishing on Sunday, a custom from which the former habitually abstain. In a reasonable letter to The Cornish Telegraph, a local fisherman, in a manly spirit, acknowledges on behalf of his fellows wherein they have acted foolishly, and, indeed, illegally, in throwing into the sea the fish caught by the Lowestoft men. We must deprecate such acts, since we cannot admit the principle of doing evil that good may come. But we commend their decision to lay the matters in dispute before the Home Secretary and the general public. We hold strongly to the maintenance of the Lord's Day as a day of rest; but even apart from this it is a grave injustice that men in any business who wish to keep the Sabbath should be placed at a disadvantage by others of their trade who, by working or selling on that day, are thus enabled to undersell them on the other six. The good influences of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen may well be exercised toward a good understanding among these men, whose pursuits and interests are identical.

If the estimate made by one of our magazines as to the amount of money spent on sport be correct, we are wasting a good deal. At the head of the list stands horse-racing, which gets more than ten millions of money a year; next hunting, which gets nine millions; while cricket and football get between them nearly four millions. The total is thirty-eight millions, or nearly a pound per head of the entire population. All the churches combined do not give as much in a year, to spread the Gospel in heathen lands, as is spent in the season on football alone; yet men can talk about the wastefulness of missions, and suggest a commission to make a searching inquiry into their working.

Can the Christians of England and of the Continent not learn something from the German Socialist leader when he says that Germans are the most sick of militarism of all the nations of Europe, and that in every Parliament in Europe Socialists are fighting militarism to the death? In Belgium, the Socialist propaganda is a marvel of zeal and of organisation. If these thousands of men long for peace, have Christians not a splendid opportunity of preaching Jesus to them? If they miss it, what will be the hindering cause? Subservience to conventional and respectable forms of thought and action? When will they begin with one heart and voice to preach Jesus as the Prince of Peace, who came to disband armies and teach men to live as brothers? Socialism without Christ may have the dream of peace, but Christ alone can realise the dream, and it is for Christians to proclaim that truth.

The use to be made of the public school is a cause of trouble and excitement in many lands. England and Canada are torn with strife over it, and for many a year will not see the end of it. Holland, like England, is afflicted with the vice of intemperance, and the question is being discussed there whether teachers shall have it imposed upon them to inculcate temperance. One writer puts the case forcibly when he says that the struggle is against a vice which is ruining the country, and that therefore it is the duty of the school to help. Nevertheless, at the bottom of all these disputed religious and moral uses to which the schools may be put, there is another question of vital moment, viz., the moral and religious condition of the teachers. Given good men and women, and it will be unnecessary, on the one hand, to impose upon them the task of doing religious and moral work, and, on the other, to restrain from proselytising. The power will be more to them than the form of religion.

The wisdom of laying hold on young persons is very strikingly illustrated by the short history of the Epworth League, which was started for young people at Cleveland, Ohio, on May 15, 1889, and has already a membership of 1,100,000. Its journal, The Epworth Herald, has a circulation of 100,000, but the best of all is that Bishop Fitzgerald, the President of the League, estimates that its members were the means of adding 100,000 members to the Methodist Episcopal Church last year. The League has a Spiritual Department, which aids the pastor in revival meetings, street services, and the circulation of devotional books. It has a Department of Mercy and Help, and also a Department of Social Work. Methods may vary in various places and in different churches, but all will agree that the churches must get the young, and keep them.

The tyranny of the beer-barrel threatens the United States as well as Great Britain, and a more degrading tyranny was never instituted by the skill of wicked men. The general superintendent of a Chicago railway has issued a notice with regard to an employé who had, as a citizen, opposed the brewing interest, and stood up for good government in the city, that he must not do that kind of thing, neither must others. Nations permit and encourage customs and trades which threaten their very life, and are repaid by being held in bondage by them. They should be wise betimes; they are generally wise too late, if they become wise at all.

Dr. Martineau has been telling a representative of The Westminster Gazette that in the Metaphysical Society he always found himself siding with the Roman Catholics on the subject of Natural Religion, the reason being that both Unitarians and Roman Catholics believe that, apart from the acceptance of Christian truth, man is able both to think rightly and to act rightly. His will is weak somewhat in the direction of right-doing, and Christianity only comes in to aid him a little. This harmonises with something else which is said of this venerable man—he does not like the word "salvation." Clearly not, if Christianity does no more than come in as a subsidiary; or, to put it more accurately, if Christ is only an auxiliary to the main force which dwells naturally in each of us. And, of course, Unitarians and Roman Catholics would agree on Natural Religion, because they both believe in salvation by works, though they would not agree as to what sort of works. "Grace is made of none effect" by both. But grace must be the burden of their Gospel who sit at the feet of Jesus, and who listen to the Holy Spirit as He speaks through the apostles.

We are told to "buy the truth and sell it not." All truth is costly, for it means research, patient waiting, earnest and honest acceptance, before it becomes a possession. For some kinds of truth ripe and trained intellects and long training are necessary. It is so costly that it is outside the grasp of all but the wise and learned. But of spiritual truth John Ruskin's words are true when he says, "These, then, I hold for two fundamental principles of religion—that without seeking, Truth cannot be known at all; and that by seeking, it may be discovered by the simplest."

Death is to all men the disturber of life's purposes, the cold hand that paralyses the will and energy of all on whom it falls, saying "Thy work is done." But with Jesus Christ this was not so. He looked forward to death, not as the defeat of his plans, but as their fulfilment. He was "straitened" till it was "accomplished"; for it was the terrible summit which He must climb in order that He might attain to the crown. This unique place which the death of the Saviour held in his thoughts and aims bears witness to a deeper meaning in it all than the unassisted eye can fathom. He came into the world in order that He might not only live, but that He might die. His death is thus a unique fact, the very centre of all his work. It behoved Him to suffer that He might "bring many sons to glory." That dark fountain of pain and sorrow was the place whence redemption streamed forth for the healing of the nations. His death is the world's life.

Noble thought and noble action go hand in hand. "Man is the completest unit in Nature," and he cannot live a true life unless heart and mind are in full accord. Truth in the intellect becomes right conduct in morals, and pure motives in the spiritual life. Those who believe one thing and act as though they believed another, can neither believe nor act with any reality or force. Inconsistency at last paralyses thought, and will, and feeling, and reduces character to a heap of conflicting elements. So we are to be seekers after the truth of God as well as to "hunger and thirst after righteousness." Then we shall find the doing of God's will no hard task, but the natural expression of the soul's energies and powers. To have the "mind" of Christ in us is the surest guarantee of doing his will.

There are three pictures of Christ drawn for us in the New Testament. First, we have the historical picture in the first three Gospels, where He is represented as He impressed those who saw and communed with Him in the flesh; secondly, the "mystic" picture in the fourth Gospel, where we see Him as He revealed Himself from within; and, thirdly, the theologic picture in the Epistles, where He is seen in his exaltation, and in his universal relations to the world which He redeemed. These three are drawn from different and independent standpoints, but they are representations of the same Christ, and are, in fact, complementary the one of the other. In each the sympathetic eye can see the whole portrait, though only a part is fully finished, and when the three are joined in one, the full conception of the Saviour is carried home to the heart with convincing force and beauty. Without any previous agreement and collusion, the sacred writers have thus given us a marvellous presentation of the Divine Man in the manifold wealth of his nature. As we read, the picture grows in power and reality line by line, till at last Faith casts herself at his feet in complete self-abandonment, and cries adoringly, "My Lord and my God."

[273]

The saints are exhorted to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." It is possible so to live an earnest life as to make it very unlovely and repellent. Good men and women are not always attractive. They are often hard and unsympathetic, cold and censorious. This verse brings before us the need of so presenting the Christian virtues that they shall appear what they are really meant to be—the adornment as well as the foundation of character. "And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work; so was the work of the pillars finished." This should be the aim of all true followers of Jesus Christ. He was full of "grace," as well as "truth." He did "all things well," i.e., "beautifully," so that the deed impressed all who saw it as something attractive as well as wonderful. When the strength of the Christian life is thus finished into proportion and charm, it commends itself even to the ungodly as a desirable thing, and fills them with an admiration that often ends in the desire to emulate it. We should aim at this attractiveness of character, not for the sake of glory, but that the Gospel may be seen and be justified.

One of the needs of the religious life is to cultivate the spirit of receptivity. There have been ages in the world's history when religion has been too passive, and the will has been dulled under a system of spiritual narcotics. We are in no danger of such evils today, but of the opposite. Church life shares in the vice of fussiness which is the bane of political and social life. We live on "movements," on "excitements," on restless "dissipations of energy," and forget that "in quietness and confidence shall be your strength." While the external machineries are being multiplied, the inner fires may be going low. The word to fall back on our "base" should be sounded throughout the land; for scattered forces mean a weakened army. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost" was the first word of Jesus to his disciples ere He sent them into the battle for the Cross. We should see to it that this willingness to receive should be renewed and developed, both in the individual and the Church.

The history of religious thought has shown that in each age some great Christian doctrine, specially suited to the needs and problems of the day, emerges into prominence, and has to be restated. In these times the doctrine concerning the person of our Lord is coming to the front. All the departments of thought in which there is any special activity come upon the problem—who He was, and where to place Him in relation to vital questions. Science has to face the miraculous in his life. Philosophy finds itself face to face with the mystery of his personality. History has to find a place for Him among its moving forces. In politics, his code of morals, his scheme of motives, his social principles, must all be studied before any true solution can be found to the difficulties that everywhere beset the reformer and the philanthropist. In the religious life, we have to settle each for himself what to do with Jesus Christ. And when all is said and done, the conviction is being more and more pressed home that here is One who can never be classified or disposed of by the methods of science. He baffles all explanations, and rises out of every grave of explanation dug for Him by hasty minds. He is King of thought as well as devotion, and holds the keys to unlock the problems of this life at his girdle, as well as the problems of death and hell.

Missions Ancient and Modern.—2.

OF organisation in ancient missions we come upon no trace, except that the preachers went forth two and two, a wise arrangement by which the qualities of one were supplemented by the qualities of the other, by which the sense of loneliness was mitigated, and by which one could countenance, cherish, and, if need be, nurse the other. Paul was comforted by the coming of Titus. The church that sent the missionary forth was behind him, as a home to return to in case of need of counsel or other aid, but does not appear to have supplied him with means; very likely could not. Under the circumstances, this was not so much required as now; indeed, to plant the Gospel now in some lands would be literally impossible without support from home.

In modern times the churches have joined their strength together to send the missionary as their messenger as well as a servant of Christ. He represents their zeal and liberality and love for men. They relieve him from money care while he goes forth to do their work; they hold the ropes while he goes down into the mine. Modern missions are the earliest illustration of the modern ideas of co-operation and division of labour. Such union was not easy at the first, but is easy enough now, and it would be criminal not to use it. "Wisdom is justified of all her children." The spread of the Gospel at the beginning is often supposed to have been very rapid—much more rapid than now. In point of fact, it was slower at the first; it is quicker now. The life of the ancient nations was shockingly corrupt long after the introduction of Christianity, even for hundreds of years; but the nations to which the Gospel has gone in these later days have not had it for more than a century, and have made marvellous progress in that time. Complaints are made of the condition of the late native Government in Madagascar, as if the island had been Christianised for centuries, the complainers forgetting that only two or three generations of a small proportion of the people have lived under the influence of the Gospel. Justice, no doubt, was sold in Madagascar, so it was in England until the days of Oliver Cromwell, and so it is yet in many places. The only true comparison of the ancient and the modern is to take places which have enjoyed the Gospel for a century. India, China, Africa (Central and South), Madagascar, New Guinea, the South Sea Islands, are living in the year of our Lord ONE HUNDRED, not in 1896. What was England like hundreds of years after the introduction of the Gospel? When the Saxons conquered it they made it a heathen country. "The religion of Woden and Thunder triumphed over the religion of Christ." But before the Saxon came our forefathers were only living in a dim light, and were practising many things of which Fijians would be ashamed.

The truth seems to be everywhere and through all the ages, that many have been called, but few chosen, and the few have been the salt of the nations. J. P. G.

Two Days in Epping Forest.—It is proposed to hold gatherings for Bible study, prayer, and conference, in a marquee to be erected between Chingford and Buckhurst Hill, on Friday and Saturday, June 26 and 27 (the week before Midday). Cheap tickets will be issued by the G.E.R. from London; and hospitality provided for a limited number of visitors from the country. Particulars as to speakers, etc., will be announced in due course. Communications may be addressed to Mr. A. Garstin, Queen's-square, London, E.C.

God's Promises.

By THEODORE CUYLER, D.D.

THE solvency of a bank and the strength of a Government give their value to the notes they issue. So it is the infinite solvency of the Divine Ruler that makes all God's promises to be "exceeding great and precious." And on them rests the true assurance of the Christian and his peace of mind in the darkest hours. It was happily expressed by an old negro on a Virginia plantation whom a friend of mine once asked: "How is it, Caesar, that you are always the happiest man on the plantation?" "Because, sah, I always lays flat down on de promises, and I prays straight up." Humble, happy soul, he was not the first man who has eased an aching heart by laying it on God's pillows, or the first who has risen up the stronger for a repose on the unchangeable words of the infinite love.

God's promises are as "great" as their Giver. When Julius Cæsar once gave a man a great gift, the man said, "This is too great for me to receive." And the noble Roman replied, "It is not too great for me to give." The smallest promise in our Bible-casket is too much for us poor sinners to deserve; yet the largest promise is not too large for our heavenly Father to make good. He scorns to act meanly by his children, and wonders that we so often act meanly toward Him.

Many people commit the grievous mistake of forgetting that nearly all of the DIVINE PROMISES ARE CONDITIONAL.

God as a sovereign has a right to prescribe the terms on which He bestows his blessings. The Bible sparkles with promises of salvation; but to whom? Are they made to any man unconditionally? Not that I can discover. God commandeth all men everywhere to repent, and makes repentance of sin one condition of salvation. Another condition is—faith on the crucified Son of God. "He that believeth on the Lord Jesus Christ hath everlasting life; he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the only begotten Son of God; he shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." These terms are explicit enough. Is it not strange that anyone should expect to be saved who is nullifying all God's promises by refusing to comply with God's terms?

Salvation is a matter of covenant. God lays down his conditions in the Gospel. The "blood of Christ" cleanseth from all sin; and he that cometh to Christ shall be "in no wise cast out." Observe how thickly the precious promises are strewn around one spot—the cross of Calvary; there they are as sparkling as the diamonds in the sands of Golconda. My friend, if you desire the benefit of these promises, which are large enough to awaken the envy of an angel, you must go to Calvary for them; that is your hill of hope, and your mount of mercy. The Cross itself—in its stupendous signification—is one eternal unchangeable promise "exceeding great and precious." But to be saved you must go to the Saviour; and your going to Him in sincere penitence and faith is your part in complying with God's sovereign conditions. This age has discovered many new things; it has discovered no new terms of salvation. They are as old and as glorious as Calvary.

As we have said of the promises of full salvation that they lie beside the cross of the atoning Jesus, so it may be said of the promises in regard to prayer; they are to be found beside the mercy-seat. "Ask and ye shall receive." There is no receiving without the right asking; no finding without the right seeking; no opening to us unless we knock with the right spirit. If you have ever gone to that mercy-seat and come away empty, it was because you asked amiss. If you regarded iniquity in your heart; if you carried only the cravings of pride and selfish lusts instead of the supplications of submissive faith, then the very promises became warnings to seal your lips. God makes his own conditions. To penitence and faith He gives liberally; to selfishness or unbelief nothing. He loves to give when we will let Him give, and is never better pleased than when we importune Him with his own words, and plead before Him his own promises. Yet there is a fearful amount of scepticism even with many professed Christians in regard to the answering of prayer.

Good people often forget that there are many sincere and proper petitions that we cannot expect to see answered at once. Many a faithful mother's prayers for her children have brought down precious blessings upon them long after the sod has grown green over her slumbering dust. The first martyr, Stephen, prayed during the agonies of death for his persecutors; when he was in Paradise, the young bigot who was an accomplice in his murder became a trophy of redeeming grace. Let desponding parents and desponding churches remember that God often puts perseverance to the test, and

DELAY DOES NOT MEAN DENIAL.

God sometimes puts a long date to his promises. David does not come into his kingdom for many a year, and Abraham does not see his son until he is an old man. The young grain that is now gladdening the fields with green slept under snow and frozen clods all through the long winter. How often I think of the reply of the simple-hearted old nurse to the mother who was worrying over her sick child: "Ma'am, you jist trust God; He's tedious, but He's sure." I don't believe that there is such a thing in the history of God's kingdom as a right prayer offered in the right spirit that is for ever left unanswered.

Our honest, fervent prayers are often answered in a different manner from our expectations. God blesses the good intention, but does not grant the strict letter of the request. Jacob, when he blessed the sons of Joseph, laid his right hand on the son who stood at his left side. So our heavenly Father takes off the hand of his blessing from what we asked for, and lays it on another something that it is more for our good to have. Paul besought God three times over that the "thorn in his flesh" might be taken away; God heard him, and answered him—not by removing the thorn, but by the sweet assurance, "My grace is sufficient for thee"; and Paul's victorious patience has been a lesson for millions of suffering saints to this present day. God works on long lines, but with an unerring hand; in this life we look at the weaving tapestry of his providence on the ravelled side; in eternity we shall see the tapestry beautifully finished without one thread of his promises broken.

The Church Army and Prisoners.—The Prison Commissioners, in view of the good results attending the social work of the Church Army, have sanctioned the fixing of a card in each of the 800 cells at Strangeways Gaol, Manchester, inviting prisoners, on their discharge, to apply to the Church Army receiving-officer in Manchester, when they will be received into one of the Society's Labour Homes. This system is already in operation in connection with Pentonville Prison, London, with the approval and co-operation of the Governor, chaplain, and other authorities.

A Victory Over Temper.

BARBARA was a Spanish woman—named after St. Barbara, to whom the Spaniards pray when it thunders, as she has a supposed power over storms of thunder and lightning.

Barbara used to have a very violent temper, but when she heard, some three years ago, the sweet story of salvation, of the power and will of the Lord Jesus to wash away her sins in his precious blood, she joyfully accepted Him, and became a new creature in Christ Jesus. The old hasty spirit was brought into subjection to the obedience of Christ, and though at times the tempter brought his darts to bear upon her, nevertheless the Lord kept his own.

Frequently the converted Spanish women invite their neighbours to a cottage meeting and ask English workers to meet them and explain the way of salvation and the Word of God. They are a warm-hearted and impressionable people, and many a happy hour has been spent in homely talks over the Word. But it is by no means left to the English sisters to do all the speaking, one and another of the Spanish women burst out, giving their experience, simply telling out the story of the love of Christ, and how He had saved them, or how He had kept them in the hour of temptation.

On one such occasion when we were talking of the keeping power of Christ, Barbara could not contain herself; and she told the following incident which illustrates what it is to be "more than conqueror."

"I must tell you how the Lord has kept me. You all know what a fearful temper I have naturally, and Satan often tries to trip me up now. I had had a hard morning's washing yesterday, and had hung up the clothes to dry, but just as I was going to take them away, a gust of wind came and blew them all down. I knew this meant re-washing many of them, and I felt inclined to be dreadfully enraged, my first impulse being to listen to the voice of Satan and find relief in a volley of oaths. But then the thought came, 'I belong to Jesus, and He shall keep me'; and He did, for as I picked up the scattered things, He enabled me to say as I put each separate one into the basket: Gloria à Dios (Glory be to God) and then (she said) I could not be angry."

It was amusing to see her at the meeting act the scene, stooping down and picking up imaginary clothes, and saying, "Gloria à Dios," each time she did so.

She was more than conqueror, for she not only gained the victory over her temper, but praised the Lord. And may it not be so with us? If, for example, the sin of praise is our temptation, will not the Lord give us grace to excel in humility, lowliness, meekness? May He teach us to know ourselves, and know Him who is able "to keep us from falling," and "abound in every good work." To Him be the praise.

LUCY T. MACHINLAX.

22, Highland-road, Upper Norwood.

"Zoar at Broussa."

It is intended soon to establish a branch to the Broussa Orphanage, with the name, "Zoar at Broussa," for the children of the massacred Armenians. A suitable building will cost £600, and for the outfit, etc., £400 will be needed. It would be far better to open orphanages in each large town of Armenia, but it is impossible to get the consent of the Government; hence we are obliged to make arrangements to rescue as many as we are able.

The Broussa Orphanage was opened in 1875, when the great famine carried off more than 150,000 people. Soon afterwards, when, during the Bulgarian atrocities, the Russo-Turkish war broke out, our institution again rescued some Bulgarian children. Later on, when earthquakes destroyed many villages and towns in Armenia, we were requested to take in some destitute children.

Our ever-unfortunate nation and country is now passing through a long series of calamities, without a parallel in history. In this critical moment we must open the gates of the orphanage to a larger number of children. Will the Lord's people help us with cheerfulness? Our treasurer for Britain is Rev. W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec. of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

GREGORY BAGHCHASARIAN.

Broussa, April, 1896.

Letters from S. Africa.—19.

THE CONVENTION AT WELLINGTON commenced on Monday night, April 27, and was closed on Friday night, May 1. The meetings were held in Goodnow Hall, in the Seminary building, and were well attended. Not only when Rev. Mark Guy Pearse was speaking, but after he had left the evening meetings were crowded.

The subject was "Waiting on God," and though some speakers gave themselves a little latitude, and dwelt upon different aspects of holy living, the Conventer and Chairman throughout, who was of course Rev. Andrew Murray, never lost sight of the one definite phase of the subject which he had fixed upon—"Waiting on God."

I was glad to find Mr. Murray looking better than I had been led to expect. Some one had told me with sorrow that his health was breaking up. The fact is, he had found it necessary to keep lying down some considerable part of each day, but when the Convention was coming on he asked that he might be enabled and strengthened for it. His prayer was granted, and he really seemed in better health than when he was on our side of the water. I am going to see him in a day or two, and hope to say next week that the improvement continues.

The meeting with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, and Mrs. and Miss Pearse, had naturally been looked forward to by many, and I need not tell people at home that those who came were not disappointed. After Mr. Pearse had left, Mr. Murray referred again and again to his sayings, such as these—"Love brings us down that others may go up." "We are only worth what we give away." These and many more will abide in memory, linked with touching stories, told as few can tell them, by this sunny-faced speaker.

During the Convention a telegram arrived urging that intercession should be made on behalf of South Africa, in view of its present critical condition, and specially that peace may be preserved. Mr. Murray gave emphasis to this request, and it was again and again responded to in the prayers that were offered.

On Wednesday afternoon all were invited to meet in the garden of the parsonage (Rev. J. R. Albertyn) where Dutch and English held fellowship together as members of the one body whose citizenship and conversation are in heaven.

It was a delightful surprise on Thursday to see amongst us PASTEUR COILLARD, of the French Protestant Mission on the Zambesi. When the brethren were in conference at Morija, in Basutoland, there was daily anxious inquiry and prayer concerning him. He had left his station for Europe suffering from a most painful complaint, and had got as far as Kimberley. Now, it proved that he tarried there in order to get surgical relief, and in the mercy of God the operation was successful. In travelling, however, the oxen of the wagon carrying his luggage had been shot on account of the rinderpest, and he arrived with only the clothes he wore. He is still in delicate health. He will sail, God willing, in the Warwick Castle on May 21, and hopes to be at Mildmay Conference and Keswick Convention.

Major Whittle's beautiful hymn, "Moment by Moment," was sung every day, sometimes more than once.

In opening the Convention on Monday night, Rev. Mr. DAINTREE, of Mowbray (a suburb of Capetown), gave a searching address, in which he raised the questions whether, individually as Christians or corporately as churches, we are giving God the first place, and whether we are doing his work in his way or in our own.

On Tuesday evening Rev. E. Z. DE BEER, of Seapoint, spoke helpfully of the renewal of spiritual strength that comes from waiting on God. Mr. WM. HILL gave an exposition of the famous passage, Haggai i. 3-10. On Tuesday evening Mr. DUDLEY KIDD illustrated the folly of waiting on one's own selfish wishes rather than on God, by the story of Jonah fleeing from the post of duty. Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE spoke on the marvellous change that Pentecost wrought in the disciples of Jesus Christ.

On Wednesday morning Mrs. WATSON spoke on the life of fellowship with God, and Mr. MIDDLEMASS set forth Scripture teaching as to the carrying of the daily cross.

In the afternoon Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE spoke in the Dutch Reformed Church, by interpretation, on Rom. xii. 1-3.

In the evening he spoke in Goodnow Hall on John xv., the main thought being that love gives itself away. There is only one commandment, that ye love one another. Keep that, and the rest will keep themselves. Not, Do you love Jesus? but, Do you love your brother? That is the condition of entering the Church. No man can receive me into the Church. No man can keep me out of it. What keeps us out of the Church is lack of love. Every man who carries ill-will in his heart excommunicates himself. It is wonderful what a lot of religion a man may have without love.

The lesson of the vine is life given away. The vine is good only for fruit it bears. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he should give his life." We are only worth what we give away. The address was full of rich, fresh, evangelical thought, applied with graphic words and glowing illustration. It was calculated to be comforting, encouraging, and stimulating: unless the mistake were made of understanding natural love to be meant, instead of the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost.

On Thursday morning, Rev. ANDREW MURRAY read Ps. xxv. 5. The young ladies of the Seminary were in the gallery from 9.30 to 10 each morning, and were addressed in words and thoughts well within their comprehension. He said: "Waiting on God" is our subject. This implies a deep sense of need. I wait for what I need. Why is that war vessel waiting in the harbour? It may be for repairs, or troops (i.e., strength), or supplies, or for orders, or because the captain is not on board. Waiting implies not only a deep sense of need, but a strong desire, thirsting for God; also entire surrender, and confident expectation.

Mr. W. CAMPBELL, of Glasgow, who, accompanied by Mrs. Campbell, is in South Africa on business, and who is well known in evangelistic and convention circles in Scotland, spoke on the visit of Barnabas to the young converts at Antioch, the second worst city in the world, exhorting them with purpose of heart to cleave to the Lord. Mr. Campbell illustrated this by the story of Ruth cleaving to Naomi.

Mr. MIDDLEMASS again spoke of taking up the cross and following Jesus, from 1 Cor. i. 17-29, Luke xiv. 26.

In the afternoon an open-air meeting was held under the trees, at which the story of the Greytown Revival, which has already been referred to in "Letters from South Africa," was given by Mr. BOTHA, a typical Dutch farmer, who was the first convert. I hope to supply some further matter of interest from this address.

Mr. OUDENDAL, another Dutch speaker, an evangelist in connection with the Dutch Reformed Church, told his own story. Not only while he told it, but habitually, his face wore an expression such as one might expect in one whose experiences had been so vivid and their results so permanent. He spoke in Dutch, and repeated it to Miss Murray, who has been good enough to translate it for me:—

Seven years of my life I had deep conviction of sin, as it were a heavy black cloud resting upon me, so that afterwards I lived in despair. Then I began to pray God to deliver me, but I wanted to make it right by my praying, therefore I only became worse and worse, till at last I said to the Lord, "I am at the end of myself, and my plans for salvation have failed. I can do nothing more." Thus I became willing to leave everything to Jesus. Then I fell on my knees, and I said, "Lord, to-day I take Thee at thy word, thy word is truth. Come to-day and deliver me from my sins." While I knelt, came down on me visibly and clearly the cross of Christ. My eyes were opened, and I saw the Lamb of God on the cross. When the cross appeared the dark cloud between my God and me disappeared, and Christ took complete possession of my heart; and when I rose from my knees I could indeed say, "Old things are passed away, all things are become new." The peace and love of God streamed into my heart. God's presence was so clear to me that I no longer beheld Him by faith but face to face, as if I could give Him my hand. The glory of God that shone over me caused me to feel as if I were indeed dead to sin, and that I only saw the new heavenly life of God rule and reign in my heart. Since then the Bible has become to me a new book; it is as if through every text the face of Jesus shone and God's children were my great joy. My great delight was to bring the unconverted to Christ. Ever since then God's presence has been a cloud of glory to me, and it becomes more glorious every day. For thirteen years I have told the Gospel story and people say you must get exhausted by speaking so much about Christ, but I always receive a fresh revelation of Christ before I speak.

One day I left home, and I had felt since the morning as if my spiritual life was driven to God, and I felt his hand resting upon me. I came to a lonely place, when it seemed as if I felt God's hand pressing upon me, causing me to stand still; all my feelings, left me, I seemed delivered from the flesh, and I stood still. I looked straight to heaven, and between God and me a shining light from his face descended upon me. While I looked up to God's light I saw lovely white clouds with four white corners, which, opening out, showed me the Son of God in his glory seated upon a throne in the midst of the cloud. An indescribable glory and light went out from Him upon the angels and his children on earth. I realised then that the reason why God's children are so often without joy is because they know too little of the personal presence of God. Since then it is a necessity to me to pray, day by day, "Reveal thyself to thy children" that they may see Jesus."

A couple of years after my conversion I received a baptism of the Holy Spirit on this wise. I was kneeling in my room, and God's presence descended as a flame of fire upon me, and I felt as if it pervaded my whole being. I went forth to the meeting conscious of God's presence, and I felt the power of God passing through me to souls who soon began calling out "What must I do to be saved?" Shortly after this I became ill. I grew weaker and weaker, so that I could hardly breathe, and my strength was exhausted. My feet seemed already on the heavenly threshold, and only a tiny cord divided me from heaven. Some round me said, "He is dead." I felt that the prayers of God's children for my restoration to health prevented my entering heaven. I recovered my strength enough to leave the bed, and a brother said to me, "No one can help you or restore you to health, but God alone." I knelt down before my God, and said, "I do not want to live for pleasure or the world, but for thy service; please restore me." I felt that my prayer entered heaven, and God answered it. I received the assurance that I should be restored to health, and rose and began to walk, the first time for eight months.

In this sickness the unity of God and the saints in heaven and earth was shown to me, and I realised in an indescribable manner the Almightyness of God, and since then nothing has been too wonderful for God to do. Every day my soul rests in the Lord, and I rejoice in Him.

During this illness I was in a terrible battle with Satan. It was as if I were in the bands of death, and this broke me so that I felt all my own strength was annihilated as never before. In utter despair I cast myself into God's hand, and as soon as I came to put myself thus in quietness in God's hand, Satan departed, and God's face shone upon me. I felt as never before the union of God with his children and with me, and a deep and abiding love to souls took possession of me. From that day it is indeed God that worketh in me to will and to do of his good pleasure, as it is written in Philippians.

I have given the above without alteration, though I should not myself always have expressed it in the same words. No one could doubt the reality of the story, least of all those who know most about the speaker and the work which God is doing by him. But do not let anyone write hard things against themselves because their experience is not of this realistic kind. There is no higher experience than faith without sight or sound. "This voice," said the Captain of our salvation, "came not because of me, but for your sake." "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

Capetown, May 6.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Evangelical Continental Society.—The annual meeting was held on Tuesday last at Union Chapel, Islington, Rev. W. Hardy Harwood presiding. The annual report was presented by Rev. George H. Giddins, secretary. Rev. W. Major Paul, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Rev. Cav. Saverio Fera (of Florence), Rev. N. Hurry, and Mr. F. Yeats Edwards took part in the proceedings.

France: its Evangelisation.—I.

WE look across the British Channel to our sister country, France, and remember that though we English people occupied from time to time large regions of the country—the Plantagenets indeed held one half of France—yet we are a conquered people, conquered by Norman-French, who introduced their laws, and religion so far as it was understood in their time. English travellers, together with our children from the United States in the Far West, pour into France at Calais, Boulogne, Dieppe, Havre, and Cherbourg. All will be struck with the remarkable contrast which the people and the country present.

In the first place we perceive that we are amongst a military people, and that on its shores often there is a want of well-ordered sea-front and promenades, such as we have left in our own country. But in regard to the characteristics of the French people, we must keep in view that there is a greater variety of race and language in France than perhaps in our own British Islands. What with the Flemish, German, and Italian, the Breton, Basque, and Catalan, together with the nearly extinct Langue D'Or and Langue D'Oc, there is no little variety of speech. It may be that in remote villages south of a line drawn from Bordeaux on the west to Brainçon on the east, they may speak patois; and my friend, Miss Levat, who has written in prose and verse in the Langue D'Oc, says that it is a language rich and harmonious, but that much diversity prevails in different localities.

But the French language would be read and understood in speaking by nearly every one. We have pleasant recollections of the Breton sailors when we travelled on the west coast from St. Nazaire to Bayonne; they chiefly man the French Navy, and are marked by their seriousness, manliness, perseverance, and patient courage. Then we may speak of the phlegmatic Flemish miners, the boiling Provençal, the Midi people, lively and impressionable; the men of the north, more cold and reasoning; and the mountaineers, reflective and contemplative. We have these varieties of race, but with all their diversities we may say that the French people as a whole are characterised by a mind clear and clever, and demand reasons simple and striking ere they give their adhesion to a proposition. They have a heart peculiarly sensible to generous emotions, with much activity, liveliness, impetuosity, and some inconstancy. They are impatient of words, and of ideas, when not clearly connected with the real and positive. There is a remarkable development of this faculty of emotion amongst women, and more especially in the higher classes, which has been developed from generation to generation, has become hereditary, and is greater than that of any other nation.

The French gain upon us by acquaintance, and if we are to win their ear for better things, we must approach them by sympathy, throw overboard our cold bland reserve, study their characteristics, and learn how to get into their hearts as our lamented and dear Dr. McAll has taught us.

Whilst so many favourable characteristics mark the French people, and so many worthy individuals are found amongst them, and the influences for good are not few, one cannot be blind to the fact that there is a great deterioration of an appalling kind at work, and one most evidently working for evil, seen in the press circulating amongst the middle and lower classes. Professor G. Doumergue, of Montauban, writing in Le Christianisme, has said: "I have lately had occasion to examine a little our cheap press, our halfpenny newspapers. I have been completely stunned by this examination! Truly it passes belief! The cheap press—there is the enemy. The priestly power is nothing; the curse of drunkenness is absolutely nothing—in comparison with this cheap press. One rises from reading these papers as one would leave some abominable den of vice, disgusted, exasperated, sick at heart, enervated; the brain and heart literally boiling over. Good, evil, virtue, vice, truth, falsehood, everything uncertain, everything upset; all seems to swim before the eyes. Words have no more their right meaning, things have lost their true shape, all is but a huge demoralisation, and an unreal excitement."

Another fearful enemy operating on a wide scale is a revived persecuting spirit of ultramontane Roman Catholicism, which, it is true, is rousing determined opposition amongst men of the working classes; but let anyone read the works "L'Arsenal de la Devotion" and "Le Dossier des Pèlerinages," and they will speak of what the natural result of such influences must be, and what the state of heart and intelligence is that can be governed by them.

The priestly power is something, and the following remarks of a friend depict this renewal at this moment of a conspiracy against Christian efforts to spread the truth of Christ in France:—"There is now a great campaign against the Protestants in France, a campaign wretched and perfidious. It is Rome which is its author, and whose agents, in accusing faithful French people of being foreigners, are not less men leagued with a stranger prince and the supporters of a religion which is Italian, and which obliges the recognition of Rome above everything, whose laws serve for authority above and before that of the country they are in. Truly this is an anomaly, to tax others with being foreigners, and themselves to obey a syllabus that comes from abroad."

With this aggressive opposition to all moral and religious instruction by Protestants, they are left in a state of deplorable ignorance and superstition. The mass of the agricultural population, frugal and temperate to a degree, have sunk down into materialism, though adhering to the forms of Roman Catholicism. A friend of mine, a country curé, recently told me that his parishioners had not a notion of spiritual religion, or if there was any idea of worship, they had entirely substituted the Virgin for the Son of God. They go to the priests to bless sprigs of boxwood as a protection against evil influences. One of the most remarkable of their ceremonies in some parts is the blessing of the fields, which takes place three days before the feast of the Ascension. As a special protection, the peasants have hazel boughs blessed by the priest at the Rogations, and set them in their fields as a defence against hail, which they are believed to avert!

GEO. PEARSE.

Algiers.

Stockwell Orphanage.—Although the financial year just ended opened with a deficit, there is now a substantial balance in hand. During the year 100 fatherless children were received into the home, making a total of 1919 benefited since its foundation. The annual festival and founders' day will be held on Wednesday, June 17.

The Lady Missionaries' Training Home has entered upon the fourth year of service at 15, Burnbank-gardens, Glasgow. The new report says: "During the past year seventeen young ladies (members of the United Presbyterian, Free Church, Baptist, Wesleyan, Methodist, and Swedish Evangelical Churches, also of the Church of England) have entered the Home as students. A new feature in this past year's work is the weekly Bible reading. The young ladies themselves, in regular rotation, conduct this meeting, which has already proved a help in fitting them to take part in more public work. During the year a course of ambulance lectures was delivered by Professor James Swanson, and a course on sick nursing by Dr. J. Anderson Robertson. Mr. D. Dinwoodie has given instruction in Materia Medica, and in the elements of anatomy, physiology, etc. The cookery class held last year was so successful that arrangements were made this summer for a similar course being given by Mrs. J. Steele Boe, late of Badcall." District and sick visitation forms an important feature of the training. The hon. sec. of the Home is Miss Forrester-Paton, Mars Hill House, Alloa, N.B.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 7.

WARNING TO THE DISCIPLES.—Luke xxii. 24-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Phil. ii. 5.

WE come in this lesson to the last night of our Lord's earthly life. He is in Jerusalem, keeping the Feast of the Passover with his disciples, in the house of some friend otherwise unknown (7-14).

I. THE STRIFE (24). This must have been particularly painful to our Lord at a time when his own thoughts were full of the suffering awaiting Him. He was preparing to go down to humiliation and death for them. They were eagerly grasping at the best things for themselves. How utterly out of sympathy with Him they were! The strife probably arose out of two things, the usual custom of foot-washing, and the choice of places of honour at the table. Not one was prepared to do so lowly and menial a service as that of washing the feet of his fellows. They seem to have sat down without observing the custom at all. The strife appears all the more unworthy because it was not about being great, but being accounted great. The way to true greatness our Lord had already taught (Matt. xviii. 1-4). The way to be accounted great He had not thought it necessary to teach. They were concerned not about character, but about reputation.

It is this spirit of false ambition that enters into everything to-day. The desire to be first, to get on, to occupy the highest position still exists. "I should like to go to heaven in a chariot of fire with horses of fire," said a boy, "if they would let me drive!" In the home, in the school, in recreation, in business—there is often an absence of the spirit of meekness. The counsel, "In honour preferring one another," is forgotten.

II. THE REPROOF (25-30).—His words teach three things. (1) That such ambition is the very opposite of the Christian spirit. In the Gentile world tyrant kings who lorded it over their subjects yet prided themselves on being called "benefactors." They cared for the name, but not for the character it represented (25). Greatness in the Christian sense consists in lowliness and readiness to serve (26). Position is only to be valued as it increases our opportunities for ministering to others. A corporal in the American Army did not understand this, and while his men were engaged in lifting a heavy piece of timber for some fortifications, did nothing but issue his commands. George Washington saw him, alighted from his horse, and suggested that he should help his men to do the work. The corporal drew himself up with great dignity, and said, "Do you know, sir, I am a corporal!" "I beg your pardon," said Washington; then took off his own coat and helped the men to build the fortification. Imagine the corporal's surprise and shame when he heard this unknown friend say to him, "I am sorry I insulted you, Mr. Corporal; but when next you have a difficult work to do, send for George Washington, and I will come and help you."

2. That our Lord's example had been a constant witness against their foolish ambition. The words (27) may refer to his whole life; or probably to the lowly act of footwashing which he had just performed (John xiii.) There was no ostentation in this service. It bears no resemblance to the practice of the Pope, who annually washes the feet of a few aged paupers. It did not institute a rite; but in effect it said, "Deem no act too menial by which you can render service to others."

3. That exaltation in the truest sense is sure to those who serve (28-30). The exact meaning of this promise is uncertain, but the most probable interpretation is that which refers it to the position of honour to be given to the Apostles during the Millennium. The principle has its application to all (2 Tim. ii. 12).

III. THE WARNING (31-37).—Our Lord's words to Peter suggest that, even when we know it not, we may be the subjects of special attacks from Satan; yet that he cannot touch us until he "asks" for us; and that all he can do is to sift us. Sifting does not change a single grain of wheat into chaff. But what if Peter, like Judas, should prove to be only chaff after all? But we learn also the secret of our being kept. Our Lord's intercession prevails (Heb. vii. 25). Recall the scene in the Interpreter's House, where the fire continued to burn brightly in spite of the attempts to quench it, because oil was poured on from the other side of the wall. We are reminded, too, that our very temptations are a blessing to us. Peter would not learn that he was weak from what Jesus said to him; he should learn it by Satan's temptation. And his experience became his qualification for helping others (32). See Ps. li. 12, 13.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 31.

"THOU MAN OF GOD!"—2 Kings i. 9, 11, 13.

Oh that thou and I might so live before God and men, that they should recognise us as men of God, as God's men! See how these ungodly captains at once recognised this, in the case of Elijah. They fretted and chafed against his holiness, but they were forced to admit it. They tried to impose their orders, or those of their king, but they realised that Elijah was the servant of One whom they set at nought, so far as their own lives were concerned.

If we are really men of God, we shall be the last to assume the title. Notice that Elijah puts an if before the title with which he was saluted: "If I be a man of God." We shall be the first to disclaim holiness, when we are really holy.

We must be of God. All our goodness must originate in Him. We can no more boast of goodness than a chamber can boast of the light which irradiates each corner of its space. The faith that takes his grace, as well as the grace it takes, is his. We are absolutely his debtors, and happy are they who love it to be so, and lie always at the Beautiful Gate of God's heart, expecting to receive some alms at his hand.

We must be for God. This is the only cure for self-consciousness, for that perpetual obtuseness of the self-life, which is our bane and curse. Ask that the Holy Spirit may fill you with so absorbing a passion for the glory of Jesus, that there may be no room to think of your own reputation or emolument.

We must be in God, and God in us. This is possible, when we love perfectly. He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Oh, sea of light, may we be bathed in thee, till our very faces shine!

MONDAY, June 1.

"ELISHA, TARRY HERE, I PRAY THEE."—2 Kings ii. 2, 4, 6.*

Thrice Elijah spoke thus to his friend and disciple to test him. Perseverance, tenacity of purpose, a refusal to be content with anything short of the best, are indispensable conditions for the attainment of the highest possibilities of experience and service. And perpetually in our life's discipline these words come back on us, Tarry here! Not that God desires us to tarry, but that each onward step may be the choice and act of our own will.

Tarry here in consecration.—"You have given so much; is it not time that you refrained from further sacrifices? Ungird your loins, sit down and rest, forbear from this strenuous following after. "Spare thyself, this shall not come to thee."

Tarry here in the life of prayer.—"It is waste time to spend so much time at the footstool of God. You have done more than most, desist from further intercession and supplication."

Tarry here in the attainment of the likeness of Christ.—"It will cost you so much to count all things but loss for the excellency of his knowledge."

Such voices are perpetually speaking to us all. And if we heed them, we are at once shut out of that crossing the Jordan, that rapturous intercourse with heaven, that reception of the double portion of the Spirit, which await those who have successfully stood the test. The law of the Christian life is always advance, always leaving that which is behind, always reckoning that you have not attained, always saying to the Spirit of God, as Elisha to Elijah, I will not leave thee.

TUESDAY, June 2.

"YE SHALL NOT SEE WIND, NEITHER SHALL YE SEE RAIN; YET THAT VALLEY SHALL BE FILLED."—2 Kings iii. 17.

This is God's way of fulfilling the desire of them that fear Him. We like to see the clouds blown forward through the sky, and hear the moan of the rising wind; in other words, we like to see God's gifts on their way, or to have the sensible emotion of receiving them. Sometimes we have symptoms and signs that fill us with rapture; but when, at other times, these are lacking, we surrender ourselves to despair. Yet when we see neither wind nor rain, God may be most mightily at work.

It is so in Church work. How often we make our valleys full of ditches. Our machinery is complicated and perfect; we have spared neither pains nor care. Then we would like to have the sign of a powerful revival; but, if we only knew it, the Divine blessing is welling up in the ditches, more than would be the case if our highest wishes were gratified. Here and there tears are falling silently, hearts are being cleansed, lives are becoming yielded to God.

It is so in Christian experience. We expect to have our Pentecost as the early Church received hers. We desire to see wind and rain, and to know that God is baptizing us; but this is not granted. There is no footfall of hurrying clouds, no coronet of flame, no gift of tongues. But, deep down, the ditches are being filled up, yearnings are being satisfied, the capacity for God within us is being met, though it grows apace. God be praised that the success of his work is not gauged by outward signs!

WEDNESDAY, June 3.

"AND THE OIL STAYED."—2 Kings iv. 6.

What a sorrowful confession. There was no reason why it should stay. There was as much oil as ever, and the power which had made so much could have gone on without limit or exhaustion. The only reason for the ceasing of the oil was in the failure of the vessels. The widow and her sons had secured only a limited number of vessels, and therefore there was only a scanty supply of the precious oil.

This is why so many of God's promises are unfulfilled in your experience. In former days you kept claiming their fulfilment; frequently you brought God's promises to Him and said, "Do as Thou hast said." Vessel after vessel of need was brought empty and taken away full. But, of late years, you have refrained, you have rested on your oars, you have ceased to bring your need. Hence the dwindling supply.

This is why your life is not so productive of blessing as it might be. You do not bring vessels enough. You think that God has wrought as much through you as He can or will. You do not expect Him to fill the latter years of your life as he did the former. You can trust Him for two sermons a week, but not for five or six.

This is why the blessing of a revival stays in its course. As long as the missionary remains with us, we can look for the continuance of blessing. But after a while we say, let the services stop, they have run their course and fulfilled their end. And forthwith the blessing stops in mid-flow. Let us go on pleading with sinners, and bringing the empty vessels of our poor effort for God to fill them up to the full measure of their capacity.

THURSDAY, June 4.

"LIKE UNTO THE FLESH OF A LITTLE CHILD."—2 Kings v. 14.

Is there any fabric woven on the loom of time to be compared in perfect beauty to the flesh of a little child, on which, as yet, no scar or blemish can be traced? So sweet, so pure, so clean. It was a wonderful combination, that the strong muscles and make of the mighty man of war should blend with the flesh of a child. But this may be ours also, if we will let the hand of Jesus pass over our leprous-smitten souls. They are pocked with the leprosy of sin, in all its defilement, but Jesus can make them clean and fair. At this moment, if you let Him, He will touch you and say, "Be clean," and immediately the leprosy will depart, and you will return to the days of your youth—not forgiven only, but cleansed—not pardoned only, but clad in the beauty of the Lord your God, which He will put on you.

We do not count a little child to be free from the taint of sin. It is conceived in sin, and inherits the evil tendencies of our fallen race. Its innocence of evil is not holiness. Jesus gives us more than innocence, He makes us pure and holy.

But there are other childlike qualities which our Saviour gives. The humility of a little child, who is unconscious of itself, and who is not perpetually looking for admiration. The unselfishness of a little child, who seeks its companion to share its luxuries and games. The trust of a little child, which so naturally clings to a strong and loving heart, willing to follow anywhere, to believe in anything. The love of a little child, who responds to every endearment with sunny laughter and soft caresses. Would that we might all be thus to God.

FRIDAY, June 5.

"BEHOLD THE MOUNTAIN WAS FULL OF HORSES AND CHARIOTS OF FIRE ROUND ABOUT ELISHA."—2 Kings vi. 17.

So it is with each of God's saints. We may not be able to see the harnessed squadrons of fire and light, but the Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them. If our eyes were opened we should see the angel-hosts as an encircling rein of fire, but whether we see them or not, they are certainly there.

God is between us and temptation.—However strong the foe, God is stronger. However swift the descending blow, God is swifter to catch and ward off. However weak we are, through long habits of yielding, God is greater than our hearts, and can keep in perfect peace. Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is the Rock of Ages.

God is between us and the hate of man.—Dare to believe that there is an invisible film of protection between you and all that men devise against you. What though the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing, God's outstretched hand and his holy arm must get for Him and you the victory. No weapon that is formed against you shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment shall be condemned.

God is between you and the deluge of care.—What thousands are beset with that dark spectre. They have no rest or peace either day or night, saying, "Where will the next rent, the next meal come from?" How different the life of the birds. They sing their hour, sure that somehow the food will come for the next. God is around your life, to provide for you; only trust Him. Live in God, as a child in its parents' love. "The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks." "In Thee will I make my refuge, till all these calamities be overpast."

SATURDAY, June 6.

"THIS DAY IS A DAY OF GOOD THINGS."—2 Kings vii. 9.

It was indeed. The enemy that had so long hemmed them in had dispersed, leaving a great spoil behind. The famine which had driven the people to awful straits was at an end, and there was now plenty of everything. It was inhuman for these four lepers to be content with eating and drinking, and sharing out the spoil, when hard by a city was in agony. Common humanity bade them give information of what had happened.

Let us take care lest some mischief befall us, if we withhold the blessed Gospel from a dying world. We know that Jesus has died and risen again, and that his unsearchable riches wait for appropriation. We have availed ourselves of the offer, but let us see to it that so far as we can, we are making known the wine and milk which are without money and without price.

Mischief always overtakes a selfish policy, whereas those who dare to share what they have received with others, not only keep what they have but find the fragments enough for many days afterwards.

Let us tell men that the Saviour has overcome our foes, and has opened the kingdom of heaven to all who believe. Let us speak, from a full heart, of all that He has proved to be. Let us invite men to share with us the grace, which hath neither share nor bound.

One ounce of testimony is worth a ton weight of argument, and overpowers all objection. The lord, on whom the king leaned, derided the possibility of the prophet's prediction; and no doubt had plenty of adherents. But the leper's report swept all his words to the winds. They had known, tasted, and handled. Let us remember that we are called to be witnesses of what God hath done for us,

* A very helpful and suggestive little brochure, entitled MEN OF ONE IDEA, has been written by Mr. R. Cope Morgan on this chapter. (1s. per doz. Morgan & Scott.) [480]

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

A Zulu Blind Boy's Story.

WHEN I was eight or nine years old my work was to herd the calves. About this time there was a small frame house built near my home. All the people were asked to send their children there to school, to learn from something that they called a book, also to learn other things which I thought must be like the fables our grandmothers told us. I liked to herd calves with the other boys. We could hunt birds and roast them; also roast corn when we made a little fire by a bush. When we saw the cattle getting into the gardens we would draw lots to see which of us must run to drive them out.

I did not much care for going to school, but I went one day, and the other boys looked after my calves. We all sat on benches, and everything was quite strange to me. One day something happened which pleased me very much, and I laughed; so did one or two others. Then, when the teacher saw us, we began to dispute which of us had made the others laugh. The teacher said we must not talk and laugh in school. I was displeased, and would not go any more.

When I was a year or two older I went to work in a sugar-mill which the English Government built at the station for the people. One day while there I saw a man working in iron; I was interested, and went near to see how it was done. The man was working fast, and the sparks were flying. That was the last thing I ever saw—the last ray of light. One of the sparks flew into my eye and I became totally blind.

I was sick three months; I cannot tell how great the pain was. No words can tell! Oh, how dreadful, too, it was to me that it was always night! It was like death; often I cried with the pain in my heart, which was sometimes harder to bear than the dreadful pain in my eyes.

At times like weddings and feasts, when the people would all go and I could not, I felt as if my heart would break. My mother would never go and leave me, and many bitter tears we shed when alone together. I longed to die, and often felt as if I could kill myself. Then I thought all would end; I would just die as the beast dies. Sometimes I ran hard, saying I did not care where I went or how I fell and hurt myself. I would fall in the tall grass many a time, and lie there, hoping I might never get up again. But my mother would be sure to find me. I knew nothing of God; all was dark, dark to body and soul. I knew not that I had a soul.

After a year or two I began to be more quiet, but suffered on and kept still; for hours I would sit with my head in my blanket and speak to no one.

I remember my father always as an old man. He was kind to me, and after I was blind he was very kind. Sometimes he allowed me to eat with him. But he died, and this was another great sorrow to me. My brothers quarrelled as to who should be chief. They were not kind to me, nor to my mother. My mother was always kind, and she being at the head of the older women in the kraal, we got on very well.

I always liked to take a bath in the river every day, but I had never gone alone. One morning I waked when the cocks began to crow, and thought I should like to try if I could go alone and take my bath. The river was about half a mile away. I got up and set out. The air was fresh and pure, and the birds were waking up to sing their morning song. I did not know if it was yet light; it was all the same to me, night or day; I could never again see. I went safely to the river and had a nice bath. I came out, and was able to find everything just where I had left it, my native dress on one side of the path and my sticks on the other. (A Zulu will never go away from home without sticks; every little boy carries at least one or two.)

I do not know when I had been so happy as that morning; I was pleased to have got on so nicely alone; I wondered how it was that I had such nice thoughts, where they came from, where everything came from. As I quietly walked home thinking on these things, it seemed as if I was not alone, that someone was with me, was helping me, and that was the reason I had gone on so well this morning. Yet I could hear no sound that told me anyone was near.

I now believe these were my first thoughts of God. It was like a little trust! I hardly know what it was like. From the children in the school I had heard that there was a God. But the thought was very vague, and had taken no real form in my mind.

There was a Christmas festival held at Umvoti for all the children in the schools connected with the station. The children in the schools near us learned little pieces to recite and hymns to sing on that day. One of the hymns which they learned they sang a great deal at home. It said, "Take, take the Word of God to the people, that they may be glad." I wondered what was the Word of God.

About this time "Inkosazana" (Miss H—) and Titise, a native woman, began to have meetings at our kraal for the women. They were sometimes in my mother's house. One day I was there at the meeting: they spoke to me, but I would not say much, just sat as I often did with my blanket on my bowed head. They have since told me that they then thought I was very stupid as well as blind. They had no idea that I had listened to every word they had spoken at the meeting, or that I had listened at all. The meetings were held every Monday afternoon, and I continued to go to them, but quietly sat as before.

(To be concluded.)

The Buluwayo Hero.

I DARESAY most of the young readers noticed the letter from Annie Baxter, telling how her brother gave up his horse to a wounded companion in a battle with the Matabele near Buluwayo, South Africa, and how, being unable to escape himself, he was soon killed by the assegais of the enemy. I do not wonder she said,

"It was a noble death and a glorious end."

As I have thought of it, I have been reminded of Jesus, who saved us at the cost of his own life, and four little sentences have been impressed upon me.

The wounded man had no power to escape. He was helpless to save himself. And so are we; our sins have wounded us, and disabled us, and mean to destroy us altogether. We cannot escape—indeed, we do not even try to escape; and if we do, our sins are strong and we are weak. Escape is hopeless.

But a way of escape was provided for him. A strong soldier gave up his horse to his wounded mate. Does not this remind us of the Good Samaritan? A poor man had been attacked, wounded, and left to die. "But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him he had compassion on him, and went to him and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast" (Luke x. 33, 34). Jesus is this Good Samaritan.

Like the soldier, He changes places with us wounded ones, gives us his strength, and takes our weakness.

The brave man's fate. By taking the place of his comrade he was soon surrounded by his comrade's foes, and received in his body the spears which would otherwise have pierced the body of his comrade. How this reminds of Jesus, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. ii. 24). We escape, but our foes become his foes: so that He said, "The assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet" (Ps. xxii. 16). The spear of death which ought to have gone into our heart, went into his. The lightning darts of Divine anger that ought to have struck us, were quenched in his blood.

Our fate if we do not escape. We have a new and living way of escape opened to us by Jesus. Do not neglect it. The wounded soldier did not neglect or hesitate to use the horse put at his disposal. Had he done so he would have perished; and if we refuse, neglect, or put off the way of salvation through Christ we must perish. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins" (Heb. ii. 3; x. 26).

If Annie Baxter thought much of her brother, Frank William Baxter, ought we not to think more of our Great and Glorious Brother, Jesus Christ? She had a letter from her brother, and the Bible is a letter from our Brother. How precious this letter should be! Oh to love Him more!

WILLIAM LUFF.

The Bible Searcher.

Answers to these competitions are acknowledged in two lists:—

1. Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue. 2. Those received later, in the one following.

But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the questions appear.

ON account of Whit Monday, there will be no "first list" this week, but all correct answers will appear in the list given next week.

ABOUT PRIZES.

On June 18 there will be special "Bible Searcher" questions, for which prizes will be given. But only those boys and girls will be allowed to compete whose names have appeared in the lists as "correct" nine times during the twelve preceding weeks.

Those who have joined too late, or have been unsuccessful too many times, to make up nine "correct" weeks by that date, must wait till the next.

I must ask my young friends and their parents to excuse my referring to their answers again if their names do not appear in the lists. I have acceded to several such requests, and in every case have found that the answers had been inaccurate, and the names, therefore, properly left out. It involves considerable labour to search out particular papers, and my readers, young and old, must accept as final my decision as indicated by the lists.

Foreign List:—

No. 15. Charlotte Cane, South Africa. No. 18. W. Arnot Craick, and Jean Scott, Canada.

No. 20 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

Willie and Reginald Findlay, Fred Winstone, Fritz Tatzlaff, May Hamson, Mary Ormiston, Willie Weinstein, Nettie Thomson, Jessie, Isabel and Elmin Roe, Elsie Hancock, Lizzie Tadelat, Dora Colebrook, Sissy and Mary Watts, Christie Lawson, Llewelyn Maltby, Lillian Sidney, William McMurray, Lillian Wilkinson, Elsie Warren, Gertie and Mildred Scott, Eva and John Gray, Lucy Soltan, Annie, Elma, and Dorothy Grove, Edith and Dora Corrie, Walter Stainer, Marion Connell, Esther Enderby, Mary Wood, M. H. Daniels, Laura Kirk, Bill La Brooy, Dora Watters, Bertha Hopkiss, May Bentley, Violet Staudert, Dorothy and F. E. Harris, Sarah Brown, Olive Coleman, B. and H. Poole, Mabel Birney, R. Graham, Mary Start, Amy Bright, Emily Norster, Frederick Hudson, Marian Fregard, Ada and Mabel Davis, Dora and Kate Symes, Tilley and Frances Wood, Daisy, Vera, Norman and May Petrides, F. S. Chance, Annie Iredale, John Miln, Nell Law, Christina and Bella Campbell, Katherine Blair, Colin and William Mackenzie, May Meredith, Eva and Ethel Huntley, Louis Berthe, Lucy Lomax, J. W. Ingle, May and Annie Morley, E. Berryman, Vera Dickinson, Fanny and Jessie McKean, Grace Rudge, "Winnie Page", Evelyn Moir, Willie and Ada Palmer, Elma Ishmail, "Craig-ard", Maurice Williams, Christabel Swift, Rixon and Mathilda Robinson, Arthur and Edith Quick, Grace Dawson-Scott, Louie and Nannie Tibbits, Florrie Smith, Lionel and Gladys Calvert, Emily Webber, J. B. Horlock, Alfred Kearney, Charles Holbrough, Ruth Harrison, Win. Porter, Jessie West, Edith Hearn, Dora Blakie, Archibald Couper, Amy and Maudie Nottage, Ernest and Edie Nash, Milla Medill, Mary and Ruth Braithwaite, Graham Sharp, Grace Seaton, Maud Clarke, Elma Tebb, Ella Dixon, Sidney Foyman, Lois Beard, John Thomson, Hubert Malcham, May Watson, Ethel Walls, E. B. and Netta Black, Harold Wadson, Eric and Gerald Heaton-Smith, Francis Milne, J. and T. M. Stainer, Thomas Kirkpatrick, Dora Jay, Gwendolyn Hill, Arthur Cordell, Gordon Bligh, S. and Lillie Wilke, John Menzies, Hal and Victor Armstrong, Florence and Emily Palmer, Bertie Davey, Minnie Giddings, Effie Simpson, Edward Rainey, Minnie Elsie, Marcus King, Gordon and Edith Graves, Barbara Tennant, Cecilia and Maggie Reid, Ruby Vincent, Freda Hinton, Rowland Webb, Harry Sutton, Edith Grove, George Trotter, Barbara Macdonough, Dora Jay, Ruby Allen, Sinclair and Moffatt Jackson, Bortha Fowler, Ruth van Millington, Rose Anton, Ethel and K. A. Paisley, Lucy and Nora Anderson, Leslie Morris, G. Pasley, Grace, Ida, and Elsie Wright, Catherine Bailey, E. Yorbury, Raymond Whitwell, Bertha Kelsey, Jessie, L. M. and M. L. Cook, Leonard and Frank Dentall, Ethel, Basil, and Gerald Moore, Margaret and Trevor Matthews, John and Margaret Hesse, John G. Browne, Leslie Frank, Lizzie Hill, Nora and James Law, Theodore Roberts, Maggie Wight, Mary Wrench, Florence Hamshaw, Kathleen Cole, Rosetta Sherwin, Frances Develish-Meares, Emily and Daisy Greenbrook, S. M. Cookson, T. Murley Oldham, K. G. Kirkpatrick, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Herbert Braddon, Teresa and Rowland Blakie, Archibald Beardsly, Elsie Jackson, Ezra Matthews, Arthur Spella, John Jeffa, William and Mary Charles, Daisy Bligh, Kate Ireland, Norman Draby, Raymond Theobald, Charlotte Seale, Annie Lake, Tryphena Cox, Eliza Herridge, Selma Smith, Nellie and Arthur Couch, Bessie Cheale, Louise Hooper, Irene Duke, E. A. McClean, Ida Gullen, James S. Bay, Leslie and Harriet Orr, Bertie Hunt, Maude Truist Stanley Wright, Florence Thomson, Jessie Bone, Ethel Fielder, Hannah Lovell, Harcourt, Tom and May Hunter, Edith Friend, Willie George, Alice Short, Annie Baxter, Winifred and Elsie Cockrem, Angus McKillop, G. B. Dyke, Eva Monti, Daisy Warne, Gertrude Edwards, Cynders and Allen Baker, Christine Arnold, Annie and Edith Clarke, William Gavin, Hannah and Christy Parker, Frances Bennett, Oswald and Horace Roberts, Connie Rouse, Margaret Macphie, Marguerite Foster, Nellie Benny, Francis Hayte, Duncan Payne, George, and M. A. Cowell, Isabella Dunlop, Annie Hamilton, Muriel Shaw, Kathleen Poweraker.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE

SEARCHER (No. 21).

- 1.—Terah.
- 2.—That God would make of him a great nation, that He would bless him and make his name great, and that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed.
- 3.—Because God promised that he should be "father of many nations."
- 4.—With great kindness.
- 5.—Six times.
- 6.—By God commanding him to sacrifice Isaac.
- 7.—Hebrews xi., v. 17.
- 8.—The field of Ephron, for a burying-place for Sarah.
- 9.—175 years. He was buried in the cave of Macpelah in the field of Ephron.
- 10.—v. 23. Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness, and he was called the Friend of God. (Also v. 21.)
11. King of Salem and priest of the most high God.
- 12.—Heb. vii.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 22).

In 2 Kings ii-vi.

1. (a) Mention the different miracles performed by Elisha. (b) Give chapter and verse for each.
2. (a) Who was Elisha's servant? (b) What happened to him? (c) Why?
3. (a) How many children are mentioned in these chapters? (b) What do you know about them?

Children under twelve need only deal with chapters iv. and v.

Personal Paragraphs.

AMY BRIGHT.—I am glad you are correct this week.—
DAVID PENMAN.—A star is given for extra neatness and care in answering the questions. GERTRUDE AND NELLIE BROOKFIELD.—Thank you very much for the printed texts. M. H. DANIELS.—You only mentioned Peter. FLORENCE AND ETHEL MACKENZIE.—Thank you very much for the flowers, which I sent on at once to the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Swinhope, Lincs., May 28; St. Simon's, Kensal Green, May 30-31; Southsea, June 2-5; St. John's, Holloway, June 8; Langton, June 10; Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, June 12. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Alyth, N.B., to May 29; Hamilton, N.B., May 30-June 12. Mr. B. Herklots, Manningham, May 28; Tadcaster, May 29; Leeds, May 30; Christ Church, Harrogate, May 31-June 1; Shipley, June 2; Holwell Green, near Halifax, June 3; Horsforth, June 4; Spofforth, June 5; Brailford, June 6-8; Leeds, June 9-10; Skipton, June 11; Leeds, June 12. Mr. Hankinson, Victoria Park, June 2; Trowbridge, July 11-17. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, Hopton, to May 28; East Harling, May 29-June 5; caravan No. 2, Stowmarket, to June 1. Mr. E. Hughes, Waltham Abbey, May 31-June 5.

Special prayer meeting, at Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, Thursday, May 28; tea and coffee at 5.30; meeting at 5 p.m.; for seaside services and caravan work.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending June 6, 1896.—Sun., May 31, Acts vii. 80-43; Mon., June 1, vii. 44-60; Tues., June 2, viii. 1-13; Wed., June 3, viii. 14-25; Thurs., June 4, viii. 26-40; Fri., June 5, ix. 1-16; Sat., June 6, ix. 17-31.

"Lord, to Whom Shall we Go?"

WHEN life's buds of promise fair,
Wither in the blight of care;
When its flowers rich of hue,
Bow with sorrow's heavy dew;
When its fairest blossoms die,
And their leaves all scattered lie:
When in suffering pain or woe,
Unto whom, Lord, shall we go?
When on billows, tempest tossed,
We in doubt's dim haze are lost;
When the waves of anguish roll,
O'er the frail bark of the soul;
Lightning flashes, thunders boom,
Warn us of approaching doom;
Darkness veileth earth and sky,
Unto whom, Lord, shall we cry?
When some gleaming mirage bright
Beckons us from paths of right;
When the way is strewn with brier,
Hearts grow faint and footsteps tire;
When the loved and blessed here,
Leave us for a holier sphere;
When for things unseen we yearn,
Unto whom, Lord, shall we turn?
Where, O where, but unto Thee,
Saviour of humanity;
Thou can'st buds of hope restore,
Bid love's blossoms bloom once more;
Gild grief's thickly falling dew,
With sweet faith's glad rainbow hue;
To thy heart of love we flee,
Thou, our all in all, wilt be.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

The Southern Counties Colportage and Evangelistic Village Mission has been engaged for nearly a quarter of a century in aggressive warfare against impure literature; and in this way has sought to educate the people, in the villages especially, in favour of pure and wholesome reading. Mr. J. Hasell Charlton writes:—"The work has been done at great personal sacrifice, if looked at from a worldly or business point of view, but this is by no means the view we take of the matter, because we have proved many thousand times over that no ministry is so fruitful of real spiritual blessing, both to the worker and to those amongst whom he is privileged to labour, than is obtained by this agency. During the seven years the Mission has wrought in the Southern Counties, a debt of £50 has accumulated; we earnestly ask for help to sweep away this burden, in order that greater efforts may be put forth in the same direction." Communications to Mr. Charlton should be addressed, Grove-road, Woking Station, Surrey.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTANIA.

THE MANIFESTATION OF GOD AT THE DEFEAT OF THE PHILISTINES.

TO what an extent this epoch-making victory over the Philistines, which concluded all the wars of David, affected the pious in Israel, will best be seen by the songs of David's contemporary writers—Asaph and the Sons of Korah. As both, by their Psalms, had seconded David in the earlier wars (Pss. lxxxiii., lxxx., and xlv. and xlvii. by the Sons of Korah); and as Asaph had besides written Psalm lxxxi. on the occasion of the famine, it would, indeed, be remarkable had we not a word from them relating to the great deliverance vouchsafed to king and people. Three psalms—Ps. lxxvi. by Asaph, and Ps. xli. and xlviii. by the Sons of Korah, introduced here—now become fully understood. Because their historical connection was overlooked, a place was formerly and with much uncertainty, sought for them in a much later period, their headings being disregarded on the point of authorship. These, however, here, as everywhere else, exactly hold true*. That these psalms suit the situation perfectly, provided the writer's conception of Psalm xviii. be correct, every impartial reader will be constrained to admit.

PSALM LXXVI.

For the Chief Musician; on stringed instruments.
A Psalm of Asaph, a Song,

1. Known in Judah is God,
In Israel is his name great,
2. And in Salem is his tabernacle,
And his dwelling-place on Zion.
3. There He broke the lightnings of the bow,
The shield and the sword and the battle. Selah.
4. Effulgent art thou,
Glorious from the mountains of prey,
5. Spoiled are the stout of heart, they slumber and sleep,
And none of the men of might found their hands;
6. At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob,
Both the chariot and horse are sunk in dead sleep.
7. Thou—dread art Thou,
And who can stand before thee when once angry?
8. From heaven didst Thou make judgment heard,
The earth feared and was still;
9. At the rising of God for judgment
To save all the afflicted of the land. Selah.
10. For the wrath of man subverts thy praise,
With the residue of wrath, Thou girdest thyself.
11. Vow and pay unto Jehovah, your God,
Let all around Him bring presents to the Terrible One.
12. He cuts down the spirits of princes,
A dread to the kings of the earth.

God is known (1); effulgent art Thou (4); dread art Thou (7). In these three exclamations Asaph proclaims the deeds of God in the Philistine war.

(1) Asaph in this psalm, and the Korabite (xlviii. 3), and David (ix. 16) have recourse to the words

* The real historical basis for these psalms in the Philistine war having hitherto been wanting, it has seemed necessary to ascribe Ps. lxxvi. to the Assyrian period, and Ps. xli. and xlviii. to the time of Jehoshaphat. But it is not in accordance with the Assyrian period that Judah and Israel (in lxxvi. 1) should be placed side by side—"God's name is great in Israel"—for Israel was at that time in exile. "The mountains of prey" (Ps. lxxvi. 4), too, would be the most unsuitable name imaginable for the flat Nineveh. Should, moreover, the subject of Psalms xli. and xlviii. be the defeat of the united neighbouring tribes by general slaughter, as was predicted by the Asaphite Jahazeel, it is still at variance with Ps. xli. 7 that the victory should have been won by Jehovah raising his voice (comp. Ps. lxxvi. 6-8). All three psalms seem to assume that the Temple of Solomon was not yet built (Ps. xli. 4 and lxxvi. 2). When the people of Zion are invited (Ps. xlviii. 12) to go round Jerusalem in order to count her towers and see her palaces, the Temple would assuredly have been mentioned first, had it been built. David's little tabernacle could hardly have been mentioned on this occasion, as it could scarcely be seen beyond the walls. But see how Asaph mentions later the Temple of Solomon, Ps. lxxviii. 69: "And he built his sanctuary like the heights."

"made known"—proclaimed, in order to describe what God has done. Judah and Israel are emphasised as the places where God's name is made known: Salem and Zion as the home of his revelation by the raising of the tabernacle. "There," or rather "thither," that is, towards Jerusalem, He broke every weapon that bore a hostile name—bow and shield, swords and implements of war. It was not, then, at Jerusalem, but in the direction of the Holy City and its Temple, towards which all who pray must turn, and from whence, also, God "heard" (Ps. xviii. 6), the real goal, too, of the enemy, that God made Himself known by striking the assailants.

(2) Asaph has elsewhere proclaimed, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined forth" (Ps. l. 2). In the present case, however, it is from the robber fastnesses* "the mountains of prey" that his glory shines forth. Hereby is meant the Philistine strongholds or castles, with the mention of which, v. 45 of Psalm xviii. concludes. This description is more applicable to the Philistines than to any others; they, more than any other tribe, having harried and plundered Israel at all times. These "mountains of prey,"† intended to represent the entire tribe of the Philistines, are now fallen at the rebuke of God (6). The great Philistine giants, "the stout-hearted," sleep the sleep of death; the brave are rendered impotent; men and horses are routed, and put to confusion.

(3) A word relating to God and his manifestation, which we meet with again and again, is the word "terrible" or dreadful, to be feared. We have it in Psalm lxvi. 5, and three times in the psalm under discussion (7, 11, and 12). By his sentence from heaven He caused the earth to be afraid, so that it was stilled (quite as in Ps. lxxv. 7), and secured the salvation of the country, not least that of the sufferers from the famine. A Selah again occurs here, as in v. 3, specially emphasizing the salvation extended to God's afflicted people as chief among his deeds.

(4) The wrath of the Philistines, these "men," kindled to the utmost against Israel (Ps. cxxiv. 3), must, however, serve as a means of praising God, because it caused Him to gird Himself with wraths (Ps. xviii. 8). God's people, therefore, shall praise Him, and pay Him vows (Ps. lxxvi. 13 and lxxv. 1), and all the surrounding tribes (2 Chron. xx. 30) bring presents unto Him that ought to be feared—"Fear" (or Dread) in person, as God is here called (comp. Isa. viii. 13). He puts an end to the chafings of the doers of violence, and is terrible unto the princes of the earth, even as He has now been to the Philistine kings (Ps. xlviii. 4, 5).

Princess Louise Home, Norbiton.—Since its foundation in 1835, it has rescued some 1700 young girls from all parts of the United Kingdom and the Channel Isles, from bad surroundings. It has placed about 1200 in service, nearly all of whom have done well; in many instances they still keep up an interest in the Home in which they were trained. The annual subscriptions have, for many years past, shown a steady downward tendency. On the transfer of the Home in 1892 from Wanstead to Norbiton, it was found necessary to build and furnish a new laundry, which cost £2000. The committee find the laundry accommodation insufficient, and a new wash-house is urgently needed. There is also no playroom available for the girls in bad weather, and during the winter months. It is proposed to turn the present schoolroom into a playroom, and build a new schoolroom outside. To carry out these two projects, a sum of about £3000 will be needed. The office of the Home is 32, Sackville-street, W.

* "More glorious than the mountains of prey" might be said of Zion, but not of God. The latest interpreters, however, are agreed in translating the words in question "glorious from."

† Chief among these, and the scene of the last decisive battle, was Gath (2 Sam. xxi. 20). Here fell the last and most formidable of the Sons of Raphah. Its high limestone rock, 356 feet above the cornlands of Philistia, visible at a great distance, and therefore called by the crusaders "Garde Blanche," in all probability gave rise to the beautiful words, "Effulgent art Thou, and glorious from the mountains of prey." One of these strongholds—Ekron—withstood later the assaults of the Egyptians for twenty-nine years.

Dr. Newman Hall's

EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

THE eightieth birthday of Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., was celebrated in a very pleasant manner on Friday last, when friends and admirers gathered in goodly numbers in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. The proceedings were a hearty acknowledgment of Dr. Hall's public work during a long period, and a testimony to the deep and wide influence which he has exerted in the religious life of two generations. A large number of notabilities and others who could not attend, wrote letters of congratulation; these included Mr. Gladstone, Sir George Williams, the Duke of Westminster, the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Exeter, Archdeacon Sinclair, Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Rigg, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, and scores of others.

LORD KINNAIRD, who presided spoke some hearty words, recalling Dr. Hall's work in the pulpit and by his writings, in furtherance of Gospel truth and social reforms. Dr. HORTON, who followed, expressed sincere love for Dr. Hall, and eulogised his disposition to encourage others in good work. He found it difficult to believe that Dr. Hall was eighty years of age; but having been satisfied by statistics that such was undoubtedly the case, he had gained a new impression of what old age was; in fact, old age had lost its terror for him, and he would no longer entertain his former fears regarding it.

After these hearty addresses came the presentations. First was an address from a Ministers' Fraternal, acknowledging Dr. Hall's contribution to Scripture exposition. Rev. HENRY GRAINGER, who was for twenty-three years a colleague with Dr. Hall, in a pleasant statement bore testimony to the character and worth of his friend. First at Old Surrey Chapel, and then at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, they laboured together in Christian work with love and harmony. He found Dr. Hall to be a warm-hearted and unselfish man; his confidence was always sincere, and during the long term of association there never once was the shadow of a quarrel. Mr. Grainger read an address, bound in an album, which was presented to Dr. Hall, together with an oil-painting of himself. The painting, by Herbert Olivier, was in an unfinished condition; but it afforded an admirable idea of its subject. Rev. FREDERICK HASTINGS followed with an address from the United States, accompanied by an album of paintings. Many famous names, of statesmen, divines, and philanthropists, were inscribed on the document, which acknowledged Dr. Hall's "splendid services for our common humanity."

In some words by way of acknowledgment, Dr. NEWMAN HALL dwelt largely on the past. He rehearsed his experiences in New York twenty-nine years ago, when he was enabled to promote international goodwill by convincing Americans that the English nation, as such, had always taken the side of the North as against the South slave-holding confederacy. Adverting to the days of his youth, he spoke in terms of loving emotion of his mother, who taught him the elements of Scripture truth, and on her knee helped him through "God so loved the world," a text from which he had since preached hundreds of times. At the age of sixteen he was converted, and without delay he began to make known to others the Saviour he had found. His first efforts were in the midst of hop-pickers outside Maidstone, and he had ever since been an open-air preacher.

Having spoken of his early drilling in newspaper work, his training at Highbury College, and his graduation at London University, Dr. Hall described his ministry at Hull and London, and his total abstinence advocacy. In the course of his work various truths had been deeply impressed upon his mind—especially the duty and necessity of proclaiming the great central truth of Christianity, the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, Son of God and Son of man. That truth had been a central theme in all his books and sermons, and he could not imagine a Christianity that was not based latter said that in introducing George Murphy to South London, Dr. Newman Hall did a very important work, as the agencies started by Mr. Murphy have been a great blessing to many.

There were during the evening many personal tributes to Dr. Hall, and the proceedings must have made him feel anything but an octogenarian.

Rev. Darlow Sarjeant's Work.

SETTLEMENT FOR YOUNG MEN.

THIS work is now a year old, and its success makes it a matter of wonder that it was not commenced years ago. A similar effort, vigorously maintained, would have saved many bright and promising young men who have strayed from the God of their fathers, and have been lost to the Church of Christ. Some take up their abode at the Home Settlement whilst engaged in preparing for professional life, others of our residents are occupied in commerce; whilst many come for a temporary stay during their search for a suitable sphere in life. Parents have chosen it for their sons whilst they themselves have been called to India or other parts of the world. It is impossible to enumerate the various ways in which this Home has contributed to the comfort and help and blessing of young men.

The work of the year is full of encouragement, and has greatly heartened the council to go forward with an increasing conviction of its boundless possibilities. Additional rooms have been added to the Home during the year. There is a balance due to the Treasurer on the year's work of £200, and it is necessary to make other alterations for the accommodation of an increased number of young men at a further cost of £150. Men have come from all parts of the country, and from other lands. The gratitude of parents, and the endless openings to help young men in London, who are not safeguarded by home influences, are an inspiration to extend the work as far as possible.

HOME OF REST, LITTLEHAMPTON.

In the course of the year, about a thousand visitors have been received at this Home. Opportunities for helping the spiritual life of God's people have seemed more abundant than ever. Hundreds have come to the Home of Rest in full health, who have sought rest, and the help of spiritual fellowship. The daily meetings for prayer have been seasons that can never be forgotten. The Bible-readings, regularly held, have brought forth much fruit. Some missionaries and their wives have come debilitated from the effect of the climate in foreign lands. They have been restored to health, and thus enabled to take up their work again in near and distant fields.

The cost of structural alterations to accommodate the house more fully to the requirements of the work, and the keeping of so large a house in perfect repair, with the constant renewal of furniture, which sustains heavy wear and tear, are serious items in the yearly expenditure.

Royal Hospital for Incurables.—A sum of £3,650 was subscribed last week at a banquet held in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hotel Metropole in aid of the funds of this institution. Mr. Herbert J. Allcroft presided, and was supported by about 200 ladies and gentlemen. The chairman said that the Royal Hospital for Incurables was founded in 1854 by the late Dr. Andrew Reid, and was designed to relieve and permanently care for those suffering from maladies which disqualified them for the duties of life. This institution, the oldest of its kind in London, had rivals in the metropolis, but these the board of management regarded with a favourable eye because there was plenty of work for even twenty incurable hospitals.

upon it. He had felt increasingly how little are the differences of Evangelical Christians when agreed on this fundamental point. With his church he was always so busy trying to benefit the poor and outcast, that denominational differences had never had a chance. He rejoiced that Rev. F. B. Meyer was carrying on the work so vigorously, and prayed God long to continue his useful life.

Rev. EDWARD WHITE remarked that during the long course of a fifty years' ministry he had received from no one such hearty and supporting affection as from Dr. Hall. Dr. R. P. DOWNES gave a striking testimony. At the age of nineteen, while "tasting life" in London, he was taken by a friend to Old Surrey Chapel, and there heard sermons which turned the course of his life. Rev. R. BALGARNIE described experiences of friendship with Dr. Hall many years ago; and hearty addresses were also delivered by Revs. ARTHUR HALL and W. MOTTRAM. The former adopted teetotal principles through his elder brother's advocacy, and that was with him the first step to the cross of Jesus Christ. The Bible Lands Missions.

MAY MEETINGS.

For the past forty-two years the Turkish Missions Aid Society has been rendering valuable help in sending the Gospel to Eastern lands, with excellent results. During the past year it collected over £2250 for a special Armenian Massacre Relief Fund, which has been distributed among widows and orphans of the pastors, teachers, etc., who were murdered, and the starving Armenian Christians generally.

At the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Tuesday last week, Rev. W. A. Essery, secretary, read extracts from the report, and said that the Society had been able to raise the sum of £4284 during the year in aid of the various missions in the East, to which it makes grants. This was in addition to the £2250 raised on behalf of Armenian sufferers. Mr. Essery read several exceedingly pathetic letters, telling of the sorrows of the native pastors, their sufferings and their gratitude for aid received.

Rev. EDWARD WHITE said that at a time like the present it is not enough to pass resolutions; we must see that something is done to awaken the Churches of England to the claim the people of Bible lands have upon them, and especially that of suffering Armenia.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., endorsed the words of Mr. White. One is at a loss, he said, to understand the guilty apathy of European nations, and especially the English, in regard to Armenia; it speaks little for the Christianity of the day that prompt action has not long since been taken to put an end to the sufferings of our Christian brethren under Turkish rule. He had been at pains to get facts and figures, and found that upwards of 200,000 have in one way and another been killed by Turkish tyrants during the past few months. Surely the judgment of God will fall upon us because of our neglect in this matter.

Dr. PENTECOST followed with a powerful speech, in which he denounced the so-called "Christian" nations of Europe for not coming to the rescue of the nineteenth-century martyrs. He said he had never had his heart so stirred before at any meeting. Surely the nation has gone to sleep behind its rulers, else we should long since have had a Peter the Hermit to organise an army to deliver the Christians from the bloodthirsty Turk. Dr. BLISS, of the American Board of Missions, spoke of his experience in Bible lands, and of the great help the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society has been to missionaries. He urged the English people to come to the relief of starving Armenia.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

On Tuesday week a conversazione was held at the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, by invitation of the Lord and Lady Kinnaird, to hear accounts of the work of this Society.

A large and representative company filled the rooms. During the evening Madame Alice Gomez, who is much interested in Zenana work, delighted the gathering with her beautiful singing.

Lord KINNAIRD referred to this country's position and responsibility in India, and the efforts being made to reach the women of India with the Gospel. He thought all who began to look into the work of this Society became more and more interested in its operations and results. There are many whose names are well-known throughout India, who always speak well of this Mission's operations, as being for the real benefit of that land.

Sir CHARLES ELLIOTT told from his own personal knowledge something of the Society's work in India. He commended it as a work carried on by women for women. In the Indian mind there is an extreme jealousy of male influence in such work, and, to be prosperous, Zenana work should be left as much as possible in the hands of ladies, even in its arrangements.

He had some knowledge of the medical work at Patna, and had met the valuable and efficient lady doctor, Miss Mackinnon. He spoke highly of the hospital and its arrangements, and was surprised at the skill and success of the ladies in charge.

There is also a good deal of Zenana work, and a large staff of teachers. The Government helps the schools by making grants where the teaching is efficient.

The Zenana visitors are doing a great work amongst women who never go outside the walls of their houses, who never see or hear anything to elevate or expand their minds, and the speaker declared that this branch of the Society's operations also is full of hopefulness, and is a work of the greatest utility and beneficence. He emphatically said that this Mission is doing in India a work deserving of the best support.

Miss GOLLOCK gave some account of her recent visit to India, and reviewed the Society's operations there. Her description of the methods of work, the conditions of work, and the results, was most graphic and interesting.

Mr. W. T. PATON, hon. finance sec., referred to the Society's needs. More missionaries at work entailed considerably increased expenditure. Seeing so many present who were interested in our great Eastern empire, his wish evidently was that they should recognise that such work as this Mission is striving to do in India is a powerful lever to elevate and improve the people, and to increase their loyalty to the connection with this country.

Upwards of £2000 is wanted, in addition to the ordinary income, in order to meet the needs of the present year. The secretary or treasurer would be glad to receive any help at the office, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

EXETER HALL was gay with flags, mottoes, and nautical insignia on the afternoon and evening of Tuesday week, when the anniversary of this Mission was held. The warm interest felt in the work was signified by the crowded gatherings. The sturdy sons of the sea, whose voices filled Exeter Hall with vigorous song, have won for themselves hosts of warm friends; but all will admit this enthusiasm of recent years is wholly due to the efforts of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, whose diligent discoveries and enterprising operations have not only produced a revolution in the fishing fleets, saved hundreds of men and boys, relieved untold sufferings and hardships, beaten the coper on his own ground, but have also flung a flood of light on the condition of things among the men who reap the harvest of the rude North Sea.

Sir JOSEPH PEASE, M.P., who presided, laid before the meeting weighty and material facts and figures as to fishing industry, the North Sea itself, the 77,000 men and boys employed, their need of help, and the character of the help rendered by the Mission with its thirteen mission vessels, three of which are hospital ships. During three months last year, in one of these ships alone, 688 outpatients and seventeen in-patients were treated, mostly for severe accidents. The more that was known of this Mission, the more clearly would its strong claims become apparent.

After a solo by Miss Johnstone, Rev. L. B. WHITE, D.D., gave an address showing the condition of things in the North Sea, the imperative necessity for Christian effort, and bringing facts to prove that in the North Sea, on the coast of Ireland, and in Labrador, God has been blessing greatly the operations of the M.D.S.F.

Her Royal Highness the DUCHESS OF ALBANY, who has already helped the M.D.S.F., kindly distributed good conduct stripes and St. John's Ambulance certificates to men who had won them.

Stirring accounts were given by those enthusiasts in Medical Mission service among fishermen, Drs. GRENFELL and WILLWAY, whose straightforward and animated words must have won many fresh helpers. The Mission, both declared, seeks above all to bring trawlers to Christ, and to bring Christ (in loving deeds) to the trawlers. What life in Labrador really means was lucidly explained in terms which touched all hearers.

Testimonies by fishermen and speeches by Dr. Gilbert Smith, Mr. T. B. Miller, and others were amongst the varied proceedings of the afternoon.

In the evening, the hall was again crowded. The most notable contribution to the words spoken was that by Mr. W. F. A. ARCHINALD, who outlined clearly and comprehensively the spiritual work of the Mission, in linking the Christian fishermen together, in getting hold of the boys, in supplying good literature, and in publishing the Gospel by all possible means among the smacksmen at sea and in port.

A series of remarkably interesting views of North Sea life and terrors were shown by Dr. Willway, while Dr. Grenfell illustrated similarly life and labour in dreary, icebound Labrador. Testimonies by fishermen, and addresses by Rev. C. H. Hicks and Mr. T. B. Miller, helped to fill an interesting programme.

Country Towns Mission.

THIS Mission exists for the purpose of establishing missions in the various cities and towns, and for the employment of missionaries and Bible-women to spread the Gospel in the towns and villages of England and Wales. A most interesting account of the stations and the work, was given by some of the missionaries at the annual meeting, held in the Council-room of Exeter Hall on the evening of May 20. Several of the missionaries spoke of the growing evils of Ritualism, and of the difficulties thrown in their way by bigoted Churchmen. The design of the Mission is to promote the extension of Evangelical religion, without reference to denominational distinctions, among the poor and working classes of the kingdom, and it appears that the Ritualists are not at all pleased with this.

Mr. H. C. NISBET, treasurer of the Society, occupied the chair, and addressed the meeting at length as to the claims of the Society. He praised the work of the missionaries, and drew attention to the need of house-to-house visits in country towns to make known the glad tidings of the Gospel. Major George Mackinlay, Messrs. Swift, Rowley, and Richards also spoke.

Homeless and Destitute Children.

ONE of the most attractive of the spring assemblies is the annual meeting of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. It provides in the persons and performances of its young clients an argument more powerful than eloquent speeches. For more than half a century it has been finding and transforming into useful members of society those of both sexes who are in danger of drifting into the ranks of poverty and crime.

There was a large attendance at the meeting in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening; the greater part of the platform was taken up with boys and girls from the different homes. The Earl of Jersey took the chair. The Secretary discreetly held the report as read, and contented himself with touching briefly on the main events of the year. The industry of the boys in one home, in the matter of tailoring and shoemaking, was referred to as a sample of the training imparted to the lads under the Society's care. The two training ships, Chichester and Arethusa, continue their noble work of preparing lads for the public service. The farmhouse at Bisley is also a very admirable institution. The two homes for girls at Sudbury and Ealing are doing good work in training domestic servants. In all the branches there are being fed, clothed, educated, and trained over 800 boys and girls, all of them admitted without votes or public election. The somewhat large deficit on the year's balance sheet of £7,540 was the only minor note in the secretarial music, and an appeal was made to the Christian public for more generous support.

The Earl of Jersey is by no means an orator, but he had a good theme, and he had no difficulty in making out a strong case for the hearty support of the institutions. He referred specially to the home life or the best possible substitute for it that is fostered in the different branches, and to the true religious culture imparted to the children.

The two set speakers were Canon MCCORMICK and Rev. F. B. MEYER, who supported a resolution commending the work of the society as one whose operators are eminently calculated to diminish vagrancy and crime and to raise up orphan and neglected children to become honourable members of society. The Canon was discursive and anecdotal, leaving the serious and thoughtful advocacy to Mr. Meyer. The work of the society, said the latter is characteristic of Christianity, which is always constructive. It is rearing noble and lovely lives out of what would otherwise be the waste material of society. The sweet, happy faces of the boys and girls almost make us forget what they have been and what they might have been. The work of reclaiming those who had fallen and gone far astray, reveals the infinite worth of preventive work as compared with rescue or curative work. The evils of heredity have to be dealt with in such work, but these are counteracted by the regenerative power of the Gospel; so that into the wild thorn tree of humanity there can be grafted the rare rosetree of spiritual life. Through the efforts of the Society and with the blessing of God, a rampart is being constructed against the incoming tide of vice and crime.

The remainder of the proceedings consisted of songs, musical and military drill by the children, and some excellent limelight illustrations of the society's work.

R.T.S. Breakfast.

THE title of the Religious Tract Society would favour the idea sometimes entertained that its work is mainly confined to the production and dissemination of what are known as "tracts." Anyone present at the annual breakfast in Cannon-street Hotel last week would have learned, however, that its scope is almost as wide as the range of the best and soundest of our modern religious literature. On these occasions it is customary to hear short speeches from workers in many lands, who tell in what ways the publications of the Society have been helpful to them in the work of proclaiming the Gospel, or building up the native converts. The addresses last week were full of deep interest, and such as to encourage the efforts of the Society throughout the world-wide field.

MR. H. R. WILLIAMS, who presided, touched on several points in the Society's report for the year. It was pleasant to hear that the "Pilgrim's Progress" is about to be printed by the Society in the language of Uganda for use in the C.M.S. Mission there. In its multifarious home activities the Society supplements Mr. F. Peek's generous benefaction for giving prizes in London Board Schools for Scripture proficiency. The chairman reported that another friend had gifted £500 worth of books annually for distribution as prizes in the same way in suburban and provincial schools.

The following eight ten-minute speeches were worthy of more space than we have at our disposal. Incidentally they afforded interesting and encouraging glimpses at the spiritual condition of many lands. The Bishop of Honduras gratefully acknowledged the help of the Society in meeting the needs of his vast diocese extending over 2500 miles. Rev. C. G. Sparham, of the L.M.S. in China, gave some interesting facts relating to the kindred work of the China Tract Society. That Society does not publish very extensively, but great care is taken as to the soundness of its publications. The resultant blessing to the readers is very marked. Mr. Sparham gave some striking cases of the avidity with which the Christian literature of the Society is studied by even Chinese scholars, and the influence it has in transforming life and character.

One of the freshest of the speeches was that of Mr. R. SAILLANS, from France. Geographically they were near to us, he said, but morally the distance was tremendous. It almost seemed to him like a dream to come from Paris into such a gathering. He, too, was most grateful to the Society for providing literary ammunition to French Gospel workers. He spoke pathetically but hopefully of the religious outlook in France. There is much opposition, and there may be persecution; let them embrace the present opportunities of talking the Gospel to the people. Dr. BRUCE, who laboured for thirty-eight years in Persia as a missionary, and latterly in translation work, spoke of the needs of that land for such literature as the Society provides. Work on the Congo was represented by Rev. J. H. WEEKS, who said that in that region five languages had been reduced to writing, and portions of God's Word translated into several of these. In the translation work great difficulty is experienced in selecting the words that will convey a correct meaning to the minds of the people.

Rev. H. M. HACKETT, from the N.W. Provinces of India, said that the spread of Unitarian literature there by an American society was one of the difficulties they had to contend with. He told of the conversion of a fakir through hearing a little girl reading at the door simple sentences from her school-book. He is now a native pastor in his own village, and is supported by his people. An interesting account was given by Rev. W. N. LAWRENCE, from the South Seas. To avoid the trouble of translation into many dialects, he said the missionaries are now teaching the people English, so that large stores of reading may be open to them. At the church services everyone has a notebook and pencil with which to take down the points of the sermon. These notes are afterwards carefully studied, and finally sent to other islands, so as to spread the good news. In that way the truth has free course among the people. Mr. R. T. TUMLEY, an agent of the Society in Manchuria, gave a very encouraging narrative of work in that vast region, with its thirty millions of people.

The venerable Dr. BLISS, of the American College in Syria, having referred briefly to his lengthened residence as a worker in that Bible land, and to the work of scattering Christian literature there, closed the interesting proceedings of the morning with the benediction.

Church Parochial Mission.

AFTER six months of earnest and constant labour in the Gospel, on the other side of the Atlantic, Rev. W. H. Aitken has returned to the old country. He was present at a meeting held last week, in connection with the Church Parochial Mission Society in Sion College, and his statement was of course the chief centre of interest in the afternoon's speaking.

But there were other excellent features in the proceedings. The secretarial report told of the extension of the work at home and abroad. A missionary has made an encouraging start in Australia. During the year there were fewer general missions than usual, and about the same number of single Missions. Three of the Missioners on the staff, including Rev. Dr. A. J. Harrison, have retired from the work, but their places have been taken by an equal number. Many testimonies are received as to the blessing that comes through these special times of united effort.

The ARCHDEACON of LONDON, who presided, having given a warmly worded endorsement of the work of the Mission, some hearty words of welcome to Mr. Aitken were expressed by Rev. G. R. Thornton; then Rev. NORMAN BENNET, the special missioner of the society to public school boys, reported on the new effort, in terms which awakened the thankful interest of all. In all cases the missions are held with the full sanction of the head master. The results of the work of the first two terms have been of the most encouraging kind. Nearly 200 boys in different schools have individually and voluntarily conversed with the missionary on their particular difficulties; meetings have been held in fourteen large public schools, and 120 addresses given to over 3000 boys.

MR. AITKEN's account of his Canadian and American experiences largely traversed the ground covered by his letters already published. He spoke of special difficulties attending revival effort in the Episcopal Churches of America. In many cases prejudice was removed, and those who at first were inclined to be unsympathetic, afterwards expressed much gratitude for personal blessing experienced. Ten missions were held during the six months. Owing to special circumstances the mission in Toronto was less successful than those in other parts of the Dominion. The missions in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Cotesville were all full of interest, and there were many indications of good result. Mr. Aitken told of some striking cases of blessing that came specially under his notice, both as to the results of his former visit to New York and of his present visit. He spoke with much warmth and gratitude of the invaluable help rendered by the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew, an active and aggressive organisation in the United States connected with the Episcopal Church. When the visit to the other side of the Atlantic was decided on, there was a strong call at the same time to work for a season in India. Mr. Aitken said that God's manifest guidance and blessing during this American trip had convinced him that a right choice had been made.

The Peace Society.

THE members of the Peace Society held their annual meeting at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on May 19, under the presidency of Sir JOSEPH PEASE, M.P. He stated that the annual cost to the nations of Europe for keeping up armies and navies was in the year 1869 £116,000,000, and in 1895 £230,000,000. The national debts of Europe had increased from £4,680,000,000 to £6,000,000,000.

The BISHOP of HEREFORD moved a resolution condemning war, and favouring the principle of arbitration, but confessed that in the case of Armenia he was slightly at variance with the Society. He agreed with Mr. Gladstone that Christians should unite to put an end to the cruelties of the abominable Turk. We were bound to proceed by moral suasion, but, if necessary, other means should be tried. At all events they should agree to pray and work that the saturnalia of lust and fanaticism might, through the influence of the Powers of Christendom, be brought to a speedy end. The Bishop strongly condemned the spirit of Jingoism so prevalent to-day, and the equally "virulent epidemic of commercial greed."

Dr. W. E. DABRY read extracts from the report, which showed that the Society was entirely free from debt; he also read a strong letter of sympathy from the United States Ambassador, Mr. T. F. Bayard. Mr. A. E. FLETCHER, in moving a resolution in favour of an Anglo-American Court of Arbitration, drew attention to what seemed to him the most unchristian if not barbarous spirit of militarism displayed by nations professing Christianity.

Friends' Foreign Missions.

THE annual meeting of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was held on Whit Monday in Devonshire House. The hall was crowded with friends, who remained for hours to hear the missionaries tell of their experience in the foreign field. Missionaries from India, China, Madagascar, and Syria were present, and delivered most interesting addresses.

MR. JONATHAN B. HODGKIN presided. The report and balance sheet for the past year showed a satisfactory state of affairs. The chairman made an earnest appeal for volunteers for the mission field and an increased income, so as to extend the work which God had wonderfully blessed. He believed that as Christians supported foreign missions so would home work prosper.

MR. JOHN SIMS, who returns to Madagascar this week, spoke of the work and the difficulties there, and made a strong appeal for more workers. Mrs. MARY J. DAVIDSON, who has been eight years in China, gave her experience of missionary effort in China. She hoped that the friends would see their way to send more helpers to that great field. Mr. CHARLES D. TERRELL gave a vivid account of work in India, and especially of the work among the lepers. Dr. BLACKWELL FENN, from the Madagascar Medical Mission, and Dr. HINGSTON FOX, of the Syrian Mission, also addressed the meeting.

Strangers' Friend Society.

THE annual meeting of this Institution took place on Thursday, May 20, when Mr. J. H. Anderson presided. The report states that the 160 visitors, who render gratuitous service and are influenced by Christian benevolence, are constantly engaged in seeking to improve the social and moral condition of the people, as well as relieving their temporal necessities. The well-organised system of relief and usefulness is recognised not only by those who subscribe to its funds and the poor, but by churches having benevolent agencies of their own, who send to the Society cases with which they are unable to deal. Had it not been for two or three legacies, amounting to £770, which came to hand during the year, the Society would have been sadly crippled. The small amount of funded stock remaining has to be drawn upon or legacies have, to a large extent, to be appropriated to maintain the work.

The chairman pleaded for an increased income, as the financial burden necessarily causes constant anxiety, though the claims of the work be not forgotten by friends in their testamentary arrangements. Mr. W. S. GARD said that though engaged upon the executive of several benevolent institutions, he felt in none greater interest than in this, which benefits the sick poor. Mr. W. H. WALKER, Mr. EDMUND IVES, and Mr. HUGHES also spoke.

The Opium Trade.

THE annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, E.C. Sir J. PEASE, Bart., M.P., presided. The report read by the hon. secretary, Mr. J. G. ALEXANDER, stated that the most important event of the year in connection with the Society had been the issue of the Blue Book, containing the views of the Indian Government on the report of the Opium Commission. Notwithstanding that it was intended as an obstacle, it had resulted in an important step towards the suppression of the traffic. Even the majority report admitted that native public opinion generally condemned the habit of opium smoking in India as disreputable. In Bombay the local government had exerted itself to close the unlicensed opium dens, and Mr. Maurice Gregory said that opium smoking in that city could only be practised with the greatest secrecy. The decrease in the consumption in Burma since 1890 had been a little over one-third. The Japan Government had adopted a measure of prohibition in Formosa. In British India the Indian Government pursued exactly the opposite policy. The Society had held 119 meetings in various parts of the country. An Anti-Opium League had been organised, and 487 members enrolled.

The Chairman referred to the report as most encouraging. Mr. H. J. WILSON, M.P., remarked upon the significance of Lord Lansdowne's silence as to the charges brought against the Indian Government of unfair dealing, etc., in this matter. Rev. G. PIERCY moved a resolution expressing satisfaction that the Government had been constrained to recognise the condemnation of opium smoking as a disreputable habit, and regretting that the Indian Government refused to carry out the recommendation of the two native commissioners and Mr. H. J. Wilson in favour of the suppression of the vice. Mr. Williams moved a protest against the action of the Indian Government in increasing the area of poppy cultivation during the last two years. This was seconded by Mr. Chakraborty, an Indian, who strongly condemned the action of the Indian Government, and carried. Resolutions were adopted dealing with the trade in Burma, Ceylon, and Formosa. Another meeting was held in the evening at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without.

Salvation Army Rescue Work.

THE twelfth anniversary luncheon of this branch of the Salvation Army's operations was held on Wednesday last, at the Holborn Restaurant. Sir William Gordon Cameron presided, and a deeply interesting statement was made by Mrs. Bramwell Booth, who directs the rescue work.

There are, it seems, at the present time, a thousand women and children in the various homes, most of whom would, in all probability, otherwise be homeless. In the summer as well as in the winter, by night as well as by day, from the country as well as from the town, the lost and helpless were knocking at the doors. During the past twelve years 13,395 women had passed through the homes, and last year, at the women's shelters in Edinburgh and Whitechapel alone, about 140,000 attendances of the poorest of the poor were registered.

There are now fifteen rescue homes, the doors of which are always open to those who desire to do right. They afford accommodation for 500 women. Then there are three night shelters, accommodating 400 women and children every night, four lodges or homes of happiness and industry for young women, an inquiry agency for lost and missing persons, by means of which 4639 people had been found, an advice department for those who had been injured and robbed, a registry office for servants, a department for the selection and training of godly women who were prepared to devote themselves to work among the lost, a maternity hospital, a slum nursing department, police-court and prison-gate work and midnight rescue work. The Army wants to open new homes and shelters, midnight rescue posts, and slum nursing posts. The annual cost of a rescue home dealing with 125 girls was only £300.

The Chairman, in appealing for funds, said he had seen all the homes and shelters, and it gave him great pleasure to be able to recommend them to public support. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the way in which the Homes were conducted, and he could say of his own observation that the inmates were made thoroughly happy. It had been stated that the homes were rather crowded, and that the sanitary arrangements were not good.

[485]

He had been into them at all times, and had never seen any overcrowding, and he could say that the air at night was generally purer than it was in her Majesty's barracks.

Women's Protestant Union.

THIS Society has held a two days' conference at Exeter Hall. The annual report showed that the Union has now 8700 members, an increase of nearly 2000 on the former year. The members are scattered throughout different lands.

At the opening meeting, Rev. W. Foster spoke of the work in Italy, which he regarded as full of encouragement. Miss Baily told of difficulties in Syria, caused by the opposition of Jesuits. At a subsequent conference, Mr. J. Coulthard described the influence of Rome in China; the converts of the priests among the Chinese have been very few. The Argentine Republic found an able representative in Rev. W. Morris, of the Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres. On the evening of the first day's conference, addresses were given by M. L. J. Bertrand, as to France, by Madame Lopez-Rodriguez, respecting Spain, and by Abbe Cornelog, who related the circumstances of his conversion to the simple faith of Christ.

The conference meetings on the second day were of equal interest. In the morning, Rev. R. Spurgeon, of Bengal, dealt with Romish practices and superstitions in that part of India. A vivid narrative of Rome's doings in Ireland was given by Rev. J. W. Harrison, of Arklow. At the subsequent sessions, reports were given with respect to Spain and Portugal, in Bohemia. The closing address was by Dr. Barnardo, whose important theme was "Rome and the children."

The Armenian Massacres.

RAPINE, outrage, and murder are still every-day events in this ill-fated corner of the Sultan's dominions. It makes one sick of heart and full of despair to think that the great European Christian Powers, especially our own country, with such special responsibilities, sit with folded hands, and allow these unparalleled enormities to proceed. The Daily Chronicle correspondent, writing from Constantinople last Thursday, says:—

"Despite the excellent impression produced in diplomatic circles by the Sultan's action in sending a Commission to Biredjik, the proposed restoration of the churches and freedom of the forced converts to return to Christianity is an absolute farce, seeing the fate of men accepting similar offers. At Tchivlik, one of twenty villages in the Djebakhtan district, all the inhabitants were forced to accept Islam during the massacres in March. The local authorities proclaimed full freedom to the unwilling converts to return to their ancient faith, and after much hesitation a few men at Tchivlik returned. The Turks and Kurds instantly attacked the village, killed fifteen relapsed Armenians, and put out the eyes of others. The eyes, threaded on a cord, were shown round as an object-lesson. Horror-struck, the Armenians, one and all, denied any desire to abandon Islamism. The converts receive no relief from Mussulmans, and not daring to accept help from the committees, are thus doomed to slow starvation.

"Letters from Casarea and Ourfa give accounts of the insanity and death of several Turks who took an active part in the late massacres, caused by horror and remorse at the recollection of the terrible scenes."

Another writer says: "The people of Zeitun are dying of pestilence and hunger—hundreds every day. One of the consuls who has just left the district expresses the opinion that within a short time there will not be left a single Zeitun man alive to tell the story of their gallant defence and their misplaced confidence in the European Powers."

Barren Controversy.—A vast number of the controversies of the times, as is evidenced by the "correspondence" columns of the secular and even the religious press, are over entirely trivial and resultless matters. Apart from its tendency to stir up bad feeling, needless controversy is waste of time and nervous energy. The wise man will keep his strength for more serious conflicts, following the example of old Izaak Walton, who, it is said, gracefully declined to enter upon the difficult question which once divided the Carthusian monks into warring factions, the question whether the otter were beast or fish.—New York Observer.

The Scottish Assemblies.

THE supreme courts of the Established and Free Churches of Scotland began their annual sessions in Edinburgh last Thursday. On the opening day, in connection with the older body there was the customary ceremonial—the levee at Holyrood by the Lord High Commissioner, and the procession and service at St. Giles. Dr. Scott, of St. George's, Edinburgh, was elected Moderator; his address contained little of public religious interest.

In the Free Church conclave Dr. J. H. Wilson, the retiring Moderator, preached an impressive sermon, in which he urged that no new truth or new weapons were needed, but greater spiritual power in the use of the old methods. The new Moderator, Dr. Miller, of Madras, delivered his address from the chair. It was in substance a plea for the recognition of the element of growth and progress in God's ways of permeating the world with spiritual truth. By implication rather than direct statement he emphasised the importance of educational work in India as a necessary preparation to the gradual process of Christianising its peoples.

Dr. Wells, Convener of the Jewish Committee, submitted the yearly report to the general assembly on Friday evening. With peculiar satisfaction the committee hail the establishment of the Women's Jewish Missionary Association. It will do much to foster the interest of the Church in this Mission. Since last assembly, Rev. Mr. Tomory has been taken home after nearly fifty years of faithful service. Rev. Daniel Edward, of Breslau, a truly apostolical missionary, has retired after nearly fifty-five years of service. During the past year, five new agents have entered our mission fields. Rev. Mr. Thomson and Mrs. Thomson, from the U.P. Church, are now unsalaried agents at Safed, and have recently been joined by Dr. George Wilson as permanent medical missionary. Rev. Mr. Wallace has begun at Constantinople, and Mr. Webster is assistant to Mr. Moody at Budapest.

Dr. Wells is now resigning the post of Convener, and his valedictory was devoted to a defence and appreciation of Jewish Missions.

The Jewish report in the Established Assembly, submitted on Saturday, did not reveal anything unusual, but much interest was excited by the presence and speech of Mr. Joseph Rabinowitch. A member of the Assembly, Mr. Menzies, of Fordoun, made an attack on Missions to the Jews, but only six men followed him into the division lobby.

In the course of the discussion on Christian Life and Work, Rev. Thomas Young, Ellon, spoke regarding the work of the Missions to Fishermen, and acknowledged the services of their brethren of the Free Church. In many parishes there was overlapping, but it had been arranged that both churches should not send deputies at the same time to the same English fishing stations. In contrast with the recent riots among Cornish fishers, he said the Scottish fishermen never engaged in work on Sundays, although the English and Manx fishermen round about them did so, and their quietness and patience were having great effect in some places.

The Sin of Worrying.

THIS is one of the commonest of sins. It also is one of the most reprehensible. Many to whom gross temptations present no attractions yield to this one almost without a struggle. It is wholly unreasonable, and, when allowed to become a habit, it is full of torment. It spoils one's own peace, and renders one a source of continual distress and annoyance to others.

Worrying is fretting because matters have gone wrong or supposed to be destined to go wrong. If the former be true, worrying does no good, even when we are conscious of having been in fault. Go to work bravely and remedy what is amiss; so far as possible, and what cannot be remedied bear with Christian patience and courage. If the latter be true, do not assume that the threatening evil must befall, but do your best to prevent or lessen it, and remember that God allows evil as well as good to happen, that seeming evil often results in blessing, and that, should the worst come, probably in time you will find reason to thank God for it.—Boston Congregationalist.

"What Does It Mean?"

By MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

LAURENCE DEWLAND sat in his library, deeply engrossed in the perplexities of arrangements for his six months' absence from England. He was of a proud, unbending disposition, successful and ambitious.

The door was opened gently, and Hilda Dewland, a girl of fifteen summers, entered.

"Father, have you time to answer me one question?" she said, looking eagerly at him with her bright blue eyes.

"Come, Hilda, I have several things to talk about with you; but what is your difficulty now?" And he turned his chair from the table to await inquiries.

"You know Grace Martiné, father? She is staying at Crowlands. I often go in the grounds and talk with her. She is unlike my English friends; she talks to me of new, wonderful things, and she gave me a verse to think about; this is it—'Ye must be born again.' What does it mean?"

The finely-moulded face of the man thus appealed to, showed no signs of ready response; an evasion, not a satisfactory reply, was all, and Hilda's questioning eyes wandered to the garden, and seemed penetrating the deep blue sky beyond. Then followed a long talk about the plans for the coming months, for to him that girl was everything. Sometimes a shadow crossed his face as he noticed a resemblance to her departed mother, yet in the upbringing of the girl he buried his sorrow.

Her inquiring mind surprised him, so unlikely were the topics of research. In course of social gatherings Grace Martiné had come across her path, as a special light calling her attention, and often they held converse, where the gardens met at the far end, under the huge cedar trees.

"You are so clever," said Hilda, one day; "you study the flowers and stars, and read so much—that is why you are always satisfied and happy." To which the bright French Christian girl replied, "You do mistake. I did not learn it there. The flowers do speak of how God makes beauty, and the stars do say how his power makes everything. But, Hilda, at Calvary's Cross I learned how Jesus can make us new and lovely too, and I want to stay and learn there till Grace Martiné comes so like Him that, when He looks to see his likeness in me, He shall say again, 'It is finished'; and then it was she handed the text to Hilda.

There was one in his house, governess and companion in one, to whom Laurence Dewland entrusted his daughter; and they stood upon the pier to wave the last adieu as the ship carried him over the waves.

Weeks of solitary study followed. Then Hilda sought the daily companionship of Grace, and they roamed the woodlands together, lost in fascinating talk, and upon the young, impressionable heart was sealed the stamp of a friend's spiritual character. At the same Cross she, too, found how to be "born again." Constant letters told of her father's successes in the business world abroad, and five months soon passed on.

Out in the excitement of his life he found his thoughts steal homewards at times to the fair young girl he had left, and as sure as her eye seemed to flash upon him, he would hear the question "What does it mean?" and the thoughts thus suggested he had never put into words.

At a large hotel in a foreign town, great commotion was made one evening over an accident to one of the visitors, and Laurence Dewland was the one over whom grave consultations were held. Through a trap-door of a large warehouse he had fallen, and though danger to life was over in a few days, it was probable he would be an invalid for a long time, and need care.

Recovery was slow, retarded by his worry at the check upon all his brilliant prospects, and the possibility of ultimate failure in his purposed career. There seemed no good in life to him if the power to plan, and scheme, and get, were taken from him, and when such dire calamity stared at him, he heard Hilda's voice distinctly say, "What does it mean—'Ye must be born again?'"

The owner of the house wherein the fall occurred proved himself a thoughtful friend, frequently going to inquire and offer help by writing to the English home, and many times his counsel proved valuable. When Laurence poured out his grievances before him, he was startled at the answer.

"You may lose the power to govern or to work, lose pleasure in the things concerning this temporal life, but no disaster can touch the fact that you are a saved man eternally if you are born of God—and that means joy unending."

Over the blue sea his meditating gaze would often linger, on the homeward journey a fortnight later.

Those days had been as years for the much that he had learned, and sitting shaded from the sun, silently pondering his ways and talking with himself, he went through sharp discipline of soul.

The self that was haughty and foolish and hard was laid aside as a thread-bare garment; the man of the world in him died, and the child of God was born—a new being, a humble soul clinging to its heavenly Father for life and strength and wisdom.

The library once more received the presence of father and daughter.

"I am thankful, Hilda, to be here, as I am now—weak though it be in body—rather than as I was, when you brought to me in this room your beautiful question."

"You didn't answer father, then. I remember, you were busy."

"I couldn't, child. Come here and listen, and I will answer now."

Laurence Dewland bore traces of recent weakness, but his face had a tone of calm dignity unknown before, his voice a ring of contentment and certainty, as he said—

"Hilda, you asked me about your text, 'What does it mean?' It means a life regenerated by Christ. It means being holy, not professing only. It means being filled with that love which sanctifies all our deeds and words. Grace Martiné did well to give you that text."

Among those outside, remarks were made, and without exception it was, "He is a new creature now," for such a fact must be felt. Grace Martiné, with all her French vivacity, her high culture, and her devoted Christian earnestness, rejoiced in this testimony to the value of true conversion.

"Ah, come Hilda, this is grand," she said, as they met on the large lawn at Crowlands one summer evening later. "We shall have the garden well filled."

From all parts they came, young and old, by invitation; an hour for pleasant intercourse was given, and then Hilda went to meet her father, who came slowly towards the place prepared for him.

Beside him sat the master of that estate, an elder of the Church, and as Laurence Dewland told of the simple question put to him six months before, and the way God had brought him home to answer it, hearts were touched, and the man by his side acknowledged the crying need of pressing this question more upon men and women in our churches. "Few see the danger of the times," he said, "it is fashionable to be religious, and few are faithful like our Lord, who said, 'Ye must be born again.'"

As the influence of that meeting, and the new life lived out in business and society, numbers of easy professors examined themselves—that if they were "born again," at least their daily conduct should give the answer to the question, "What does it mean?"

Jesus I live to Thee,
Thou loveliest and best;
My life in Thee, Thy life in me,
In Thy blest love I rest.
Living or dying, Lord,
I ask but to be Thine;
My life in Thee, Thy life in me,
Makes heaven for ever mine.

"Friedenheim."

THE "Home of Peace" for the dying, Swiss Cottage, N.W., continues its ministry of mercy. In the new report, Miss Davidson asks friends of the work to praise the Lord for those patients whom it has been a privilege to nurse to the end, whose strong faith in the love and goodness of God has enabled them to wait and suffer with patience and fortitude, realising that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

The report mentions the case of a woman whose last words were:—"Sweeping through the gates."—"Washed in the blood of the Lamb."—"An abundant entrance." Another young girl's face was shining as the end approached, as if she saw far beyond what was visible to others. She whispered: "He is coming; I can hear his footsteps, I knew He would come; He said He would." And not among the women only, but in the men's wards, there have been blessed "home goings." One young fellow, whose father had been an atheist, had eagerly listened to the hymns and reading and prayer during his few weeks' sojourn in "Friedenheim," and on his last night, with his mother sitting by him, he kept pointing to the text on the wall—"God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life"—saying: "I do believe it, mother. Do you? It isn't my fault that I didn't believe it sooner. I do believe it now."

Patients were received from many London Hospitals. The report says:—

"One of the greatest difficulties we have had was with regard to the little orphans of patients. We have been able to place several, and Miss MacInnes has been most kind in taking three or four into her happy home at Gayton-road, Hampstead. The last two she received were the children of a very sweet woman, who died here in the autumn, and it was only after they had been admitted that we found it had been their mother's dying prayer that they might be brought up under the loving care given in that special home."

Communications for Miss Davidson should be addressed, "Friedenheim," Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

Richmond Street Mission.

THIS energetic mission, working in a crowded corner of Walworth, has been compelled, after thirty-eight years' active and resultful service, to enlarge its borders, adding a new hall, which has become during the past few years an urgent necessity. The foundation-stone was laid on Friday afternoon by the Duchess of Roxburgh, who took the place of H.R.H. the Princess Christian, who had hoped to be present, but found herself unable to come.

After prayer by Rev. James Douglas, a very interesting account of the Mission was given by the president, Mr. J. T. Dunn. After recalling the origin of the work with six boys in a cowshed, he traced its growth, showing that 900 children are now in attendance at the Sunday-school. Thus the necessity for enlargement has become pressing, and it is with a view to starting the new hall free of debt that the sale of work had been organised. The Ragged School Union has given £100 towards the fund, and other subscriptions have raised the amount to between £600 and £700, but as the new buildings will cost £1600, there is still abundant opportunity for sympathisers in so good a work to assist in it. The various agencies now at work in connection with the Mission include Sunday and Ragged Schools, services for the people, a penny bank, bands of hope, children's special services and Christian associations, girls' sewing classes, mothers' meetings, servants' registry, and lending libraries. At the close of the President's address, the architect, Mr. Geo. Baines, presented a silver trowel to the Duchess, whereupon her Grace laid the foundation stone. Earl Compton moved a vote of thanks, in his capacity as President of the Ragged School Union, and was seconded by Mr. James Bailey, M.P. for Walworth. The gifts and promises laid on the stone reached nearly £400, but more is needed that the work may be completed free of debt. A tour of the stalls was then made by the Duchess, who purchased several articles. One of the stalls was Japanese in character, another resembling a Swiss chalet, but at all the work sold was of a strictly useful character.

The Late Sir A. Blackwood.

THE biography of this well-known and highly-esteemed servant of God was published last week by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton (12s.). It is a goodly volume, and has for frontispiece a splendid portrait of Sir Arthur as he was in his later years. Compiled by a friend, and edited by his widow, Sydney Duchess of Manchester, it consists largely of letters and autobiographical notes, and furnishes a most vivid picture of the man and his abounding work for God through a long Christian career. We give here, as related in the book,

THE STORY OF HIS CONVERSION.

"I began to lead a sort of half-and-half life—a Bible reading once or twice in the week, and a ball on several other evenings. I was not unconscious of the inconsistency, nor of the injury I was sustaining by such a course; but at any rate I wilfully allowed myself to be beguiled into old ways, till at last one evening, at the Queen's Ball at Buckingham Palace, my eyes were opened to see what must be the result of the life I was leading, and how false I was playing to what I had felt and avowed.

"A day or two after the Queen's Ball I was at work in my room in the Treasury, when my friend, Bob Anstruther, adjutant of the Grenadier Guards, who himself had been the subject of religious convictions for some time, ran upstairs. 'Stevie, old boy, come down with me to the orderly room door at once; I want to introduce you to a great friend of mine, Miss Marsh.' Who Miss Marsh was I did not know; but, accompanying Anstruther, I speedily made her acquaintance....She kindly invited me to dine at Beckenham Rectory to see her father, Dr. Marsh. I accordingly found my way thither. Walking with me under the shady trees of the garden, Miss Marsh lost little time in speaking to me most earnestly about the concerns of my soul. Not being naturally of a reserved disposition, I told her where I stood and what I felt; that I was perfectly conscious that in the attempts at a religious life which I had been making there was no love to God in my heart. Being under the impression, as I fancy, that I was further advanced than was really the case, she remarked that an excellent means of increasing love to God in one's own soul was to try to do good to the souls of others....We went out after dinner to a cottage meeting, where Miss Marsh spoke to those assembled on the woman of Samaria.

"I do not remember being impressed by anything Miss Marsh said in particular, but on returning to London that evening I could not help feeling it would be very inconsistent of me if I were to go to any of the three balls to which I was invited. On reaching home [finding 'his things all put out ready'] thoughts of friends I was likely to meet gradually exercised their attractive power; before I knew what I was doing I found myself first at one, then at the second, and finally at the third at Willis's Rooms. Standing and looking on at the quadrilles which were being danced, and putting—why, I know not—my fingers in my ears, so that no sound of music reached me, the thought forced itself upon me, 'What folly!...and all these people have immortal souls to be saved!'

"Then recurred to me Miss Marsh's words in the garden at Beckenham, 'Try to do good to the souls of others.' I thought I would begin at once; going to the supper-table, and drinking champagne with an old friend, I began to speak to him about his soul. He laughed at me and turned away. Not discouraged, I sought someone else; I asked a girl to dance whom I had known intimately for a long time. When the music began, I proposed that instead of dancing we should go and have a chat in one of the side rooms. We accordingly did so, and I began to talk to her about the realities of eternity, as I had never talked to any one in my life. I have not the least idea what I said; I only know that I left that room with my religious emotions more deeply stirred than they had ever been before; and I went home to pray for my friend and myself as I had never prayed before."

[4281]

Sitting there under the chandelier, he determined to give his heart to God and his life to his service. "That was the last ball to which I ever went. The next time I entered Willis's Rooms, six years later, was to preach the Gospel." He went to bed that night feeling "as happy as possible"; but next morning doubts and darkness returned. "On the following Saturday I went to stay with friends at Willenhall, near Barnet. On Sunday morning we went to Christ Church, Barnet, where Rev. W. Pennfather was vicar. I do not remember the sermon, but we rose to sing John Newton's hymn, of which the second verse is:—

Rejoice, believer in the Lord,

Though many foes beset your road,

And feeble is your arm,

Your life is hid with Christ in God,

Beyond the reach of harm.

"As we sang the third line of that verse, the full light of truth shone into my soul. The deep doctrine of the passage I did not indeed then understand; all I remember was the joyful conviction which burst upon me, 'Then I am everlastingly saved.' Neither do I remember more of that day, except the intense joy with which, lying on the lawn at Willenhall in the afternoon, and looking up to the blue sky, I realised for the first time, that God was my Father, Christ my Saviour, and Heaven my Home."

To a Troubled One.

"Let not your heart be troubled."

"LET not your heart be troubled,"
Though thy noon-day sun has set,
And the twilight shadows fall upon thy way;
Through the gloom his love will lead thee
On to greater glory yet,
If thou wilt but trust Him fully and obey.
Believe in God and He will lead
Thy faltering footsteps right;
Believe in Christ and He will make
The darkest places light.

"Let not your heart be troubled,"

Though around on every side

The wicked seem to prosper and increase.

"The Lord is King for ever."

Let thy heart be satisfied.

He will give, 'mid grief and tribulation, peace.

Believe in God—thou wilt not Find his promises to fail.

Believe in Christ—He pleads for thee

On high, within the veil.

"Let not your heart be troubled,"

Though the angry billows swell,

And He bids thee come to Him upon the sea.

In the doing of his bidding

Thou wilt find that all is well,

And the angry main a pathway safe shall be.

Believe in God—the winds and waves

Are subject to his will.

Believe in Christ—He still has power

To whisper "Peace be still."

"Let not your heart be troubled,"

Though thou canst not see his face,

He hath not left thee comfortless and lone.

He has only gone before thee,

To prepare a resting-place.

And thou shalt follow soon where He has gone.

Believe in God—thy darkest hour

His faithfulness will bless.

Believe in Christ—He loves thee with

A matchless tenderness.

Cape Town.

JEAN H. WATSON.

The Tower-street Mission School has been carried on for twenty-one years in the district of London known as the Seven Dials. Devoted men and women give time and energy to teach the little ones and influence their elders, and the various agencies employed have had the blessing of God. The hon. sec. is Mr. Paul Keed, 191, Oxford-street W.

The Gloucester Epidemic.

DEAR SIR,—You will not be surprised at my requesting you to withdraw the name of Gloucester from the list of this year's conventions. The epidemic from which our city has been suffering has, thank God, considerably abated, and we are now beginning to look forward to a clear bill of health. The time, however, has not yet come when we can think of inviting friends to a convention.

We have received many proofs of Christian sympathy from friends in England, Scotland, and Ireland, which I would gratefully acknowledge. It has not been possible, or desirable, to write to these kind helpers, but I should be glad if they could know how warmly we appreciate all that they have done, and how much their thoughtful kindness has availed to lighten our burden. The prayers which have been offered for our afflicted city have not been in vain, and the day of the Lord will declare how much we owe to those who have remembered us at the throne of grace.

A few Sundays ago I was preaching in one of the districts chiefly affected. There was a large congregation present; but as I looked round it seemed to be a congregation of mourners. I could see nothing but black everywhere. It was a soul-stirring sight. But I wish I could add that, as a city, we were mourning over our sins, and turning to the Lord. Alas! how little even such solemn warnings as ours seem to lead to repentance. May I ask, with deepest concern, and even with tears, that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will pray for the convicting power of the blessed Spirit to be vouchsafed to us. It will be such a terrible thing if we are not humbled and brought near to God by this chastisement.—Most truly yours,

JOHN J. LUCE.

St. Nicholas Vicarage, Gloucester.

The Gospel in Uganda.

THE work in Uganda has expanded marvellously, far beyond the powers of the present staff to supervise it. Native evangelists from Uganda have become pioneers into the surrounding countries, and we have none to supervise and organise this ever-growing work. Nor does it grow at the rate it might if supervised by European workers. New countries have been opened, new languages need reducing to writing, and new Biblical translation work must be done. It is evident that a very large portion of Central Africa must be reached from Uganda, and God is already using Baganda Christians in a remarkable way.

To enter open doors, to supervise new work already begun by native evangelists, sent out by the Uganda Church at its own cost, and to maintain existing agencies, we need at the present time twenty men and some women. Towards this number we have four men definitely assigned, who expect to return with Mr. Pilkington and myself in the autumn. The C.M.S. have only some thirty-five men to locate this summer, and may possibly give us one or two of that number.

The Cross is claiming Central Africa, Satan is retreating. Will the Christian brothers and sisters who may read this have a share in Christ's triumph and take a part in this happy and glorious work?

GEO. K. BASKERVILLE, C.M.S., Uganda.

The Vicarage, Tonbridge.

Dalrymple Home for Inebriates. — The twelfth annual report of this Home, which is situate at Rickmansworth, shows that thirty persons were admitted during the year; at the beginning of that period twenty were under treatment, so that the inmates were in all fifty in number. Of these, thirty were discharged after treatment. The medical superintendent inquires whether something cannot be done for destitute male inebriates and for those of limited means? He says: "The desire for intoxication is as much a diseased condition as any other monomania, but because it is associated with vicious surroundings, and productive of vicious results, the whole question is apt to be shelved, even by some of the most earnest philanthropists, as wholly vice, and consequently without the pale of consideration." In a summary of the 407 cases discharged from the Home since its opening, there are some remarkable facts. More than half the patients were between the ages of thirty and forty; and in 344 cases tobacco-smoking was an associate habit.

The Bible in Japan.

ONE of the encouraging and suggestive things at the present time is the possession of the Bible on the part of so many of the Japanese in high places; with many of them it is evidently a treasured book. When on my way to Korea last autumn I was on the same steamer that carried the Japanese Consul to Chemulpo. He had spent several years in the United States and spoke English fluently. I asked him about Christianity, and he told me he had never made a profession of religion, but he used to attend church in New York; he had a Prayer-book that he read every day and enjoyed very much. He accepted with evident pleasure a copy of the New Testament, and asked for another copy for one of his servants.

When I called upon the Chief of Police in a large Japanese city, he told me that he had a Bible that he studied secretly. He said its teachings were good, and if they were followed it would lessen his work very much. The Governor of Yokohama told me that he had a Bible, and spoke in favourable terms of our work. Count Inouye also said to me a few days ago that he had both an English and a Japanese copy.

Having found the authorities in Tokyo favourable to the distribution of Scriptures among the policemen, I ventured to call upon the head of the police department in Yokohama in order to ascertain if the same opportunity would be given here. He listened to my request with evident satisfaction, and said he would not only grant the privilege but fully approved of the project. He added that the fallen women of this city and the region round about were under his supervision, and he would have distributed among them any copies of the Scriptures, or other religious books that I might be able to supply. Such reading matter would be especially useful to those who were in the hospitals. He reported that in Yokohama there were upwards of 2000 of this class, and the average number in the hospital was about 130.

When I called to deliver the books, he said, with evident pleasure and satisfaction, that he had consulted with the Governor in regard to the matter, and that the Governor had given his cordial approval. The question was asked if the regulation forbidding the visitation of these hospitals by Christian workers could not be changed. He replied that a new building was now in process of erection, and in it would be a special apartment where the patients could be gathered for religious instruction.

After this experience in Yokohama it seemed advisable to try what could be done among the fallen class in Tokyo. The Chief of Police there was equally ready to grant my request, and instructed one of the subordinates to make out a letter to each one of the local heads of the police, giving instructions that freedom to distribute the Scriptures and other books was to be given, as well as the privilege of visiting the hospitals for the purpose of Christian teaching. Two sections of the city have been visited, and the authorities have shown entire willingness to give all liberty that is desired. The only lack now is the number of persons who are qualified to undertake such a work, and who have the time to devote to it. It is thus far only an experiment.

In this connection, it is an important fact that the fallen women in Japan do not occupy the same position as in other Christian countries. They are not despised, but pitied, by the better classes of society; indeed, it is known that they are pursuing their degraded avocation from no fault of their own, but at the will of their parents or nearest relatives, who have for the most part sold them in early years to the proprietors of houses of public resort, where they are trained up for this purpose.

Some of the officers of the Police Department in Yokohama have begun the study of the Bible, and there is a regular class which meets every evening for the purpose of learning English and Bible study.

On visiting the cavalry barracks in Tokyo it was found that there was a change in the officer in command since I had been there before. The colonel now in charge had been in China, and there made the acquaintance of one of the chaplains; he spoke in high praise of the sermons which he had heard. He received the Scriptures very willingly to distribute among the men, and said that they were at liberty to attend services on the Sabbath if they so desired.

A lieutenant of this command had been wounded while in China, and was sent to the hospital at Hiroshima. While there he received a copy of one of the Gospels, and also saw and heard Miss Talcott. He spoke in high praise of her work, and asked for a complete New Testament, that he might learn more of the teachings of Christ. Permission has been granted to visit the Red Cross and other hospitals in Tokyo regularly, and to distribute Gospels and other books as may be desired. And there is also full liberty to speak to the patients about Christ.

For several months past some of the Christians in Sendai have been trying to get permission to give Scriptures and other Christian books to the soldiers in the military hospitals at that place. But while the officials would allow visitation, everything of a Christian character was strictly forbidden. As the Surgeon-General had been so friendly to the work in Hiroshima he was asked if the restrictions in the Sendai could not be removed. He replied that he would send a letter to that effect. The result has been that perfect freedom has been given to distribute books and teach the men to any extent. So here and there doors are opening wider and wider to the spread of the Gospel. It is our duty to enter and give to the perishing multitude the Word of Life.

Yokohama, Japan, April 13.

H. LOOMIS.

Letters to the Editor.

BROWNING AND CHRISTIANITY.

SIR,—In "Notes and Comments" in your issue of May 21 the writer says that when Browning writes, "I find it hard to be a Christian," he means "that it is hard to become a Christian, not to remain one." The line occurs close to the end of "Easter Day," and I venture to contradict you, and to say that Browning means what he says, and not what your writer supposes him to mean. In justice to Browning, to whom we owe so much, I ask you to insert this.—Yours, G. S.

LIMITED COMPANIES.

SIR,—Your remarks are generally so judicious that I regret to have to ask you to reconsider the strong and, I believe, unjust statement in page 9 of your issue of May 14, where, in commenting on the Companies Bill, you urge that the yearly balance-sheet should be published, because "publicity in these matters injures no one but those who have something to conceal."

This remark, I hold, is most unfair, because anyone reading it understands that you mean conceal for a bad motive. I have much to do with several limited companies, and know that the reason of objection to publication of accounts is to prevent rival traders, whether neighbours or foreigners, finding out how the business is progressing. Why would you give a rival the power of obtaining information which he seeks only to injure you? I say, without fear of contradiction, that when the majority of shareholders object to be injured by publication of the balance-sheet, the law has no right to step in and compel them. What would you think of a proposal to compel private firms to publish their balance-sheets? I am sure you would say that would be wrong; yet the two are more on a par than appears at first sight. No one need take shares in nor give credit to a limited company unless they like. The very same is the case with a private firm. Then, if you were to get the balance-sheet, what reliance can be placed on it if issued by men of the Liberator or American railway director type?

To my mind, the solution is, take shares only in companies managed by men who, as far as can be ascertained, are honest and straightforward.—Yours faithfully,

FAIRPLAY.

Temperance Notes.

THE Army Temperance Association reports that last year the membership rose from 9836 to 11,742.

The illegality of farmers supplying their labourers with beer as part remuneration has been strongly insisted on at a recent temperance conference.

Liquor dealers met in large numbers in Manchester, and were very severe upon the Government for not passing a bill converting an annual licence into a piece of freehold property.

A meeting of octogenarian abstainers was held last week in St. Martin's Town Hall. Forty-one such abstainers were present, and it was stated that evidence had been received of the existence of over 200.

For some years past there has been a diminution in the drink bill of New South Wales, with a corresponding increase in savings-bank deposits, while the convictions for drunkenness have decreased 59 per cent.

Unhappily the decision of the superior courts saddling an objector to a licence with the costs of an appeal, to which he was no party, is said to be already bearing fruit. This spring not a single objection has been raised in the metropolis to a renewal of an existing licence.

A confirmed toper was recently sentenced by a New Jersey judge to attend a series of thirty temperance meetings, then being conducted in the neighbourhood, or "do" thirty days in gaol. He chose the temperance meetings, and, according to the New York Herald, was thoroughly reformed.

In his notes of ocean travel to South Africa, Rev. M. Guy Pearce says: "Wines and spirits of all sorts may be had by those who pay for them, but at our table, the captain's, nothing but water has been taken. They who live on the water like those on land live best with nothing stronger. That which avails to drive our ships day and night, can fit a man for any work, surely."

Mr. William Stanyon who has for some years been scattering broadcast his weighty "Slings and Stones" has just sent forth a little volume, "The Crowning Folly" (National Temperance Publication Depot. 6d.) which is brimful of such facts, statistics, and testimonies as must delight the heart of many temperance workers. The medical testimonies are conclusive and abundant.

To commemorate the inauguration of the Tottenham Band of Hope twenty-one years since a great meeting was recently held, at which the "Grand Old Man" of Methodist temperance, Rev. Charles Garrett, delivered a stirring, convincing, and powerful address. Mr. W. O. Clough, M.P., who presided, also spoke, urging temperance workers to take courage from past victories, and to be undaunted by the present attitude of the Government upon this question.

The temperance party have issued a statement of some of the points on which evidence is required for submission to the Royal Commission. They deal generally with the granting and the transfer of licences, the sale of intoxicants to children and improper persons, the service of barmails, the congregating of bookmakers, the difficulty of obtaining victuals, the inspection by the police, the special temptation to domestic drunkenness afforded by grocers' licences, bona fide traveller tickets, the effect of Saturday opening on wages, and the effect of opening on election days.

The council meetings of the National B.W.T.A. will commence on June 1st, with an all-day devotional meeting in the Westminster Town-hall, 11 to 1, 3 to 5, for praise, prayer, and spiritual instruction. It will be open to the public. Lady Henry Somerset will preside, and addresses will be given by Miss Willard, Miss Weston, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mrs. Pearsall Smith and Miss Douglas Dale. On Sunday, May 21st, about one hundred services will be held by B.W.T.A. speakers in various churches and halls. A great central afternoon meeting will be held in Union Chapel, Islington. A full list of churches and speakers can be obtained at 47, Victoria-street, S.W., headquarters of B.W.T.A. The annual meeting will be held on Monday evening, June 1st, at Queen's Hall, Langham Place. Admission will be free without tickets to the balcony. A few tickets for reserved seats are still obtainable from Mr. H. J. Osborne, 112, Fleet-street.

The Destruction of Birds.—The Duchess of Portland, who is President of the Society for the Protection of Birds, has called attention to the fact that numerous beautiful birds were being exterminated to supply the demand for feather millinery. She feels sure that that demand has arisen from total ignorance of the sacrifice it entails, and that no one with true appreciation of beauty would tolerate such wholesale destruction of birds, or countenance the continued use of rare feathers for personal adornment.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Newcastle "Y.M.C.A. Magazine" reports vigorous work and cheering progress.

The Tunbridge Wells Association is full of life, and young men are being won to Christ.

The Sevenoaks Association has started well with eighty members and thirty-three associates.

Five young men in connection with the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. have offered for foreign mission work.

The Young Men's Era will in future be published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago. It is, however, to be suspended till September.

The annual meeting of the Trowbridge Association was very successful. During the past year seventeen new members and twenty-two associates have been admitted.

By way of encouragement to those holding on under discouraging circumstances, it was stated at a conference at Folkestone that two men constituted for seven years the membership of an Association. The members now number 2000.

The opening meeting, on May 18, of the Mile End Artisan Association, was very hearty and successful. Mr. A. A. Goodbody, the secretary, described how the association had been led to take Dublin Castle, 39, Mile End-road, as a centre of operation, and announced a membership of 188. Addresses were delivered by Rev. T. P. Lansdowne, president, and Messrs. H. Conder (of Bombay), F. L. Porter (Hackney), and J. Kensit and J. P. Fallaize, vice-presidents of the association.

The Clapham Y.M.C.A. celebrated its anniversary on May 19, when the association entered new premises known as Bedford Hall. Sir George Williams presided over a very successful meeting, in which part was taken by Rev. J. Douglas, M.A., Dr. Eugene Cronin, Mr. W. Hind Smith, Rev. F. A. C. Lillington, Rev. J. W. Sibree, Rev. T. Hanger, Major H. P. Treeby, and Rev. W. R. Mowll, Rev. F. B. Meyer preaching a sermon on behalf of the Association in the Wesleyan Church, High-street, Clapham.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE annual meetings of the Swanage Association were held on Friday, May 22. Excellent addresses were given by the Hon. Miss Portman, Miss Morley, and Mrs. Hubert Peek. The report shows a steady growth, with much encouragement and blessing. In order to meet the increasing demands upon the holiday home department, a small new wing is being added to Ridley House.

Christian Endeavour.

MORE than twelve hundred cards were signed during the recent Elliott-Butts revival meetings in Spokane, Wash., showing a desire on the part of the signers to live Christian lives.

There is a C.E. society in the boys' school in Foo Chow, China, which exemplifies practical religion in an excellent manner. Whenever one of the boys falls sick, or gets into trouble, all the rest of the members get together and pray for him.

Evangelism, the chief thing in Christian Endeavour, is to be the central thought of New Jersey's great convention at Plainfield next October. Beginning with the Sunday preceding the convention, a series of preparatory meetings will be conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills.

News comes of a Chinese town wherein there was considerable dissension between the two mission churches. But Christian Endeavour made its advent upon the scene, and speedily began to promote mutual love, and now the Christians of both missions consult freely together and work in utmost harmony.

The programme has been sent to us of the International C.E. Convention to be held in Washington, D.C., July 8-13. The subjects are certainly comprehensive in sweep, including Spiritual Life, Christian Citizenship, Evangelistic Effort of many kinds, Foreign Missions, Sabbath Observance, etc. Mr. Ira D. Sankey, amongst hosts of other well-known leaders, will take part. Mr. John Willis Baer writes:—"The outlook for our next Convention is bright. We believe under God's guidance it will be a great energising dynamo for spiritual power."

Royal Albert Orphan Asylum.—The Duke of York presided at the tenth festival dinner in aid of the funds of this institution, held at the Savoy Hotel. There was a distinguished company present. That the asylum was economically managed was proved by the fact that £23 1s. 11d. per annum clothed, maintained, and educated a child. A subscription list amounting to £2440 was read, and it was announced that his Royal Highness had consented to become a vice-president.

[490]

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AT the University Church on Sunday last the Bishops of Rochester and Stepney preached, and the week before the Bishop of Newcastle. The last of the three gave a very able address on the work of the laity.

A meeting was held on Sunday night in connection with the Oxford House in East London. The speakers were the Bishop of Rochester, Lord Selborne, and Rev. A. W. Winnington Ingram. The House seems to be doing a useful work both socially and spiritually.

The need for the Hannington Hall was demonstrated when Canon Taylor Smith addressed the Missionary Union. The room at present used could not contain the numbers who came, so the meeting had to be held in St. Peter le Bailey Church. Last week Rev. G. K. Baskerville gave an interesting account of the work in Uganda.

Rev. G. S. Jones, the new curate of St. Aldate's, is to carry on the Tuesday evening Bible-class, conducted formerly by Rev. W. H. G. Thomas. The class has flourished and proved helpful to many.

The fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the local branch of the Y.M.C.A. was celebrated on May 15 by a devotional meeting in the library, followed by a luncheon in St. George's Hall. Among those present were Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P. (the president of the branch), Sir George Williams, and Mr. E. Bainbridge, M.P.

Mr. Souttar, M.P., gave the address at the P.S.A. at the Y.M.C.A. on May 7. He was as usual humorous and entertaining, and we trust that some of the advice he gave may be followed.

Scandinavian Sailors' Home.

THE Home continues to provide safe anchorage and a secure harbour for seafaring men visiting London. Last year, in addition to a large number of men receiving temporary lodging and meals, 2628 boarders were admitted for an average period of about two weeks. Of these, 1259 were Swedes, 623 Norwegians, 165 Danes, 241 Finlanders, and 340 British and others.

The report says: "Ever since the great strikes in 1889 there has been a certain difficulty for the seafaring population in London to find work, and, in consequence, many of our men have had to remain idle for weeks and months. It is most gratifying to note that, in spite of this fact, the amount remitted to sailors' relatives and friends has greatly increased, the total sum for 1895 having reached no less a sum than £14,365 10s. 7d. That the Home is appreciated by the sailors is best seen by the fact that so many old boarders return time after time and year after year."

The mission work done in connection with the Home has been greatly blessed. Many a seaman whose conversion might have seemed an utter impossibility has been drawn to the truth by the ever-powerful Gospel of Christ. Some 350 men have signed the pledge during the year, and many old "blue-ribbonists" have returned, true to their promise and their purpose.

Illustrated periodicals and good books, also clothes for destitute seamen, will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. and Mrs. Welin, the hon. managers of the Home.

Whit-Monday at Kilburn Hall.—A conference in connection with the Evangelistic Mission was held at Kilburn Hall on Whit-Monday. The meetings, afternoon and evening, were largely attended and deeply interesting. Earnest addresses were given in the afternoon, on portions of the Revelation, by Rev. C. Stirling and Mr. J. Sims. Mr. J. Sims again addressed the large meeting in the evening. The other speakers were Mr. Walters, Lord Radstock, and Rev. Jas. Oatey, all of whom delivered addresses of much fervour and force.

Houses of Rest for Christian Workers.—The thirtieth report informs us that during last year 867 persons were admitted, 307 in the London house, and 560 in that at Eastbourne. Miss Mason says: "There is cause for thankfulness that, for the comparatively small sum of £2047, about 900 servants of the Lord have found the rest and recuperation that mind and body needed to enable them to continue in their work. I say about 900, for the total does not include those who come for only a few hours' rest and fellowship, and not a few avail themselves of this privilege, although no statistics are tabulated. The Houses of Rest not only receive workers engaged in our home missions, but also missionaries and their wives upon their return from foreign fields." The office of the institutions is 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Scottish Notes.

A STATUE to John Knox has been erected within the quadrangle of the Free Church College, Edinburgh.

Mr. James Dewar, of Aberdeen, has been ordained by the Free Presbytery as a missionary to Natal, South Africa.

Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, has celebrated his semi-jubilee as pastor of Sandyford Church. He was presented with a cheque for 300 guineas.

Rev. Dr. Stark, of Aberdeen, has lately contributed to the Free Press of that city a series of most comprehensive and interesting papers on the religious history of Aberdeenshire. It is contemplated to republish them in separate form.

A sum of £5000 has been appropriated by the Government to the Orphan Homes of Scotland under the Guesdon bequest. Mr. Quarrier still needs £44,000 to complete his scheme of providing accommodation for 200 consumptive patients.

Mr. Penn-Lewis has finished a week's meetings for Christians under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The services were held in the Christian Institute, and the large hall was well filled both in the afternoon and again at night. The duties and privileges of Christians were earnestly and faithfully pressed home, and many have testified to blessing received.

The meetings of the Pan-Presbyterian Council will take place in St. Andrew's Hall from June 17 to 26. The number of delegates expected is 260, and accommodation has been provided in Glasgow for nearly 200. Addresses will be delivered on "The Church's Mission," "The Catechisms and Confessions," and "The Educative Influence of our Church," "Our Church Services," "Presbyterianism," "Modern Apologetics and Criticism," "Great cities, and how to deal with them," etc.

By the death of Mr. Henry Tod, W.S., Edinburgh has lost a valuable citizen. Mr. Tod (says The Presbyterian) took a prominent part in Free Church matters, and was connected with numerous philanthropic and Christian agencies of a wide and undenominational character. He took a special interest in mission work, particularly in Central Africa, where his brothers-in-law, the Messrs. Moir, have so distinguished themselves. As a temperance advocate he was also well known.

Irish Notes.

A SERIES of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Town Hall, Enniskillen, by Rev. Geo. C. Grubb, and much good is believed to have been accomplished.

A Christian Convention has been held in Magherafelt. Dr. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast, spoke on "Revivals of Religion: their Need and Conditions"; Rev. Wm. Park spoke on "Foreign Missions"; Dr. Rogers on "Consecration," and Rev. Henry Montgomery on "The Church's Relation to the Young." The various meetings of the Convention were largely attended.

The annual May meetings held in Cork this year were, on the whole, fairly successful. The series began with a breakfast given by the Junior Missionary Union to the ministers and others interested in mission work. At this meeting eighty-five gentlemen were present, and these listened with deep attention to the addresses which were delivered. On the same day the anniversary of the Jews' Society was held, and also that of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. These were followed on the succeeding days by the anniversaries of the Church Missionary Society and of the Missions to Seamen Society, each of which passed off successfully.

Bournemouth.—Dr. Pierson's visit to Bournemouth has been the means of much blessing. His opening addresses in the West Cliff Tabernacle, May 21 and 22, dealt with the Inspiration and Infallibility of the Scriptures, and the Holy Spirit's Indwelling in the Believer and the Church. The meetings were continued on Sunday morning in the West Cliff Tabernacle; and on Sunday evening and the following Tuesday were held in the Lansdowne Baptist Chapel.

The Scottish Branch of the Evangelisation Society, in its report for last year, says: "Our branch is equipped with an able staff of preachers, whose services—judging from the letters which almost daily reach the offices—are greatly valued by ministers and Christian workers. During the year it has been our privilege to supply 4289 meetings in churches, halls, and tents; the total receipts from subscriptions, donations, and thank-offerings have amounted to £1301 11s. 8d. This sum by no means covers the expenses of the work in Scotland, which amount to fully £2000 per annum—the deficiency being met from year to year by the London office. The offices of the branch are at the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE claims of the children of the poor are now generally admitted, and many gladly aid in giving to weak and ailing little ones that change of air and scene they so sorely need but cannot possibly obtain save by the generous help of Christian friends. Many well-known institutions are making efforts in this direction. The suggestion is again made that all who are planning a holiday for themselves should set apart some proportion of the probable cost towards giving poor, pining city children a share of the delights and benefits of a change to seaside or country. In the meantime we earnestly invite the contributions of our kind readers to our "Day in the Country" Fund. Many thousands of poor London children and adults cannot have more than a single day among the rare delights that the country affords at this season. Let not these be forgotten, while arrangements are on foot to give to others more fortunate a longer stay.

Seldom has the country been shocked by the tidings of two such dire calamities in the same week as those which have happened at St. Louis (the fourth city of the United States) and, nearer home, at Moscow. That the forces of nature in the one case and panic in the other should have made such terrible havoc with human life in a few moments of time, is a fact appalling to contemplate. Not that the victims were sinners above the ordinary, any more than were the Galileans on whom the tower of Siloam fell. How many a piteous cry for mercy ascended in the face of imminent death, only the ear of God can have heard. But those who dwell at ease in immunity from such calamities may well ask themselves, "What if I had been in either of those throngs! How would it have been with my soul?" If the judgment of God would bring us to our knees, how much rather should his tender mercies claim our devotion. In view of these disasters, we ought to pay the more earnest heed to the pleadings of his Spirit, for in proportion to our advantages will be our responsibility.

The English people have followed with deep interest the long and glowing accounts of the Czar's coronation, because they are specially interested in the Czarina, granddaughter of their own honoured Queen, and daughter of a Princess who made herself dear to them by her unaffected Christian goodness. The ceremonies were completed amid a scene of almost unexampled magnificence even in the annals of the "gorgeous East." Four millions of money have been spent on the pageantries and pomp of the occasion. Speaking generally, the young Czar has begun his reign under favourable auspices, though the first year of his rule will be indissolubly linked with the terrible failure of European diplomacy to prevent the massacre of the Armenians, a failure for which Russia is held largely responsible. The contrast between the festivities at Moscow and the horrible scenes at Zeiton and elsewhere, is unspeakable. Ought not the first to make the second impossible?

While reading of the magnificent outward show, we have also looked with keen desire for some signs that there is to be a juster treatment in Russia of those sincere Christians, the Stundists, who only desire freedom to meet for the reading of the Scriptures and prayer. No signs are given. The liberation of certain offenders is granted, and some remission of taxes, but the excellent of the land must still suffer for conscience' sake. Whether "the little Father" of his people cares nothing about them, or he is in the power of his Ministers who care nothing, perhaps no one outside the governing classes can tell, but whichever way it is, there is grave responsibility on some one. The Stundists should still have a place in the prayers of British Christians for their faith to be made equal to the strain put upon it, and for their testimony to be a blessing to Russia's vast population. The calamity which beclouded the celebrations has at least shown the young monarch to be a man of sympathy for those in distress. He has apportioned 1000 roubles to each bereaved family, as well as undertaking the expenses of burial. Further, he has personally visited the wounded in the hospitals, speaking words of kindness to each individually. May we not hope, therefore, that the "sectarians" may yet receive clemency at his hands?

Mr. Gladstone's open letter on Reunion is an earnest plea for the admission of the validity of Anglican orders by the Roman Church. It is marked by all the subtlety of argument, distinction of style, and piety of spirit which characterise the aged statesman's religious utterances. Its aim, we may well believe, is to minister to the outward reunion of Christendom. If, however, this end were attained, and the Pope were finally to pronounce favourably on the question at issue, we are confident that the result would be a blow to the true interests of religion which it would take ages to recover. The steady rap-prochement of the High Church party to the Roman communion would become an officially-recognised fact.

The impassable barrier that has hitherto existed between the most advanced Ritualists and the Romish Church would be broken down, and there would be nothing to hinder the gradual absorption of the Church of England by her powerful rival; and then the work of the Reformation, so far as the first of these two Churches is concerned, would be undone. Frankly, nothing would be more salutary from an Evangelical standpoint than for the Pope to deny the validity of Anglican orders and so to preserve the Protestant character of our national Church. We will thrive better, and do better work for the Master under the ban of Rome than under her favour.

"Not choice, but rule: so runs the Church's maxim. Not rule, but choice: so says modern civilisation; and choice naturally falls into channels that are pleasing to the giver." Such is the way in which the Church Times of last week formulated the law of duty and privilege. While we agree entirely with the view that Christians ought to fix their homes and choose their places of worship with a view to what they can do and give, rather than to what they can get and enjoy, we think that they ought to be constrained by the love of Christ, and not ruled by any Church maxim. It is this submission to Church authority which ultimately eats all the heart and life out of work. Obedience becomes slavish, unintelligent, formal, and the command becomes proud, exacting, and unreasonable. What submission to the Church leads to, we see in the Church of Rome. No doubt "there is too much personal element in church work and almsgiving," but the substitute for it is not the realisation of "the person of Christ present at the altar of churches, never written or spoken about," but the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit. The worship of God comes perilously near the worship of some minister—or of self.

In the course of his address in the Established Church of Scotland Assembly at Edinburgh, on the "Religious Condition of the People," Dr. Marshall Lang made a remark about "erratic missions such as Faith Missions, Salvation Army, and Plymouth Brethren." We should not have been surprised at such a disparaging description coming from the mouth of certain high and dry ecclesiastics in his church, but we hardly expected it from a man of such wide and evangelic sympathies as Dr. Marshall Lang. He and some of his fellow-churchmen have been up and down the land in their tour of visitation, and no one ought to know better why these "erratic missions" are able to secure a hold on the people. Indeed, he supplied the reason for it in the same speech, when he said that the people who do not attend the parish church would flock to hear a parish minister in hall or schoolroom if he could speak to their heart and conscience. If the pulpit preaching in all the Scottish parish churches were of that sort, the ministers would have little to fear from outside intrusion.

It is wonderful how the spirit of professionalism and exclusivism, which our Lord rebuked so hotly, lingers among ecclesiastics in this late age of the Christian era. Still the anathema goes forth against these who may be doing much good, but who "follow not with us." Surely Dr. Marshall Lang does not affect to believe that any special grace attends the proclamation of the Gospel message by Presbyterian lips? All sincere disciples of Jesus Christ ought to rejoice that when the so-called "regular" ministry fails to "speak to the heart and conscience" of the people, there are other earnest souls who step in and seek to supply the defect. The really "erratic" persons are those who frown upon any effort, however humble or inorganic, to lead the people to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

If Christians would "catch men," they must study the art of doing it; and one art is to present the Gospel to our working people in an every-day garb. Thus, Dr. McAll, of Paris, attracted the working men there by renting shops as preaching places. He brought his religion to them in a fashion which they could understand and appreciate. Then, again, he had someone at the door to invite passers-by to come in, and there was an air of sincerity and interest about that effort which struck the imagination and impressed the heart. Our danger always is to lift religion away, put it into a sacred place, surround it with unusual associations, and make it strange and foreign to men. But even in a church or chapel a good deal depends upon the manner of doing our work. For instance, we now of more than one large P.S.A. service, held in a chapel, which is composed of men who will not attend worship in the same place, either morning or evening. The difficulty is not the place but the style of service or the conduct and spirit of the ordinary congregation. Our congregations are not assimilated, and the obvious distinctions between class and class keep thousands away from worship.

It is not an easy thing to say how heretics in doctrine ought to be dealt with by their fellow Christians. On the one hand, it is essential that the received truths of Christianity should be vigorously maintained; on the other hand, as it seems to us, the spirit of Jesus Christ demands that the treatment accorded to heretical teachers ought to be admonitory and restorative rather than punitive; especially if there be shown, on the part of the offender, a due sense of wrong done to the Church and dishonour cast upon God. Viewed in this light, we are disposed to say that the Scotch Established Assembly might well have accepted Dr. Marshall Lang's proposal (see the "Scottish Assemblies") to censure and admonish a fellow-presbyter for the publication of his heretical book, but, in this case, to stop short of suspending him; all the more that he had never set forth his new and strange doctrines in his pulpit teaching. As it is, by depriving him of office, they will probably create in his mind a sense of harsh treatment, and drive him still further towards rationalism.

There is a decline in the number of men presenting themselves for admission into the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland, which is attributed by Dr. Denney to the lowering of spiritual life in the churches, and also to an intimidation of men by forces hostile to Christianity outside the Church. The one acts upon the other. Were the spiritual life strong and healthy, outside hostile forces would only arouse and nerve it to go forth to the encounter, not to yield to them. The philosophy of the Greek had no power over Paul and his converts to keep them from preaching the foolishness of the Cross; he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, because he knew that it was the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. A deeper experience of its power would remove both the sense of shame and of fear which appears to be holding some young men back from proclaiming it, and it is for this deeper experience that the Churches should labour and pray. More reading of the Bible and more prayer will conduce to that end, but more reading of speculative books, of worldly novels, and of magazine articles will lead young men the other way.

[493]

Bishop Phillips Brooks goes to the very root of efficiency in preaching, when he says that it consists in the "power of transmission." The preacher is the medium both of the truth and of the power of the Holy Spirit, and according to the freeness and fulness with which they pass through his mind and heart, so is his influence over the souls of his hearers. He has not to originate his message, but to receive it himself, and to pass it on; and he has not to work in his own strength, but in the power of the Spirit. Yet in all this he is not a mere passive instrument, but a worker together with God, willingly and cheerfully and whole-heartedly throwing himself into his work. He knows when he has this openness to God and sympathy with men which allows the Word and the power to pass freely through him, and the congregation, as Bishop Brooks says, though they cannot perhaps describe when he is in the Spirit, and when not, nevertheless are perfectly conscious of the difference between the two states. If the preacher is to transmit truth and love, he must be in touch with God on the one side and with man on the other.

Rev. Robert Spears, an influential Unitarian minister, had some unpalatable facts to lay before the Unitarian Association at its May meeting. He had to say that whereas there were 170 churches in 1800, and 320 in 1850, and 378 in 1888, there are only 354 this year. In Scotland, Unitarianism is aided by a large bequest made for its propagation, and yet the seven churches which represented it in 1850 have only increased by one in forty-six years. Mr. Spears was of opinion that any one who could look these facts in the face, and talk about progress, must have a very curious constitution of mind. We are of the same opinion. But we do not forget the constant boast of some Unitarians that they do not grow by making separate congregations, but by silently spreading their views among the orthodox churches. In this assertion there appears to be too much truth; but even so, a faith cannot be in much favour when men decline openly to profess it. The fact is, it is not so much a faith as a negation, a denial of the very truths which in all ages have given the Church power to conquer.

Unitarianism, it seems to us, tends to the whittling away of the value of the Bible, the belittling of Christ, and the emptying Christianity of the specialties it does assuredly possess. It cannot be pretended that the Bible is not assailed in the house of its friends, and that were as much time and care spent upon honestly expounding and enforcing it as is given to casting doubt upon it, and commingling its histories and biographies with myths and legends, it would have a far greater power over the hearts and consciences of men. Too much is done to make it tally with human prejudices, and too little to square human faith and conduct with its supreme authority. The same kind of process is carried on with regard to the person of our Lord and the special features of the Gospel, and with the result that congregations are dissolved. The soul of man needs and will have a Divine Saviour and a supernatural Gospel.

The news from Khama's country is sad indeed—a drought and an insect plague which have destroyed vegetation, a rinderpest which has destroyed the cattle and made rich men suddenly poor. Trade is at a standstill because there is no locomotion. Mr. Wookey, who came down from Lake Ngami with two span of oxen, has lost every one of them, and cannot, for the present, return. The three African chiefs who were in England last autumn owned between them 700,000 head of cattle, and probably every one of them is dead or dying. Beyond this sad state of things lies the imminent danger of a pestilence among human beings owing to the pollution from the decaying animals. Such calamities, following so quickly upon the decided stand taken for Christianity, are sure to try the faith of the Christians, and to prompt the heathen party to rise in rebellion. The present duty of Englishmen is to aid the native chiefs by gifts of money, which may be sent to Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, 14, Blomfield-street, E.C., who will see that the best use is made of them in the purchase of necessities. Help should go quickly.

The evidence of life assurance societies is becoming more and more clearly on the side of total abstinence as a preservative of health as facts and statistics accumulate. The actuary of one of the largest companies in America recently read a paper before the Actuarial Society of that country, in which he produced figures to show that from 1875 to 1889 the death-rate among the assured in that company was—abstainers, 78 per cent.; non-abstainers, 96 per cent. This tells its own tale; and yet it is one of the last achievements of temperance reformers to convince those who take a little stimulant habitually that this is not good but bad for their health. As regards disease there is more room for division of opinion; and yet Dr. B. W. Richardson, in a recent article on the subject, states that at the Temperance Hospital, twenty years' experience has proved the non-essential character of alcohol, even as a restorative. Great fallacies die hard. But even great fallacies must die at last in the face of the invincible logic of facts.

Further revelations concerning the conditions of the life of pauper children in "bar-rack schools" bring into prominence the urgent need of reform in the conduct of these institutions. The report of the committee appointed for inquiring into the matter proves gross carelessness in the supervision conducted by the Local Government officials. The fate of these poor children, starting life under such terrible disadvantages through no fault of their own, is a truly sad one, and little seems at present done to make their lot more bearable. Their education is mechanical and lifeless; their faculties are left quite untrained; and as a result, when they are sent out into life, they manifest great incapacity to earn their living. A former member of the Hackney Board of Guardians gave it as his evidence that those who go into domestic service, with hardly a single exception, prove utterly unfitted for their work; their moral nature is quite undeveloped; and their individuality seems crushed by the conditions under which their childhood is spent. A case seems made out for stringent reform in the supervision and methods of pauper education. It is a matter in which the whole nation is interested and the highest and gravest responsibilities are involved.

In the 5th and 6th chapters of the Ephesians we have a grand picture drawn of the pillars of the home. These are love, obedience, reverence, and self-sacrifice. On these corner-stones the stability, usefulness and joy of every home depend; where these are not to be found, there are no homes—only houses with people living in them. A home without love as its very foundation—what is it but a mockery? So the apostle tells husband and wife to love each other well; and if they do so in the right spirit, the rest will follow. A home without discipline spells anarchy; and so obedience to wise government is made a distinct principle. A home without reverence is like an earth without a sky, so this quality is made of great importance. A home without self-sacrifice as the expression of love is a root without a flower. If all who live together in the sacred relationship of the home were to read and ponder these chapters well, and live out their teaching, life would not be dreary, and troubled, and listless as it is for so many, but a haven of peace, and a fountain of holy power for good.

Of these principles, probably the most neglected in the home training of the present day is that of reverence. Much has been done by education and enlightenment to weed out from the minds of the young the element of superstitious fear, whether of ghosts, or darkness, or thunder, etc.; but do the parents of this generation do what they ought to develop the power of reverence instead? Carlyle's words are more suggestively true to-day than even when they were written more than fifty years ago—

What if the character of our so troublous era lies even in this: that man has cast away fear, which is the lower, but not yet has he risen into perennial reverence, which is the higher and highest? Only in reverently bowing down before the Higher does man find himself truly exalted.

And unless this sentiment is carefully awakened and wisely directed by parents in their children it is not likely to have its true place in later life. The little knee must learn to bend beside the cot if the head of the grown man is to bow to the holiest manifestation of Divine perfection and glory.

It has been often remarked that, whereas Jesus was gentle to publicans and harlots, He was unsparing in his denunciations of hypocrites, the good in appearance, the bad at heart. It is not difficult to see why. In the case of open sin it is open, and makes no pretence to be anything but what it is. He who commits sin, and admits that it is sin, has the elements of repentance and reformation; there is an open door of approach to him; there is a fulcrum on which to place the lever of truth. He is in a workable condition. A rough drunkard who sins recklessly, all the while admitting that it is wrong, is nearer the kingdom than he who makes gain out of the miseries of others, and for a pretence makes long prayers. This is partly the explanation of the wonderful results of the Gospel among what we often mistakenly call our hardened classes. They are not so hardened as those who sin under cover of being religious.

There are two kinds of virtue in the world, that which is inherited in the disposition, and that which is acquired in the education of character. Some qualities are easy to us because they lie in the line of natural impulse; others are difficult because they do not accord with our inclinations. But all, whether native or acquired by hard moral effort, must be permeated by the Spirit of God to make them of highest service. The better impulse must be truly sanctified, the hard attainment must be rightly inspired, to blossom into the fruit of the Spirit. There is no such thing as a partial redemption. Our natural virtues need to be Divinely renewed as well as our faults, for every man is a single indivisible being, and he needs salvation through and through. Augustine may have overstated the case when he said that the "virtues of the heathen are only splendid vices"; but it is true that all human goodness needs the quickening touch of the Saviour to become really beautiful and entirely holy.

Intercourse with God.

By REV. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D.*

THROUGH a world full of population and events God moved to the manifestation of his Son; sometimes in the way of open miracle, sometimes through silent providences of the daily sort; but always the same living God, accessible as a person to his people's cry. It is a story of "silent providence" which we have before us in the book of Nehemiah. Not one miracle is recorded in it, or in its companion book of Ezra. But not the less impressive, therefore, is the teaching of those books on the possibility and the blessing of direct intercourse with God.

"So I prayed to the God of heaven" (Neh. ii. 4). We have here before us a human heart in sudden and instantaneous communion with God. Nehemiah speaks in our presence to his Heavenly Master, asking for guidance at a moment of crisis in his path. And his act of intercourse with God is full of instruction for us, in its character, its circumstances, and its conditions.

I. Its Character.—It was as brief and ejaculatory as possible. It took place between a question and its answer: "For what dost thou make request?" "If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldst send me unto Judah, unto the city of my father's sepulchres, that I may build it."... "So it pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time."

Nehemiah's prayer must have been the work of moments, scarcely so long as a minute, for a minute makes a long and embarrassing interval in a conversation, however intimate and free, and this conversation was very far from being such. It was a prayer, for certain, offered in silence. Even for policy, Nehemiah would scarcely have made his anxiety (which was great) prominent to the king's mind, as an audible petition to his God would have made it. And, anyway, such praying aloud would have been a dangerous anomaly. In a moment, in silence, the petition was formed, presented, attended to, and answered.

Let us, too, learn such quick communications with the Throne. We are invited to them by the assurance of more than instantaneous attention. In the early days of the electric telegraph some scientific men (including, I believe, the late Professor Sedgwick) were eagerly discussing, in a railway carriage, the new possibilities of swift intercourse. One of the company, sitting silent a long while, at last said: "Gentlemen, I know of an even quicker method of communication, such that the answer arrives before the despatch of the message." And he met the astonishment of his friends by repeating, amidst reverent silence, the words, "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear" (Isa. lxxv. 24).

2. Its Circumstances.—Here, again, what a contrast to our previous scenes! It is not the pastoral well "at the time of the evening." It is not tent or temple. It is not even the silent, gloomy "court of the guard-house," in which Nehemiah speaks. It is the banqueting-hall of the enormous palace of the Persian, in the festal hour, before the great King and his Queen, the splendid representatives of the vast world-power which at that moment held in absolute vassalage, as in the hollow of its giant hand, the people of the Covenant. No surroundings could well be more secular, and secular with that sort of anti-spiritual mass and sheen which tends, in a way all its own, to overpower and, as it were, annul the sight and sense of the things eternal and holy. Everything around him would go to make Nehemiah "look not at the things unseen, but at the things seen"; and to direct his whole thought, whether for hope or despair, upon the human forces around him and their earthly magnificence and majesty.

But it was otherwise with Nehemiah. As truly as Moses before him, "he endured, as seeing Him who is invisible" (Heb. xi. 27), and as holding intercourse with Him. The Persian Empire and its Emperor vanishes from between him and his God, and leaves the air clear for the soul's instantaneous cry and for the silent answer to it.

Let us each make our own application. Few of my readers can fail to know what it is to feel quite consciously the almost physical difficulty of speaking inwardly to God in certain surroundings in which yet it may be our duty to be, and to be often. They may be surroundings of earthly brilliancy, or earthly intelligence, or earthly business, or clamour, or misery, varying indefinitely for each individual life and heart. If found by such things unwatchful, we may pass through them only to discover that we have been remotely distant in them from the God whom all the while we know, adore, and love, but who has seemed to belong to another sphere. But it should not be so. Our God is not "a God of the hills" (1 Kings xx. 23) only; he is in the hot valleys of life, too. If we are "found in Him" we shall find ourselves as free to hold intercourse with Him in the most crowded and the most distracting scene of secular existence, so it be our duty to be there, as in the upper chamber or the twilight field. Free, silent, instantaneous, the communication shall be real indeed.

3. Its Conditions.—Here let us notice only one point, where many might at least be conjectured. I refer to the first chapter of Nehemiah's artless book. What do we see there? We see the same man in intercourse with God behind the scenes. And it was no casual or lightly intermitted process of intercourse. He "sate down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of Heaven"; pouring out a confession, and a petition full of the details of the woe, and sin, and need. And I gather this from that picture, that Nehemiah's prayer of that moment, in the banqueting-hall of Shushan, had a vital relation to the prayer of those hours and days in his own house beforehand. His soul was in antecedent contact, conscious and ample, with his God; therefore he was ready to touch Him so instantaneously in the moment of his crisis. Prayer in secret made it possible so to pray in that strange publicity.

The message to us is self-evident. It is our first and continual duty to seek our eternal Friend, persistently, humbly, fully, in all the detail of confidence, behind life's curtains. Then, when we have to walk in front of them "before the sons of men" (Psa. xxxi. 19), we shall not be taken by surprise; we shall know how, in an inner secrecy, and with a blessed certainty, "to make our requests known to God."

*From PRAYERS AND PROMISES (Seeley & Co.).

Letters from S. Africa.—20.

CONVENTION AT WELLINGTON.—2.

IN his opening remarks on Thursday morning, April 30, Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, having read Psa. lxii., said, in effect, Nothing can be rightly done except by God working in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Why have we failed in moment-by-moment communion with the Saviour? Because we have failed in moment-by-moment waitings upon Him. And why have we failed in such waiting on Him? Because we do not know God, or else have allowed ourselves to be too much absorbed in other things. The difference between the teaching at Keswick and a great deal of evangelical teaching elsewhere, is that when speaking about the word of truth and the life of faith in the Son of God, Keswick asks, "Have you got it? Is that your personal experience?" Then Keswick says, "You must come to absolute surrender, and absolute dependence on God. All that you know to be true is to be translated into actual living experience."

On Friday morning, referring to a telegram which had been received, asking that the duty and privilege of intercession for the country at the present political crisis might be urged, Mr. Murray asked, "Could not a call go forth from this convention in the interest of peace? for we are intercessors, and have power with God." In a brief address I emphasised this. Mr. Murray also asked prayer for the colleges and schools of South Africa, in view of Mr. Wishard's expected visit on behalf of the World's Students Christian Federation in America, England, Germany, Scandinavia. Mr. Wishard was leaving England on May 2, and purposed spending two months in South Africa. Prayer was offered for these objects in Dutch and English.

In the afternoon a missionary meeting was held, presided over by Rev. Mr. Daintree, who pressed on his hearers the hymn they had sung—

At thy feet I fall,
Yield Thee up my all—and addressed first by Miss MURRAY, who began by saying that before she went out into the mission field one thing troubled her—the question, How shall we appear in the judgment day if we do not go when God calls? She then spoke of the older women, too generally thought of as the least hopeful class, who had been particularly laid on her heart, and among whom God had remarkably blessed testimony for Jesus.

Mrs. EDWARDS, of Inanda, spoke of the kraal girls who run away and come for protection and teaching to the missionaries. At first they refused to receive them, but the native evangelist and others said they were doing wrong, and they afterwards received these girls. I have referred to this in a former letter.

Rev. Mr. LICHFIELD, now of Wynberg, near Cape Town, speaking of Uganda, where he had laboured under the C.M.S., said that the native Christians were now sending out missionaries to the neighbouring tribes, and gave interesting particulars. He exhorted the young people not to disregard the call which he was sure had already come directly to some of them.

Pasteur COILLARD, of the Zambesi Mission, spoke of what God had done there, notwithstanding prejudice and opposition at the first, and difficulties all along the way. M. Coillard will shortly be telling his story in England to sympathetic ears, and some considerable share of the £10,000 needed will doubtless be subscribed there. When he arrived on the Zambesi the king offered him a tumbler of honey beer, which he refused. The king then offered it to a trader, who drank it. The king asked why the missionary did not drink it, and when he explained, the king said, "Yes, it was bad," and made a law that no beer should be drunk and no brandy should be made. Traders used to buy "black ivory" (slaves) from the chiefs. The king fell on [500] a party of them and took back all the slaves out of the country. Similarly, witchcraft had been stopped to a great extent. When ready to despond, God had strengthened their faith and showed them many who believed in Christ.

Rev. Mr. DAINTREE followed with an appeal for work among the Jews.

Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in bringing the Convention to a close, said: God is all, and we are nothing. A lady said to me that she had got a great many blessings, but she wanted one more to bind them all together. I told her that that one blessing was God Himself. There are five impossibilities which sum up all that we have said through these four days.

FIRST IMPOSSIBILITY.

It is impossible to live a true Christian life unless we are led by the Holy Ghost every moment. For without faith it is impossible to please God, and whatever is not of faith is sin. By no effort of our own can living waters flow forth from us; but by the Holy Spirit, whom they that believe on Jesus receive. Are not some trying to do impossible things, trying to work the works of God without God's power? A clergyman said to me: "I do reckon myself dead unto sin and alive unto God; why do I not get the victory over myself?" Because you do not see that only by the Holy Ghost your reckoning can be made true, and you really live as dead to sin and alive to God in Christ. It is only by the Holy Spirit each moment in us that we can live the true Christian life.

We have to do two things—to please God, and to do good to man. Are we going to try to do that in our own strength? God said you must do these things, and yet you can't. If I must and cannot, I am like a man in a vice, pressed in and held fast between God's demand and my impotence. On the one side I must, on the other, I cannot. But Jesus will bring us, as He brought Paul, to know that his strength is perfected in weakness.

SECOND IMPOSSIBILITY.

It is impossible for us ourselves to take possession of the Holy Spirit.

People sometimes try to take this wonderful gift by their own will. That great truth is applicable here—"It is not of him that willeth nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." We must receive the Spirit as a gift from God. God gives the first-fruit of the Spirit to everyone the moment he believes in Jesus. Why then does He not make his grace and power known in us in a greater measure? Because we do not let Him. The disciples waited for ten days for the outpouring of the Spirit of Pentecost, and after that, again and again, they waited on God, and again and again were filled. We must learn, in utter helplessness to wait on God, to strengthen us by His Spirit.

THIRD IMPOSSIBILITY.

It is impossible for the power of God to fail in what He undertakes to do in us. "Nothing shall be impossible with God." The omnipotence of God is the root of the incarnation. That was a great impossibility in man's esteem; but is anything too hard for the Lord? The resurrection was still more an impossibility. It is spoken of as the working of the might of his power. But that exceeding greatness of his power is to usward who believe, and Paul prayed that he might know, as his own experience, the power of his resurrection.

In everything God does He puts forth his omnipotence. Every moment you have the omnipotence of God working in you, and on your behalf. But in order to know this you need time to take it in; you need prayer, because God will be inquired of; you need stillness of spirit, that you may hear the Spirit's voice; you need patience to wait on the Lord. "My soul, wait thou only upon God." And we, like Paul, must count all things loss for Christ, and count them worse than worthless that we may win Christ, and know Him in the power of his resurrection. Our faith must grow into an abiding confidence, that as impossible as it is to live this moment-by-moment life, so impossible it is that God's power should fail in working it in us.

FOURTH IMPOSSIBILITY.

It is impossible that God should do his work in us in any other way than that by which He led our Lord. God led Jesus in exactly the way we have to walk. As our atoning sacrifice He stood alone, even as He was alone in the mystery of his holy incarnation. But in all his walk on earth He left us an example that we should follow his steps. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no one cometh to the Father but by Me."

From Bethlehem to Calvary and Olivet He walked in the way of obedience, humility, and subjection to God. The Holy Ghost was given from heaven to enable us to walk in that same path of humility and separation.

Our Lord Jesus had to give up to death that life which He lived in the flesh. He exchanged the life of flesh and suffering for an eternal life—a life which can never pass away. The death of Jesus was a passage through death and the grave, into the region of everlasting life. He thus opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers. This is what the death of Jesus did; it proved that the only way to God is through death. It is only by living as crucified and dead with Christ that God's power can work in us. Can God give a believer the life of the Spirit without death? No! you cannot reach it without dying, without the daily fellowship of the Cross of Christ.

Go thou, and learn this lesson of the cross,
And tread the path the saints have ever trod,
Who, counting earth, and self, and all things loss,
Have found in inward death the life of God.

FIFTH IMPOSSIBILITY.

It is impossible that God's love should not delight to do this for me.

It is impossible for the flower to send out its shoots without the sun, or to paint itself red, or blue, or yellow. And it is impossible for the sun not to send out its light and heat, and to paint each flower with the colour which it is fitted to receive.

A gentleman said to me: "Yes, I know God is able, but will He? Is He willing to do all that He is able to do?" Yes, God will do all He can. It is his nature and property ever to delight in imparting his own life and goodness and power. It is his nature and property to pour out his love and blessedness into our hearts. "He cannot deny Himself." It is impossible for Him to hold back any blessing which his creature is able to receive. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give his Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" Do let us believe that it is utterly and absolutely impossible for God's faithfulness and love not to work all He expects of us. As impossible as it is for us to do it ourselves, so impossible is it that He should fail of doing it for them that wait on Him. The highest science is that which penetrates most deeply into the heart of its subject; and the most accomplished scientist is he who is able to make deep truths clear and simple to common minds. Mr. Murray has done this with regard to our relation to the Holy Spirit. His address is an appeal to the nature of God, and to the nature of his creatures; as we say, to the nature of things. And the words which show the possibility of living in the Spirit are at the same time the strongest inducement and encouragement to live that life.

It is my prayer that this somewhat feeble epitome of Mr. Murray's closing address at a remarkable gathering may be a means of illumination and inspiration to young men, who are to take the place of those whose last words on earth will soon be spoken.

R. COPE MORGAN.

A Sunday at Sea.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

IT IS Easter-day—the day of all days when one longs to make the Sunday service a triumphant adoration of the risen Christ. We had gathered together a choir for practice on the Saturday morning, a company of more than twenty voices, and found the hymns go well, the ship's doctor, Dr. Wilkinson, of Southport, playing for us, and an old choir boy from St. Paul's Cathedral acting as our leader. The Sunday dawned a lovely day. The service is not in the saloon—for that the heat is too great—but in the after part of the ship. We are reminded of how the Blessed Master lay in the after part of the ship asleep on a pillow, and how He then manifested his glorious presence. The place was made gay with the flags of the ship—the Union Jack is always reserved as that on which the Bible and Prayer-book rest. Of course, we began with the hymn—"Christ the Lord is risen today, Alleluia." Episcopalians and Presbyterians, Salvation Army men, Methodists, Lutherans, Cape Mounted Riflemen, Jameson Troopers, Dutchmen, and Germans, all joined together in swelling the praise of the one glorious Lord.

The thoughts of many were at home. It was strange how on the wings of the hymn the thought of everybody seemed to fly away each to the separate group of worshippers to which they belonged at home. We read the Church of England prayers, the Captain reading the lessons, infusing a pleasant Scotch flavour. Of course we sang the hymn for those at sea, "Eternal Father, strong to save," and never did it sound better than amidst the throbbing of the engines, and the seething of the waters, and the flickering shadows of the awning sending little waves of light and shade over the worshippers. At the end of the service we sang the hymn, "Hark, my soul, it is the Lord." Then came ten minutes' simple heart talk about the true Easter, that it is not a day of the year, a point of time—but that it is ours only when by the revelation of the living Christ to a man's own heart he can say, "My Lord and my God." The whole service lasted about an hour.

In the afternoon we gathered around Dr. Thompson while he gave us an account of his work as a medical missionary, greatly interesting us. He has set his heart on having a sanatorium on that deadly West African Coast, in the Cameroon Mountains, where at a height of some six thousand feet above the sea level there is a perfect climate. I am glad to give expression to his heart's desire as it is one in which the different societies having missions on the coast might well unite. A month or six weeks in such a health resort would do more than save many a good man's life—it would double his power for work. It would be a somewhat costly undertaking, as a road would have to be made up the mountains; yet for such a purpose six thousand pounds—which he reckons would cover it all—is not a great deal to ask. The Church Missionary Society, the Presbyterians, the Methodists, and the Basel Mission could unite in a work which so greatly concerns them; whilst within the reach of it is the Mission of the American Presbyterians in French Congo; and on the Congo itself there are the Baptists, Bishop Taylor's Mission, the Congo-Balolo Mission, and various others, having no sanatorium. I shall be glad if my words can further so good a proposal.

After dinner we all met again in the after part of the ship, and joined together in singing hymns. The collection was various. Hymns Ancient and Modern, Scotch Psalms, Sacred Songs and Solos, rang out in turn. We bowed in prayer whilst our hearts went out tenderly towards those at home. Other days you are wondering what they are doing; but on Sundays you seem to live amongst the old familiar scenes and the dear familiar faces. How I longed that they could see us on that evening; the electric light falling on the group seated about the deck and over the hold of the ship, by no means in "evening dress." In the morning captain and officers are brilliant in uniform, and the passengers come out in full array of finery. But at night men sit mostly without coat or waistcoat, the ladies wear no bonnets. Even finery is at a discount in the tropics. It was interesting to notice how as we sang "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "Art thou weary, art thou languid?" the books were not used. All knew the words by heart. One could not help thinking with great thankfulness how that these words would live on in these hearts in all sorts of places, some in Mauritius, some in Madagascar, some scattered in South Africa, ever bringing nearer and nearer the Lord, recalling life's holiest memories, and lighting, it may be, for many a one a blessed hope. Of all earth's benefactors, few have rendered better service than he who has written a hymn that becomes the property of all the churches and lives in ten thousand hearts.—Methodist Times.

From Dr. Baedeker.

DEAR SIR,—In response to the notice of my intended visit to Constantinople some friends entrusted me with their gifts for the relief of sufferers in Armenia. I received from various sources in England and other countries the sum of £175. After my visit to Budapest and the presentation to the King of Hungary as one of the deputies of the Evangelical Alliance, I travelled to Constanta to meet my Armenian interpreter. He had announced my arrival to the many Armenian refugees. I arrived on Saturday night, and was requested to speak Lord's Day morning in the Armenian Gregorian Church after their morning service was ended. Scarcely ever have I had a more intensely attentive audience as my words were translated sentence by sentence. I spoke for about an hour, and told them a plain, simple Gospel. At the end, some man tried to cause a disturbance by interrupting me. This caused a division in the place, and many came afterwards wanting to hear more. I met with some who had lost their all in the massacre, and I was thankful to be able to give some relief to them.

Constanta is a rapidly rising place, now the chief port of communication with Constantinople. About ten or twelve different nationalities are peopling the place, and a great opening for the Gospel may be found there, as well as in other towns in a similar position. My Armenian friend finds many opportunities for serving the people with the Gospel. Some of my Stundist brethren are also in this country and neighbourhood, having preferred a voluntary exile to a forced banishment. They are doing good work for the Lord both in Roumania and Bulgaria.

From Constanta I proceeded by steamboat to Constantinople, arriving on Wednesday, May 12. After having made enquiries I was advised to go to Smyrna, a boat leaving on the 13th landing in Smyrna on the 14th. I had time to pay the necessary visits and to obtain all information concerning the relief work for the Armenians. I found a Russian steamer leaving the same day for Constantinople, so that I returned on the 15th safe and in excellent health. Sunday, the 16th, I was glad and thankful for opportunities of service with the Scotch mission to the Jews, at present conducted by Dr. Hannington.

As a result of my inquiries I gave of the money received:—£20 for refugees in Constanta; £10 to my Armenian friend in Erzerum, for distributing amongst sufferers; £70 towards the receiving of orphans at Smyrna, to the Rev. A. McLaghlan; £70 to Mr. Peel, for relieving sufferers who are of the household of faith. To the best of my judgment the money will be well applied, my only regret being that I had not much larger sums to dispose of.

Sufferings such as one hears of among these poor people are unprecedented in the history of the Middle Ages. The American missionaries are doing a most noble work, their praise is in everyone's mouth. At Constantinople great efforts are made by ladies who make clothes for the poor, stricken families. In this time of sore calamity, the Gospel is shown in its wonderful power of love, and already there are tokens of a great conquest amongst the Armenians towards Christianity. In many Armenian churches the Gospel is freely proclaimed by European and American evangelists.

After my short visit to that wicked and filthy city of the Sultan I was glad to return to fairer scenes. Leaving Constantinople on Tuesday, the 19th, I arrived at Varna on the following day, and meeting there also with some Stundist brethren I went to Rustchuk by rail on the 21st. The following day was fully occupied by visiting several brethren, Methodists and Baptists (Americans), who are doing a noble work amongst the Bulgarian people, and having a full meeting in the evening in the Methodist church. Thus my time was well filled up. This morning I left by early boat to Giorgewo, and by train to Bucharest. Here I had the joy of meeting Mr. David Baron and Mr. Gordon, from Budapest, and to join them in a happy meeting this afternoon for a large number of Jews, who were most intensely attentive, so that another meeting was arranged for to-morrow, Whit-Sunday. Thus, the days are occupied with happy service for the Lord, more and more, as "the sands of time are sinking."

On leaving this very ungodly city and seeking to leave some traces for the coming Lord, my route will be via Klausenburg and Debreczin, to visit the universities en route for Budapest once more for some days, and I hope to wend my steps homeward in the beginning of June. The coronation of the young Czar is a great event in the world's history. Oh, that it may be in his heart to give liberty of conscience and of action to his most loyal subjects, our brethren, the Stundists. I would humbly lay claim to the prayers of your readers on behalf of the many isolated labourers in these sorely neglected and sin-stricken lands, and for me. —Yours in Jesus F. W. BAEDER.

Bucharest, May 23.

P.S.—It will interest some friends to know that my permit for the prisons in Russia has been renewed and sanctioned by the authorities now in power; also that at my request a similar permit has been given to two brethren who are resident in Russia. Praise God.

The Needs of Finland.

At the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday last, Mrs. F. Swenson Parker greatly interested those present by her story of the Gospel needs of Finland. Some months ago we referred to her present mission to this country, to secure help towards erecting mission premises in Helsingfors, and an evangelical training home for Finnish pastors and evangelists. One great point emphasised by Mrs. Parker was the high standard of education that prevails in Finland. The knowledge of several languages is a common possession of the people. In order that the Gospel message may be accepted, it is absolutely necessary that the preachers should be trained, educated men.

Another important consideration mentioned by our sister was the influence which this Finnish movement is destined to have in Russia itself. From the branch mission established in St. Petersburg it is hoped that the Gospel may go out to many who are now in bondage to the superstitions and formalism of the so-called orthodox faith. We commend Mrs. Parker and her story to all who wish the speedy evangelisation of Eastern Europe. Her address is Home of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, N.W.

Gospel Mission Hall, Bishopsgate, Egham.—The report of this work, so interesting in origin and thorough in management, tells of continued progress. One of the agencies is a cycle mission, the members of which visit the surrounding villages. The report says:—"We hope to extend our Cycle Mission work, having several young men workers anxious to join us. Mrs. Nicholson, of Egham Vicarage, having kindly offered £3 towards buying two or three machines to be kept entirely for Mission work, we propose to buy a few second-hand cushion or solid tyred machines about £3 or £4 each. Two of our former workers who commenced speaking with the Cycle Mission have been accepted as colporteurs in the Christian Colportage Association. The superintendent of the work is Mr. A. Gostelow, 10, Northcroft-villas, Englefield Green, Surrey.

The Mennonites in Manitoba now number 2,960 families, making a total number of 20,000 souls. They have 235,160 acres under cultivation. Last year they harvested 3,500,000 bushels of grain, exclusive of flax. Of flax they raised 950,000 bushels. They own 11,000 horses, 8,300 cows, and 10,000 young cattle. In 1874-75-76 the colony borrowed 195,000 dollars from the Dominion Government at 5 per cent. interest, and from their brethren of Waterloo, Ontario, 20,000 dollars without interest. In 1891 they had repaid the whole amount of these loans with interest, and they are now quite free from debt, and prosperous in every respect. The creed of these peculiar people forbids them to carry arms. They were originally expelled from Germany by Frederick VIII., and settled in Russia, where the Empress Catherine granted them exemption from military service for 100 years. Finding there was little probability of a further exemption, they emigrated to Canada, where the Government granted them a fertile tract of ground and freedom from military service for ever.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 7.

"AND THE MAN OF GOD WEPT."—2 Kings viii. 11.

ELISHA foresaw all the evil that Hazael would inflict on Israel, and it moved him to tears. Though he was a strong man, able to move kingdoms by his message and prayer, yet he was of a tender and compassionate disposition. This was he who one moment upbraided the king of Israel for his crimes, and the next called for a minstrel to calm his perturbed spirit with strains of music. The men that can move others are themselves very susceptible and easily moved.

The nearer we live to God, the more we deserve to be known as men and women of God, the more will our tears flow for the slain of the daughters of our people. Consider the ravages that drink, and impurity, and gambling are making among our people; enumerate the homes that are desolate, the young life that is wrecked as it is leaving the harbour, the awful dishonour done to woman; and surely there must come times when tears well up for very humanity's sake, to say nothing of the pity which they acquire, who look at things from God's standpoint.

Jesus beheld the city and wept over it; give us this day, O Son of Man, thy compassion, thy love, thy tears, that we may speak of thy grace graciously, of thy love tenderly, and even of thy judgments with brimming eyes.

A broken heart, a fount of tears,
Ask and it shall not be denied.

MONDAY, June 8.

"IS IT PEACE, JEHU? AND HE ANSWERED, WHAT PEACE?"—2 Kings ix. 22.

We all want peace. Of every telegraph messenger, as he puts the buff-coloured envelope into our hands, we ask almost instinctively, Is it peace? If there is a rumour of war, a depression in trade, a bad harvest, a sudden calamity in our neighbourhood, we instantly consider the effect it may have on the tranquillity and prosperity of our life.

By peace we too often mean the absence of the disagreeable, the unbroken routine of outward prosperity, the serene passage of the years: not always eager for anything deeper. And if other and profounder questions intrude themselves, we instantly stifle or evade them. Like Herod, we shut up the Baptist in the dungeon. Like the Roman general, we make a desert and call it peace. Men will flee from a Gospel ministry which pursues them into close quarters, and arouses unwelcome questions that break the peace.

There cannot be true peace, so long as we permit the infidelities and charms of some Jezebel of the soul-life to attract and affect us. Jezebel may stand for the painted world, with its wiles and snares, or for the flesh. But in whatever costume it intrudes, it must be flung out of the window, before we can enjoy the peace that passeth all understanding. Christ is king of righteousness before He can be king of peace.

TUESDAY, June 9.

"JEHU TOOK NO HEED TO WALK IN THE LAW OF THE LORD GOD OF ISRAEL WITH ALL HIS HEART."—2 Kings x. 31.

Jehu was the Cromwell of his time. He swept away the symbols of idolatry with ruthless destruction. Nothing could withstand his iconoclastic enthusiasm. But he failed to keep his own heart, and therefore his dynasty lasted for but four generations. It is a deep lesson for us all.

We can keep other people's vineyards, and neglect our own. We give good advice to our friends, but fall into the very faults against which we warn them. We pose as infallible guides, but fall into the crevasses and precipices from which we had carefully warned our companions. Jehu avenged the idolatries of Ahab, but he departed not from Jeroboam's calves.

[502]

Before you rebuke another, be sure that you are free from the faults that you detect in him. When you hear of the failings of some erring brother, ask yourself whether you are perfectly free from them. And never attempt to cast out the mote from your neighbour's eye till you are sure that the beam has been taken from your own.

Take heed to your heart. Its complexion colours all the issues of life. Do not be content to be strong against evil, be eagerly ambitious of good. It is easier to be vehement against the abominations of others than to judge and put away your own secret sins.

WEDNESDAY, June 10.

"THEY MADE HIM KING, AND ANOINTED HIM."—2 Kings xi. 12.

The world has just been thrilled with the accounts of the coronation of the Czar. In one respect at least there was a similarity between it and that of Josiah. "The sacred oil," said the correspondent of one of the great London dailies, "was manufactured with great care from thirty different elements, including gums, balsams, and spices; and with this the metropolitan anointed the head, temples, eyelids, lips, nostrils, ears, breast, and hands of the Emperor, with the words, 'Behold the seal of the chrism of the Holy Spirit, let it keep thee ever holy in all things.'"

We also are priests and kings unto God, set apart, and anointed with the sacred unguent of the Holy Spirit. "Ye have an unction from the Holy One... The anointing which ye received of Him abideth on you... Now He that anointed us is God." If we are to be kept ever holy in all things, if we are to fulfil the holy responsibilities to which we are called, if we are to rule over ourselves—we must receive and keep that anointing.

It must have been a touching sight when the Emperor took his splendid crown from off his head, and placed it for a moment on that of his imperial consort, and then kissed her. But who will compare this with that august act, in which Christ shall make us share his throne, and crown, and dominion. He hath redeemed us by his blood, and made us kings and priests unto God, even the Father.

THURSDAY, June 11.

"THE MONEY THAT COMETH INTO ANY MAN'S HEART TO BRING INTO THE HOUSE OF THE LORD."—2 Kings xii. 4.

The margin suggests that the thought of giving for God's house would ascend in a man's heart, till it became the royal and predominant thought, swaying the whole man to obedience. It is a beautiful conception!

For the reconstruction of the Temple there were two classes of revenue: the tribute money which each Israelite was bound to give, and the money which a man might feel prompted to give. Surely the latter was more precious in the eye of God.

Does it ever come into your heart to bring some money into the house of God? Perhaps the suggestion comes, but you put it away, and refuse to consider it. The thought begins to ascend in your heart, but you thrust it down and back, saying, Why should I part with what has cost me so much to get! Beware of stifling these generous promptings: to yield to them would bring untold blessing into heart and life. Besides, the money is only yours as a stewardship, and the thought to give it to God, is only the Master's request for his own.

The great mistake with us all is, that we do not set apart something out of each pound we earn for God, and that we forget that we have freely received that we might resemble our Father in heaven, and freely give.

FRIDAY, June 12.

"HE SMOTE THRICE AND STAYED."—2 Kings xiii. 18.

A striking spectacle. The dying prophet, with his thin hands on the muscular hands of the young king, as he shoots his arrow through the eastern window; the exhortation to smite the remaining arrows on the ground; the bitter chiding that the king had struck thrice only, instead of five or six times! What lessons are here? The Lord Jesus puts his hands upon ours. Here is the reverse to the incident referred to. Ours are weak, his are strong; ours would miss the mark, his will direct the arrows, if only we will allow Him, with unerring precision. We shoot, but the Lord directs the arrow's flight to the heart of his foes.

Our success is commensurate with our faith. we strike but thrice, we conquer but thrice. If we strike seven times, we attain to perfect success against the adversary. Is not this the cause of comparative non-success in Gospel effort? Souls are not saved because we do not expect them to be saved. A few are saved, because we only believe for a few. It is one of the most radical laws in the universe of God, and one which our Lord repeatedly emphasised, that our faith determines the less or more in our own growth, and in the victories we win for Christ. Do not stay, O soul-winner, but smite again and yet again in the secret of thy chamber, that thou mayest smite Satan, and he be compelled to acknowledge thy might.

SATURDAY, June 13.

"EVERY MAN SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH FOR HIS OWN SIN."—2 Kings xiv. 6.

So ran the law of Moses. It forbade indeed the imposition of punishment on the relatives of the wrong-doer, but it had no mercy on him. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," was the succinct and conclusive verdict of the older law, in this reflecting the spirit and letter of a yet older one, which ran, "The day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die."

First, we were dead in our sins.—Eph. ii. 5, puts this beyond all doubt. In the sight of God, all who walk according to the course of this world, and obey the Prince that now worketh in the children of this world, are dead in trespasses and sins. However much they may be alive as to their souls, they are dead as to their spirits, toward the life of God.

Second, we have died for our sins.—2 Cor. v. 14, 15 (R.V.) establishes this fact, and shows that in Jesus, we who believe in Him, are reckoned to have died in Him when He bore our sins in his own body on the tree. In God's estimate, that death is imputed to us, so that we are reckoned as having satisfied, in Jesus, the demands of a broken law. It has no more to ask.

Third, we must die to our sin.—Rom. vi. 11. Reckon that you have died, and whenever sin arises, to menace or allure you, point back to the grave, and argue that since you died in Christ, you have passed altogether beyond its jurisdiction. O ye, who are not in Christ, ere it be too late, I pray you shelter in the wounds of Emmanuel.

Walworth Creche.—The first report shows how this work, which grew out of many years' experience at Richmond-street Mission, has developed and is doing valuable service on behalf of little ones whose mothers are compelled to go out to work. Mrs. Kinghorne believes that the gratitude felt for kindness done to the child often becomes the means of winning the parent's heart. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. F. Kinghorne, 18, Wilson-road, Camberwell, S.E.

The "Undenominational" Christian Teaching, upon which Dr. Parker, in a letter to The Times, pours so much contempt, is the pure primitive, catholic Christianity of the New Testament, and of the first century. It is what was universally taught by the Apostles and by their immediate successors before the evil days in which bitter controversy and reckless speculation compelled the Church to supplement the ipsissima verba of Scripture by human creeds as a protest and defence against human error. It is better that little children should be taught the facts and truths and morality of the Christian religion in the very words of Scripture. The controversial creeds of technical theology may well be reserved for later years and for other places than the primary day-school.—Non-Confessionist Times

From one of the little patients:—
MY DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS,—We thank you for the flowers you sent us. Some of the children are up and playing about the wards. We are all very happy. The flowers were very pretty, and we liked them very much.
I came here last year, and I had three operations, and I got better and went home. And now I am in again and going to have another operation. LAURA WILKES.

Personal Paragraphs.

DEAR UNCLE TOM.—I am sorry I could not do "the Searcher" because dear papa died on May 5. I was at school, as usual, and my brother came for me. I knew papa was dead, because he was very ill the night before. My mother feels it very much. The funeral was on Saturday.—Your loving nephew, WALTER THOMSON (aged 11).

I am sure that all of you who know what it is to have a dear good father will feel very deep sympathy with Walter and his family in this sad trial.

DEAR UNCLE TOM.—I read what you said about some children, who, having failed a few times, will not be able to compete for the June prize. I am one of those children. But I am going to try to be one of the other kind, who say, "Whether I get a prize or not, I like doing the questions because they teach me something about the Bible." I am sending a box of flowers, and I would like it to be given to some poor children who never see any country, and therefore do not know what pretty country flowers are like. I would like to know if children's garments would be useful, as I made a little frock last winter and a pair of warm socks, and my sister, Valerie is going to make a frock too. So if you would like it we should be very pleased to send it.—Yours sincerely,

MARY D. MAITLAND-KIRWAN.

I am glad that several of my young friends who are not eligible for the next prizes are still determined to do the "Searcher" for the sake of what they learn from it.

I can always make good use of articles of any kind for poor children.

FLORENCE JUDD.—The next quarter will begin with THE CHRISTIAN of July 2, but I hope you will do the "Searcher" for its own sake week by week till then.

EDITH GILSON.—The star after the surname includes all of that name. JEAN SCOTT.—"Jean Nicoll" was intended for you, and I have had it corrected. WILLIAM CORRIE.—You did not send the whole of your answers. E. S. HAYWARD.—Thank you for the flowers.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Southsea, to June 5; St. John's, Holford, June 8; Langton, June 10; Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, June 12; Hawkstone Hall, Blackfriars, June 15; St. Paul's, Onslow-square, June 19; Bradford, June 22; Leeds, June 23. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Hamilton, N.B., to June 12. Mr. B. Herklotz, Horsforth, June 4; Spofforth, June 5; Bradford, June 6-8; Leeds, June 9; Hampsthwaite, June 10; Skipton, June 11; Leeds, June 12; Bradford, June 13-19; Whitley Beaumont, near Huddersfield, June 20; Bradford, June 20-21. Mr. Hankinson, Trowbridge, July 11-17. Mr. Tyler, Steyning, June 4; Brighton, June 18. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, East Harling, to June 6; caravan No. 2, Old Newton, to June 8. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with caravan, Comberton, near Cambridge, to June 8. Mr. E. Hughes, Waltham Abbey, to June 5. Mr. H. Lidstone, Presbyterian Church, Highgate, June 12.

Special prayer meeting, at Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, Wednesday, June 17, for seaside services and caravan work; tea at 5.30 p.m.; meeting at 6 p.m.; all friends invited.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending June 13, 1896.—Sun., June 7, Acts ix. 32-43; Mon., June 8, x. 1-16; Tues., June 9, x. 17-33; Wed., June 10, x. 34-48; Thurs., June 11, xi. 1-18; Fri., June 12, xi. 19-30; Sat., June 13, xii. 1-12.

(The concluding portion of "A Zulu Blind Boy's Story" will appear in our next issue).

"God be Merciful to Me."

SINFUL, weary, sad, oppressed,
Struggling vainly to be free,
Can this burdened heart be blest?
God be merciful to me!

Tears of sorrow, sin, and shame,
Spread before thine eyes I see;
For the sake of Christ's dear name,
God be merciful to me!

I of sinners am the chief,
For whose guilt could blacker be?
Only Thou canst give relief;
God be merciful to me!

Pitying Saviour, hear my cry—
In thy name I make my plea;
Must I, Lord, despair and die?
God be merciful to me!

Help me now by simple faith,
Just to cast myself on Thee,
Trusting Thee for life or death,
God be merciful to me!

"Lo! thy sins are blotted out,
Cast into the deepest sea";
I believe—I dare not doubt—
God is merciful to me!

ERNEST RICKMAN.

"GOSPEL ARROW," CARD No. 1, printed in two colours, Christian Herald Co., 20, Tudor-street, London, E.C., post free, 1s. per doz., or 50 for 3s. 6d.

[504]

The Scottish Assemblies.

MANY matters of public interest and importance were brought to the attention of these two Church courts last week. The discussion in the Established Church of the religious condition of the people was introduced by a comprehensive statement from Dr. MARSHALL LANG. Referring to the industrial centres in the Border Counties, he noted that at Selkirk the weekly pay-day had been changed from Saturday to Tuesday, with happy results in family sobriety and Sabbath quiet. He deplored certain agricultural arrangements, which seemed to be helping on the migration from country to town-life, and making "silent tracts of country where there should be smiling, cosy homesteads, rearing a healthy, happy and virtuous people." The speaker's allusion to the Free Church secessions in the Highlands were not all couched in the best and most brotherly taste, but all must agree with his timely observation that the best "contributions to the healing of the breaches in Highland Presbyterianism seem to be a wider charity, a more cordial co-operation in Christian work, and union in prayer for a fuller baptism of the Spirit of God." Indeed, there could be no more admirable recipe for the healing of all sorts of breaches among Christians anywhere. The vagrants of Scotland came in for passing notice, and it is suggestive to learn that one out of every two persons amongst vagrant adults in Perthshire had been apprehended for drunkenness during the past year. Surely the Church was bound to try at least to do something for a class that is wandering about, practically heathen and almost savage. The prevalence of impurity in some parts of Scotland, "the shadow of sour, persistent poverty," gambling and betting, the growing rage for Sunday sports, the deterring influence of the pew-rent system were, among other points, noted for reprobation in a picture that was altogether a sombre one.

On the evening of the same day, in the Established Assembly, the case of Professor Johnston, of the Chair of Biblical Criticism, Aberdeen, was considered, in connection with a petition by certain of his students to be relieved from attendance on his lectures. It seems that these students consider the Professor unsystematic and not up to date in his methods of Biblical criticism; in short, he has got too much to say in favour of the "traditional" creed of Bible inspiration. The subject was not discussed on its merits, as the Assembly declined to entertain the petition in view of the fact that the University Court of Aberdeen had the matter in hand.

In the Free Church Assembly on the same day, on the report of the College Committee, it was announced that Professor W. G. Blaikie is about to retire from the chair of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology. The death of Dr. Moxey, the late Lecturer on Elocution in Edinburgh, was alluded to with regret, but we are surprised to see in the published reports no reference to the serious illness of Professor Henry Drummond, of the Glasgow College.

In dealing with the report on Home Missions, Rev. Dr. J. HOOD WILSON (Ex-Moderator) traced the history of the Miners' Mission, the funds for which had now reached over £10,000. A miners' hall is to be erected at Bothwell Park. To the same discussion a very agreeable contribution was made by Mr. A. McKEITH, of Glasgow, who has done splendid work among the children of the city in past years. A very forcible speech was made by Rev. W. MUIR, of Blairgowrie, who protested against the Christless rich being ignored because they lived in villas instead of lanes.

A strong and unanimous pronouncement against the pending Education Bill was made by the Free Assembly, on the ground that though it did not apply to Scotland, it would act injuriously on educational progress and upset the existing School Board system in England and Wales, and would react on Scotch Education. In the course of the discussion on the Highlands and Islands report there were some interesting testimonies given as to recent movements of revival in the northern counties.

The subject of a proposed new and union hymnal for use in the three Presbyterian Churches of Scotland was considered by both courts. In the Free Assembly, though strong objection was taken to some inclusions and omissions, the draft book was approved of by a large majority. In the Established convocation the opposition was strong enough to secure the rejection of the book by a majority of forty-one. One speaker distinguished himself by asking why they should sing "ranting Evangelical hymns." Why should they load their hymn book with "that sort of rubbish"? We note with regret that these pitiful remarks were punctuated with laughter.

When dealing with the report of the Foreign Missions Committee, various missionary brethren from India and Africa gave encouraging reports of progress. Five young missionaries to Natal and Central Africa "received a charge" to their appointed work; one of the five was Mr. Donald Fraser, so well known in connection with the Student Volunteer movement.

On Thursday the matter of union with the United Presbyterian Church came before the Free Assembly, and Principal Rainy's proposal to remit the question to the individual presbyteries and churches for this year, with a view to some definite step towards union at next Assembly, was approved of without a dissentient voice. The prospects of this union seem, therefore, to be most hopeful, if no unforeseen circumstance arise.

The report on "Sunday Observance" by the Free Assembly was followed by a strong deliverance as to modern encroachments on the sanctity of the Lord's Day.

Friday was a stirring day in both houses. In the Established Assembly the forenoon was mainly taken up with the foreign mission report. A deficit of over £3400 was announced. Several returned missionaries gave addresses, and Mr. Eugene Stock also spoke briefly. Then a good-tempered, but somewhat strenuous, attack on the foreign missions of the Church was made by Rev. J. Menzies, of Fordoun, who contended that among business men there exists widespread suspicion as to their usefulness. He purported to quote Mrs. Bishop and Miss Gordon-Cumming in favour of his position, but he did not cite any passages by these ladies, and until he does we must dissent from his view with respect to them. In the end, a committee was appointed by the Assembly to investigate and report.

The evening was devoted to the Kilmun heresy case, and the sittings were not concluded till 2 o'clock on Saturday morning. It may be remembered that some months ago, a book called "The Saviour in the Newer Light" was written and published by Rev. J. Robinson, of Kilmun. It dealt with the life and character of Jesus Christ in a very free and rationalizing spirit, and it was inevitable that the author should have to answer at the bar of the Church Courts. The subject came before the Assembly by way of appeal from the local Synod, which had upheld the Presbytery in framing a libel against Mr. Robinson for teachings opposed to the Scriptures and the Confession of Faith. A committee of the Assembly had a conference with Mr. Robinson, at which he partly explained his position, partly confessed that he had transgressed, and disclaimed any idea of subverting the doctrines received in the Church. After a lengthened and warm debate, in which Mr. Robinson was represented by an able advocate, Dr. Marshall Lang moved that Mr. Robinson be condemned, censured, and admonished, but that in view of his explanation and promises no further steps be taken. Dr. John McLeod, of Govan, moved that the offender be suspended for a year, enjoined to withdraw his book, and come again before the Assembly next year. The latter motion was carried by 183 to 144—a majority of 39.

In the Free Church the customary motion in favour of Disestablishment was carried by a large majority. A motion of sympathy in the matter of the Armenian atrocities was passed nem. con. In the evening work among the young was reported on.

Miss Mary Theresa Bliss.

MISSIONARY TO MADAGASCAR.

AMONG women who have devoted their lives to missionary work Miss Bliss holds a unique place, having for some years managed a large district, with many churches in it, hitherto under the care of an ordained missionary—a position not before occupied by a lady, but in which she has been eminently successful. Miss Bliss may also be described as, in some respects, a “pioneer” worker. At the time she offered her services to the London Missionary Society there was no Ladies’ Committee for Female Missions, and the ten ladies who had gone abroad under the auspices of the Society had gone solely for scholastic work. There seemed, then, no prospect of Miss Bliss becoming a missionary, but such lack of opportunity by no means discouraged her; her desires were too sincere and ardent to be “washed away by metaphorical cold water,” or crushed by removable difficulties.

Almost from babyhood her thought (often expressed) on hearing a Bible story was, “How I should like to tell little black children that!” and, though she never met “a live missionary,” or went to meetings, or even read much of the great work being done in distant lands, throughout a happy, uneventful girlhood at Kenilworth, the idea was with her, slowly crystallising into the dedication of her womanhood to the work. As “the little black children” had first stirred her childish heart, so the youth of Madagascar received the first-fruits of her labour.

Miss Bliss’s early desire was to go to New Guinea or the South Seas, but she was told this was out of the question, and when Dr. Mullens, the foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, returned from a visit to Madagascar in 1874, she was asked to take charge of the Central Girls’ School in Antananarivo. The question of health and her inability to obtain a favourable medical certificate caused some delay, during which Miss Bliss studied for a few months at the Home and Colonial School Society’s Training Institution, eventually sailing for Madagascar in March, 1876.

On her arrival at the scene of her future labours, Miss Bliss found a school numbering only about sixty girls, meeting in a native house. Since then female education in the island has advanced greatly; at the central school there are now three hundred or more in attendance, and the work done is highly encouraging. Miss Bliss had been instructed, on going out to make a strong point of training native girls to be teachers, but it has not been possible to accomplish much in that way. The girls are intelligent and eager to learn, but there is little demand for women-teachers; the churches cannot afford to pay them, and girls are usually taught with the boys by one master.

Malagasy girls also marry young, and the care of their homes prevents them doing much outside work, but the seed sown in the schools is not dead. Former pupils are scattered over the island as wives of governors and teachers, and many have great influence which they use both directly and indirectly. There are cases of failure, of course, but the majority of those who have passed under Miss Bliss’s care, do, to her great joy, live pure and earnest Christian lives, whilst their advanced state of civilisation, and the care they bestow upon their families, bear witness to the salutary influence of their training in the school. Between three and four years ago, a beautiful new school building was opened by Queen Ranavalona, who was for two years under Miss Bliss’s tuition, and always gratefully acknowledges her indebtedness to the wise guidance and spiritual teaching she received during that time. It was only with great difficulty a suitable piece of land for the school was obtained, and also permission to build. Mr. Johnson, of the Friends’ Foreign Missionary Association, so cruelly murdered last autumn, drew up the plans, and Mr. Ashwell, superintendent of the London Missionary Society’s Press, took an oversight of the building, which was otherwise entirely native work.

After five years in Antananarivo, Miss Bliss returned home on sick-leave, sailing again for Madagascar in May, 1883. The French had, however, blockaded Tamatave, and she was not allowed to land, but obliged to go on to Mauritius. Under these circumstances, the directors of the London Missionary Society requested her to visit Australia as a deputation. Though always reluctant to take up this kind of work, Miss Bliss looks back on this visit as one of the bright spots in her life. She was warmly welcomed, and, being the first visitor from Madagascar, as well as the first lady-deputation, great interest was aroused. Ladies’ auxiliaries were started in several places, and a work begun which has steadily advanced ever since.

(From Photograph by Mr. Cox, Weymouth.)

After several months in the Colonies, access to Madagascar became easy, and Miss Bliss returned to Antananarivo. Though educational work has mainly occupied her, and her interest in the schools of the capital is very great, she much prefers “district work,” and her success therein shows how well she is adapted for it. Four years ago, when Mr. Peill, the missionary in charge of the Ambohimanga district, went home on furlough, Miss Bliss was, to her great delight, left to undertake the general work of the mission in his district. She had the superintendence of twenty-five churches, and also helped the missionary of an adjoining district with twenty of his. No light labour was entailed in visiting forty-five congregations and schools in turn, and sustaining energetically Temperance and Christian Endeavour societies, sewing classes, a school-teachers’ training-class, in addition to the ordinary services of a settled church.

Miss Bliss was constantly urged by her fellow-missionaries to take the services entirely, but from “preaching” she always shrank, preferring to allow native pastors to conduct the services, after which she would gather the people together and talk with them, or she would address the church members at a communion service, and always took part in the four-monthly meetings of pastors and delegates of the district.

Though in the towns, the Malagasy people are eager for education and spiritual teaching, a sad indifference prevails in the country, and Miss Bliss has always felt that much more should be done for those who care little for their own best interests. She, therefore, when Mr. Peill returned to this country, acceded to the urgent appeals of her fellow-missionaries that she should take charge of the large and important town of Ambohimalaza, east of the capital. Owing to the character of the people, her friends were doubtful whether it would actually be practicable for a lady to live among them. Discomfort rather than violence was apprehended, and perhaps a contempt which precluded any kindness.

The people of Ambohimalaza are nobles, very proud and conservative: previous to Miss Bliss coming among them they had no resident missionary, having politely but firmly refused to have one. Miss Bliss, however, managed to win their confidence and affection, and her subsequent success and their evident attachment to her have very satisfactorily dismissed the apprehensions of her native friends. She is known in Ambohimalaza by a native term of respect, “Ramatoa,” and all over the district “Ramatoa’s” word has weight and influence, which, perhaps, surprises no one but its self-forgetful and retiring bearer.

Miss Bliss has charge of three churches in the town and six in the country, whilst a high school for girls, classes for women, educational classes for young men, a preacher’s class for Bible study and talks about sermons and services, owe their origin and development to her untiring labour. The work of the country district is necessarily very different to that Miss Bliss was occupied with in the towns; it is so much wider, and embraces all ages and both sexes. The building up of churches, evangelising villages, working village schools, and improving the singing and order of services come within its scope, and naturally its encouragements and discouragements are more numerous and relatively greater.

The scene of Miss Bliss’s work is an isolated one, but in her active, well-filled days there is no place for loneliness. Her house being on the high road to Tamatave and the Sanatorium, visitors are not infrequent, and some of her pupils live with her. These do not belong to the town, but come for the sake of the school. The people of the district often beg Miss Bliss to take their children into her house, but she prefers to take girls from a distance, who could not otherwise receive education. She is especially interested in the east-coast tribe; one girl, coming from Radomandry, married just before Miss Bliss left for England, and she and her husband were doing a splendid work, teaching in a large village amongst their own tribe when their happy home was broken up by the rebels, who deprived them of all their possessions.

Owing to the war, Miss Bliss’s work was temporarily suspended, and she came home last autumn on ante-dated furlough, but she hopes to return to Madagascar early in the autumn, when we hope a yet fuller share of success will accompany her work.

King David and His Psalms.

By Rev. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

THE RESCUE FROM THE PHILISTINES.

PSALMS XLVI. and XLVIII. form one of the most exquisite pairs of Psalms; inexpressibly graceful, deeply fervent, rich in elevated and highly poetical words, plastic descriptions, and mystical allusions. They are also both of one cast in their double correlative theme. In them culminate the ten Davidic Psalms on the great victory. By the signal catastrophe—God's glorious termination of all the wars of David—He had proved Himself the strong fortress, who would help Zion the immovable on the morning of the great day, and make an end of all the wars upon earth (Ps. xli.). God will, in addition, make Zion the joy of the whole earth, make it the city of the great King, which He will uphold forever, that his glory may reach unto the ends of the earth, and that Mount Zion may rejoice (Ps. xlviii.). The one cannot be fulfilled without the other, and both together form the indissoluble, correlative main-piece of prophecy.

PSALM XLVI.

For the Chief Musician. A Psalm of the sons of Korah. Set to Alamoth. A Song.

1. God is a refuge and stronghold for us,
A very present help in trouble.
2. Therefore we will not fear,
Though the earth do change,
And the mountains be moved into the heart of the seas;
3. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled,
The mountains shake at the pride thereof.

[Selah.]

4. A river—its streams make glad the city of God,
The sanctuary of the tabernacles of the Most High.
5. God is in her midst; she shall not be moved;
God shall help her at the dawn of morning.
6. Nations roared, kingdoms were moved:
He gave forth his voice—
The earth melted.

7. Jehovah of hosts is with us,
The God of Jacob is our high tower.

[Selah.]

8. Come, behold the deeds of Jehovah,
Who has made desolations in the earth;
9. Quelling wars to the end of the earth.
The bow He breaks, and hews the spear in splinters;
The chariots He burns in the fire.
10. Be still, and know that I am God,
Exalted in the nations, exalted in the earth.

11. Jehovah of hosts is with us,
The God of Jacob is our high tower.

When, in verse 2, mention is made of the shaking of the mountains in the midst of the great seas, and in verse 3 of the trembling of the mountains on land, we take this to be a description of the earthquake referred to in Pss. xviii. and xxix.; and when, in contrast with the roaring and foaming waters, a stream is mentioned which makes glad the city of God and the holy place of the tabernacle, we may take it as literally as the mountains and the roaring waters, which, however, does not prevent a deeper mystical allusion in the words. The only stream in Jerusalem which can be referred to by the word nahar—ever-running water, is the brook Siloam. In Isaiah viii. 6, it is contrasted with "the waters of the great river," as a symbol of the world's kingdom, and called "the waters of Shiloah that go softly," as an image of the kingdom of God.

This stream is carried through a tunnel hewn through Mount Moriah, by means of which the water from the Spring of the Virgin is conducted to the Pool of Siloam. An inscription in classic Hebrew, found in the tunnel some years ago, merely states that it was hewn from both ends, but, unfortunately, does not give any date. It is within the bounds of possibility, however, that it may have been constructed in the time of David; in any case, seeing that it is mentioned in Isa. viii., it must be prior to the reign of King Hezekiah, from which the pool dates on the other side of Jerusalem. By means of a shaft through the mountain down to this aqueduct, the temple was provided with water and in case of siege a supply was ensured on Mount Moriah, even if the city were attacked by an hostile force*. Is it not, perhaps, joy at the construction of this tunnel, which finds utterance in verse 4—a river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God, even the tabernacles of the Most High? Siloam becomes a symbol of God's presence in the city, and of his help in the hour of need (5) should the city be besieged. When Isaiah, before the time of King Hezekiah, introduces Shiloah as a symbol of the kingdom of God, in contradistinction to the "waters of the river" as an image of the power of the world, he intends, thereby, to remind his readers of Psalm xli., whence he had taken his figure.

1. As the waters raged, the mountains shook and the earth was transformed by the earthquake (2, 3); so did the nations rage, so were the kingdoms moved, and the earth melted when God uttered his voice (6). But the city of God was not moved (5), for in the midst of her, in the shape of a river, the streams whereof rejoice the city of God and the sanctuary, has He given a guarantee of help after the tribulation of the long nights, at the dawn of morning. Therefore God's people, who were not afraid at the time of the earthquake (2) may shout triumphantly, "Jehovah Sabaoth, the Lord of Hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge."

The testimony to be witnessed from the double event—Jehovah's great work (Ps. lxi. 5) and the devastation He caused upon earth—is that warfare should cease unto the ends of the earth, even as is now illustrated in the kingdom of David when God did away with the weapons of the enemy (Ps. lxxvi. 3). God is exalted thereby among the nations and in the earth; and the refrain with its repeated Selah can therefore again be raised.

PSALM XLVIII.

A Song, a Psalm of the sons of Korah.

1. Great is Jehovah and highly to be praised,
In the city of our God, his holy mountain.
2. Beautiful in elevation, the joy of the whole earth,
Is mount Zion, the sides of the North,
The city of the great King.
3. God in her palaces
Has made Himself known as a high tower.

4. For lo, the kings assembled themselves,
They marched onwards together,
5. They—they saw, then were they amazed;
Terror-struck, they hasted away;
6. Trembling took hold of them there,
Pain as of a woman in travail;
7. Through an east wind, that breaks ships of Tarshish.

8. According as we have heard,
So we have seen,
In the city of Jehovah Sabaoth,
In the city of our God,
God will establish her for ever.
9. We think, O God, of thy loving kindness
In the midst of thy temple.

[Selah.]

* Compare "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," by Professor Sayce. (Religious Tract Society.)

† God is thus designated here, as in Psalm lxxvi. 6, where the words "God's rebuke" remind us of the "terror of God," which was upon the cities, so that they did not pursue Jacob (Gen. xxxv. 5).

4.

10. According to thy name, O God,
So is thy praise
Unto the ends of the earth;
Thy right hand is full of righteousness.
11. Let Mount Zion rejoice,
Let the daughters of Judah exult
Because of thy judgments.

5.

12. Walk about Zion, and go round about her,
Reckon her towers,
13. Mark ye well her bulwarks,
Consider her palaces,
That ye may tell it to the generation following,
14. That such is God, our God,
He will be our guide over death.

It must, of course, be admitted that the vivid description of the kings, of whom we are told that they hastened across the frontier (5), and that the panic which occasioned their defeat was, in the first place, caused by a storm of east wind (5-9), quite coincides with the flight and destruction of the Philistine kings. The incident mentioned in the reign of Jehoshaphat, to which this description has been applied, did not consist in flight, but in general slaughter, and was not occasioned by a storm of east wind, but by an ambuscade.

(To be concluded.)

Dublin Medical Mission.

THE attendance at the Gospel service before the dispensary has greatly increased, and there seems more willingness to hear about the Saviour. The men's evening dispensary shows this particularly, and there have been several most interesting cases attending. One lad (who is dying) returned after some months' absence, and told one of the doctors how he has rested his weary soul on the words, "He that believeth hath everlasting life," which he had heard there months before. We have recently engaged a second nurse for attending our patients in their homes who are too ill to be at the dispensary.

Thus our expenses grow daily, and our hon. treasurer tells me he has £1 in the bank and heavy bills needing payment. I shall gladly send reports to any friends who may wish for further particulars.

(Mrs.) E. EDITH FIGGIS, Hon. Sec.
6, Simmons-court-villas, Donnybrook, Dublin.

"Waiting."

In a beautiful churchyard in the Isle of Wight one of the graves is marked by a very plain stone with, underneath the sleeper's name, the single word—"Waiting."

"WAITING" till th' archangel's trumpet
Shall resound from shore to shore,
And the blessed dead in Jesus
Rise to life for evermore.

"Waiting" till the hour appointed,
None can tell how very near,
When with glorious shout of triumph
Our Redeemer shall appear.

"Waiting" till He calls his ransom'd
To his Father's house on high,
Foes all vanquish'd, death for ever
Swallow'd up in victory.

"Waiting" face to face to see Him,
Moment of supreme delight!
Through eternity to praise Him,
And to serve Him day and night.

"Waiting" friends' most glad reunion
In the home of perfect love:
No more pangs of separation,
No more parting tears above.

"Waiting" for a very little,
Only "waiting," sweet to say,
"Waiting" till the morning breaketh,
And the shadows flee away.

CLARA ST. CLAIR.

A Worker Needed.—Mrs. Newton, of the American Presbyterian Mission, Ferozepore, India, writes pleading for the help of a nurse to work in the mission hospital at that station. She cannot offer a salary; she can only make known the need. Information may be had from Miss Butler, 49, Highbury Park, N.

MAY MEETINGS.

China Inland Mission.

It seems fitting that the annual assemblies of this Mission should always be held when the heat and rush of the spring meetings are past, and in a quiet centre like Mildmay. There is an accustomed air of reserve and sobriety about the proceedings that comports well with seclusion even from the "May Meeting" world. The anniversary of last week (which was the thirtieth of the Mission) was divided into afternoon and evening meetings, as usual. The presence of Mr. Hudson Taylor always constitutes a special attraction on these occasions, but that was denied this year. With Mrs. Taylor he is on the way home, but the calls of the work in China did not enable him to be in London in time.

Notwithstanding his recent weak state of health, Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS has been a very faithful attendee at the May Meetings of this year. He presided in the afternoon at Mildmay, and spoke with all his usual warmth and appreciation. One cannot fail to observe that his physical vigour is abating, though in heart, doubtless, he is still a worthy representative of the Y.M.C.A. He specially commended the China Inland Mission, because of its supra-sectarian constitution. It welcomes earnest and capable workers from all the churches, and leaves each to follow the bent of his own convictions as to church government.

An interesting letter from Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR, giving a bird's-eye view of the past year's work, was read by the secretary, Mr. SLOAN. It has been (he wrote) in many respects the most remarkable year they had ever experienced—a year of great trials and of abounding mercies. Reference was made to the war between China and Japan, and the opportunities which that unhappy struggle gave for ministering to the wounded Chinese soldiers—a service which the Government have not been slow to acknowledge in a practical way. The work of the Chefoo hospitals generally has been that of increased and marked blessing to the bodies and souls of the people. As to the subsequent trials and persecutions which have been the lot of many in China, they have strikingly proved the steadfastness of the native Christians in time of adversity.

In a brief secretarial statement, Mr. Sloan dealt mainly with the statistics of the year. Ninety-seven new workers went out in 1895. Nine workers in the field and two at home had died during that period. It was stated that, owing to the rise in the price of Chinese money, the expense of sustaining the work will be increased from 20 to 25 per cent. The steady growth in the finances of the Mission, through its three decades, has been remarkable. Mr. Sloan pointed out that the total income of the first ten years, from 1866-1875, was some £40,000; that of the second ten years was £119,000; and that of the third £309,000. Last year's income was £42,925 (including £9150 from America, Australia, and China); this shows a total increase over the previous year of £9767. These figures seemed to the chairman so eloquent of growing favour with God and man that he called for the singing of the Doxology when the secretary sat down; the assembly joined with heart and voice in this ascription of praise and thanks to the Fount and Giver of all good.

Five short speeches followed—four of them by workers from the great China field. Rev. J. J. COULTHARD, who has worked for nine years in the province of Honan, took as the burden of his theme the native Christian—what he has to endure because of his confessed discipleship of Christ, and the readiness with which he counts it all joy to suffer loss for the sake of his Master. Very much the same strain was taken up by Mr. LAWSON, a Scotchman of pronounced accent, from the province of Shansi. He spoke feelingly of the small beginnings there, and of the growth of the work as well as of the zeal, fidelity, and liberality of the converts. Then Miss HANBURY gave an admirable little address, telling in turn some of her experiences, first at Pao-ning, Szechuen; next in the training home at Yang-Chau; and lastly at the schools in Chefoo. Her exposition of the great advantages that accrue to the young lady missionary by a stay in the training home must have been deeply interesting to all home friends who have relatives in the field. It was also most encouraging to hear, with respect to the school work at Chefoo, that a spirit of consecration to the work of the missionary is being evidently manifested among the young people being educated there.

As a representative of the Australian auxiliary Rev. ALFRED BIND was cordially received, and his account of the inception and spread of the missionary interest in that distant colony gave cause for much thankfulness. It was striking to hear him report so many conversions as taking place in Australia in connection with missionary meetings and farewells. He told of one young man of much promise who conducted a series of services before going to the front in China. At these meetings over 100 converts were enrolled, and these young Christians are now furnishing the support in China of their spiritual father.

Last of all came Mr. CHARLES T. STUDD, who unfolded some of the realities and actualities of Chinese life, and of work on behalf of the Chinese. He said the history of the C.I.M. in the province of Shansi is of itself a sufficient confutation of those who say that missions are a failure. Christian missionaries, Mr. Studd thinks, ought to be like quacks—believing in one specific remedy for all sorts of ills. Christ has given his disciples one remedy and only one, and that is Himself. Then the speaker went on to tell something of what the Chinese are saved from, when they become Christians. It was a black recital, the chief items in the indictment being the crime of baby-girl murder, well-nigh universal among Chinese women, the horrors and mutilations of foot-binding, the slavery of opium, etc. Addressing his fellow Christians, Mr. Studd called for such an intense and unqualified belief in and devotion to the claims of Jesus Christ as would make them disregard such matters as climate, and personal considerations of every sort, in their desire to carry the saving Gospel to the millions of perishing Chinese.

The meeting in the evening was addressed by other workers from China and by Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

Christian Instruction Society.

THE annual meeting was held at Markham-square Church, Chelsea, on Wednesday evening, 20th. Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who occupied the chair, spoke words of encouragement to the deaconesses, and pleaded for more liberal support to a work which God had so richly blessed and which was capable of such development.

Rev. R. MACKAY, secretary, read an abstract of the report, showing considerable progress during the past year. The number of deaconesses employed had been increased from seventeen to twenty-seven, all working with churches or mission halls. A large number of tent and open-air services had been held, and many weeks of special evangelistic missions had been conducted in connection with churches in London and elsewhere. Much good had resulted from the labours of the deaconesses and the large staff of voluntary workers of the Society.

Mr. Thomas Dence, treasurer, read the financial statement, showing a considerable increase in the funds during the past year, although utterly inadequate to the needs of the Society. Hearty addresses were given in commendation of the objects of the Society by a number of friends.

Friends' Temperance Union.

THE large hall of Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, was crowded on Wednesday evening last week, the occasion being the annual meeting of the Friends' Temperance Union. Mr. Frederick Sessions presided, and gave a short history of the Union and its work. Many thousands of tracts and books had been distributed, and meetings held wherever possible during the past year. He considered they had made a decided advance with their educational methods. Mr. Sessions urged his hearers to become workers in the cause of temperance.

Lady Henry Somerset made an eloquent speech, in which she praised the "Friends" for their zeal and energy on behalf of justice and humanity. The temperance question, she said, is the great question of the day; hundreds of thousands of children in the slums of cities were affected by the curse of intemperance on the part of parents, and we must go on agitating, educating, and organising on behalf of temperance, and against every power that tends to the detriment of humanity and the cause of Christ.

Miss F. E. Willard made a touching appeal on behalf of total abstinence, and spoke warmly of the noble efforts put forth by "The Friends" in America on behalf of Christianity and humanity.

Addresses were also given by Mr. J. H. BARLOW and Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P.

The Rescue Society.

A most interesting meeting was held at the Red House, Buckhurst Hill, on Friday, the occasion being the annual gathering of the former and present inmates of the three preventive training Homes of the Society in the immediate neighbourhood. Tea was provided in the garden, a large number of friends assembling to show their interest in the work. In the laundry was exhibited specimens of the industrial work of the Homes, which gave great satisfaction. The large dormitory was cleared and decorated for the evening meeting, over which Dr. Barnardo, who resides near by, presided.

A letter from Mr. Algernon Coote, a member of the committee, was read, expressing regret at being unable to be present, and enclosing a cheque for £10 for the Society in commemoration of the secretary's jubilee, which was celebrated that day. This fact, which was only partially known previous to the meeting, added much to the interest. Mr. Stuart Thorpe, in acknowledging the kind expressions and good wishes, said he had that morning been presented by the matrons of the Homes with a handsome fitted travelling bag, as a token of their regard and Christian love.

The bright happy faces and healthy appearance of the girls was very noticeable, and the latter did not surprise us as we enjoyed the life-giving atmosphere and beautiful surroundings of the Homes.

The prizes awarded for length of service and marriage Bibles were presented by the chairman, who spoke wise and weighty words. He was followed by the Rev. N. R. Fitzpatrick, vicar of All Saints', Woodford, who has for years taken a deep and heart interest in the work. Mrs. Nind gave a telling address, and while urging her young hearers to trust Christ as their Saviour, said that she had for sixty-five years been a happy, trustful Christian. A few practical words from Mr. William George brought this happy gathering to a close. The address of the Society is 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

The Monthly Tract Society.

THE fifty-eighth annual meeting was held at the Victoria Hall, Ealing, a few days ago, Mr. Henry Robson presiding. A statement on the progress of the work, read by the secretary, showed that twenty-four new tracts had been issued with the monthly series, twelve for adults and twelve for children, and, moreover, three special tracts, entitled, "Spiritism," "A Plea for True Thought in Religion," and "A Reply to the Pope's Letter." Included in the report were many testimonies as to the blessing attending the distribution of tracts.

The Chairman commended the Society to the liberal support of Christian people. Rev. Evan Thomas spoke of the Protestant character of the work and its unsectarian platform. Rev. J. Summerhayes, in some hearty words, said that not only among Church people and Roman Catholics, but among other denominations, there was too great a disposition to think that the work was all done by the ministers and the preachers. He could tell of mischief resulting from man-worship instead of Christ-worship—of people going to hear the preacher rather than to hear the simple message of Christ's salvation. It was this message that the Society conveyed, and he, therefore, commended its work very heartily.

Rev. W. Leonard Gibbs, referring to the mission of the Society among the well-to-do, said that for the most part tract distributors went to the poor, as if their souls were of greater value than the souls of the rich. He was glad that the Society attended to a class of work which would otherwise be sadly neglected. Mr. G. D. Freeman also spoke briefly.

Arbitration Alliance.

THE annual meeting of the association was held on Thursday afternoon at Sion College. Lord KENNARD presided, and spoke of the duty of Christians to strive for universal peace.

Dr. W. EVANS DARBY spoke cheerfully of the progress that had been made during the past two years. He trusted that the Alliance would do most useful work in bringing about the establishment of a permanent court of arbitration between Great Britain and America, and also be a factor in promoting and preserving peace in Europe.

Canon BARKER moved a resolution urging the British Government to speedily arrange for the proposed convention with the United States. This was seconded by Mr. J. SCOTT LINGETT and passed unanimously, as was also a resolution commending the work of the society.

British Women and Temperance.

THIS week there is a great rally in London of women who are fighting the evils of the liquor curse under the banner of the B.W.T.A. Last year's meetings were to a great extent international and world-wide, but the present meetings are confined to the progress of the warfare in these islands. The anniversary may be said to have begun on Saturday, when the Homes for Inebriate Women at Duxhurst were formally dedicated to their benevolent and beneficent purpose. On Sunday afternoon a crowded service was held in Union Chapel, Islington, when an earnest and rousing address was given by Miss Weston.

Six hours in the middle of Monday were given to prayer and exhortation at a concourse in the Westminster Town Hall. There was a good gathering of ladies, and a spirit of earnest prayer was poured out. Short addresses were given at intervals by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Miss Weston, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Miss Douglas Dale.

The great public meeting of the series was that held on Monday evening in the splendid Queen's Hall. Its ample resources were well taxed to hold the distinguished and representative company that came together. Lady Henry Somerset, the president, did not appear at once, and Miss Weston temporarily took her place. After song, and prayer by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, a short opening address was given by Miss Weston. She imparted to the meeting the pleasing fact that her sailor lads of the Navy had contributed £250 to erect a cottage at the Duxhurst Inebriate Home. Progression, she said, is the watchword, and development a necessity. The B.W.T.A. have a holy horror of ruts.

Miss WILLARD began her address by affirming that in the recent flurry between England and America, no American woman ever wrote or spoke in public or private in favour of war with England. Then she launched into an eloquent defence of the temperance reform. This sentence, at any rate, was "golden": "We believe the golden rule alone can bring the golden age." She claimed science, with its latest discoveries, as the handmaid of religion in advancing the cause of humanity. She laid emphasis on the cementing power of the temperance movement in welding together in a common cause those who are separated by race and religion. The deep consideration for others less fortunate, that is the motive power of the temperance movement, was illustrated by a touching little story of an American bootblack, who would not take an extra fee from one with a club foot, because, said he, "I could not make money out of your hard luck." Speaking of the moving forward of women in all good causes, Miss Willard said the saloon-keepers of America declare that the only thing they fear is the "W.C.T.U.," because of the hidden power that lies behind the Christian woman of to-day.

CANON WILBERFORCE, who spoke next, was eloquent fervid, witty, and convincing. He said God was blessing this great movement. It had been said that there are four real powers in the world—the cartridge-box, the ballot-box, the jury-box, and the band-box—and the greatest of these is the band-box. He did not think that referred to those variegated and colossal edifices which are seen on ladies' heads, but rather the courage, power of determination, sympathy, and love, which are concentrated in the tiny heads sometimes found underneath these marvellous erections. The Canon did not believe that this was in any exclusive sense the age of woman. They had always regulated the diplomacy of the world. He quoted the saying of the wise woman of Tekoa which has become proverbial, "Yet doth he devise means whereby his banished be not expelled from him." The crowning evil by which men to-day are banished from God is the evil of intemperance. God bless the women who are bringing the banished ones home again.

"If it were not for reform there would be revolution," was the pregnant sentence that first dropped from the eloquent lips of Lady HENRY SOMERSET, as she rose, amid loud applause, to give her address. Every age has had its unpopular reform, which ever triumphs in the end. Every reformer must be a prophet, looking on beyond all doubts and discouragements to the time when right must win. The great heart that knows the wants of humanity can never be deaf to its needs. No lesson of the past is so encouraging as this, that every great cause has had its battles to fight, its difficulties to overcome. Temperance reformers must not begin even to spell the word "discouragement," much less the B.W.T.A. We have the truest interests of the home at heart; we look beyond our own narrow comforts to the great collective home of the nation. Lady Henry Somerset said that while they belonged to no political party, it was but right to say that through the results of the late general election the triumph of the temperance cause had been deferred. We have to face in England now the danger that comes from a great monied monopoly massed for political power. If the public-house in England, as the saloon in America, becomes the centre of political power, it will be the greatest menace to the liberties of the people. There was next a pathetic reference to the new branch of work, the Duxhurst Homes, for the rescue and reclamation of those sisters who have "wandered away on the bleak, wild wilderness of sin." The provision made at Duxhurst for the little children from poor, drunk, cursed homes was most touchingly described and advocated. "Daddy did that when he was drunk," was the artless remark of a little one, in pointing to a blue bruise on her body. Take heart and hope, said her ladyship, in closing. The memories of Elizabeth Fry, of William Wilberforce, of Earl Shaftesbury, of William Lloyd Garrison, and what they accomplished for their generation, spur us on to patient and persistent toil, sure that our cause will triumph. The peroration, describing the ultimate acknowledgment of the great truth that "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," was very fine indeed.

After some exquisitely rendered music on cornets by the Sisters Park, of New York, a delightfully simple and heartfelt address was given by COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN. She told in her broken but expressive English a little bit of the story of her life as a Christian temperance reformer among the fishermen of the Baltic. It was enough to stir the most sluggish heart, to hear what she had been able to do in face of the most fearful odds. She made a naive and touching plea for similar work in Germany, "though she has been a little bit nasty to England." The Countess made the remarkable statement, without any suspicion of egotism, that she had not seen Windsor or Hyde Park, but she knew the London slums perhaps better than most of those present. She was now going away from our shores "a lonely pilgrim in a little cabin on the sea," and she asked that her English sisters would do something for her country of Germany. As the president remarked, when the Countess sat down, it was an object lesson that they would not soon forget.

After a song by Master Meehan, "the eminent boy soprano of New York," some cogent and hopeful remarks followed from Canon BARKER, and the great gathering was brought to a close.

The Council meetings of the B.W.T.A. were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in Westminster Chapel, and on Friday the delegates visited the Duxhurst Homes. Some notes of these proceedings will be given in our next issue.

The Christian Community.

THIS Society held their 124th annual meeting at Exeter (Lower) Hall on Monday. Sir George Williams presided, and gave a brief summary of the work accomplished during the past twelve months. The Community is made up of 450 voluntary workers of both sexes, who give their spare time to the work of visiting and ministering to the inmates of workhouses, infirmaries, casual wards, lodging-houses, etc. Eight mission halls are supported by the members, in which homeless men are received for the all-night shelters; breakfasts, teas, and suppers given to destitute men, women, and children; also bread and other relief tickets distributed.

The Society maintains a home for working girls, where they are lodged and trained for domestic service; a school, where sewing, cooking, and other useful branches are taught. Poor widows are employed in making garments. Twenty-one open-air stations are sustained, and thousands of tracts, booklets, and periodicals distributed.

Children are the especial care of the Community; they are religiously instructed, fed, etc., and in summer time the weakly ones are sent to the Society's convalescent home at High Beach, Essex.

Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, jun., made a strong speech, praising the work of the Community. Rev. R. O. JOHNS gave an interesting account of his experience in mission work in lodging-houses in the Mint district. Rev. John Bond, Dr. John Gritton, and Mr. W. H. Seagram also advocated the claims of the Society.

London Aged Christian Society.

ON Friday afternoon the supporters of this society assembled in Lower Exeter Hall. Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, drew attention to the Christ-like character of the work. To cheer and brighten the lives of Christ's own in their declining years is to follow the blessed example of Jesus. He wished some of the rich merchants of London could be brought to the meeting and see the worthy pensioners; then he believed they would have all necessary funds to carry on and extend the work.

The report presented by Colonel HAMILTON NORTHCOLE showed that there are 170 pensioners on the Society's books, the average age being seventy-seven. Some touching letters from pensioners were read, and showed that the aid given to worthy old men and women proved a real blessing. A short address was given to the pensioners by Rev. W. H. Stone, and speeches on behalf of the Society were given by several friends.

The Month & its Lessons.—6.

JUNE—The Growth Month.

IN this month the world is crowned with all kinds of life; and rich and varied are the objects of interest with which the face of the earth is renewed. The herbs, the grass, the trees, and the flowers are full of freshness, vigour, and beauty. A faint reminder of Heaven's eternal summer. Seven things are required for growth.

SEVEN CONDITIONS OF GROWTH, NATURAL AND SPIRITUAL.

1. Life, Power, or Christ within us (Gal. ii. 10).
2. Roots, Nourishment, or Christ beneath us (Prov. xii. 3; Deut. xxxiii. 27).
3. Sap, Vitality, or Christ through us (John xv. 3; ii. 4).
4. Sunshine, Warmth, or Christ over us (Ps. lxxiv. 4).
5. Rain, Refreshing, or Christ upon us (Ps. lxxii. 6).
6. Fresh-air, Breath, or Christ inspiring us (Job xxxiii. 4).
7. Leaves, Vigour, or Christ invigorating us (Ps. cl. 6).

June is Nature rejoicing in the season of first-fruits; the Noontide of the year; Emblem of Manhood; the Half-way House on our annual journey; the Month of Flowers and Fruits. It is a season of Life, Activity, and Service; a Picture of Spiritual Opportunities and Work.

Christ revealed in us is Life (Gal. i. 16).

Christ living in us is Power (Gal. ii. 20).

God glorified in us, Fruit (Gal. i. 24).

THE CHRISTIAN IS A TREE OF LIFE AND FRUIT.

A tree that is planted; Psa. i. 3; Isa. lxi. 3. With roots in the waters; Jer. xvii. 8. Branches in the vine; John xv. 1. With fullness of sap; Psa. civ. 16. Leaves which never wither; Psa. i. 3. Blossoms abundant; Psa. lxxv. 2. And fruit in his season (Psa. i. 3), full of life and grace and fruit.

A gentleman was preaching in the open-air, his subject was "growth in grace." At the close of the meeting a man approached him, and said, "Our minister has been preaching some sermons on that subject, and I have been trying to grow in grace for a long time; but I find I do not succeed very well." The preacher, pointing to a tree, said, "Do you see that tree?" "Yes," was the reply. "Well, it had to be planted before it could grow. In like manner you must be rooted and grounded in Christ before you can grow." The man understood the meaning, and went away to find Christ, and soon he was saved, and rooted in Christ, and brought forth fruit to his praise. C. EDWARDS.

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

Haifa, Mount Carmel, Palestine.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, writes:—"You are aware that I have been laid aside for a prolonged period by severe illness. It has pleased the Lord to restore me to health, but the doctor's advice was that I should not remain in Jerusalem. Haifa is considered a very healthy place. There are many Jews resident here, and no one to labour amongst them. In addition to Jews, there are a few Protestants, many Lutherans, and the remainder are Romanists. I have need of the prayers of the Lord's children for guidance as to the best method of conducting the work, that the Lord may give to my wife and myself grace and wisdom, so that our coming to this place may become a blessing to the people."

THE EVANGELIST.

The Duty of Repentance.*

THE Gospel puts the utterance of God's loving desire for your salvation in the strongest form in which the desire can be expressed, when it brings you a command (Acts xvii. 30) from God to take Christ and eternal life in Him. It is an act of disobedience, therefore, not to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is open defiance of the authority of God if you trifle with his imperative order to you—to take salvation, to hold out no longer against his grace, to lay down the weapons of your rebellion, and to submit to be saved by free grace through the redemption of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, therefore, is something more than an offered means to salvation. That it is, but more than that; Paul and Silas urged it on the jailor as his duty (Acts xvi. 29-33). They knew very well indeed that, naturally, the jailor's heart was so averse from God that he never would of himself desire to come to Christ that he might have life. They never could fancy that a carnal mind, which is enmity against God, will be subject to the law of God, or, indeed, ever can be (Rom. viii. 7). But, then, Paul and Silas knew just as well that the sinner's natural inability to come to Christ is the sinner's own fault, that his resistance to the Gospel is a resistance entirely with his will, and not against it.

A man's having no heart to believe in Christ, therefore, never can make it less his duty to obey God's command to take Christ and trust Him. Instead of excusing you from the obligation to believe, your want of heart to believe only makes your unbelief and disobedience all the more blameworthy. We dare not, therefore, make the Gospel less imperative only because you are by nature hopelessly averse from it. To even the most hardened of rebels against God—as did Paul and Silas—we must address the command to believe on our Lord Jesus Christ.

We solemnly warn you that if you will not obey it you have only yourselves to blame! And you know it. Conscience tells you that if you are still in an unconverted, unsaved state, it is just because you choose to be so; and that, for that act of your choice, as for every other, you must answer to God at the great day of judgment! But do not, I beseech you, longer rest in a choice so fatal! Let the imperativeness of the duty of repentance and faith, as it is expressed in the Gospel call, constrain you to receive Jesus as your Saviour now! Let all hesitation about instantly coming to Christ be checked by a sense of the sin of not coming; the obligation to do so is so strongly bound upon you by this command, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ."

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

Jesus said:—He that heareth my Word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath Everlasting Life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto Life.

God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved.

He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus.

Come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live.

John v. 24; John iii. 17, 18; Rom. viii. 1; Isa. lv. 3.

Armenian Relief.—I grieve to say that our funds are falling off, and it is difficult to see how Miss Kimball will succeed in supporting the thousands of starving people who look to her for help until better times come, or until we can assist them to emigrate. We can only beg for more help from those who have so nobly stood by us hitherto.—Faithfully yours, Mrs. MARY HICKSON, Hon. Sec. Women's Armenian Relief Fund.

* Extracted from a sermon on Acts xvi. 29-33 in WORDS THAT TAKE HOLD: Being Divine Calls to Repentance, and to the Fruits Meet for it. By Robert H. Muir, minister emeritus of the parish of Dalmeny, (Edinburgh: Andrew Stevenson & Co.)

Mr. Fegan's Homes.

AN INTERESTING COMMEMORATION.

THE General Council of these Homes have written a very sympathetic and suggestive letter, in which they urge the raising of a Twenty-five Years' Commemoration Fund of £10,000 to celebrate Mr. Fegan's completion of a quarter of a century of his devoted labours amongst our waifs and strays—"a thank-offering to God for the growth and prosperity of the work, an expression of congratulation to its founder, and an encouragement to him to Go Forward."

At recent meetings the Council have consulted with Mr. Fegan, and, after due consideration, have adopted a scheme drawn up by him to increase the number of boys under their care from 270 to 500, by the enlargement of the existing Homes, and the addition of a Farm Training Home and two Working Boys' Homes. A Memorandum, penned by Mr. Fegan, sets forth very lucidly how the proposed extension and re-adjustment will put the work on "a more permanent, economical, and convenient basis."

It is proposed to divide the Fund as follows:—Farm Training Home, £3500; Working Boys' Homes, £1500; Boys' Orphan Home, £1500; Little Wanderers' Home, £1500; and General Fund, £2000, to extend the industrial departments, and provide more machinery at Southwark, etc. The secretary, Mr. F. D. Hollaway, who has rendered such faithful service the last twelve years, will relieve Mr. Fegan by dealing as far as possible with general correspondence, and by undertaking the charge of office and trade details, so that Mr. Fegan's strength may not be overtaxed by this extension.

The Council appeal to all interested in Christian rescue work to "heartily join in making this Twenty-five Years' Commemoration Fund a gratifying token to our friend of our affectionate regard for him, and our appreciation of the self-denying labours to which he has given his life." Gifts marked "Twenty-five Years' Commemoration Fund" may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. D. C. Apperly, The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, London, S.E.

Country Work.

It will doubtless be known to many of our readers that Miss Robinson, late of the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, felt compelled, through increasing infirmity and the need of perfect stillness, to resign her connection with soldier work, and to seclude herself in the depths of the New Forest, nearly three years ago. Here, however, a quiet but deeply interesting work for the Master has been carried on. Miss Robinson's "Hut" includes a large room in which the "foresters" gather from their widely scattered cottages, many from long distances, for prayer, praise, and the study of God's Word every Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening, winter and summer alike. Here, too, on alternate Saturday afternoons come the children, big and little, in such numbers and from such distances as would surprise town dwellers.

A former co-worker with Miss Robinson at Portsmouth, Miss Walker, shares her seclusion, and devotes herself to visiting the scattered homes so far as strength permits. Tokens of God's blessing have not been lacking, and recently a visit from Mr. Monro Collings has brought great joy to "The Hut." For three weeks he held nightly meetings, and two each Sunday. Notwithstanding the indifference and stolidity painfully felt during the first few days, God's power was manifested among the people, and soon "the Word preached" had blessed results. Several unsaved ones were brought to the Saviour, and many of God's children were revived or delivered from bondage.

Keswick Convention this year will be held from July 27 to August 1. The invitation, signed by Mr. Robert Wilson, sets forth the object as a seeking of "that increased likeness to our One Lord, and the fulness of the Holy Spirit, which will enable us in life to glorify our Father and our God, or fit us for his presence in our better home." After some words on the standing, duty, and privilege of believers, Mr. Wilson concludes: "Brethren, pray for us, for speakers, leaders of meetings, missionaries now with us, and for a special blessing on our beloved Keswick missionaries." There will be preliminary meetings as usual on Saturday and Sunday, July 25 and 26. Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, who acts as hon. sec., will give information respecting lodgings and hotel accommodation.

London Friends' Meeting.

FOR more than 200 years the Friends have met without a break, and probably a century has passed away since any annual meeting has been held in which life and power have been so manifest as in this year's.

At the meeting on "Ministry and Oversight" which gathered on the 18th ultimo, Harriet Green was liberated to travel among the American yearly meetings in Gospel service, and prayer was invoked on her behalf when thus representing the Church at home in America; and Dr. Richard Henry Thomas and wife were also liberated for service in Scandinavia ere they return to America in October. Having spent some time before in those northern countries, they felt a call to revisit them before leaving Europe.

A committee of nearly sixty Friends was set apart to visit the various monthly and quarterly meetings on ministry and oversight in the country, with the hope of evoking a real revival among them, and thus benefiting and blessing the general body of Friends, and through these multitudes outside. Great harmony prevailed at this large gathering of thoughtful and earnest Christian people.

The yearly meeting assembled on the 20th, with about the usual numbers of Friends. Several American Friends were present, and had a cordial welcome. Friends from India, Madagascar, Mount Lebanon, Philippopolis in Bulgaria, and China were also present; and Ireland was well represented. Information was presented from the wide mission fields in which Friends were at work. After which the "state of the Society" was considered. This is generally a time of interest, but this year it was specially so. The Manchester Conference held last autumn indicated the "Divine discontent" felt by so many Friends at the slow progress of their cause and work amid the surging seas of growing sacerdotalism and scepticism; and the drifting of some of their own educated young people. Able speakers dealt with the great theme, and one practical outcome was the recommendation to congregations to take into solemn consideration their own and their neighbours' needs periodically.

Ever since the rise of the Society women and men have stood side by side on terms of perfect equality in meetings for worship and in Christian effort for the promotion of human good—but from historic causes they have not been equal in church government. Women have been consulted, and joint meetings and conferences have considered burning questions as they have arisen, but the men's meeting has been the yearly meeting. It was hardly likely in these days of women's claims, which the Friends themselves have done so much to promote, that they would be satisfied with this state of things, and so last year a large joint committee was appointed to examine the question all round, and report this year.

A clear and able report was presented to a large joint conference on the 25th ult., and after calm and thoughtful deliberation, in which both men and women took part, perfect equality in church affairs—as in all others—was conceded and established, and thus London yearly meeting has taken front rank in the establishment of a great principle which may even more intensify the loyalty and devotedness of women Friends as they stand side by side with men in the great work of the Church in the world. It will take some time to arrange the application of the principle in all the affairs of the Society.

Never before have such large evening gatherings been held. The Foreign and Home Mission and temperance annual meeting were crowded, and the speaking was of a high order. Four able and devoted Friends, two men and two women, held meetings for the explanation and enforcement of Friends' message to the world. Crowded gatherings indicated the large response felt in many hearts, and not a little enthusiasm was enkindled by the able and telling addresses given.

A young lady minister under deep religious concern paid a visit to the men's meeting, and gave a most pathetic and telling address, appealing for whole-hearted dedication to Christ and unreserved obedience to his revealed will. The effect will, we doubt not, be permanent and blessed. That the coming year may be the best ever known is the ardent wish and hope of many Friends.

Willesden, N.W., June 1.

WM. HOBSON.

Rev. John McNeill.

MISSION AT CAMBUSLANG.

CAMBUSLANG is about five miles east of Glasgow, and is a popular residential place for the boilers in the city. The "Elders' Union" pleaded very hard with the committee who have charge of Mr. McNeill's arrangements to have a visit from the Evangelist. The week selected, from May 24 to 31, was not altogether the most suitable. It was immediately after the "Tam," when rents are paid and commercial men are busy, when servants change their situations and households are upturned. Then, in the very midst of the mission, "Flitting Day" appeared. In Scotland nearly all household removals take place on May 28. This made it difficult for many families to attend the meetings.

Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the attendance at all the services was very good. The meetings were held in Kirkhill Church (Rev. W. Houston's), being the largest in the parish, and on the Sundays the church was too small to hold all who desired to hear the preacher. For three days afternoon meetings were held in the Free Church, and these were well attended.

The outstanding feature of the mission was a service held last Sunday on the "Preaching Braes," famous for its association with George Whitefield. The weather was lovely, with a slight breeze blowing. A platform had been erected in the centre of the huge amphitheatre, and long before the advertised time (4 p.m.) crowds came from the surrounding towns and villages. The congregation numbered between 6000 and 7000, and embraced families from the villas, farmers, shepherds, miners, tramps, etc. The audience was most orderly, and for fully an hour Mr. McNeill discoursed with power and profit on the 23rd Psalm. The meeting on the "Braes" last Sunday will long be remembered by those who were present.

Among Cripples at "Rob Roy."

WHILE staying for a day or two at Ramsgate we visited the "Rob Roy" Holiday Home, belonging to the Ragged School Union, and found it filled with a party—twenty-five in number—of London crippled girls. These varied from five to fifteen years in age, and some were very sad and painful cases, although for the time they seemed to forget pain and weakness in the enjoyment of open fields, green grass, and lovely flowers. One, however, was in great sorrow. In her unwonted freedom she had broken her steel surgical boot, and was fearful what mother would say when she got home. Miss Scott, the nurse-matron in charge of the Home, seems to have the art of winning the children's confidence, and while seeking to make them happy and to build up their constitutions by good food, aims also at home-lessons in love and faith, to which many have been strangers aforetime. On Sunday afternoon we held a service with the children, and found them appreciative, attentive, and ready to respond. Some could not read at all, having never been able to go to school; others could read and write well. Some seemed in constant pain; others, though feeble and limited in locomotion, suffered little pain. Some had been crippled from birth; others had been injured by accident, and not seldom through drinking habits at home. We much enjoyed our visit to the "Rob Roy" Home, and wished that many others would do themselves a like pleasure. The result would be deepened interest in such work and increased liberality in helping the Ragged School Union. Information as to these Holiday Homes may be had from the secretary, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Northfield.—The season at Northfield will open this year on Sunday, June 14, when Mr. D. L. Moody will preach the commencement sermon to the graduating classes of the Mount Hermon and Northfield Seminary. On the Saturday following will begin a three days' conference of the delegates to the International Sunday-school Convention. The World's Student Conference will occur June 26-July 5. The Summer School for Bible Study will begin July 6 and continue till August 24; the Young Women's College Conference will take place July 10-20; and the General Conference of Christian Workers July 30-August 16. Between the conferences and after the formal close of the general conference, special Bible lectures will be given by prominent Bible students at least six times a week. Rev. F. B. Meyer will remain to speak throughout August.

[510]

Letters to the Editor.

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SABBATH.

DEAR SIR,—The protest of the Cornish fishermen against Sunday trading puts the Church to shame. The Western Daily Mercury says:—"It is too late in the day to talk of enforcing Sunday observance by Act of Parliament." Other papers sneer at "the religious scruples" which are only a commercial ruse. It seems such writers think a new thing is asked for in the suppression of Sunday labour by Act of Parliament. This is quite a mistake; we have the Acts, only they are not enforced.

Since the time of Alfred Sunday trading and labour have been illegal in England. A man who trades on the Sabbath or employs labour is breaking English law; yet so have our laws been set aside and continually disregarded that the Press speaks of them as non-existing. The strong arm of the police, and military, and naval forces are at the disposal of the law-breakers, and the real law-keepers are called "rioters."

Perhaps the action of the Newlyn lads who threw the mackerel into the sea, rather than have it sold in their market, was illegal; the lawyers must settle this. But it had not been lawfully got Newlyn is fighting the battle for others as well as itself. At Whitby and Staithes God is feared by the poor fishermen, and his day kept holy. One Sunday last summer it made me hot with indignation to count forty sail from Grimsby, etc., on their near fishing-ground, sweeping up their harvest. Northern fishermen are very poor, but one of them said quietly, "We can't do it; God's blessing is on no Sunday fishing."

The fisherman chairman said at the Newlyn mass meeting: "We are not fighting for anything of a lawless character; nor against the rest of the United Kingdom. We are asking for the same privileges as the Scotchmen, Irishmen, and St. Ives men, and should it be given out that the Cornish Sabbath-loving people had to give up the Sabbath, we will carry our principles to death if need be." The thousand men cheered him. The next speaker said they were fighting a Christian battle, and let them remember the Master who died for them, and not do anything to stain their profession.

The whole reason of Sabbath-breaking is greed. The Newlyn fishermen have agreed to molest no more Lowestoft boats. They are quiet and patient, waiting for the answer of the Home Secretary to their deputation. The Lowestoft boat owners' association demand £800 for their destroyed fish, and there are other expenses and losses to meet. These men are standing for us in the forefront of the battle? One wrote yesterday: "We feel so weak down here in this little corner, we do want help from Christ's people. God said, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and we want to do it, and have it kept in our own quiet place."—Faithfully yours,
ELIZ. GARNETT.

BABY-FARMING.

DEAR SIR,—As an Englishwoman and a mother, I am aghast at the revelation of the horrible crime of infanticide in this country, a professedly Christian land, and also at public apathy with regard to it. Surely justice demands that the lives of innocent children "farmed out" in this unnatural manner should have Governmental protection in so far that a thorough system of registration and inspection of the houses of "baby-farmers" should be instituted at once, and the whole matter thoroughly sifted, and not quashed, as it would seem to be, for doubtless there are "Mrs. Dyers" among the women with whom this wretched miscreant confesses to have had business transactions. Let us remember our Saviour's words, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones."—Yours faithfully,
E. M. SOUTHEY.

Forest Hill.

Worthing.—In connection with his services at Worthing Tabernacle, Pastor C. Douglas Crouch arranged a conference upon the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The meetings were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, and were conducted by Pastor F. E. Marsh, of Sunderland. They were well attended, and there were evidences of a deepening interest in this great theme. Much blessing is attending Pastor Crouch in this new sphere of labour.

Gathered Gold.

A DEAD fish will swim with the stream, whatever be its direction; but a living one will not only resist the stream, but, if it chooses, it can swim against it.—Cecil.

RIGHTEOUSNESS TWOFOLD.

There is a righteousness which is inherent, and a righteousness which is not inherent. The righteousness whereby we are sanctified is inherent, but not perfect; the righteousness whereby we are justified is perfect, but not inherent.—Hooker.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

When we read the Bible, we must always remember that, like the holy waters seen by Ezekiel (chap. xlvii.), it is, in some places, up to the ankles; in others, up to the knees; in others, up to the loins; and in some, a river too deep to be fathomed, and that cannot be passed over. There is light enough to guide the humble and teachable to heaven, and obscurity enough to confound the unbeliever.—Cecil.

SELF KNOWLEDGE.

Men carry their minds as for the most part they carry their watches, content to be ignorant of the constitution and action within, and attentive only to the little exterior circle of things, to which the passions, life indexes, are pointing. It is surprising to see how little self-knowledge a person, not watchfully observant of himself, may have gained in the whole course of an active or even inquisitive life.—John Foster.

THE FRUIT OF ADVERSITY.

It is not at all unusual for God to make a complete shipwreck of that vessel in which his people sail, although He fulfils his promise that not a hair of their head shall perish (Acts xxvii. 41-44). I should not wonder if He would cause two seas to meet around your barque, so that there should not be more than a few boards and broken pieces of the ship left to you; but oh! if you have faith in Christ, He will certainly bring you safe to shore.—Spurgeon.

HOPE IN GOD.

An able seaman once said to me, "In fierce storms we have but one resource: we keep the ship in a certain position; we fix her head to the wind, and so we weather the storm." This is a picture of the Christian; he adopts a certain position—"My hope and help are in God; He is faithful." "Weeping may endure for a night," but "I will bear the indignation of the Lord." The man who has learned this heavenly navigation shall weather the storms of time and eternity, for he trusts a faithful God, and he finds Him faithful.—Cecil.

SOME BLESSINGS OF PRAYER.

Prayer is a key to open the gate of heaven, and let grace out; and prayer is a lock to fasten our hearts, and keep grace in. Prayer is a messenger to fetch that holy seed out of the garner above; and prayer is the former and latter rain to make it grow beneath. Prayer woos it to come, and prayer wins it to tarry. Prayer is the invitation of that noble guest to our house, and prayer provides for the entertainment of it. Prayer procures it a being in us, and prayer supplies it with a blessing. Therefore pray continually, if thou wouldst grow continually.—Adams.

CHRISTIAN FRUIT-BEARING.

Generous olive, munificent to the lofty and the lowly—yielding thy grateful fruit to prince and peasant. One generation cometh, and another goeth; but still the olive berries fall. Thou bearest fruit with all thy might; never stinting thyself, and never robbing thy owner of his score of brimming jars. Even when thou standest on the most barren, desolate stone-bed, thou canst bring "oil out of the flinty rock," and pour down fatness on the very spot that is mocked with dreariness and desolation. Here is an emblem of Christian fruitfulness worthy of study in these cold, unproductive days.—Cuyler.

Rev. Francis Paynter has resigned the important living of Stoke-next-Guildford, which is in the gift of the Simeon Trustees. Mr. Paynter has been rector of the parish for many years, and has given large sums of money on behalf of philanthropic work in the neighbourhood. An institute is in the course of erection, and will be soon opened.

Civil Marriage in Germany.—In various parts of Germany an agitation is proceeding with the object of civil marriage being declared conditional and not obligatory, or, in other words, in favour of religious benediction taking the place of civil marriage. This change is specially advocated by Roman Catholics, but it also finds favour with some classes of Protestants. The Journal Religieux of Neuchâtel maintains that it would be better to confirm the conditions of civil society as they stand, and to take steps for the more free expression of religious life. On any other basis, it remarks, irritating conflicts or troublesome compromises are inevitable.

The Y.M.C.A.

DR. PARKER YOUNG presided on Thursday evening over an interesting meeting of the North-West Metropolitan District held at Stafford Rooms in the Edgware-road. Earnest consideration was given to the condition of the weaker Associations in the district, and steps were concerted for placing these on a firmer and more satisfactory footing.

The first annual meeting of the Camden Town Y.M.C.A. Foreign Missionary Union was held on May 12. Rev. H. W. Weatherhead gave an account of the Lord's work in Uganda, and made an appeal for definite prayer and personal service for the C.M.S. mission there. The great need is for men "full of the Holy Ghost" to go out to teach the native teachers.

The annual general meeting of Hamilton Association was held recently. The secretary (Mr. A. Prentice) reported that the average attendance at the quarterly meetings during the year was ninety. In connection with the international week of prayer for young men, nine local clergymen preached special sermons on that occasion. Three members of the Association had left during the year as missionaries in the foreign field. The total membership was 404, and included 303 young men and 101 young women.

The report of the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. for the past year shows that no fewer than 150 new members have joined, and although large numbers of young men have left for Western Australia, the rate of influx has kept up the total on the roll to 650. The South Australian Register says:—"We would commend this splendid institution to the favourable attention of young men for its many excellent agencies. During its seventeen years of existence it has done more to remove temptations out of the way of youth, and to induce them to adopt high standards of morality and of duty, than perhaps any other institution in the colony."

Returns obtained by the National Council of Y.M.C.A. work within the Metropolitan area show that there are now seventy-two Associations, as compared with seventy last year. The value of premises owned has risen from £87,470 to £92,020; the gross membership from 12,536 to 13,383; and the weekly attendances at meetings from 11,960 to 12,318. These figures were reported at a meeting of the Metropolitan Council held on Friday evening, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Consideration was given as to Associations having special difficulties in their work, and as to steps necessary for the further consolidation of effort in the several Metropolitan districts.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE annual summer sale of work for the benefit of the homes in connection with the Bournemouth branch was opened at Milton House on Thursday afternoon.

At West Newport, "Captain" Hatfield, of the Slum Sisters, on the 22nd ult., gave an account of work in the slums at Glasgow and Dundee. "Major" Wood also gave a short address on Salvation Army work.

The Bible and casket to be presented to H.R.H. Princess Maud, by the Y.W.C.A. and other women of the United Kingdom, will be on view at the Young Women's Christian Association, 316, Regent-street, London, W., from June 6 to 22.

The annual meeting of the secretaries and workers from all parts of Scotland was held on the 22nd ult., in the Gartshore Hall, Edinburgh. Miss Hay occupied the chair. The Countess of Moray, Lady Campbell, Lady Overtoun, and others were present. Miss Fordyce spoke very favourably of the work among the fisher-girls of Peterhead. Mrs. Armitstead submitted an interesting report of the home study department. Nearly £1000 is now raised annually for work in the foreign field.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

AFTER long waiting, and almost weary searching, a house has at last been found and bought for a seaside home. It is in Mount Pleasant-road, Hastings. It is paid for, and will very soon, we trust, be furnished.

One friend promises to furnish a room in the name of her two little daughters. A cot with all complete, including a text to hang over it, will be supplied by one of our dear old girls, and no doubt all else that is needed will soon be given. Of course, we must move on carefully, for the good old rule "no debt" applies to bricks and mortar, as well as to bread and milk. Will all who send gifts state distinctly whether they wish their contributions applied to the seaside expenses or to the fund for furnishing and starting the new seaside home? CHARLOTTE SHARMAN, 20, West Square, London, S.E.

Christian Endeavour.

CONVENTION AT BRISTOL.

THE business sessions of the sixth National Convention, at Bristol, were held on Monday and Tuesday last week. About 8000 delegates and friends attended the meetings, which were held at the Drill Hall and in Broadmead Chapel. The same subjects were dealt with in each place, although, of course, the speakers were different. Mr. F. F. Belsey, of Rochester, was selected president, and in the council of twenty-four the various denominations were represented by well-known friends of the Society, two of them ladies.

On the first day papers were read on the work of the Society, possible perils and great privileges, also addresses were given on purity of heart and Christian devotion. Other subjects were mental training, character building, and aggressive work. Among other speakers was Rev. E. Abbott, of Birmingham, who said there are now 42,000 societies, with weekly prayer meetings in connection with each society, and over two and a-half millions of adherents. Where there was such phenomenal success, there must be some wondrous power. They had perfect religious equality in the organisation, which was interdenominational, and sought to be the burying-ground of bigotry and narrowness. It sought to reduce the number of loiterers and increase the number of labourers, its essential being activity.

A large variety of topics came up for discussion on the second day, including missions, drinking, and gambling, also the general question of amusements. Speaking on "Advance, Endeavour!" Rev. W. Knight Chaplin reported that world-wide Endeavour continued to grow at the rate of about eight new societies and 500 new members every day, an average that had been steadily maintained for the last fifteen years. In the United Kingdom they had had a glorious year. Since the last Convention, less than a year ago, 948 societies had been registered, and the last on the list was No. 3593. There were now 101,784 active members, 44,333 associates, and 13,764 honorary members, a living, moving army, 159,881 strong. Their fellowship embraced nearly every Evangelical denomination. From 2646 societies 7278 associated members had become "actives" during the year. Of the 948 societies organised since the last Convention 160 were junior societies.

Other speakers were Mr. C. Waters, of London, and Rev. J. E. Roberts, of Manchester. The proceedings closed with a consecration service. Next year's convention will be held at Liverpool, and for the year following Glasgow has been selected.

An American suggests that if Endeavourers can ascertain the birthdays of inmates of neighbouring Homes, Asylums, and Hospitals, and of the aged members of their churches, it is a pleasing service remember these anniversaries with little gifts.

A Philadelphia Society assumes the responsibility for one meeting each week at the Florence Crittenton Mission. It has charge of a meeting on one other evening also, and has contributed a generous amount of supplies.

The Floating Society, on board the U.S. s.s. Charleston, noted a year ago the need of a Home for sailors at Nagasaki, Japan, and raised among themselves 600 dols. for the purpose, besides pledging 30 dols. a month for the support of a manager. With assistance from others a house has been secured, and has been dedicated as a C.E. Home.

The Prison Mission.

THE report states that the work of the Prison Mission to Discharged Female Prisoners' Aid, has, in the year 1895, been widely extended, becoming, in one sense, an international prison mission. The industrial operations need extension. Laundry work does not supply all the scope we want for the employment of those who come to us. Very many women are too sickly for it, and many more were never accustomed to this occupation. Women often come to the Mission of a superior class, and to compel them to do laundry work, would hinder instead of helping them to live better. To provide the materials for needlework for any number is expensive, and involves a sale of their industries that is in itself a grave consideration. We have a slipper trade, which, if it could be extended, would be a profitable way of employing many. In the year 1895, we gave 1195 days' employment in needlework to the women; and in the laundry 16,686 days' work. For religious and other instruction we had 1705 attendances of women. And at Sunday services and Bible-classes we had 7943 attendances.

The report gives many instances of cheering result. A strong plea is made for liberal help. Communications should be addressed, Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ON Whit Sunday, Rev. C. G. Lang, vicar of St. Mary the Virgin, preached his farewell sermon prior to his leaving for Portsea. Mr. Lang has only been two years at St. Mary's, but he has attracted a large congregation, and much regret is felt at losing him. Open-air services are being held in connection with several of the churches.

Rev. Edmund Carr gave an account of the work in Tinnevely to the University Missionary Union, and Rev. Frank Swainson of eight years' work among the Red Indians at a meeting in St. Aldate's Rectory Room.

Eight Wycliffe Hall men were ordained at the Trinity Ordination. Mr. Chavasse, the principal, exercises a great influence over the Hall, and in the University generally, by his sympathy, humility, and spirituality, which should give great cause for gratitude to all Evangelicals.

Special services were held at St. Peter-le-Bailey on Whit Sunday; the rector preached in the morning, and Rev. F. J. Chavasse in the evening. The latter showed that before Pentecost the Holy Spirit worked from without, since Pentecost He has worked from within, basing this on our Lord's words, "He dwelleth with you and shall be in you."

A sum of £10,000 has been bequeathed to Mansfield College, to found a chair in theology.

Scottish Notes.

MR. EUGENE STOCK, last week, delivered in Edinburgh, an address to a large company on "The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation."

Another party of children, numbering 112 girls and ten boys, has left Glasgow for Canada in connection with Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes. For every child sent there are three or four applications from Canadian homes.

A large and representative deputation recently waited on the Edinburgh City Council, asking that body to take steps to prevent the use of the public parks for golf and other games on the Lord's day. The Lord Provost promised that the matter should have careful consideration.

At the recent annual breakfast in Edinburgh of the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland earnest words of protest, mingled with sorrow, were uttered by Dr. Andrew Thomson, Dr. Bannerman of Perth, Rev. G. Wilson, and other friends, respecting the growing neglect of the sanctions and privileges of the Day of Rest.

Irish Notes.

REV. W. J. RUSSELL, of Bessbrook, has received an appointment from the South African Methodist Conference to Port Elizabeth, and intends to leave this country in a few weeks for his new sphere of labour. He has been eight years in the Irish Methodist ministry, and is highly esteemed by those who know him.

An article in the current Christian Irishman tells in very encouraging and hopeful terms of the growth of Christian Colportage throughout Ireland. "Of all the methods of aggressive evangelisation—and we use the word 'aggressive' in a wholly inoffensive sense—there is none that commends itself as more effective than this, and better adapted to the special circumstances of the country."

Meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life were held last week in Belfast, and were addressed by Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow; Rev. John Riddell, of Glasgow; Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Bournemouth; Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham; General Hatt-Noble, and others. Rev. Dr. Riddell, Henry Montgomery, and Chas. Inwood were the secretaries. The various services of the Convention were encouragingly attended.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland began its annual sittings in Belfast on Monday. There was a large attendance of ministers and elders from all parts of Ireland. Rev. H. M. Williamson, D.D., Belfast, was unanimously elected moderator, and proceeded to speak at some length, chiefly on the question of the evangelisation of Ireland. The Assembly's deliberations will probably extend over eight or ten days.

The annual meetings of the Irish Congregational Union were held at Sligo last week. Rev. J. Lyon, of Carrickfergus, was elected chairman, and Rev. Jas. Cregan, of Belfast, secretary. One evening was devoted to a temperance meeting. On Tuesday evening the chairman took for the subject of his annual address, "Some Principles of Independency," and on Thursday evening the annual sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Leach, of London. The local Methodist and Presbyterian ministers delivered fraternal addresses, and the public sessions of the Union were very largely attended.

Personalia.

Mr. George Holland wishes to thank our readers very sincerely for their prayers on his behalf, which God in his great mercy has answered. He is now out of danger, and on the fair way to recovery. He wishes to praise God for this.

Mr. Henry Morgan, of Oxford, has recovered from his long illness sufficiently to resume work with his Bible-carriage. Though enfeebled, he seems more in earnest than ever. Last week he held three open-air services in Princes Risborough, leaving here on Monday for High Wycombe.

Miss Gray, L.R.C.P. and S., senior Medical Missionary at the Duchess of Teck Hospital, Patna, has had an attack of cholera. Happily, she has recovered, but has been compelled to leave for Benares for rest and change. Meanwhile, the hospital is under the charge of Miss Ferguson, L.R.C.P. and S.

Miss Crawford, of Bethany, upon whom, with a helper, a murderous attack was recently made, writes as follows to a sympathising friend: "Yes, indeed, I have to tell of 'goodness and mercy,' and God's marvellously preserving care. Only his hand saved us, and we do praise Him. The wounds have healed wonderfully, through his goodness."

Evangelistic Notes.

Beattock, N.B.—Mr. Robert Snaith, evangelist, Newcastle, has concluded a three weeks' mission here. The addresses were with power. As the result there have been decisions for Christ, and believers have been strengthened. J. T. N.

Montreal.—Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings in the Knox Presbyterian Church, and the Lord is blessing his labours. He has been here about two weeks and a half, and hundreds have professed conversion. Mr. Hammond has been greatly rejoiced to find many who were converted in his meetings here as children and youth in 1862 and in 1880, now occupying positions of influence.

Montreal, May 19. M. LAUDER. Gipsy Smith has been labouring in Washington, D.C., with unprecedented success. So far his work has been confined to three cities—Boston, Denver, and Washington. Everywhere he has had overflowing audiences, and has won the hearts of the people by his simplicity and earnestness, his fervour and devotion, and his remarkable gifts of speech. The Metropolitan National Methodist Episcopal Church was for three weeks thronged night after night with eager listeners. Ministers of every denomination, from the venerable Dr. Sutherland, the preacher to the President, down to the theological students of Howard University, came to hear him, and sinners were drawn to the Saviour by his tender pathos and stirring appeals. His singing of Gospel hymns was a special attraction, his voice having a weird, strange charm.

International Conference.

THE Evangelical Alliance is this year celebrating its jubilee in London by holding the tenth conference of Christians of all nations. The meetings, as announced, will commence at Exeter Hall on Monday, June 29. Already some 300 or 400 delegates have intimated their intention to be present, including representatives from every European country, from the United States of America, Canada, Australia, India, China, Persia, Egypt, Palestine, etc. Among these are such men as Count Bernstorff, Pastor Funcke, and Colonel von Knobelsdorf, from Germany; Pastors Hocart and Theodore Monod, from France; the Moderator of the Waldensian Synod, from Italy; Dr. E. Naville (the Egyptian explorer) and Count St. George, from Switzerland; Count Bylandt and Jonkheer de Savornin-Lohman (former Minister of Home Affairs), from Holland; Count Moltke, from Denmark; Dr. John Hall, from New York; and Sir J. W. Dawson, from Montreal. Amongst the British speakers are: Lord Polwarth (the president), the Lord Bishop of Exeter, Principal Handley Moule, Archdeacon Sinclair, Revs. Professor Charteris (of Edinburgh), Dr. Marshall Lang (of Glasgow), Dr. Bowman Stephenson, Dr. Rigg, Dr. G. S. Barrett, Thos. Spurgeon, and F. B. Meyer.

The detailed programme will be supplied by the general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London. A meeting for special prayer will be held in the Council Room of the Alliance to-morrow (Friday) at 11.30 a.m.

Sports and Charities.—In a letter describing his voyage to the Cape, Rev. M. Guy Pearse says: "Sorrowfully be it whispered that the collection on Sunday morning for the seamen's charities was 16s. The amount subscribed for the sports on Monday was £15."

[512]

Obituary.

MRS. SQUIRE, JERSEY.

A GREAT loss has been sustained to the cause of philanthropy in the Island of Jersey in the death of Mrs. Squire, on Saturday, May 23. This aged widow lady for many years past has been noted for her Christlike actions, and her benevolence in numerous directions. She departed this life after a comparatively short illness. She will be greatly mourned, not only by a great number of the poorer class who have received of her bounty, but also by those Christian friends who had the great privilege of her acquaintance.

REV. JOHN THOMSON, CAMPBELTOWN.

This honoured minister of Christ has lately passed to his rest. His pastoral labours in the U.P. Church had been greatly used of God, both as a preacher of the Word and in house-to-house visitation. Rev. A. Bain, who knew him well, says:—"He was pre-eminently the assiduous, faithful, conscientious pastor. He was ever at the beck and call of suffering and sorrow—a true son of consolation, sympathetic and helpful. He knew, too, how to rejoice with those who rejoiced. As a preacher of the Christian Evangel, he was unswerving in his allegiance and loyalty to the heart and essence of that Gospel. He never shrank from earnestly declaring the whole counsel of God alike on its doctrinal and practical sides. He loved to wed dogma and life in one beautiful unity. As a man who knew the power of the Gospel in his own heart and life, he regarded with supreme disfavour the substitutes that are being offered in some quarters in room of the omnipotent Cross. An excellent German scholar, he was well abreast of the critical and exegetical work of continental scholars, and while true to fundamental truth, travel widened his intellectual and spiritual horizon."

SIR J. RUSSELL REYNOLDS, BART.

This well-known physician passed away on Saturday last, at the age of sixty-eight. The son of an Independent minister, and the brother Dr. H. R. Reynolds, for many years principal of Cheshunt College, he rose to distinction at a very early age.

Seldom has a man been so greatly honoured in his own profession, and still less often has a man honoured his profession in such a degree as Sir Russell Reynolds, who latterly filled the honourable post of President of the Royal College of Physicians. Some hint of the great reliance placed in him may be gathered from the fact that he was the chosen medical attendant of his two predecessors in their extreme sufferings, Sir William Jenner, whose recovery was no doubt in great measure due to the loving and assiduous care of Dr. Reynolds, and Sir Andrew Clark, during whose fatal illness he was in almost constant attendance. Sir Russell, who had been Household Physician to her Majesty for nearly twenty years, will be greatly missed in Court circles. During his last illness the Queen sent her personal attendant, Sir James Reid, to Grosvenor-street almost daily, and at her own command was apprised of Sir Russell's state night and morning.

As President of the British Medical Association at the great congress in London last year, Sir Russell was an unqualified success. His address, delivered at the Imperial Institute, will for years linger in the minds of all who heard it. A man of the most deeply religious convictions, he could never bear to hear the almost coarsely materialistic utterances so common among a certain class of medical men. He ended his address with an earnest reference to the "religious element in our natures," and begged his hearers to consider that this element was in many cases the "be-all and end-all" of the existences of suffering and sorrowing fellow creatures. It was more to his personality that he owed his power than to his wide and great scholarship. His genial manner, and handsome, if somewhat sad, face, his commanding yet graceful figure, will be missed by many who owe much to the great physician's skill and generosity, and many who loved him for his social qualities.

A People's Version of the New Testament.—In an article in Light and Leading, of May 28, some particulars are given of two attempts to provide a modern English version of the New Testament. Dr. Weymouth has for seven years been engaged on a translation direct from the Greek into modern idiomatic English, but has not done more than half the work. When completed, his version will be provided with explanatory footnotes. Another undertaking, in the language of everyday life, has been in hand about four years, a company of scholars, including two or three ladies, being engaged thereon. Probably the first half of the New Testament will be published in 1897 or 1898, and at a price bringing it within the reach of all. Particulars may be had from Rev. H. C. Leonard, M.A., 10, Gordon-road, Clifton, Bristol.

Temperance Notes.

DR. MONRO GIBSON, preaching the National Temperance League annual sermon, said he had practised abstinence all his life.

Arrangements are being made for 200 temperance-gatherings in the North of England, winding up with a great convention in Newcastle.

The Women's Temperance Union (U.S.) have added to their ranks a "Brother Helpers" list, containing the names of gentlemen they can recommend to the branches as lecturers.

The brewery concern of Barclay, Perkins, and Co. is to be turned into a company with a capital of £6,000,000. Public-house property is going up by leaps and bounds; a tavern in the Harrow-road recently sold for £90,000.

At a last meeting of the general officers of the World's W.C.T.U., it was decided, after earnest consideration of the subject, that the next Biennial Convention of the World's W.C.T.U. should be held in Canada in the spring or autumn of 1897.

The Excise returns for the first three months of the present year show that no fewer than 8,362,130 barrels of beer were manufactured in the United Kingdom, an increase of more than a million barrels compared with the same period of last year.

The report of the London Temperance Hospital shows 1066 in-patients admitted and 5842 out-patients treated last year—a considerable and satisfactory increase. Unhappily, for lack of funds, two wards remain unused. In only two cases in the whole year was alcohol administered in any form.

A witness before the Licensing Commission stated that there was no difficulty in registering clubs, except in the cases of officers' messes and colleges. There had been no prosecutions of brewers and dealers for putting deleterious substances into beer or spirits, but only for weakening liquors with water.

The National Temperance League intends holding a conference of official Temperance advocates in London, during this week ending July 5. The congress will be confined exclusively to salaried workers who devote their whole time to the movement, and many matters affecting their welfare, and the best means of reaching the public will be discussed.

Now that open air work is in full swing, it may be well to remind missionaries of the usefulness of the magic lantern for such gatherings. The sheet may be fastened up from the windows of a house, from the side of a barn, or, in fact, on any wall; and when there is not too much wind, it is almost as easy to manage the lantern itself in the open air as in a hall. Lantern services must, of course, be held in a side street, in places where there is no traffic, and not in the main thoroughfare.

A Bill has been favourably reported to the U.S. Congress providing for the appointment of a commission of five persons, whose duty it shall be to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relation to revenue and taxation, and its general economical, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire into and take testimony as to the practical results of licence and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance.

The Highland Temperance League report that the two agents, Messrs. Taylor and Macpherson, addressed last year 470 meetings, attended by nearly 50,000 people; 650 pledges have been obtained. The total income from all sources has been £366, and the total expenditure £395. During the year circulars to all the School Boards in the Highlands were again issued, urging upon them the necessity of giving temperance lessons in the day-schools under their control. Due attention has also been given to the circulation of Gaelic temperance literature.

The Belfast Women's Temperance Association and Christian Workers' Union held its annual meetings, which were numerous attended, last week. This association has had a prosperous year. There are twenty off-shoots from it in Belfast alone. For all temperance purposes, including temperance, missionary, and colportage work, and the rescue of little girls, it raised last year over £800. This includes a donation of £200 by M. Leguieres to the Victoria Homes. It is affiliated to the Irish Women's Temperance Union, which now contains sixty-five branches, doing a good work, and federated to promote temperance, taking the Word of God and prayer as the inspiration of all work.

Requests for Prayer.—For a series of Gospel Tent services at Woodhall Spa through June.—That Mrs. and Miss Radcliffe may have grace and strength to do work the Lord may give them to do during a visit to the Continent.—For blessing on a mission to be held in Christ Church, Hants, from June 7, for a fortnight, by Weaver Brothers.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bonverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	24 dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	24 dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum.
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE time has come round again when the public generally are invited to give of their substance for the support of our great London hospitals. On Sabbath next collections will be made at most of the churches and chapels in the Metropolis. The services rendered to our mammoth community by these splendid institutions are so patent and so well known that no statement of them is needed. It is enough to remind our readers of the opportunity afforded them for becoming partners in such work as that done by the Good Samaritan, which met with high approval from the Great Master Himself.

The winning of the Derby by the Prince of Wales's horse is a fact that may have little real significance in itself, but the way in which the Press has dealt with it makes it clear that this form of "sport," with its attendant evils, is by no means losing its popularity. The doings of Royalty have an influence that reaches far and deep, and it is to be feared that this event will not tend towards the purifying of what is so often called our "national sport" from the sinister associations with which it has so long been linked. To have an ex-Prime Minister and the Heir Apparent so closely linked with the evils of the turf is a calamity to public morals.

The Bishop of Lichfield has received a letter signed by twelve English chaplains employed on the Riviera, and endorsed by the Bishop of Gibraltar, asking whether it would not be possible for him to point out to the clergy in his diocese how much the work of the chaplains is hindered by the presence of passing English clergymen at the concerts and at the rooms of the gambling establishment at Monte Carlo. They do not accuse their brethren of going to play, but only to see what the life of the place is like, and they think that—

Any knowledge which is thus gained is much more than counterbalanced by the apparent sanction that their presence gives to gambling.

They do great harm by encouraging other persons to frequent the Casino. The complaint here made of clergymen might, we believe, be made of a large number of laymen; and, further, might also be applied to many other bad places besides Monte Carlo. There is no need to walk down a sewer, and run the risk of typhoid fever, in order to know that it is foul, unless the knowledge thus gained is to be definitely used for the purpose of mitigating the evil. Merely to "find out what goes on" will do the spectator harm without doing anyone else any good.

It is singular to observe that so soon after the talk about reunion among the Churches there should now be a movement on foot which is almost sure to separate them for many a year into two warmly opposed sections of Conformist and Nonconformist. Every section of the Free Churches has condemned the Education Bill. The Home Rule question is no longer a bone of contention; it is dropped; and Mr. Gladstone's famous letter to the Pope has driven all Nonconformists to make common cause against Roman Catholicism both inside and outside the State Church. The fact is that there are great principles at stake which cannot be sacrificed, and great interests which imperatively require attention. The modus vivendi of the different communities has not yet been found, or, if found, cannot yet be adopted. The present struggle, much as it is to be deplored, is leading up to it.

In view of Mr. Gladstone's letter to the Pope, which has created such an impression, it is interesting to read, by way of contrast, Archdeacon Sinclair's fifth charge on "Differences Between the Church of England and the Church of Rome," just published by Mr. Elliot Stock. There is a large and increasing section of the High Church party who seem to be anxious to whittle away these differences to vanishing point, and it is only in the light of such a calm and searching statement of the real question at issue, as is given to us in this striking and exhaustive summary, that they are seen in all their significance and force. No one can read this manifesto without seeing how radical are the contradictions in essential matters between the two Churches. Whatever may be the Pope's final decision on the question of the validity of Anglican orders, it is clear that to break down the wall of partition between Canterbury and Rome would be to weaken and defeat the historic message of the Church of England, and to stultify the meaning of some of the most important articles of faith professed by the Episcopal Communion. Let these be compared for but a moment with the positions of the Roman Church, and their final inconsistency is immediately apparent.

Here is a brief summary of the doctrines on which opposite teachings are given by the two authorities:—those relating to the Nature and Authority of the Church, the Rule of Faith, the Creeds, Papal Supremacy and Infallibility, the Sacrifice of the Mass, Sin and Forgiveness, the Veneration and Worship of Saints and Images, Prayers in an Unknown Tongue. These are not unimportant or non-essential matters, but such as go to the root of faith and practice; and any attempted rapprochement between Churches that teach contradictory doctrines on these vital points can only result in the abandonment by one or other of positions that have been again and again declared to be essential. There can be no explanation for the seeming indifference shown by intelligent Churchmen to the need for a clear and consistent witness to their historic mission, except that they are ignorant of the nature and magnitude of the issues at stake. What is at stake is simply the Protestantism of the Church of England. If Archdeacon Sinclair's charge serves to awaken the laity as well as the clergy of the Established Church to the truth, it will do an immeasurable service to the cause of religion in the country.

The Rock thinks that the battle of the Reformation will have to be fought over again, in order to guard the heritage of truth which the Reformation passed on to us. Very likely. Every battle of principle has to be fought over and over again. Each generation needs teaching the same things. The children do not inherit their fathers' experience, convictions, and faith. The doctrines of grace are as foreign to the human nature of the men of this century as they were to that of the men of the first century. The offence of the cross has not ceased. Knowledge of the truth is not born with a man. The too common mistake is to go on the assumption that children do know as much as their parents; thus they are carelessly left to themselves, and when they go astray, as they so often do, their conduct is looked upon with surprise when there is nothing surprising about it.

Some proposals have been made for the founding of a Home of Refuge in London for destitute Armenians, but it seems to us that such a project is in every respect inadvisable. There has been great difficulty in securing means to maintain the stray Armenians who have found their way through stress of circumstances to this country and to America. The amount needed to keep one Armenian in England would furnish the necessities of life to several in their own land, and those who have come here would now gladly return home. A correspondent, who is himself an Armenian, sends some well-authenticated facts of this description, and adds:—

It is unwise to assist and encourage Armenians to emigrate. The friends of Armenia cannot do better than further endeavour to relieve the starving Armenians in their own country.

The terrible accident at Moscow has raised many comments, the main theme of which seems to have been this—how could royalty go on feasting and dancing while it knew that thousands of poor people lay dead, and that tens of thousands were full of passionate sorrow? Political reasons, it is said, compelled the continuation of the appointed programme of festivities. That may have been so; and no Russian or any one else would think of casting a shadow of blame upon the Emperor for the accident or for the subsequent course of events, which so clearly show that perhaps a despot is the most helpless man in the world. But might not the authorities have considered for a moment that political consequences of an unlooked-for kind might spring from an unthought-of quarter? The value of a poor Russian may from this time assume a new importance; in which case the dead will not have died in vain. Hitherto the condition of the millions of Russia has justified the words of Sir J. R. Seeley:—

I find great populations cowering in abject misery for centuries together.....if they cannot live they die, and if they can only just live, then they just live."

From this time the breath of life may pass over them.

In "The Mind of the Master," Rev. John Watson's new book on the teaching of Jesus (Hodder & Stoughton), another attempt is made to invest with new meanings the central principles of the Gospel. The book is full of illuminating thought and stimulating suggestions, and is having a phenomenal sale, largely owing, no doubt, to the great popularity of Dr. Watson's other works. But it is vitiated by a fatal tendency on the part of the author to follow in the wake of certain recent German writers, such as Beyschlag and Wendt, to make a radical distinction between the teaching of Jesus Christ and Paul. This false and mischievous antithesis between the great sources of our knowledge of the way of salvation in the N.T. seems to permeate not a little of the teaching and the preaching of the day. It sounds fresh and clever, and consequently is just the thing to captivate the minds of those who have only an imperfect acquaintance with the Bible. A more radically shallow or false theological mare's nest, however, could scarcely be imagined, and it only does the more mischief in that it comes with the claim of following a "scientific" method of study, and of giving the Lord Jesus the central and supreme place as our authority in religious truth.

The root of the fallacy comes from an imperfect realisation of the work of the Holy Spirit as the revealer of spiritual truth. When our Lord left the earth, He promised his disciples to send them the Comforter, whose first purpose was to lead them into all the truth, i.e., the truth concerning the Saviour, which as yet it had not been possible to teach them on account of their imperfect spiritual receptivity and comprehension. At Pentecost this promise was fulfilled. From that day on, a flood of light streamed into the apostles' minds concerning the teaching and work of the Redeemer. What had formerly been incomprehensible or perplexing to them became clear and convincing; and henceforth they were invested with a power to influence and convert the world that becomes an utter perplexity unless we are to believe that they were in real and full possession of the "mind" of the Master.

As to St. Paul, nothing is more evident than his profound conviction that the Gospel which he preached had been received directly from the Master Himself, without even the mediation of those who had been in his company in the flesh; and the complete consistency of Paul's teachings with the essential principles of the Gospel as it was unfolded by Christ Himself, is a sufficient proof of its authority and truth. To make a radical distinction between Christ and Paul, is therefore to raise false issues, and to suggest an inconsistency between one part of the N.T. and another, which exists only in the minds of those who invent it. It is doubly unfortunate that Dr. Watson should fall into this pit, because he has the ear of thousands who would not listen to other teachers.

One of the directions in which human ingenuity has achieved its greatest triumphs of late years has been to transform waste products into valuable commodities. Some of the most valued substances used in the manufactures and arts were once thrown away as worthless. Among many other reclaimed substances the material used in the production of cotton-seed oil, for instance, which, a few years ago, was considered worthless, now produces annually £14,000,000. It is a triumph of human faculty thus to reclaim a waste product and turn it to some great use. But it is only a parable of better things.

The reclamation of matter is of little importance compared with the reclamation of the soul. That was the work of Jesus Christ in redemption. He came to win back the erring, restore the fallen, and turn the waste products of human sin into jewels for his eternal crown. And when his people succeed in bringing a soul to Him to be renewed and turned to Divine uses, they do that which is greater and nobler than to reclaim a wandering planet to its orbit, or turn heaps of refuse into gold. To help Him in his work is the grandest privilege of his people.

It is one of the sad results of conscious wrong-doing that when persisted in it appears to lose its heinousness, and presently does not seem wrong at all. As George Eliot says:—

There is a terrible coercion in our deeds, which may first turn an honest man into a deceiver, and then reconcile him to the change; for this reason, that the second wrong presents itself to him in the guise of the only practicable right.

From being immoral, it becomes to the mind that does it as it were unimmoral and indifferent, and so it is done as a matter of course. This is the wilful blindness which in the Pharisees drew forth the most scathing denunciations of our Lord, and for which they were accounted as guilty as though they did not do wrong in the name of right, which they always did. Conscience, which is sometimes spoken of as a sufficient guide without any Divine illumination, is for this reason incapable of leading men in the path of life except as it is constantly quickened and revised in its judgments by the Holy Spirit. It is only in God's light, that we can truly see light, even on the path of daily duty.

Our thought concerning ourself determines our self-respect; the thought of others concerning us determines our reputation; the thought of God concerning us determines our character. When we lose our self-respect we fall into humiliation; when we lose our reputation we fall into ridicule; when we lose our character we fall into judgment. Unfortunately the natural man thinks least and last of the greatest loss. So long as he is able to retain the outward respect of his fellow men he often cares little about his self-respect, and less of God's favour. There is nothing but true religion that can bring a man to the right mood in this matter; and the right mood is to put the favour of God above every consideration, and to measure the value of all things according to the standards He has revealed. In 1 Cor. iv. 3, 4 (R.V.) we have the exact order of the great criteria of character.

The power of ridicule as an enemy to religion, especially amongst the young and impressionable, is specially strong to-day. Is it not almost impossible for a working man to take his stand on the side of Jesus Christ, unless he is prepared to throw almost all considerations but those of duty and faithful regard to conscience to the winds? Among the merchant clerks of the City is it not the rule rather than the exception to laugh at chastity and purity, and to pour measureless, if polite, scorn on the old-fashioned and lofty code of morals taught in the New Testament? There is a loud call for a manful and courageous stand on the side of right, and truth, and holiness on the part of those who profess the Christian name among our young people. For their own sake this is so; for the sake of their Master, and not the least for the sake of those who are too weak and fearful to stand alone amid the scoff and scorn of those with whom they work and associate, and who have, therefore, a right to look to those older and more experienced than themselves to help them to a strong and unmis-takable witness to the faith that is in them.

"Blessed are the merciful." Jesus taught us how to be merciful by taking the side of the weak, of the slave, of the poor and friendless, of the widow and orphan, but chiefly by giving his life a ransom for sinners. We all like to have our circumstances understood—our difficulties, temptations, disappointments, and discouragements. Of Him it is said that He "will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax; so thoroughly does He appreciate our condition, and so tender is his mercy. A gentle appreciation of another's feelings of hope or fear, a kind word to the disheartened, a firm lift to the fallen, was more in his eyes than any amount of sacrifice. There is a religion in sitting still with a sufferer and being quiet, as well as in bustling about and meddling with everybody and everything. There is the highest form of service in going with Jesus into Gethsemane merely "to watch" with Him there. The utmost we can sometimes do for a man in extremity is to be with him, letting the dew of our sympathy fall upon his heart. To hold the hand of the dying, and, by our gentle pressure, speak of our love, is our benediction and our prayer. To be there at all means so much.

"Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus," writes the Apostle Paul. The significant thing in this oft-quoted text is the fact that in uttering it he is urging on us all the truth that we are able in a true sense to follow our Lord in the very thing that seems most unique in his nature. He laid aside the attributes of Divinity when He took on Him our flesh and blood. We cannot do that, but we can "empty" ourselves of many things that are dear and precious to us for the sake of those who are less privileged than we are, in order that they may be bettered and lifted up to a higher life. This is the very essence of the Christian life, that we should be willing to sacrifice self, to become poor, that through our poverty they may be made rich. That is what Jesus did; and it is significant that Paul in the two central passages in which he dwells on this fact, uses them as motives to a better following of the Divine example. The greatest truths may become incentives to the lowliest duties; and there are none so great but they are meant to swell the motive power of religion in the practical life.

Jesus Christ made religious belief rest on a double basis. The first is inward faith; the second is outward evidence. There must first be the spiritual condition, which affords an entrance into the soul of the materials out of which intelligent and fruitful belief is possible. There must then be the outward facts and forces which give the prepared heart its food and opportunity. How impotent the glorious facts of the Gospel are without the subjective condition which gives them power over the individual life, is shown every day in the fact that thousands know all about them, and are yet totally unaffected for good by them. Faith precedes all saving knowledge of the truth. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." How to produce this condition in which the well-known realities of the "glorious Gospel of the blessed God" are able to lay hold and transform the soul, is the task and ideal of all true preachers and teachers. It can only really be done by the Spirit of God acting through the conductor of a soul already filled with the Spirit, or through the simple mediation of the Word itself. When this comes about the result follows of conviction and conversion and renewal of souls.

Continual, Waiting on God.

By REV. ANDREW MURRAY.*

Therefore turn thou to thy God. Keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God continually. (Hos. xii. 6)

CONTINUITY is one of the essential elements of life. Interrupt it for a single hour in a man, and it is lost: he is dead. Continuity, unbroken and ceaseless, is essential to a healthy Christian life. God wants me to be, and God wants to make me; I want to be, and I wait on Him to make me, every moment, what He expects of me, and what is well pleasing in his sight. If waiting on God be of the essence of true religion, the maintenance of the spirit of entire dependence must be continuous. There may be times of special waiting; the disposition and habit of soul must be there unchangeably and uninterruptedly.

This waiting continually is indeed a necessity to those who are content with a feeble Christian life. It appears a luxury something beyond what is essential to be a good Christian. But all who are praying, "Lord make me as holy as a pardoned sinner can be made. Keep me as near to Thee as it is possible for me to be. Fill me as full of thy love as Thou art willing to do," feel at once that it is something that must be had. They feel that there can be no unbroken fellowship with God, no full abiding in Christ, no maintaining of victory over and in readiness for service, without waiting continually on the Lord.

The waiting continually is a possibility. Many think that with the duties of life it is out of the question—they cannot be always thinking of it, even when they wish to. They forget, they do not understand, that it is a matter of the heart; and that what the heart is full of occupies it, even when the thoughts are otherwise engaged. A father's heart may be filled continually with intense love and longing for a sick wife or child at a distance, even though pressing business requires all his thoughts. When the heart has learned how entirely powerless it is for one moment to keep itself and bring forth any good; when it has learned how surely and truly God will keep it; when it has in despair of itself accepted God's promise to do for it the impossible, it learns to rest in God; and in the midst of occupations and temptations, it can wait continually.

This waiting is a promise. God's commands are enabling; Gospel precepts are all promises—a revelation of what God will do for us. When first you wait on God, it is with frequent intermission and frequent failure. But do believe God is watching over you in love and secretly strengthening you in it. There are times when waiting appears losing time, but it is not so. Waiting, even in darkness, is unconscious advance, because it is God you have to deal with, and He is working in you. God, who calls you to wait on Him, sees your feeble efforts and works it in you. Your spiritual life is in no respect your own work; as little as you began it can you continue it; it is God's Spirit who has begun the work in you; He will enable you to wait continually.

Waiting continually will be met and rewarded by God Himself working continually. He ever does work continually, but the experience of it is hindered by unbelief. But He who by his Spirit teaches you to wait continually will bring you to experience also how, as the Everlasting One, his work is never ceasing. In the love and the life and the work of God there can be no break, no interruption.

Do not limit God in this by your thoughts of what may be expected. Do fix your eyes upon this one truth: in his very nature God, as the only Giver of life, cannot do otherwise than every moment work in his child. Take time until the vision of your God, working continually without one moment's intermission, fill your being. Your waiting continually will then come of itself. Full of trust and joy, the holy habit of the soul will be, "On Thee do I wait all the day. My soul, wait thou only upon God."

Knave, Slave or Freeman?

By MR. ROBERT E. SPEER,

Secretary of the (American) Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

WITH one broad, sweeping stroke the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews characterises, in a quotation from the Fortieth Psalm, the purpose of Jesus as the doing of God's will.

Lo, I am come

(In the roll of the book it is written of me)

To do thy will, O God.

Such a definition of his business here Jesus Himself gave: "I am come down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." "And He that sent Me is with Me. The Father hath not left Me alone; for I do always those things that please Him." There is a good working creed here for us. It is our business, first of all, to do God's will. Two classes of men deny this. One class is made up of those that do their own will, denying God's ownership of them, and seeking to please not the Father that sent them, but themselves. This is blasphemy. The men of this class are knaves. The other class is made up of those that are too weak to have a will of their own, who do the will of others or of the devil. The men of this class are slaves. Knaves, slaves, and freemen, these are all. "Every one that committeth sin is the bondservant of sin. And the bondservant abideth not in the house for ever; the son abideth for ever. If, therefore, the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John viii. 35, 36, R.V.).

But what is the will of God? The knave and the slave protest that it is difficult to discover. But it is so only for those that have lost the discoverer's vision. Three things make up the will of God for us.

1. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent" (John vi. 29). God wishes us to believe on Christ, that is, to enter Christ's atmosphere and live there, to be born into the spiritual sympathies.

2. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification" (1 Thess. iv. 8). God wishes us to be holy, whole, without flaw or fleck or spot. Only this, James says, is true religion.

3. God "willeth that all men should be saved." The Lord "is not willing that any should perish." God wishes every man to know the peace and joy of doing his will. He is no party to the loss of a soul. The responsibility is the soul's or ours.

Can the knave or the slave offer a sweeter life than the life of conformity to this threefold will? Is it better to serve a human will or the will of a human master than the will of the loving and living God? Power and immortality are in that will, and only there for us. Most of us are of small strength or consequence in the world. No one, we are sure, is moulded by us. Our names will die when our bodies fall away from us and we enter into life and the new name. We soon slip as "the dewdrop slips into the shining sea." Yet not so. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." There can be no greater men in the world than we. What can they do more than the will of God? Can we not do as much? Whoso does his will shares his omnipotence. "If this work is of God," said Gamaliel, "ye will not be able to overthrow them: lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God" (Acts v. 39, R.V.).

Therefore it is our business never to be afraid. It may seem an odd article to put in a creed. Yet much, perhaps most, of what we do or leave undone finds its motive in fear. Our dress is governed by fear of peculiarity; our habits are maintained through fear of change; our conduct is shaped by fear of criticism; our conservatism is due to fear of freedom; we tremble in the dark for fear of danger; we listen with faces white with fear for the steps of the great liberator, Death. We are the creatures of fear, fear of man, of nature, and of everything save the God whom alone we should fear, and his will. Against all this sounds Jesus' voice: "Be not afraid of them which kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." Against this protest all strong lives, Captain John Brown's among them, "than whose end," says Thomas Hughes, "I know of none more entirely brave and manly. . . . The very men who allowed him to lie in his bloody clothes till the day of his execution, and then hanged him, recognised this. 'You are a game man, Captain Brown,' the Southern sheriff said in the wagon. 'Yes,' he answered. 'I was so brought up. It was one of my mother's lessons. From infancy I have not suffered from physical fear. I have suffered a thousand times more from bashfulness'; and then he kissed a negro child in its mother's arms, and walked cheerfully on to the scaffold, thankful that he was 'allowed to die for a cause, and not merely to pay the debt of nature as all must.'" The Christian man must not be afraid.

The will of God is not far away. It may lead us far away some day. But for each of us the will of God lies nearer than anything else, and with warm and inviting breath is lovingly whispering to us. Obedience to this whisper is the way to the great future. Disobedience closes the doors. The man that does not love the will of God enough to throttle the little lie that now in obscurity tempts him will never be able to slay the great lie for all the world to see.

The present moment is divinely sent;
The present duty is thy Master's will.

How glorious is our condition as Christians that we "are in the mighty and good will of God," as Bushnell calls it in his sermon, "Every Man's Life a Plan of God"! How satisfying are the poise and the peace and the power of the life that with Jesus has made it its meat and its drink to do the will of God! Are you in this vast liberty? Let the doing of God's present will set you free from sin and fear.—The Golden Rule.

Chang-Chew, South China.—Dr. Fahmy writes: Our present Chang-Chew hospital is a new building of a little more than a year's standing. The building is commodious and well adapted to the needs of the work. For seven years the work was carried on in a native house, with its many inconveniences and drawbacks, but a good deal of good work was nevertheless done, alike from a medical and evangelising point of view. We have waited long, and at last the Lord has granted us our desire, and for this we bless Him. Patients come to the hospital in large numbers, and of these a considerable percentage remain as in-patients.

* Extracted from WAITING ON GOD: A little manual, giving short meditations on this practical theme for each day in the month. In the restless rush of our modern life these chapters must prove to the reader a rich and refreshing spiritual sedative.

Letters from S. Africa.—21.

RETURNING from Basutoland through Bloemfontein our next point was ninety miles distant by cart, but requiring a railway journey of four hundred. This town used to be a pandemonium, from Saturday, when the "boys" left work, to Monday morning, when they returned to it. They were the prey of the canteen-keepers, whose vile concoctions made them mad. Now they are confined to the compounds. They agree to serve for two (or three) months, at the end of which they are free to leave, or to renew the engagement for another similar period.

KIMBERLEY,

During the time of their service they are not allowed any intoxicating drink. This is an unspeakable blessing to themselves and to others. The prohibition needs, however, to be supplemented by some arrangement for their protection from the crimps and canteen-runners when they leave. These people waylay them at the gates and entice them to their dens, so that some who left with the savings of months of hard work return penniless, to be again taken in the same accursed net. It is as when men leave gaol; unless the Prison Gate Mission meets them there, they are led away by their old companions. If the Government should do nothing of this kind, a Compound Gate Mission might perhaps be organised, either connected or not with some existing institution. They should be escorted a few miles on their road, and then they would be safe. The Board of Trade has arranged to remit the wages of sailors to their homes, from English and from some foreign ports. In like manner the native workmen might be saved from the sharks of Kimberley. The De Beers Company itself might find it worth its while to save their boys from the bloodsuckers. Possibly Rev. J. S. Morris may add this to his other beneficent work, to which reference is made below.

THE COMPOUND

is a large, square piece of ground, round which are the places where the boys sleep. Except in the season of rain, most of their time is spent in the open air. Here they cook their mealie meal, and, sitting round the cooking vessel, eat it with their wooden spoons. They are supplied with goods at low prices, and are able to save a considerable part of their earnings. When they have accumulated enough to buy a few cattle, those who escape the crimps return home and marry; or else, after a few months' holiday at their kraal, come back for another period of work.

The Wesleyans do well, in conjunction with the De Beers Company, in sustaining the work of the Rev. J. S. Morris in connection with these compounds. Introduced by Rev. J. Scott, of Bloemfontein, we received from him much kindness. He took us, with his daughter, to two compounds on the Sunday afternoon, where, in each case, about a hundred or more coloured workmen were gathered. There were among them native evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and of the rest some were tried and proved Christians, whose influence for good among their fellows, above and under ground, is great.

After the services we went round the compounds, when the people who were not cooking or eating were sitting by their doors, talking in groups, or dancing to the sound of their wooden harmonicons, with imitation of their battles. In one of the compounds we were introduced to Mr. Barnes, a Government officer appointed to preserve good order.

On the Monday morning Mr. Roberts, a diamond broker, nephew of Mr. Newberry, introduced us to Mr. Moses, manager of one of the mines, who took us down and explained all that could be explained as to the diamonds and the blue ground in which they are found. Those who say the Kaffirs will not work should see their discipline and regularity and industry underground. Our guide unsparingly denounced the drink, and suggested the protection of the natives as specified above.

In the afternoon we accompanied Mr. Morris to the office where the diamonds are on view, but we only saw about £50,000 worth, all of a heap, not assorted according to size, shape, colour, and quality, as they were to be seen in the morning before a large parcel had been sent away. A set which had been cut and harmoniously arranged were really beautiful. But though it may seem cynical, I could not help thinking that the value of these precious stones does not consist altogether in their intrinsic worth, though they have intrinsic value in their adaptation to such useful work as boring tunnels through rocks, and for other purposes; but their value is fictitiously increased by the desire of ladies of fashion and wealth to sparkle, and to outsparkle each other.

Mr. Morris afterwards drove us round Beaconsfield, and showed us the extinct volcano there, which has already been worked, and may be worked again. The examination of the blue ground is much more thorough than it used to be. Out of some which had been laid upon the streets, £8,000 worth of diamonds were gleaned.

The Y.M.C.A. is in its infancy, but is likely to thrive under the fostering care of the secretary, who came out from Hastings within, I think, the last two or three years.

AT MAFEKING

is a Wesleyan Mission, superintended by Rev. A. S. Sharp, on whom we called, and who, after explaining his work, took us to interview the aged and loyal chief Montsioa (pr. Montsewa), who was sitting outside his dwelling with several of his head men, some of whom were Christians. A large number of cattle had been shot on account of the rinderpest. As many as 800 laden waggons were on the road between Mafeking and Bulawayo, the oxen, diseased and otherwise, having been killed. Montsioa said the locusts and the drought had destroyed their mealies, and now their oxen were shot, how were they to live? His people would be all starved or scattered. He was sure the Queen didn't know. The poor old chief (he is eighty-six) cried as he told his sorrows. The huts of his people extend for two miles along the river side.

Leaving Montsioa with regret that we could not help him, we called on Rebecca, the widow of Molema, who was the earliest member of this mission. She said she was so old that I might be her son. I think she was considerably over ninety. She had known Dr. Moffat. With her was a relative, Elizabeth Motshegare (which signifies noon-tide). She was a class leader. They knew, Molema said, that in this world we are strangers, but when we pass away we are going into rest—into joy.

Between Vryburg and Mafeking is Photwani, near which Mr. Bevan, brother of the late Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, lives with and like the natives. He came out many years ago to save his life, and is living still, doing good work among his humble friends.

This is a good climate for consumptive people. If they come out soon enough, the disease may be arrested, or perhaps healed. But it is pitiful to see some who came when the malady was too far advanced. It would have been kinder to keep them at home, and let them end their days among their friends, than to send them out to die among strangers in a strange land.

Rev. James Scott, who has been so long at Bloemfontein, has been appointed to Durban by the recent meeting of the Wesleyan Conference at Durban. The Cape Times says:—

"Mr. Scott has spent eleven years at Thaba 'Nchu, and two periods of nine years each at Bloemfontein, and his loss will be greatly felt throughout the Free State. As chairman of the Kimberley and Bloemfontein district, he has travelled very extensively through the State, and is one of the best-known and most respected citizens of the Republic. His removal will be deeply deplored. He is to be succeeded at Bloemfontein by Rev. G. A. Theobald, and Rev. James Thompson, M.A., of Kimberley, becomes the chairman of the district."

Mr. C. B. Elliott and Mr. David Hunter, the managers of the Cape Government Railways and the Natal Railways, are both earnest Christian men. I have to thank each for facilities afforded me in travelling over their respective lines. I regret to say both are suffering in health. Mr. Elliott sails in the "Norman" for a six months' change and rest at home, and Mr. Hunter went some weeks ago for some medical and surgical assistance. The recent report of both these systems is phenomenal for the amount of business done, the economy in expenditure, and the largeness of result.

Cape town, May 5.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Jews on the Continent.

IN a letter dated May 27, en route to Galatz, Rev. D. Baron writes:—

During our brief stay in Vienna we had occasion to observe the feeling of unrest and consternation felt in large Jewish circles in consequence of anti-Semitism, with which the Austrian metropolis seems to be going mad. In a debate in the Austrian Volksrath, a few days ago, an anti-Semitic member said that the 2,000,000 Jews in the Austrian Empire ought all to be poisoned like reptiles, or driven into the sea and drowned. There is quite a movement on foot in Vienna not to let dwellings to Jews, and many of the unfortunate people, especially of the poorer classes, are feeling the consequences of it terribly.

From Vienna Rabbi Lichtenstein and myself travelled by Danube steamer to Budapest, and on board had many opportunities of making the name of our Saviour known. In Budapest we could do but little this time, the people being pre-occupied, and the whole town given up to the festivities in connection with the celebration of the Hungarian "Millennium." On May 6, accompanied by Pastor P. Gordon, of the Swedish Jewish Mission, I started for Transylvania. Our first stay, for two days, was in Grosswardein, but on the way there we broke our journey and spent a few hours in Tapio Szele, which has been made famous by Rabbi Lichtenstein, who, as Rabbi, while still in office, preached Christ in the synagogue for five or six years. Some of the Rabbi's former members have left the town, and the synagogue (or "Tempel," as it is called) looks desolate and forsaken. We visited and conversed with a number of the people, and were thankful to find that Rabbi Lichtenstein's teaching and influence is not forgotten by, at any rate, some of them.

On May 9 we reached Klausenburg, in Transylvania. Physically and geographically a beautiful country, Transylvania is spiritually one of the darkest regions of the earth. Once it formed the great bulwark of European Christendom against Mohammedanism. Now it is itself almost pagan, and all that remains in it of Christianity is a mere name without life or power. It is populated by many different nationalities—Hungarians, Szeklers, Saxons, who immigrated in the 12th century, Roumanians, Armenians, Gipsies, of whom there are over 100,000, Slovaks, Ruthenians, etc. It is impossible to describe the deadness and moral and spiritual destitution of all these different nationalities in this region.

Among the Jews especially there is a wide door open for the Gospel. In Klausenburg, Karlsburg, Kis Kapus, Hermannstadt, and Kronstadt we had wonderful opportunities. From early morning (sometimes before we were dressed) till late at night people came to us, sometimes quite crowding our rooms, to hear about Christ, or to beg for a copy of the New Testament, which some of them had never before seen in their life. We met with at least a few whose hearts seemed really prepared by the Spirit of God for the message we brought.

From Kronstadt we crossed the Transylvanian Alps into Roumania. In Bucharest we spent five days, and had to do with many inquirers. We next went to Rustchuk, which is the largest town for population in Bulgaria, and there also we had great encouragement. Till eleven at night our room was full with Jews, of some of whom we can well say that the Lord has begun a work in their hearts.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

THE RESCUE FROM THE PHILISTINES. (Concluded.)

Notes on Psa. xlviii., compared with Psa. xlv.

IN verse 2 Mount Zion is designated "the sides of the north," probably because David on the north side—"from Millo inwards," where the city was not protected by deep valleys as elsewhere—had caused towers and fortifications to be erected, which, according to verse 13, were to be marked.*

This, then, is said of the north-eastern side of Jerusalem, and in Psa. xlv. 4 the southern side was mentioned in connection with the rivulet Shiloah. In other respects, also, the two psalms closely correspond. That which in Psa. xlv. is spoken of as an earthquake (2, 3) and the voice of the Lord (6), is in Psa. xlviii. 7 attributed to the hurricane from the east—the Levant as it is now called, the most dangerous wind of the Mediterranean—by which were broken the ships of Tarshish. As God, in Psa. xlv. 5, is in the midst of Zion, so that it shall not be moved, so also in Psa. xlviii. 9, those who believe in the Lord's lovingkindness think of Him in the midst of his temple. Whereas in Psa. xlv. 8 those things which are to be beheld ("Come, behold") are the works of Jehovah, by which He maketh wars to cease; so in Psa. xlviii. 12, it is the beautiful Zion which is to be marked ("walk about Zion"). This, in the first place, is because God has made Himself known as a high tower, and is to be exalted above the nations and on earth; and, secondly, because He, at the dawn of morning, shall be the God of Zion for evermore, guiding the people of Zion through the shadow of death into everlasting bliss.†

(1) How can Jehovah be otherwise than great and highly to be praised in the city of God, and on the holy mountain, now that He on Mount Zion, the northern side of Jerusalem, the joy of the earth, and the city of the great King (Psa. xlvii. 2), has been made known (lxxvi. 1, and ix. 16) as that for which Psalm xlv. praised Him, i.e., a refuge or a high tower?

(2) This happened when the five Philistine kings, graphically described ("For, lo!") assembled themselves, and passed by together (in the original "over the frontier"; comp. Judges xi. 29). They saw a sight which amazed them; it was a reversed veni, vidi, vici. They were routed, and put to flight; there was a panic, an anguish as of childbirth, and it was caused by a hurricane from the east, the Levant, a source of danger to even the largest ships (Ezek. xxvii. 25, 26).‡

(3) That which had already been made known through revelation (2 Sam. vii.) the inhabitants of Jerusalem had now before their eyes—namely, the establishment of Zion for ever by Elohim; on such lovingkindness, then, do they also meditate in the temple of God.

(4) Through these judgments of his right hand, full of righteousness, and over which Zion is glad and Judah rejoices, shall the praise of God and his name reach unto the ends of the earth.

(5) But the daughters of Judah—the country population—must walk about, and look at Zion with gladness—must look upon her, saved and free, with her towers, her bulwarks, and her palaces. In this manner they are to bear witness to posterity that God is always the same, the marvellous helper He has just now proved Himself to be for ever and ever. In this eternity He will give his own a share by leading them over death. By establishing Zion for ever (8) therefore, the people of Zion cannot perish, but must be guided through death to participation in the eternal God of eternal Zion.

* The eminence of Moriah really formed the north-eastern side of old Jerusalem. All this glory is now departed, but it should, however, be borne in mind, that the Tower of David is still standing. It may be the "tower of the flock" mentioned by Micah iv. 8, to which shall return the kingdom of the daughter of Jerusalem.

† How God will guide the believer "over death," the Korahite has shown us in Psalm xlix. There, in verse 14, is mentioned (as well as in Psalm xlv. 5) "the morning," that bright morning when the upright shall have dominion. Psalm xlix. being acknowledged as belonging to the Davidic period, this is another proof that Psalms xlv. and xlviii. belong to the same period and authorship, in spite of the assertions to the contrary of various commentators.

‡ The ships of Tarshish were, presumably, known in the time of David, as well as later, in that of Solomon. The cedar-wood for David's palaces was in all probability brought to Joppa in them.

CONCLUSION.

Is it really possible that one of the greatest grantings of prayer in the Old Testament has hitherto been completely unrecognised and overlooked? The correlation and consistent harmony in the series of psalms delineating this event guarantee its reality. Around it is gathered a string of gems consisting in all of twenty psalms (including also Psalms ix., x., and xiv.), which for the most part can only be understood by the light of this experience, and through it alone can the full reality and authenticity of these psalms be proved. They have hitherto been a subject for the wildest conjectures on the part of exegetes.*

It is the question of a prayer by which David saved his people from the most imminent danger caused by the war—a prayer isolated by the peculiarity that Jehovah was publicly praised for its fulfilment before such a thing had taken place. It is a prayer by which David, after his fall, received a rehabilitation, so that he in truth became a lamp for God's Israel—a prayer which, to the whole heathen world, became a mission-sermon of the most ardent kind.

The Philistine war, and the intervention of God by means of the storm and theophany occasioned by it, form one of the greatest and most important episodes, not only in the life of David, but in the whole of the Old Testament history. It is the crown of all David's victories, the coping-stone in the development of the power of his kingdom, and the completion of his typical rule of the world.† It is the mark of God, imprinted upon him as the king anointed on Zion, to whom the heathen had been given as an inheritance, and the ends of the earth for a possession.

It is, as it were, a concluding point in the history of Israel from the time of the Exodus. The heading over Ps. xviii. is also in the same style as that over Exodus xv.: "Then sang Moses . . . this song unto the Lord." Ps. xviii. is thus placed on the same level with the salvation therein recorded. It is a counterpart to Joshua's prayer when the sun stood still in Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Aijalon; when God, as never before, listened to a man's prayer and let the hailstones rain on the fleeing Amorites.‡ But the point of greatest importance in this blow which God

* Is not the series of psalms here reviewed indeed worthy of a serious and kindly-disposed test? This, too, at a time when the Old Testament, and not least the Psalms, is mercilessly attacked—when advanced criticism will not leave David a single psalm, but has, in an astonishing manner, dragged even positive science into its toils. Such a man as Karl Marti has in cold blood declared that, "after careful examination of the sources in the historical books, we must reject David's original picture, and refuse him his laurels as the Levitical singer." Also Professor Buhl, of Leipzig, the successor of Prof. Delitzsch, in his "History of Israel," challenges an attempt "to try" and extort from the psalms "of David" "a single instance of historical value." Even with regard to Psalm xviii., "which has most likelihood of being written by David himself," he finds "all manner of difficulties, which make it probable that the psalm, as it now stands, must, at any rate, have originated from an adaptation of a genuine foundation." A declaration which, about a decade ago, was only ridiculed when advanced by the Jewish interpreter Grätz, is now, in all seriousness, propounded by men like Professor Buhl. "A single instance of the greatest historical value" in this series of psalms is David's praise of God before the fulfilment of his prayer, and this is the real secret of Psalm xviii. (Psa. xviii. 3, and lxxvi. 16, 17). Is it not here shown that "every lucid representation of a clear and consistent wholeness is far superior to mere criticism"??

† David seems hitherto only to have possessed Gath, the capital (2 Sam. viii. 1). Now all the Philistine strongholds fell at his feet (Psa. xviii. 43 and 45). It was then, first, that the whole of the country, originally intended for Israel, came into his possession.

‡ It is worth remarking that the scenes of the two events, lying close together, may be seen on the journey from Jaffa to Jerusalem while crossing the plains of Aijalon. Beth-horon, where Joshua uttered his prayer, lies to the north-west, and Gob or Gezer—re-founded in 1873 by Clermont Ganneau—the pass through which the Philistines endeavoured to enter Judah, and where the battle took place, to the south-west.

Himself finally struck in the wars of David, must certainly be that it contained a promise of universal peace, and of the entire cessation of war. It fell to the lot of the Korahite to proclaim this prophecy, first suggested by David himself (Ps. xxix. 10-11).

David may also urge this great hearing of his prayer as a proof to his people, and to the whole world, that, in spite of his great fall, he was now completely reinstated in his relations with God, and more than ever a man after God's own heart.

Madagascar Missions.

WE give the following extracts from a letter by a missionary's wife in Madagascar:—

I have come to the capital to attend the first public Protestant service ever held in Madagascar in the French language. Two pastors of the Reformed Church of France, both truly earnest and consecrated men, reached Antananarivo three weeks ago. Their names are Mons. Lauga, of Rheims, and Mons. Kruger, of Paris, who is tutor at the training institution of the Paris Missionary Society. Mons. Kruger has been laid aside with fever, and it is M. Lauga who has arranged everything for this French service, which is to be held regularly every Sunday morning. There was a difficulty about hymns, no French hymn-books having yet arrived, and also about a choir to lead the singing. This latter was supplied by some young men and boys from our L.M.S. College and high schools, who sang and behaved exceedingly well throughout, counting it an honour to be chosen for this service. Many of them are real Christians, and so glad to find that they have fellow-believers among the French conquerors. The hymns were taken from a solitary copy of the McAll hymnal which had found its way into M. Lauga's box, and were printed on leaflets at the Friends' Printing Press.

M. Lauga had thought there would probably be only about ten or twelve worshippers, so that he was agreeably surprised to find some twenty-five or twenty-six Frenchmen, including M. Laroche, the Resident-General, and several staff officers, and one French woman, but for whose presence I should have found myself the only woman in the congregation. Six of the Frenchmen—officers, I think—were Roman Catholics, but had attended M. Lauga's services on board the vessel during his voyage out, and been so much interested that they took the first opportunity of coming again on land. Indeed, if by God's blessing these services continue to be held, I believe the schoolroom where we met will be found too small. Everyone present appeared to join heartily in the singing, and to listen attentively to the good pastor's earnest and impressive discourse on witnessing for Christ. "It is not pleaders that our Lord so much needs in this land as witnesses," he said; he went on to urge his hearers, as Christians among a people more easily taught by example than by precept, to witness for their Master, by word, by justice, by purity, and Christian love. One young lieutenant listened with tears in his eyes, and lost no time in calling on the pastor that very afternoon.

Monday, Mar. 2.—This morning the united monthly prayer-meeting of the city churches was held in one of them, when Pastor Lauga was present and gave an address in English, which Mr. Baron translated into Malagasy. The people were greatly delighted and moved by his addressing them as brothers and sisters in Christ, and much interested in his sketch of the history of Protestantism in his native land.

As missionaries we are all greatly rejoiced at the coming of these brethren so early, and, therefore, so opportunely, to witness for Christ and the power of his salvation to the weak and vacillating disciples here who have turned from idols to serve the God of whom they know so little, and to confess with their mouths the Lord Jesus Christ in this far land. They give a practical contradiction to the Malagasy notion that all the French are Roman Catholics, and the presence of the Resident-General at their French service will do this even more effectively. We all thank God for sending these dear friends, and pray that his richest blessing may rest on them and their work for Him. Some of the natives are already begging Mons. Lauga to stay here altogether, he has become such a favourite with them. This, I suppose, is quite impossible, but it is intended, I believe, to send out one or more missionaries to settle here before the two delegates leave.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 14.

"THE SINS OF JEROBOAM, THE SON OF NEBAT, WHO MADE ISRAEL TO SIN."—2 Kings xv. 9, 18, 24, 28.

THIS chapter anticipates the final overthrow of the kingdom of the tribes. It describes the corruption and disorganisation of the people which made them the easy prey of Assyria. One puppet-king after another was set upon the throne to fall after a brief space of rule, and four times over it is said that they followed in the steps of Jeroboam, "who made Israel to sin." The seed sown two hundred years before had at last come to maturity, issuing in the ruin of the nation. What a comment on the inspired words, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

Twelve times in the story of the kingdom of Israel, we are told that Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, made Israel to sin. The institution of the calves on his part seemed to be a piece of political wisdom, but it was an infraction of the Divine law; and that can never be politically right which is morally wrong. The house cannot stand unless the foundation can bear the test of the Divine plummet. The kingdom of Israel fell, to prove to all after time that the disregard of God's law is a foundation of sand, which can never resist the test of time.

Why is Jeroboam so frequently called "the son of Nebat"? Why should the father be for ever pilloried with the son, except because he was in some way responsible for, and implicated in, his sins? There was a time when perhaps Nebat might have restrained the growing boy, or led him to the true worship of God, or perhaps his parental influence and example were deadly in their effect. How important that parents should leave no stone unturned to promote the godliness of their children.

MONDAY, June 15.

"KING ABIAZ SENT TO URIAH THE PRIEST, THE FASHION OF THE ALTAR AND THE PATTERN OF IT."—2 Kings xvi. 10.

The fashion of this world passeth away like a fleeting dream, or like the panorama of clouds that seems constituted for a pavilion of the setting sun, but which whilst we gaze, tumbles into a mass of red ruin. And yet we are always so prone to imitate King Abiaz, and visit Damascus with the intention of procuring the latest design, and introducing it, even into the service of the sanctuary.

Man naturally imitates. He must get the pattern of his work from above, or beneath; from God or the devil; hence the repeated injunction to us all, to make all things after the pattern shown on the mount. If we would be rid of the influence of worldly fashion, we must conform ourselves to the heavenly and divine. The best cure for worldliness is not unworldliness but other-worldliness. The best way of resisting the trend of people around us is to cultivate the speech, thought, and behaviour of that celestial world to which we are bound by the most sacred ties, and whither we are travelling at every heart-throb.

This introduction of the altar of a heathen shrine into the holy temple of Jerusalem, reminds us of the many rites in modern religious observances which have been borrowed from paganism, and warns us that the Church has no right to go to the world for its methods and principles. Let the world do as it may in its discussions about truth, its efforts to attract attention, and its organisations; our course is clear, not to build altars after its fashion, or model our life on its maxims.

TUESDAY, June 16.

"THOSE NATIONS FEARED THE LORD, AND SERVED THEIR GRAVEN IMAGES."—2 Kings xvii. 41.

It was a curious mixture. These people had come from Babylon, Hamath, and Sepharvaim, and were settled in the land from which Israel was deported. In their desire to propitiate the God of the country, they added his worship to that of their own gods (v. 32), they did not really fear Him (v. 34). There was the outward recognition of the God of Israel, which was worse than useless. Are you sure this is not a true description of your own position? You pay an outward deference to God by attending his house, and acknowledging his day, but at the same time you are really prostrating yourself before other shrines. One originates in a superstitious fear, a desire to stand well with your fellows, but it is in the direction of the other that your heart really goes. You come as his people come, sit as his people sit, kneel as his people kneel; but your heart is far apart, and you only do as you do that you may follow your own evil ways with less fear of discovery.

(524)

With all of us there is too much of this double worship, but let it be clearly understood that it is only apparent, not real. No man ever really serves two masters, or worships two gods. Whatever conflicts with God in heart or life is our real god. Whatever appears to share our heart with God really has our heart. God will never be in competition with another. He must either be all or none. Give Him all.

WEDNESDAY, June 17.

"NOW, ON WHOM DOST THOU TRUST?"—2 Kings xviii. 20.

It was no small thing for Hezekiah to rebel against the proud King of Assyria. Hamath and Arphad, Samaria and Sepharvaim, Hena and Ivah, reduced to heaps of stones, were sufficient proofs of the might of his ruthless soldiers. How could Jerusalem hope to withstand? Rabshakeh could not comprehend the secret source of Hezekiah's confidence. It was no use for him to turn to Egypt. Pharaoh was a bruised reed. And as for Jehovah! Was there any likelihood that He could do for Israel more than the gods of the other nations had done for them?

Not infrequently does the puzzled world ask the Church, "In whom dost thou trust?"

Our life must to a large extent be a mystery, our peace pass understanding, and our life be hidden. The sources of our supply, the ground of our confidence, the reasons for our actions must evade the most searching scrutiny of those who stand outside the charmed circle of the face of God, as it is written, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard . . . what God hath prepared."

We all ought to have the secrets which the world cannot penetrate. Doubt your religion if it all lies on the surface, and if men are able to calculate to a nicety the considerations by which you are actuated. We must be prepared to be misunderstood and criticised, because our behaviour is determined by facts which the princes of this world know not. We do not look up to the hills, because we look beyond them to God; we do not trust in silver or gold, or human resource, because God is our confidence. We can be independent of this world, because we are so sure of the next.

THURSDAY, June 18.

"AND HEZEKIAH SPREAD IT BEFORE THE LORD."—2 Kings xix. 14.

Amid the panic that reigned in Jerusalem, the king and the prophet alone kept level heads, for they alone had quiet, trustful hearts. We hardly realise the crisis unless we compare it with the march of 200,000 Kurds or Turkish soldiers upon some peaceful Armenian community. Israel had no earthly allies. Her only reinforcements could reach her from heaven, and it was the care of these two saintly men to implicate their cause with that of the living God (v. 4). This is the faith that overcomes the world, which realises that God lives here and now in our home and life and circumstances. His cause is implicated in our deliverance, his name will be disgraced if we are overwhelmed; and honoured, if preserved. He is our Judge, Lawgiver, and King, and is therefore bound by the most solemn obligations to save us, or his name will be tarnished.

When therefore letters come to you, anonymous or otherwise, full of bitter reproach; when unkind and malignant stories are set on foot with respect to you; when all hope from man has perished, then take your complaint—the letter, the article, the speech, the rumour—and lay it before God. Let your requests be made known unto Him. Tell Him how absolutely you trust. So, from out your heart will pass malice and fear. Peace and love will be its keepers, as the angel-guards of the tomb of Christ, and there will come a swift message of comfort, like that which Isaiah, the son of Amoz, sent to Hezekiah, saying, "That which thou hast prayed to Me, I have heard."

FRIDAY, June 19.

"LET THE SHADOW RETURN BACKWARD TEN DEGREES."—2 Kings xx. 9.

It is impossible for us to understand how this could be. The shadow of the declining day waxes ever longer, and only a miracle could change the appearance on the dial. It may suggest some significant thoughts about shadows that may still go back.

The shadow of a wasted life.—Of course, there is a sense in which the wasted years will never come again. They have passed beyond recall, but the shadow may go back on the dial of our life when we truly repent and turn again to God, for He hath promised: "I will never leave thee, neither forsake thee, and I will give back the years that the canker worm and caterpillar have eaten."

The shadow of happier days.—These seem to have gone. For long you have noticed the growing twilight, and it has seemed impossible ever again to have the lightness and spring of one or two decades back. But be of good cheer, for when a man comes into that fellowship with God which sorrow and temptation teach, when with growing years he attains added grace, we are told that he shall return to the days of his youth; his flesh shall come to him like that of a little child.

The shadow of early affection.—Have you lost loved ones, so that your life is like a house the windows of which, one after another, have become shuttered and dark? But love is not forfeited for ever. Those who forsake all for Christ's sake shall get all back again in Him. His love comprehends all human love. The relationships of his kingdom surpass in tenderness and tenacity those of the warmest earthly ties.

SATURDAY, June 20.

"AND HIS MOTHER'S NAME WAS HEPHZI-BAH."—2 Kings xxi. 1.

Hephzi-bah means, "My delight is in her" (Isa. lxii. 4). How strange, supposing that her name was any indication of her character, that such a woman should have borne such a son, for "Manasseh did wickedly above all the Amorites did which were before him." A godly ancestry, however, does not guarantee a holy seed. Hezekiahs and Hephzi-bahs may be the parents of Manassehs. That this may not be so:—

Let us guard against the inconsistencies of our private life. The child of religious parents becomes habituated to their use of expressions in public which betoken the highest degree of holiness, and is therefore quicker to notice any inconsistency in temper or walk. Is there not a subtle temptation also for those who work much for God in public to feel that a certain laxity is permissible in the home? Will not late after meetings at night compensate for indolence in the morning, and will not protracted services be the equivalent for private prayer? May not irritability to servants or children be accounted for by the overstrain of our great work? Hence, inconsistency and failure to realise our lofty aims, which are quickly noticed by children, and begot distaste for our religion.

Let us guard against absorption in public religious duty to the neglect of the home. Does it never happen that the children of religious parents are put to bed by nurses who are heedless of their prayers, because their mothers have undertaken a mission? Do not boys sometimes grow up without the correcting influence of the father's character, because he, good man, is so taken up with committees? Keep other vineyards if you will, but do not neglect your own.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

A Zulu Blind Boy's Story.

(Concluded.)

WHEN Panda died in Zululand, and his son Cete-wayo was made king, in that year I began to understand truly that the Son of God had come into the world. I had heard the name of Jesus, but I did not seem really to know who He was or why He came. One day "Inkosazana" came to the meeting, and she told us about Jesus walking on the water—how kindly He helped Peter when he was sinking and unable to help himself, how He put him in the boat where he was safe from harm. Then she said, "That is the same Jesus who loves us, who is our friend. He took Peter out of his trouble and put him in a safe place. So He can take us out of our sins, can help us, can keep us safely, and at last take us to his own beautiful home."

Those words did not go out of my mind; I thought of them continually. A night or two after this I had a dream. I thought I was trying to walk by myself, and I fell into a dreadful mudhole. I tried to get out, but could not: slowly and surely I felt myself sinking. I called, I struggled, but all in vain. No one came to help me. Suddenly I thought that I could see, and there, quite near me, stood someone who was a stranger. He reached out his hand and said, "Come to me; I will help you." Eagerly I put my hand in his: I had little strength for doing more. Safely and tenderly He brought me out of the mire on the dry land. I tried to thank Him, and as I looked into his face, quickly the thought came, "This can be no earthly being. It must be He who is the friend of the troubled, the friend of sinners." I felt that He was my friend. Then I awoke and knew that I was still blind, that I had only been dreaming.

I could not get away from the thought that this same being, Jesus, was near me, was my friend, and I longed to know more about Him. I could scarcely wait for the next meeting, and then only Titise came. I asked her to tell me more about Jesus. She told me something that He did, but I longed to see "Inkosazana," that she might tell me just as she had done before.

The next week she came. When I heard her step my heart bounded with gladness. I then did not wish to keep my head in my blanket: I told her how very glad I was that she had come. She sat near me, and I asked her all I liked. We talked much about the Son of God, and what He had suffered and done for us. As I heard more and more of his love, a stillness came into my soul, when I thought of his being my friend. She told me of his opening the eyes of the blind, and then she said, "It may not be in this world, but some day you will again see. Jesus can make you see; it will not be a dream! In another world, much better than this, there will be his home, the home of God and the redeemed. He loves you, is truly your friend. When it is best for you to go, if you will trust in Him and obey Him, He will bring you safely there. Then you will no longer be blind."

Oh, I cannot tell you how sweet it was to me to hear all these glad tidings! They were continually in my thoughts, and were to my heart like rain in a dry and barren land. Yet I felt that I did not know how to speak to Him who was so great, so pure, so holy; yet I hoped that He would understand me. So that night, and when alone, I often put my head in my blanket and whispered a few words to Him.

The desire to know better how to pray grew very strong upon me; I could not wait for the next meeting; I went to the teacher in the school and asked him if he would teach me how to pray. I thought that because he wore clothes he must be a Christian, but he was not, although he had learned to read when a little boy. He told me that he too was seeking Christ, and I believe he found Him about that time. He talked very kindly to me, and told me of the prayers that the Saviour taught his disciples. He also told me to keep on trying to know Jesus, and not to be afraid to tell Him all that was in my heart; and so light and trust kept coming, coming into my soul.

"Inkosazana" said that I could go to school, and the teacher would teach me verses from the Bible. He wished me to learn the third chapter of John. So I went to school, and while learning that chapter I saw very plainly that Jesus Christ the Son of God was my Saviour. I asked Him with all my heart to take my sins away, to take me and keep me. I trust that I was then truly born again.

Since that day I have never known a time when I did not feel that God was with me and heard my prayers. It is not difficult for me to remember chapters and verses from the Bible, or where they are written. I have learned a great many, so that now when I preach I can get on without anyone helping me by reading the Testament or hymns. I sometimes think that it is better for me to know the Testament and parts of the Bible in this way than to be able to read it. I am glad, when I speak to others of Jesus, that I can remember his words to tell them. I never now feel lonely and sad, as I used to do, I have continually so much to think of that is pleasant. I have even grown happy in the thought of being blind. If I had not been blind I might never have sought and found Jesus Christ. To have found Him is more to me than eyes or any earthly thing.

My one great desire and joy is to tell others of Jesus and how they may find and follow Him. I have been at the Theological School at Adams for over two years. I learn by listening, and hope in that way to learn much about the way of salvation and to be better fitted for the Master's use.

I am twenty-nine years old. I have a wife and a little daughter. My wife is being taught by one of the ladies at Adams (Amanzimtoti, the oldest station of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in South Africa). When we have finished here we shall hope to return to Umvoti and live near our old home, where I trust that God will help me to be pastor over the people of my father's tribe, and to lead many of them to love and follow our Lord Jesus Christ.

I want to thank you, more than words can express, for sending missionaries to us. I love to pray for them and for you who send them. Will you not pray much for the native pastors, that God will raise up many more to work for Him and give us much of the Holy Spirit? For the darkness here is great, very, very great!

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

J. A. Field (Sydney), Nos. 17 and 18; Charlotte Cane (South Africa), No. 20; W. Arnot Craik* (Canada), No. 21; Gerhard Meuter* (Malta).

No. 22 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

John Jeffs, Christine Arnold*, Bella Mack, H. Morris, J. Stainer, Willie McMurray*, Bessie Scantlebury, Thomas Mack, Alec and Fannie Waring, Arthur Cordell, Arthur and Edward Llewellyn, Minnie Giddings, Vera, Norman and Daisy Petrides, Helen Willoughby*, Isabel, Elmina and—Ros, Gwendoline Hill*, Nora, and James Love, Oswald* and Horace* Roberts, Nellie Seth, Eva Monti, Harriette Orr, Agnes Seth, Dora Walters, Violet Studdert, May Bentley, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, George and M. A. Cowell, Thea Guinness, Muriel Jocelyne, Dorothy, Annie, and Elma Grove, Dora Corrie*, Lucy Soltan, Lottie Orr, E. Verbury, Mary Tilley, Gertrude Scott, Mary and Annie Fleming, Edith Haisley, Edith Grail, Nina Goote, Elma Tebb, Margaret Macphers, Charlie Milledge, L. Culley, E. T. Elliott, Frank Grigg, Percy Leigh, H. F. Russell Smith, Rosetta Sherwin, Eva Jones, Daisy Groves, Maggie Woods, Annie Cooper*, Cecilia Reid, Ethel Williamson, Ruth Braithwaite, Daisy Annett, Eva*, and John* Gray, John Henzies*, Elsie Grace, and Lila Wright, Winnie Shaw, Nancie Parker, E. B. and Netta Black, John Thomson, C. W. and Lucy Jacob, Marcus King, Barbara Maconchy, Mildred Haig, M. Moffatt and Sinclair Jackson, Ruth van Milligen*, A. W. Webb, Aline Bazett, King and Cyril Bennett, Ruth and Agatha Harrison, Eric Howell, Jessie West, Maggie Buchanan, Oswald Mavor, S. C. Boyman, Evelyn Shaw, William and Colin* McKenzie, Katerina Blair, Louis Berthe, Willie Findlay*, Louisa Morse, Clara Lyddon, Kate and Dora Symes*, Mabel and Ada Davis, Joale and Percy Cheal, Edie Simpson*, Richard Lewis, Evelyn Moir, Eric* and Gerald Heaton-Smith, Walter Staines, Dorothy Arbuthnot, John* and George* Gibson, Bertha Kelsey, Lindsay and Leonard Brooker, Kathleen Fowleraker, Freda Hanton, Elma Ishmail, Jessie and Fanny Cockram, Thomas Rayner, Muriel Shaw, Flavelle Caldwell, Archibald Bearsby, Ella Durr, Winifred Nash, Edith Daisley, Reginald and Thomas Harris, Ada and Willie Palmer, Frances Devenish-Meares, Frances Harris, Helen Dunbar, Edith and Annie Clarke, Francis Hoyte, Susie Kent*, May Meredith, Winnie Shakespeare, Bessie Cheale, Daisy and Ruby Allen, Connie and Alice Rouse, Bertie Davey, Harold Wodson, M. H. Daniels, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Isabel Phipps, J. H. Goodchild, Norman Braby, Emily and Florence Palmer, L. E. Frank*, Florence, Victor, and Willie Bellerby, Nellie Lovegrove, Minnie Elsie, Edith and Sissie Mosson, Ada Heap, G. G. Williams, Marjorie R. Hodge, Margaret H. Halse, Edward Rainey, Grace Dawson-Scott, Robert Meikle, Isabella and Jessie Boston, Hannah and Christine Parker, Lillian Bevan, Eva and Ethel Hutchings, May and Tom Hunter, Charles Bewley, Maggie Goodland*.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 23).

1. (a) Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art Thou come to destroy us? I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God (St. Mark i. 24). Spoken by the man with the unclean spirit in the synagogue at Capernaum to Jesus.
- (b) And (Jesus) said unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them (St. Mark i. 44). By Jesus to the man cured of leprosy.
- (c) No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse (St. Mark ii. 21). By Jesus to John's disciples, scribes and Pharisees.

2. Four. The wayside. Such as hear the word; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

Stony ground. Such as hear the word, and when they have heard it, immediately receive it with gladness, and have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time; afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

Thorny ground. Such as hear the word; and the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

Good ground. Such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

People's hearts are like these different kinds of ground. When we hear the Word of God, we should pray that it may take root, and bring forth good fruit in our lives.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Evelyn Moir, Edwin Peters, Winifred Nash, Edith Hayward, Bessie Scantlebury, Catharine and Maude Bailey, Gordon Remington, Eva Jones, Annie Cooper, Daisy Groves, May Pell, Maggie Woods, Juliet and Freda Haines, Thomas Beckley, Marion Wilson, Dorothy* and Evelyn Hower, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry, Rosetta Sherwin, A. S. Daw, Mabel Pearce, Constance Furlong, Madge Cullen, Edith Badham*, Bertie Brookhouse, T. Dobson, Reginald Harris, Lizzie Turner, Mary* and Willie Charles, Edith, May, and Jack* Gilson, Nellie Dowsett*, Maggie Buchanan, May and Edie McCombie, Esther Endley, Mary Plumb, Violet Ashworth, Hubert Maltcham, Herbert Braddon, Mary Tilley, Rosalind Phillimore, Nellie Clark, Harry Sutton, M. F., Gwendoline Hill, Douglas Parkes, Susie Keen, Grace and Kathleen Doddington, Malcolm and Angus Thomson, Elsie Hancock, Helen Beckett, Robert Reeves, Gertrude Ashbury, H. M. Jordan, Arthur, Edward, and Irene Llewellyn, A. Matthews, Minnie Elsie, Nellie Brookfield, Annie Tawse, Florence, Willie, and Victor Bellerby, Stuart Ellacott, Lil La Brooy, Harold Stevenson, Florrie and Bell Dance, Lizzie Porter, Cecil Bradford*, Grace Rettle, Muriel Jones, Annie* and Edith* Cole, Dora Mason, Hofman Scott*, J. Hughesdon, May Dring, Ruth Coupe, T. Morley Oldham, Emily and James Dellow, Edith Harris, W. Hobson, Susie Cumbers, Emily and Daisy Greenbrook, Daisy Phillips, Hilda Meill, Ernest and Edie Nash, Jessie*, Margaret L., and Lillian M. Pook, Rose Brant, W. and H. F. Russell-Smith, Flora King, May Williams*, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Elizabeth and Mary Hull, Maude and Edith Tyson, Reginald Mayes, Dollie Salt, Norman Braby, James Matthews, Ross Anton, Thea Guinness, Gertrude and Mildred Scott, Betty Stocks, Kenneth Dunbar, Lizzie, Bella, and A. Jack, Nancie Parker, Winnie Shaw, Arabella Onslow, Emily Bridgewater, Guinefred Leigh, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Enid Campbell, Harold Puttock, Maurice Gant, James Roy, H. R. Compton*, Wallace and Millicent Bentley, Maude Richards, Mathilda and P. B. Robinson, Clara Barnes, R. H. and William Williams, Elsie Johnson, Phillips and Noel Wright, Doris Brunton, Olive Coleman, Maud Clarke, May Watson, Bertha Linnis, C. W. and Lucy Jacob, Duncan Payne, J. B. Horlock, Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Isabel* and Gladys* Phillips, Aline Bazett, Hugh Tufnell, Lexie and D. J. Jack.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 24).

In St. Luke xii-xiv.

- 1.—Speak to thy brother that he divide the inheritance with thee.
- 2.—Solomon in all his beauty was arrayed like one of these.
- 3.—He that knew not did commit things worthy of stripes.
- 4.—We have eaten and drunk in thy streets.
- 5.—I know not whence ye are.
- 6.—In them come and be healed on the Sabbath-day.
- A.—Correct any mistakes in the above sentences. Write out each sentence correctly.
- B.—By whom and to whom was each spoken? Give chapter and verse for each.
- C.—Take one word from each, and make a well-known text in the Old Testament.
- D.—Say of whom it is spoken, and where it is found.

[Children under eight answer only 1, 2, 3, B. Those under twelve answer 1, 2, 3, 4, A, and B.]

Personal Paragraphs.

FREDA HAINES and "ARDRISHAG."—Thank you for the flowers, which I sent to the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street, and Evelina Hospital. LUCY COLTAV.—A star is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions. DOUGLAS PARKES.—Douglas Parker was intended for you. MARY and WILLIE CHARLES.—Thank you for the books. I have sent them to Children's Hospital at Shadwell. ETHEL WATTS.—Do not be disappointed that your little friend could not join, but try some one else.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, June 12; Hawkstone Hall, Blackfriars, June 15; Dorking, June 16; St. Paul's, Onslow-square, June 19; Bradford, June 22; Leeds, June 23; Caistor, Lincs., June 24; Spalding, June 25; High-bury, June 26; Highgate, June 27. Mr. B. Herklots, Skipton, June Leeds, June 12; Bradford, June 13-19; Whitley Beaumont, near Huddersfield, June 20; Bradford, June 20, 21, 22; Leeds, June 23-24; Wetherby, June 25; Thorne, June 26; Gar-grave, June 27; Bingley, June 28; St. Simon's, Leeds, June 29. Mr. Hankinson, West Kensington, June 12; Trowbridge, July 11-19. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Hamilton, N.B., to June 12. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Worthing, June 14; Brighton, June 18. Mr. H. S. Lidstone, Presbyterian Church, Highgate, June 12. Mr. E. Hughes, Guildford, June 18.

Special prayer meeting, at Y.M.C.A. 185, Aldersgate-street, Wednesday, June 17, for seaside services and caravan work; tea at 5.30 p.m. (free); meeting at 6 p.m.; all friends invited.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending June 20, 1896.—Sun., June 14, Acts xii. 13-25; Mon., June 15, xiii. 1-13; Tues., June 16, xiii. 14-25; Wed., June 17, xiii. 26-41; Thurs., June 18, xiii. 42-52; Fri., June 19, xiv. 1-13; Sat., June 20, xiv. 10-23.

From Mr. Henry Varley.

IT is some months since I wrote you, for I have been much engaged. After the Sydney campaign, which proved a persistent and successful attack upon the entrenched positions of "the world, the flesh, and the devil" in that city, I returned to Melbourne, and until the end of January was privileged to take a goodly share of the ministry in the church where Mr. Bird has done good service. The work, despite the intense heat, has been greatly owned of God, for which we are rejoicing. I was not present, but am told that last Wednesday night a meeting for testimony was held, and a remarkable gathering it proved to be. The Word preached has yielded increase of faith, power, and zeal to hundreds of believers. There is a charm and brightness amongst the people which tells that the Master of Assemblies is with us.

THE CONSUMPTIVE HOME.

I think some of your readers know of the Consumptive Sanatorium at Echuca, 156 miles from this city. My beloved wife and Mrs. Sargeant were instrumental in commencing this work about six years since. The seventh session began on the 2nd inst. About 350 different cases have been dealt with, of whom some have been won for Christ. Large numbers have had their life strengthened and extended, whilst many others have been restored to health, home, and work. It has been a blessed sphere of service. Mrs. Varley has been the hon. secretary since the work began. The Melbourne committee have recently purchased the institution. It is beautifully situated; the air is so light, balmy, and clear, that except the hot summer months (January to March), the weather is perfect.

The "Home" is more than full, and we have several cases awaiting admission. We are anxious to increase our space. The beds now number sixteen; when the new wing is added, there will be accommodation for twenty-four patients. Seeing that many past and present inmates have come from the Old Country, perhaps some who read these lines may like to help? About £700 is needed to get the institution entirely free from debt.

I have been holding meetings in the fine Temperance Hall at Echuca, and have proved what power there is in the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. Echuca is situated on the River Murray, whose winding stream divides Victoria from New South Wales. The population is about 3500. The climate is simply perfection for nine months of the year; given rain and work, and it is a veritable Goshen. The past season has been one of protracted drought, hence much depression exists. Drink, and the hotel traffic also, is an unmixed and self-imposed curse. Forty-five hotels blight the commercial and social life of the town, although you could not find a dozen bakers or more than ten butchers in the town.

If proof were needed that the traffic in intoxicating drinks is both abnormal and immoral, you have it there. Victoria as a whole is terribly handicapped by the liquor traffic. Here is a tremendous fact. The Australian Colonies spent in the year 1887 the sum of £15,582,485 upon intoxicants. This represented an expenditure of £4 8s. 6d. per head for every man, woman, and child in the Colonies. Times may well be bad and commerce depressed. Allowing for the retail drinkseller's profits, the expenditure would be about £25,000,000.

The Murray Bridge at Echuca is one of the foremost illustrations of railway enterprise and engineering skill on this continent. It is a noble view that is seen from the railway-carriage window on the bridge, of the river gracefully winding its course. Just now there is some friction at this border town. Victoria is Protectionist in her policy. In New South Wales, over the river, Free Trade holds sway. Many think that if Victoria clings to her present policy she will have to play the part of second as a colony to New South Wales. For imports, shipping, and exportation, Sydney is far in advance of Melbourne, and is now outstripping her at many points.

In the modest weatherboard Customs House, on the New South Wales side of the bridge, is to be found Brother Trickett, aforetime a famous sculler. The Lord had need of him, and called him by his grace a short time since in the streets of Sydney. He is an "out-and-out" man, with a rich experience, and is full of energy. He is, as one said of old, "a vessel that must have vent." Identified in sympathy and presence with the Salvation Army at Echuca, fire, fervour, and prayer adorn his life. To hundreds of farmers, carters, swagsmen, shearers, and passengers our brother tells out boldly and joyously the great things God has done for him. Standing about 6ft. 3in. in height, of middle years, and a Hercules for strength, he is yet humble as a little child and full of the love of Christ.

This leads me to speak of another interesting personage in Sydney, a well-known barrister, who has been eminently successful in his profession. He was a man of the world, and such as men would call "a jolly good fellow." Right in the heyday of young and cultured manhood, an examination of his throat about five years since disclosed a deadly malady. He left hurriedly for England, but on the voyage a greater Physician than those whose aid he went to seek in London met him. His conscience was awakened, his sins were revealed, confessed, and put away. Then came the decision, "I will be the Lord's, and not shrink from confessing Him before the world."

He returned to Sydney saved and healed, and in the open-air began a series of midday meetings, which have been continued to this day. The news spread rapidly. The brother barristers and lawyers were astonished. Had the disease left the throat and somehow entered his head? "He will not last," "He will break down," "We give him three months!" they said. Yet he stood daily in one of the prominent streets of the city, praying, singing, reading the Word of God, and speaking. But he soon found out the price of honest confession. It was a new bill of costs, and it refused to be taxed. So costly was it, that instead of a large income he found himself without a single "brief."

Amongst the crowds which came to the meetings was Brother Trickett. Here it was he heard the Word of God, and surrendered himself in heart and life to the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are just now in the midst of an enthusiastic mission in the noble Town Hall, South Melbourne. The people come in large numbers. More than 100 have confessed their reception of the Word of Life during the past four nights, and fully 500 believers have told of increase in the power of their spiritual life. Praise God with us, and pray for us.

Melbourne, April 28.

Blackpool.—A large Holiday Home is conducted here, on the highest Christian principles, by Mrs. MacGill, wife of the superintendent of the Manchester City Mission. Over a thousand persons a year are benefited by this Home. In Whit-week it contained a daily average of between ninety and a hundred. Contributions for the free admission of needy ones to the convalescent wing should be sent to Mr. Ernest Crewdson, Norfolk-street, Manchester.

Monte Carlo.—The Bishop of Lichfield has received the following letter, signed by twelve English chaplains employed on the Riviera:—"As we have much painful experience of the great evils which arise from gambling at Monte Carlo, and as betting and gambling are becoming national evils in England, we venture to ask whether it would not be possible for your Lordship to point out to the clergy in your diocese how much our work is hindered by the presence of passing English clergymen at the concerts and at the rooms of the gambling establishment at Monte Carlo. They go doubtless from want of thought, and we do not, of course, suggest that they play. We consider, however, that any advantage which may possibly be gained through the knowledge they acquire is much more than counterbalanced by the apparent sanction that their presence gives to gambling."

The Garment of Praise.

By PETER PECULIAR.

THERE is no wardrobe so small that it has not room for that priceless dress, the garment of praise. Equally suitable for summer or winter wear, appropriate at a funeral or a wedding, durable as eternity, never singed by the fiercest fires of tribulation, windproof and waterproof, a splendid work-day dress, resplendent in the service of the sanctuary, the looms of earth produce nothing like it. Worth its weight in star dust, it is to be had for nothing. With warp of hallelujahs, woof of hosannas, with gleam of morning's golden dawn, with shimmer of cerulean skies, with glory of the Orient and splendour of the Occident, all in one, it bespeaks its Divine workmanship, and befits a human being more than crown does a king.

The Lord meant us all to be perambulating doxologies, and if every mercy we received called forth a song, and every favour from on high produced a note of thanksgiving, the surge of the world's ocean of jubilation would send its spray over the throne of the Eternal. The poorest of us owes the Lord a debt besides which the National Debt is a bagatelle. It is high time that we set about paying this indebtedness.

If groans and moans and wails and sighs had weight and worth, some of you would get rich, for you could contract to furnish a sufficient supply for a regiment. A pin prick is enough to set some saints howling, while a shower of mercy will hardly cause them to exude a note of praise.

Some of you are perpetually mourning your lot when you ought to be perpetually praising. You look at your mercies wrong side up and label half of them "crosses." The man who daily growled about his home at last ordered the real estate agent to sell it. But he fell in love with the description which he read of it in next morning's newspapers, and was greatly astonished when he learned that this Eden of delight was his own despised and much maligned cottage. He cancelled the order to sell, paid for the advertisement like a man, and grew honeysuckles and hallelujahs ever after.

Some of you never know when your are well off. "The only drawbacks to this lovely homestead," said a poetical auctioneer as he offered a paradise for sale, "are the litter of the rose leaves and the noise of the nightingales." Many of you have no drawbacks worth mentioning but the lack of time to handle all the good things God has given you. Still you fail to sing. Put on the garment of praise, brethren, and let it cover you from shoulder to ankles. Its graceful folds will hide many a native defect and deformity. A songful soul is heaven's delight and an earthly joy.

—New York Observer.

Life in the Desert.

"I will be as the dew unto Israel."—Hosea xiv. 5.

IN visions of the night—a sandy sea,
Burned in the fiery tropics' noontide blaze;
Far as the eye could scan, no stream or tree
Gladdened the vast interminable haze;
And yet a flower was there, large-leaved and grand,
And still it lived, though withering on the sand.
"The desert is thy state, this flower thy heart," Flashed on my mind—which thus the semblance proved:—
Among the sympathies of men I hold no part,
But isolate—not hated or beloved:
Battling for life perchance has made me numb,
Hopeless or wicked, reckless what may come.
Should human kindness touch the fretted cord,
A note might echo yet, though much ajar;
Or if for life's last voyage placed aboard,
Methinks I'd hear few "moanings at the bar."
But why surmise? It has not yet been given
To know the worst of earth or best of heaven.
While musing thus, the blossom on the sand
Had lifted up its leaves in beauty new;
The evening breeze its burning face had fanned,
Into its breast had fallen a drop of dew;
So, shutting in its heart the nectar bright,
It breathed, in sleep, a perfume through the night.
"This blossom is thy heart, Christ is the dew"—
I felt it so, however it was told—
Then my glad heart with humble trust and true
Around its Lord did all its leaves enfold,
And freely drink from heaven's crystal stream—
Then I awoke and blessed Him for my dream.
Donegal. J. K.

The late Rev. David Hill, MISSIONARY TO CHINA.

THE death, quite recently, of Rev. David Hill, the well-known missionary to China, was keenly lamented by Wesleyan Methodists, and by many others who knew of his personal qualities and devoted labours in the cause of Christ. We reproduce the substance of a sketch, by Rev. W. T. A. Barber, M.A., which appeared in the pages of the Methodist Recorder :—

It was in 1864 that David Hill and William Scarborough were ordained together in York, and together took the five-months' journey to China. For twenty years they worked together there, and now, after eleven years more, they are joined again in the presence of their Lord. Josiah Cox, the founder of the Mission, received the young missionaries. The Taiping rebellion had swept Central China bare. Mr. Scarborough and Dr. Porter Smith remained in Hankow, while Messrs. Cox and Hill crossed the mile-broad Yangtse and settled in the provincial capital, Wuchang. One of the first converts, if not the first, still lives. Mr. Hill's teacher, now a hoary-headed old scholar, was converted at the very time when a friend in England was receiving the assurance of answered prayer on his behalf.

The malarious climate soon set its mark upon the new comer, and for a couple of years he had to battle with persistent dysentery. Nothing but his own determination, aided by a visit of some months to Japan, brought him through for lengthened service. The Spartan life of after days never allowed of his regaining the fifty pounds of weight he lost during that long illness. It was in those early days, too, that he had a narrow escape from drowning. He has told me more than once of his bathe in the Moon Lake, how he had sunk for the third time and was just giving up when the thought came to him, "What would your father say to your coming out all this way to preach to the Chinese and then getting drowned like this without doing any work?" He struggled afresh and was saved. Ancestry and grace combined to make David Hill.

He tells us he was slow at learning Chinese. To the last he was somewhat hesitating and stiff in ordinary colloquial, but in the pulpit his vocabulary was singularly rich and appropriate. From the first he set himself to the thorough assimilation of himself, not merely in speech, but in mode of thought and life, to the people for whom he had come. No text more accurately expressed his whole attitude than that in which Paul describes his becoming all things to all men. To the Chinese he became as a Chinese that he might gain the Chinese. It was some years before he came to the conclusion that for him the right thing was to dress, live, and eat according to the customs of the country, but in those earlier days he devoted himself to many an act of kindly helpfulness, medical or social, which bore fruit in later years when his Wuchang acquaintances were scattered throughout the province as mandarins of various ranks.

It was during his residence in this place that there was added to his responsibility of preaching the responsibility of considerable means. To him this was often a heavy burden, and he used to recur to the advice of an honoured friend who pointed him to Christ's direction to the young ruler, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor." He would have been miserable had he done so at once; instead, he made his life one long expression of that act of sacrifice. For years, in order to be near to his Chinese friends, he lived upon coarse food, plying his chopsticks in their company and spending on himself no more than twopence a day. The poor were very near his heart, and the practical side of Christianity was ever presented.

The Great Famine, which lasted in the north of China from 1877 to 1879, naturally drew his eyes to the province of Shansi, and he went thither in company with others to distribute the help so freely subscribed in England and America. The country was blighted, people died by millions; famine fever stalked through the land. Mr. Hill rejoiced greatly to show forth the love of the living Christ going about doing good. None will wonder that he declined the honorary mandarin rank offered him by the Emperor. At the same time, living in the capital of the province, he set himself to use the vantage of his position for reaching the upper classes. He offered a set of valuable prizes for essays on certain themes in religion, indicating special Christian books as the texts. A number of literary men competed, and one of them, a provincial graduate, became a Christian, and is at this day the highly-honoured and useful pastor of a large and flourishing church. No regions are fuller of Christian Churches than those which beheld the love of God in practical benevolence during the famine twenty years ago.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. Eslett, Lendal, York.)

Mr. Hill felt much drawn to a continuance of his work in Shansi, but soon after his return to his own district the circumstances attendant on the sad death of Mr. Race led to his coming to England for his first furlough. He allowed himself no rest, and pressed home on the youth, the intellect, the wealth of the home Church, its duty to China. He was disappointed at the time with the result; as a fact, nearly all the workers who have gone out since, nearly all the developments, have been due more or less directly to these appeals. For many years past every missionary for Central China has been a volunteer for that special field. One special scheme took shape during this visit.

He longed for the chance of entry into the unevangelised regions; the committee was helpless to provide funds, young Methodist laymen were finding spheres in the China Inland Mission. Mr. Hill, in company with his brother, Dr. Moulton, and others, founded the Lay Mission, whose members are English and native local preachers, working side by side with the ministers in Central China. At present the kindness of friends, added to his own large generosity, subscribes annually about £1000, by means of which the itinerant evangelism is being constantly extended.

Every branch of the work had his keenest sympathy—hospital, high school, evangelism, itineration, blind school, foundling—he inspired and helped in all. He bore our burdens with us; as far as he could, he bore them for us. The perpetual travel necessary for the oversight of the district and lay mission, the heavy correspondence with friends at home, private charity, the myriad interruptions incidental to the missionary's life, all wore him down. Living in a little Chinese house in the plainest way, it was often long after midnight before he ended the day's work; again and again he was found in the morning asleep on his knees.

I never knew a man with a firmer belief in prayer. He asked this as the choicest gift of home Christians. The Prayer Union of friends of the mission contains six hundred members, and he always claimed successes out there as the fruit of their precious prayers. Is it any wonder that we who knew him intimately think it the greatest privilege of our lives that we loved and were loved by David Hill?

He was President of the Conference of Chinese Missionaries in Shanghai in 1890, and attended the Methodist Ecumenical Council in Washington on his way home for his second furlough. At home he knew no rest. He worked harder than the busiest business man, annihilating space by constant journeys and pleading with all his heart for China. He went back an old man. His letters have given unintentional hints of weariness and loneliness. He used frequently to get fever in the spring. Once more he was seized. He died on Saturday evening, April 18th. He had worn himself out at fifty-five, and had no strength to fight the disease, which he probably contracted in some filthy Chinese village. The funeral on the following Monday was attended by more Chinese than had ever been known, and notwithstanding the cataracts of rain which drowned the words of the burial service, by more foreigners than ever before, save when those murdered in the Wusueh riot were buried five years ago.

"Chou Han."—Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, the well-known missionary who played a prominent part a few years ago in disclosing the true origin of the anti-foreign placards disseminated in the Yangtse Valley, has recently published in China an interesting statement in regard to Chou Han. This individual was proved by Dr. John to be the author of many of the violent and obscene attacks on foreigners and on the Christian religion which incited the mob to outrages on Europeans. The foreign Ministers in Peking demanded his arrest and trial, and after a long interval the Chinese authorities reported that he was insane, and he was accordingly released. Dr. John now reports that two native Christians, who went into Hunan preaching and selling books, entered Changsha, and there got into communication with Teng, who was one of the chief printers and publishers of Chou Han's writings. Teng stated to his visitors that Chou Han had greatly changed of late, that he was now studying Christian books, and had renounced Spiritualism and his former anti-foreign associates. He would like to visit Hankow, and there inquire of the missionaries concerning Christianity, but was afraid that he would be seized for his past misdeeds. Dr. John has written inviting both Chou Han and Teng to visit Hankow and study Christianity for themselves

The Gospel at Epsom Races.

THE brilliancy, animation, and fevered excitement; the strange combination of society splendour, tawdry tinsel, and trumpet-tongued temptation, witnessed during three days spent at the Epsom Races lend themselves so easily to picturesque writing that one is tempted to try the unaccustomed path. But these have been handled by abler pens. My interest has centred in the doings and endurings of fearless witnesses for God, who in his name have stood amidst the dense, whirling, shouting masses, believing that where the devil spreads his snares so openly and successfully, some warning voices should be raised.

The racing saturnalia on Epsom Downs is commonly regarded as a unique display of gaiety, license, and semi-delirious excitement; but it has a grimmer aspect. The hedgerows, ditches, and footpaths for miles around are littered at every turn with human wrecks,

RUINED, PENNILESS, DESPERATE MEN, the victims of vice, the driftage of sin. Thus, while Gospel testimony at the Derby is primarily addressed to heedless pleasure-seekers, it has also its message to the despairing—self-destroyed, but none the less keenly conscious of their fall. The temptations which beset those who frequent the races are well illustrated in the following paragraph taken from last week's papers:—

The Epsom magistrates granted no fewer than 100 occasional licences to publicans for the sale of intoxicating liquors in booths on Epsom Downs during the four race days this week. This is an increase of about twenty on those issued last year.

Faithful testimony has been borne during the past week by two companies. First, by a strong detachment from the Open-Air Mission, aided by the London City Mission Male Choir; second, by the Racecourse Mission. The means and methods of the two vary somewhat, but the end is one.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

For some thirty-nine years Miss Alexander has called around her annually a carefully-selected band of singers, speakers, and tract-distributors. The late Mr. Gawin Kirkham threw himself into these efforts, shared in the early struggles (when the pioneers received their baptism of lime, flour, red ochre, and rotten eggs); and his successor at the Open-Air Mission, Mr. Frank Cockrem, is equally ready to seize the opportunity. About sixty open-air preachers, evangelists, and L.C.M. missionaries took part in last week's campaign. At the Town Mission Hall, which serves as centre, each day begins with an hour's prayer-meeting. Then the men are told off—some two by two, as tract-distributors, no easy task amid the hot, hasty, heedless mobs. It is unattractive, unthankful work, but rich and lasting in results. Others have their post in the ring, in front of the Grand Stand, amongst the excited masses of vendors, betting-men, tipsters, pugilists, and so on, in bewildering variety, who stand to listen to the vigorous singing, led by a few instruments. No place this for well-developed discourse: here it must be sharp and short, clear and straight testimony and warning, and this we had. On Derby Day, for example, the box was mounted in succession by two colonels, one captain, two ministers, three leading evangelists, and a host of live speakers—many of these well known and honoured in the churches, but one must not begin to mention names, for all are worthy, and the list would be long and tedious. Between each came a burst of song, led by Mr. Williams, of the L.C.M. choir. Around stood tramps, gipsies, bookmakers, touts, sportsmen of every stamp and rank, interested in spite of themselves. Two hours and a-half of this, and then at the sound of the bell—signal to clear the course—this company hasten from the noisy turmoil, to the manifest amaze of thousands who see them leave, just when the sport of the day is about to begin.

[529]

THE RACECOURSE MISSION.

But ere quitting the course I must tell of the doings of the other band mentioned, with whom I spent some time each day. Down in the valley, right among the "bookies'" booths, I found, in the tent of the Racecourse Mission, a calm retreat from the dizzy rush above. Here some sixty workers made their centre and home for the time being. Some of these are former "bookmakers" who "know the road" and have influence with old comrades in sin. Mr. Josiah Nix, the well-known leader, was unhappily absent, but Mr. O. L. Heatley, Rev. Joseph Jackson, and the president, Mr. W. Hodson, filled his place. It was good to see how the two bands were working together happily—Open-Air Mission men helping in prayer-meeting and testimony, and Racecourse Mission men speaking in the O.A.M. ring. A quiet, earnest, hopeful spirit marked the preparatory tent meeting. Afterwards the band sallied forth to work on the course. The skirmishers went boldly out to sow the seed in the form of tracts, cards and booklets. Then, a ring having been formed, a hymn was started vigorously, and one after another told forth the Gospel with point, tact, and brevity. At the sound of the bell, "Clear the Course," the Mission members disappeared into their tent, so that in neither case could any say, "They came to see the fun." As one put it, "I've been twenty-eight years to the Derby, and have not seen a race yet."

The leaders believe that God has greatly blessed their efforts. I saw and heard a poor backslider rejoicing in the Lord and making public confession of his home-coming; also, among others, a fine young city man—who having lost all, heard the Gospel, which recalled his godly mother's words, cut him to the heart, and brought him to the tent in tears of repentance. He gives every promise of true conversion. Many such appeared in these few days in connection with both bands; but results are with God, and full oft the choicest are found many days after. I read last week a letter from a minister to the secretary of the Open-Air Mission, stating that he had seen the preliminary notice, given in our pages a week or two since, and felt he must write to say that some years ago he was through the Word spoken, and returning home a changed man, had been called of God to his service. Mr. Heatley had a letter from a Christian worker in the Midlands, bearing similar testimony to his conversion at Epsom. Indeed from many quarters come tokens that the work is not in vain in the Lord.

CONVERTED ON THE COURSE

This racecourse testimony is by no means all. Both bands are well engaged during the rest of the day. Mr. Hodson's important work among the villagers at Banstead and Ashted occupied the Racecourse Mission men every evening; but space is pressing, and, this being somewhat distinct, will form the theme of a separate paper in association with Miss Alexander's similar service among the gipsies.

The Open-Air Mission men devoted afternoon and evening to work in Epsom. Nor is this unimportant. Thousands remain in the town over the races, and with multitudes the idea seems simply to be to drink to excess. My bedroom window was opposite a public-house, and blowing out my candle, I sat and observed scenes

UNUTTERABLY SAD AND SHAMEFUL.

To my mind, one of the worst phases of these racing gatherings is the unchecked licence of the streets at night. Amongst the excited and inebriated masses two large open-air services were held each evening. At the Fountain, a quiet hearing was gained, but at the Corner, in the centre of the town, the Derby night proved terribly trying. Constant and noisy interruptions had to be faced, culminating twice in brutal fights among the objectors themselves. Still so many—the day's sport over—were willing to listen—often with tears in their eyes—that one felt that real work was being done and seed sown that yet shall be found to the praise of God.

Looking back on the crowded episodes of the week, I feel humbled that I have told so little of the grand work done. Suffice it, if these notes on a glorious and stirring Gospel campaign shall lead many to pray that God would bless the testimony borne, and also to aid those responsible. The whole of the workers give voluntary service, but the expenses are heavy. Each company has the support of the numerous workers during their stay, the cost of innumerable tracts and papers, and both need liberal aid. The secretary of the Open-Air Mission is Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.; that of the Racecourse Mission is Mr. Josiah Nix, 31, Rochester-road, Camden-road, N.W. Both will be thankful to hear from sympathising friends.

PEARL FISHER.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

MANY who have followed with shame and sorrow the story of the Muswell Hill tragedy, which has closed this week with the execution of the murderers, may have asked—What is to become of the young brother-in-law of Milsom, whose lantern played such an important part in the arrest and conviction of the two men? We are thankful to know that he is now in Mr. Wheatley's hands, and, according to his own letters, is thoroughly in earnest in seeking to escape the past life and enter on a new career. All may feel sure that under Mr. Wheatley's care the best that is possible will be done for him.

While, however, this and other efforts for the criminals and tempted boys might well engross the activities of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, we find that many other matters concerning the poor are also pressing. The work, for example, among the sick poor is peculiarly clamant. Nor can it be otherwise when the women workers report such cases as the following:—

An aged widow (seventy-five) who obtains a scanty pittance by mangle, is now bent nearly double, and unable to stand at her old lumbering machine. For the present she has had to give up, and is being aided to exist by the mission.

A deserted wife, with seven children to support, has been earning their bread by charring, but has broken down with swollen hands and feet. Means have been provided whereby she can earn in another way her children's food.

A very painful case is that of a mother with nine children. Five earn between them 15s. per week, of which 7s. 6d. goes for rent. There is, however, an elder daughter dying of consumption—a loving, patient girl, who sadly needs care and nourishment. The Mission is endeavouring to supply something of what she so sorely lacks.

On behalf of such every possible effort is being made, while the new convalescent home at Hastings is full of sick and destitute children and ailing poor, likely to benefit thereby. But in carrying this on, help is greatly needed. The superintendent is Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Welcome Home.—An interesting drawing-room meeting, on behalf of Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, was held at the residence of Lady Ashburton, Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Friday afternoon. Various friends urged the claims of the institutions from personal acquaintance with their work.

London's Young Men.

THE Y.M.C.A. ANNIVERSARIES.

IT is stated on pretty reliable authority that our great city has, within its borders, 750,000 young men and women living away from home. What a field for the energies of our churches and our Christian Associations. The Y.M.C.A. seeks to furnish "a home away from home" for young men, and it is doing that work nobly within the limits of its resources. And yet how much remains to be done. Anyone walking down Cheapside on Wednesday afternoon last week might have heard the shrill cries of the newsboys, rising above the roar of the traffic, as they shouted the results of the "Derby" race that had been run on Epsom downs a few moments before. From almost every court and turning in the famous thoroughfare there came eager, excited lads and boys, anxious to buy a paper, and learn the result of the race. One could not but ponder over the state of things thus revealed, and wish that the influence of the Y.M.C.A., or some kindred agency, might extend to these youths who seemed so badly caught with the prevalent fever for betting and gambling.

At the same hour the friends and subscribers of the Central Y.M.C.A. were gathering in the Mansion House for the observance of "Founders' Day." The fine Egyptian Hall was filled for the meeting, after those present had regaled themselves with the refreshments provided by the Lord Mayor.

The secretarial report submitted by Mr. ROBERT BURN, of the Aldersgate-street branch, was brief, but unusually encouraging. The two outstanding items in the history of the year, he said, were the complete extinction of the mortgage and other debts on the three Central Associations, and the final consolidation of their working staff under one committee. The debt had been wiped out through the generosity of Sir George Williams and a number of other City friends, whose united gifts amounted to over £10,000. Mr. Burn went on to detail, in brief, the well understood fourfold work of the Association—that of catering for the physical, social, intellectual, and spiritual necessities of the members and associates. In the three Associations there are over 2,000 full members, with well on to a thousand associates. Altogether over 5,500 young men have availed themselves, in the past twelve months, of the advantages of the Central Associations. The financial statement read by Mr. Burn showed a small balance in hand on December 31, but he appealed for an additional £1,000 to meet the growing needs of the work and its possible extensions throughout this year.

An earnest, homely speech followed from Lord KINNARD (who presided), mainly in the way of appeal for increased help in carrying on the operations of the Association. In speaking of the modern rage among young men for sports and recreations, he referred to a complaint which has been termed the "Morbus Sabbaticus," which comes on about church time on the Sunday, and from which by Monday morning the patient has quite recovered.

Canon Fleming was to have given the first address, but in his unavoidable absence Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND at short notice took his place. He spoke very sensibly and sympathetically of the work of the Y.M.C.A. in all its departments. Then came a clever, witty, and altogether delightful address from Pastor THOMAS SPURGEON. He had found in the Jubilee Volume (which he strongly praised) a motto for his speech, in the telegram sent by a Swiss association to the Jubilee celebration, "Our heart is with you." Deftly applying the phrase to the present occasion, he showed in earnest and fitting words how this might truly be applied to the Association by ministers, Sunday-school teachers, missionary societies, parents and friends of young men, as well as by the angelic hosts, the spirits of just men made perfect, and the Triune God who is not unrighteous to forget such labours of love as those carried on for the welfare of young men in our great city.

A few warm words from Sir G. Williams and Mr. Hugh Matheson brought an enjoyable gathering to a close. We must not omit to mention the delightful song of the students from the Royal Normal College for the Blind, Norwood. It was a treat of the highest and purest kind to hear the mellifluous and harmonious blending of voices, and the expressive rendering of sacred pieces by these afflicted but gifted brethren and sisters. Sir George Williams said he did not think we could expect to hear anything much sweeter or finer in heaven itself.

A still larger assemblage came together in Exeter Hall in the evening, when Sir George Williams presided. Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL, the general secretary, presented an abstract of the report, very much to the same purport as that given in the afternoon. He described the leading features of the year's work, which had been attended with much blessing to many. As to the future, he said that if the resources of the Association permitted, efforts would be made to reach the large body of waiters engaged in the Strand district, as well as soldiers, commissionaires, and other distinct classes of men.

In his presidential address Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS traversed a wider field than that of the London Central branches merely, and glanced at the progress of Association work over the country and throughout the world. The advances made in planting new associations and gathering fresh members into the ranks have been very considerable. Three speeches followed, all of them excellent in their way, and most weighty. The Bishop of BALLARAT addressing himself specially to the young men present, gave a highly interesting and suggestive dissertation on "rope-making," from the words in Ecclesiastes—"A threefold cord is not quickly broken." He pointed out in a very ingenious way how wonderfully the tripartite principle runs through matters material and spiritual, human and Divine. Coming to the practical part of his address, he dwelt on the differing functions of mind, heart, and will. Each is essential to the complete man, and it is only as all three are in harmonious action that a man is saved from the dangerous excesses that arise when any one of the three is left in abeyance. All departments of our nature must be in subjection to Christ, in order to produce the fully-rounded character. Above all things, the Bishop counselled his hearers to discipline the thoughts, which are the source of action and go so far to mould the character.

Foreign Missions was the topic on which Mr. DONALD FRASER dilated, in a way peculiarly his own. In the view and plan of God, he said, there are no racial or national distinctions. His heart yearns for the salvation of every creature, and so it ought to be with the Church of Christ. Mr. Fraser said he was glad that the Y.M.C.A. are giving special attention to the subject of Foreign Missions, and he made a most earnest appeal to the young men before him, for a full obedience to the last command of the Lord Jesus Christ.

An exceedingly cordial welcome was extended to the third and last speaker of the evening, Rev. JOHN WATSON, of Liverpool, more widely known by his nom de plume of "Ian Maclaren." Referring to the vivacious and forceful address of the Bishop, he said he wished to add a fourth strand to the cord, and say something on behalf of "conscience." Perhaps one of the greatest services which the Y.M.C.A. could render to the nation and the national life was to purify, to build up, to strengthen, and to glorify conscience. No amount of culture or knowledge could ever make up for the want of righteousness in human life. No man seemed to him more contemptible than one who constantly returns to theological and religious speculations that are more or less insoluble, while he fails in the duty that lies at his door. Dr. Watson contended, in an able and weighty speech, that if we wish to commend Christianity to men, and to make an impact on our time for the highest ends, it can only be done by righteousness of life.

The Homes of Hope.

WITHIN a few doors of Regent's Square Church may be found—so unpretending and unobtrusive that few suspect its existence—a refuge for the betrayed and wronged, a Home of Hope for the despairing and well-nigh demented. These Homes are specially devoted to the reception of the less degraded class of fallen or wronged girls—who are helped in time of need, with a view to the grand purpose of conversion and permanent restoration.

Describing the class reached, the committee say: "In most instances they were not vicious or depraved young women. Many were cruelly deceived under promise of marriage, others taken advantage of while in a painfully unprotected condition. Others again were subjected to downright violence, while many more were ruined through over-confidingness. In most cases the young women moved in respectable society, were the children of good parents, and were otherwise of commendable and virtuous lives.

"Few cases present more painful and pitiable features than the numerous applications from such unhappy young women—pleading in the most penitent terms for refuge and shelter as the time of their sorrow comes rapidly and inevitably on! To such the committee endeavour to extend the benevolent aid of the Homes. Nor is it only from a compassionate point of view that the committee act thus, important and humane as such a course undoubtedly is. There is another aspect in which such cases have to be viewed. It is highly important to afford aid at such a time, even from an economical point of view, for then, if discreetly aided, the unhappy young woman can be effectively saved from a continued life of sin and shame."

Take an instance. A governess wrote lately:—"Having seen your advertisement in THE CHRISTIAN, and unfortunately being at present in need of just such help as the Homes of Hope afford, I thought I would write on my own behalf and seek admittance there in my time of trouble. I have done wrong, and am anxious to atone for it in every way I can, and God knows that it is plea enough for such a case as mine! Pray send reply."

This young lady—for such she proved to be in social status, education, and manners—was received, and according to her own testimony, confirmed by her life, found salvation in the Home, and is now serving the Lord with thankfulness of heart.

There are, alas! many such. A Christian minister applies for—"A young woman, a daughter of Christian parents, who has fallen through temptation. In our perplexity we turn to you, a helping hand will save her."

Another writes:—"H. F., an attractive young girl, domestic servant, was the victim of violence on the part of her master, when left alone in the house with him." Day by day young women and girls are similarly begging to be saved from falling into further sin.

But with all these eager claimants for aid in bitterest need, the funds are exhausted, and it almost seems the Lord's stewards had forgotten the quiet but valuable work. The Society has laboured for thirty-five years in restoring these heart-rending yet hopeful cases. Last year alone ninety-six cases of this special kind, in addition to others, were received, six being under fifteen years of age, thirty-one between fifteen and twenty, forty over twenty and under twenty-five; and nineteen over twenty-five. The majority have turned out well, seeking to live Christian and pure lives. Yet this valuable mission is threatened to be stopped for lack of funds. If readers could but realise the pitiable yearning of those who are striving to be saved, there could be no longer any failure in funds. All information may be had of the secretary, Mr. W. Hornibrook, 4, Regent's square, W.C.

PEARL FISHER.
[529]

The N.B.W.T.A.

THE COUNCIL MEETINGS.

AS stated in our last issue the Council meetings of the British Women's Temperance Association were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, the meetings being in Westminster Chapel. This building is conveniently situated near the new headquarters of the Association in Victoria-street. The muster of delegates from different parts of the kingdom was as large as ever, and the proceedings of the three days, under the presidency of Lady Henry Somerset, were full of living interest; many questions bearing on the social happiness and well-being of the people were earnestly discussed.

Lady Henry Somerset's annual address, delivered on Tuesday morning, was a most eloquent and comprehensive utterance. We fancy we detect in some parts of it the able touch of Miss Willard, who has been rendering valued assistance to her English sister in the fight.

The full address is published in pamphlet form at the office of the Association, 47, Victoria-street, S.W. After a survey of the growing power of Christian women in influencing national and international life, the topic of "Women's Settlements" among the poor is touched upon and their grand possibilities considered. The Industrial Farm Home at Duxhurst and its noble work of reclaiming inebriate sisters, is described in glowing, heart-felt words, and it is announced that the Duchess of Teck will publicly open the Homes some time this or next month. In this connection a good word is spoken for the London Temperance Hospital and its special helpfulness in the struggle against alcohol. The thorny questions of local veto, compensation, and Sunday closing come in for a large share of the president's attention in her address. These are points on which many different views are held, even among ardent temperance reformers. Lady Henry Somerset does not dogmatize upon them, and seems somewhat to have modified her position in favour of the possibility of retiring licence-holders being to some extent compensated by those who remain in "the trade." The earnest expression of her convictions on these matters of legislation well deserves the fullest and calmest consideration of all workers in the cause.

Having lightly touched on the women's labour question and its bearings on the home life, the important topic of "Purity" claims eight pages of the published address. The space is well occupied, and we sincerely hope that Lady Henry's extremely eloquent, heart-moving, and outspoken review of this vital social theme will receive the closest study of all who can in any degree influence public opinion, and resultant Christian action, in this department of sociology. The much-debated question of "The Woman's Ballot" is not neglected, and the international work of temperance women receives adequate attention. A survey of the baleful power of the liquor traffic among aboriginal races enables Lady Henry to say some timely words as to the service rendered by Chief Khama in fighting that enemy of his tribe. Other matters referred to, with statesmanlike breadth and seriousness of purpose, are Arbitration and the Armenian massacres. In a very pathetic peroration her ladyship says:—

Ever growing in our hearts is the abiding sense that though we see much around us to dishearten and to make us sad, God will not fail. The eventual triumph of right is as certain as that the light which falls upon us to-day had its being in the sun. We dimly begin to see that this infant-school of a world is but the training ground. We need not despair because good seems as yet to be held down by ill. God can make no failure. But our lives must be in the current of his will, for then only can we develop and help forward his plans and learn the lessons He would teach us here. It is this sense of the evolving process of life that alone can bring us courage—the absolute blind belief that though we see it not, God is carrying out his plans and purposes, not only for the individual, but for the great mass of toiling, suffering, struggling humanity.

The subjects brought before the Council at its [530] sessions of the three days were almost legion. Superintendents of the different branches of the Association's work reported on the progress of the year, and all the reports were marked by a hopeful tone of advancing interest. A good deal of time was spent in considering matters of organisation, and some new branches of work were added. Resolutions were submitted and passed, bearing on questions of legislation with regard to the social well-being of the people. Deeply-interesting evening meetings were held in the interests of the "Loyal Temperance Legion," an association of very young people, and of the "Y" branch, which is for young women. Lady Henry Somerset was, of course, re-elected president. The "In Memoriam" service for those workers who have died during the year was a very touching occasion; while the noontide hour of prayer, day by day, was felt to be a season of spiritual refreshing. The delegates were received at the Priory, Reigate, by the president, on Friday, and a visit was afterwards paid to the Duxhurst Farm Homes. The meetings altogether must send the delegates back to their posts in the country with larger views of the importance of the crusade, and with increased determination to continue the warfare.

Franco-Swiss S.A. Work.

By MARECHALE BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

MANY of your readers have taken a sympathetic interest in the work my husband and I have carried on in France and in Switzerland; now that we are about to close our fifteen years' service here and go to Holland and Belgium, I feel I ought to send them a few lines.

We have had peculiar difficulties to face in the land of the St. Bartholomew and of Voltaire. Millions have gone beyond infidelity into stone-like indifference; and millions more are in the state of spiritual darkness indicated by the reply a young man made to me some time ago: "Me? I do not sin!" Correcting himself, he said quite seriously, "Yes, I sometimes eat meat on Friday." Or that of the poor woman who, after reading a New Testament, remarked that the elderly lady officer who had given it to her had written the book very well.

In Switzerland, the difficulties created by the persecutions, expulsions, and imprisonments to which we were subjected for so many years may be judged by the fact that at one time in the space of a few months we had more than 200 refusals to let us the workshops or barns which we sought to obtain as halls; and only this year were we able to obtain a footing in the Swiss capital, all our efforts to secure a hall of any kind having failed for years.

But the presence and blessing of God have ever accompanied the work, so that our Franco-Swiss soldiers' roll has steadily risen every year for fifteen years, and with increasing rapidity of late years with the increase of liberty. Nearly 500 officers have been raised (including those who have gone to re-enforce the work in other lands). All but twenty are Swiss or French. They have given us unfailing joy by their devotion. My husband and I were agreed in saying, after looking over the thirty loved faces in a recent staff council, "There is not one of them of whose thorough godliness, devotion, and self-sacrifice we have any doubt, or towards whom we feel the least distrust." Yet some of them are truly miracles of converting grace.

Those who help the work financially will be interested to know that this has not hindered the giving spirit among the poor working people to whom our soldiers mostly belong, for in the annual self-denial collection they stand second on the list of all the countries where the Army is at work, and certainly our dear comrades in other lands are not backward in self-renunciation.

THE RESCUE WORK

commenced nine years ago. We have now homes at Nîmes, Neuilly (Paris), Zurich, and Lyons.

They are under the leadership of women officers of great devotion, two of whom are French, one Swiss, and the other a Russian princess. Besides the temporary winter shelters and soup kitchens, we have an "orphanage" for little girls born out of wedlock. It is located on the property of our devoted comrade, Major Peyron; it is under his supervision and that of his wife, aided by two capable women officers. A home for boys is also being started. A social work for the homeless out-of-works who pass on the road from Avignon to Marseilles has grown up here in a very healthy way, and the blessing on it is wonderful. Many thorough conversions take place. My husband had a pentecostal time there recently.

It is always difficult for me to write about France, so intensely do I feel. My own feeling of responsibility has been overwhelming in seeing what a door has been opened to me personally. I have been led now for several years to undertake long series of meetings in some large hall of one of the chief cities, and there the many long years' hunger and thirst of my soul have been gratified in seeing a tide of divine grace rise and roll through those very classes considered so absolutely inaccessible to all religious influences. For seven or eight weeks—as last year at Havre, Rouen, and Marseilles, and as this spring at Lyons—one of the largest halls of the city has been crowded nightly with this class. The work of soul-cure has been marked by revelations of moral darkness and complications of sin, which proved that we cannot expect to save souls in France by any other means than complete adaptation, and by patient, painstaking, persevering effort in each individual case. This is why these series of conferences are especially successful in reaching all classes alike, and in producing conviction. Personal dealing alone in each case leads up to that moral miracle—the definite conversion of the French infidel.

It is well known that the decrease of the population in France is owing to a subtle form of sin at the foundation of family-life. How often we meet with the poor broken-hearted wives of dissolute men. There is a gentleman living in sin like so many, and he has never been inside a church for thirty years. It is only after a number of meetings that he gets as far as saying his "Pater" (the Lord's Prayer) morning and evening. And to the lady who passes for his wife, even this seems a miracle. So they come gradually towards conversion.

(To be concluded.)

Jordans in Bucks.

THE annual gatherings in this honoured and venerable spot, held on Sunday, the 24th ult., and Thursday, the 4th inst., were about the usual size this year. The people of Chalfont St. Giles and Chalfont St. Peters, and the towns and villages around, gather in crowds in the expectation of blessing at the "Quakers' yearly meeting," and they are never disappointed. The weather on the 4th inst. was delightful, and the make-up of the congregation very interesting. There were two Congregational ministers, one Baptist, one Primitive Methodist, and three Friends, besides several evangelists and a large number of other earnest Christians. At least one direct descendant of Wm. Penn was also present, and stood by the grave of his great and illustrious ancestor.

The "meeting for worship" was a truly good time, and the message of Gospel love flowed freely. The meeting for business followed, and was attended by many not Friends.

Great hospitality characterises these occasions, Friends from Leighton Buzzard and Hemel Hempstead providing dinner for visitors, and extending a true welcome as far as possible. It was a charming sight to see the crowds after dinner joining in an open-air Bible-reading, and giving such attention to the lovingly-proclaimed Christian verities. Notwithstanding wide differences of opinion, true oneness is felt to reign.

Those who gather at this happy and visible illustration of Christian unity do not meet to find out differences, but realise the presence of the Lord, and prove his uniting power. Would that such occasions were multiplied a thousandfold, and that those who love the same Master and his law were oftener "brought to his banqueting house and his banner over them was love."

Wm. Hobson.
Willesden, N.W., June 6.

Bridge of Hope Mission.

TEN or fifteen years ago the mention of rescue work evoked quite a fervour of enthusiasm, so that it was comparatively easy to excite interest and obtain funds for such work. But to-day, whilst the plodding workers are still toiling at their various posts, interest has in some quarters abated, and, as a matter of course, funds come in less readily. To those, however, who are still faithful to the crying needs, the intense necessity for continued and increasing effort is not less, but rather more apparent.

For seventeen years we have stood, as it were, upon this little "Bridge of Hope," in Ratcliff Highway, in the midst of a thickly populated neighbourhood; and to-day, whilst we thank God for every sign of improvement, we know that the need for helping hands to be held out to the perishing has not diminished one whit. In the early days of our work, before the girls knew of our open door in their midst, a small home sufficed to shelter those whom we found willing to avail themselves of our help. But now, although we have sixty-five beds, they are always full; sheltering in the quiet of our Homes are sixty of "somebody's" daughters, each one with a history which should constrain every mother at least to pray for them. We take them in; we cannot alter that sad story of the past, but the future may be a new and happier life. How many of them have proved it—going out from us after months of quiet training, to live consistently in domestic service.

We try in every way to make the Home life brightly and healthily active, fitting them for future usefulness. Laundry and house-work, knitting and other needlework, keep all hands from the idleness which has been so fruitful a source of ruin to them in the past. When work is done, recreation is as heartily insisted upon, and is keenly enjoyed. We have also the night-shelter, with its provision for an average of 5000 night-shelters, which represents nearly 1000 cases, individually dealt with during the year.

At Chingford and elsewhere there are 145 children in the Cottage Training Homes. Taken away from influences that are only calculated to develop the worst characteristics, and placed in homes that are pure and sweet, these little ones grow physically stronger and morally purer, and often become excellent young servants. Such growth is slow, for the soil, alas, is full of weeds.

And then comes the work—one of the greatest problems—of caring for the young mothers with their infants. How can I tell of this? Again and again it has been said to me in the course of years—"What is the use of helping them? Give it up, and let them go to the workhouse!" But this pessimistic view is in nowise a solution of the grave problem. That the workhouse receives them is no argument against a measure which strives to deal more effectually with these sad cases. We must take them, "of some making a difference." We do not weakly condone the sin, or shrink from all the work of inquiry. The fault has been a joint one, but the burden invariably falls upon the weaker shoulders, and the woman—alas! often so pitifully young—has to meet the bitter consequences alone.

We want some special help for these young mothers. They crowd to our memory as we write. One who came to us quite recently told all her pitiful tale, and then with touching earnestness said, "I do love my little one, and I cannot give it up, and yet the burden is greater than I can bear all alone." She had a situation, with low wages (because, forsooth! she wants to redeem her character), and so out of £14 she must dress neatly herself, and pay for the maintenance of her little one. Is it any wonder that even to her strong mother-love the burden seemed unbearable? We were glad to relieve her in some measure of the strain which she had bravely tried to endure. We are most careful in placing out every child. The tragedies of baby-farming are painfully fresh in our memories, and if we would make these things impossible, responsible people must be willing to help young mothers, so that there shall be no question as to the homes and characters of foster-mothers.

St. George's is in every way a difficult sphere in which to labour, if only for the drink traffic, and the poverty which is its inevitable consequence. In the strength of the Lord and in the power of his might we hold fast, feeling that every evidence of evil only strengthens the reasons for living here.

Christ alone can raise the individual or the mass, and our one sole desire, as a band of humble workers, is to live his life in the midst of our large family, and in going in and out amongst the people. We plead with all to whom his kingdom is dear to help us still, by sending the means that will enable us to devote ourselves more wholly to the spiritual needs of our poor brethren.

(MISS) MARY STEER.

Bridge of Hope Mission, 28, Betts-street,
St. George's, E.

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

THE Mission entertained about 300 Jews and Jewesses on Wednesday, last week, in the grounds of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Though the weather was not very favourable, the guests thoroughly enjoyed the change from the stifling atmosphere of their own wretched courts and houses to the open space and fresh air afforded them at Mildmay. After listening to the Gospel in the open air, the company repaired to room No. 4, where tea was provided. Subsequently Mr. Charles Young delivered his well-known address on the picture, "The Broad and Narrow Way," and a Gospel meeting followed, under the direction of Rev. John Wilkinson, the other speakers being Colonel Morton and Messrs. Cateret and S. Wilkinson.

On the following day the children's turn came, and about a hundred of them, connected with the night school of the Mission, enjoyed themselves during the afternoon in the Conference Hall grounds. After tea, Mrs. Wilkinson conducted a meeting under the trees, in the course of which some of the little ones repeated a large portion of Psalm cxix., under the care of Miss Maddicks, and gave prompt and intelligent replies to questions with reference to that and other portions of Scripture. Addresses were delivered by Mr. S. Wilkinson and Dr. Dixon.

Home of Industry.

DAY by day we go about our happy occupation, searching out the neglected children, though our hearts are often bowed down with grief over the desolations caused by drink and death. We struggle on, nothing daunted, knowing that Canada's broad lands have still room to spare for thousands more of willing and industrious destitute orphan boys and girls whose future here is clouded as to a start in life.

Job, in speaking of similar work ages ago, "caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." To-day we have seen an aged Christian widowed grandmother, seventy-eight years old, gladdened to tears because we received her two grandsons, orphans. She still supports herself by doing plain needlework. Widowers with young children know not what to do with them. Mother has gone, then the home goes, and they become heartless and hopeless. Too often they are deluded by drink, and sink into that dark stream which destroys souls and bodies alike.

Boys come and say, "I want to go away." We need much wisdom to judge each case aright. Time would fail to tell of the answers to prayer we experience. The mail brings us a sweet letter this week from a young girl, now eighteen, taken out when three years old. She is in the same home still as a daughter, now within the fold of Jesus, working, waiting, watching for his return. Will the reader join us in prayer that from all the bands of gathered-in children gone to Canada many will become vineyard labourers?

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

29, Bethnal Green-road.

Armenia.

THINK you that God doth count by thousands? Nay A nation's blood must answer for a nation's crime. Leave policy and asking "Will it pay?" Dare to do Right, and leave the rest to Time. Justice may falter; but the Judge of men Will never rest until the slaughterer's blade Is broken, and the murderer tracked to his vile den; Till bloody tyranny and Eastern lust Are reft of palace and cockade, And misused power trampled in the dust.

HOWARD T. N. USSHER.

Lorne Villa, Geraldine-road, Wandsworth,

Irish Evangelisation Society.

THE report for last year of the Irish Evangelisation Society is, on the whole, of an encouraging character. During the year 1842 meetings were held, in 110 places, at a cost of £1889. Three movable wooden halls were working summer and winter, also two tents in the summer months. The remainder of the work was carried on in town halls, school-houses, barns, and churches. It is found that many Roman Catholics, who would not otherwise come under the sound of the Gospel, attend the wooden halls and tents.

Describing meetings held at Broomhedge, near Lisburn, Mr. E. Peatt, evangelist, says:—"Numbers were unable to get into the hall upon Sunday; and upon week nights we frequently have from 350 to 450, and the Lord is leading many souls to Himself. Last night we had a time of wonderful blessing. The man who gave us the site for a hall professed to receive a blessing, also one of the family where we stay, and many others. When at Brookfield some years ago, I wrote you of the conversion of a Roman Catholic girl; she attends these meetings, and is still firm, though the priest did all he could to get her back. She attends a Protestant place of worship. I am glad to add that another Roman Catholic a few nights ago professed to be saved, and has since attended regularly." At Portlannington, Queen's County, Messrs. Loney and Robinson laboured with much success:—"Many were led to the Saviour, and times of refreshing came to God's children. A Bible class has been started as the result of the mission. It was most encouraging to see people coming long distances to attend the services, and Sunday after Sunday the hall was packed. Many are blessing God that the mission came here."

In the South and West missions were not always free from danger and opposition. The report says:—"We arranged to set up in a wooden hall in a pretty village called Adare, co. Limerick. The evangelists, on arrival, could obtain no lodgings—Roman Catholics refused, and Protestants were afraid of them. An evangelist having taken a room at the inn, the priest desired the owner to take it away from him, and he was obliged to pile up the boards of the hall, not yet erected, and sleep under them until it was put up, and then both evangelists had to live in it. At first only a few children dared to come to the meetings, but gradually the people came out, and at length the meetings were fairly attended, and we believe the Lord sealed his Word to some hearts. At the close of the mission thirteen horses and carts were sent voluntarily by people in the neighbourhood to carry the hall free to the town of Pallaskenry, where it was next set up."

The report shows that the work of previous years is standing. Mr. St. John, of Crown House, Athy, writes: "The importance of your work and its extended sphere has been much impressed on my mind. The many classes it comes in contact with and influences; the extent of country worked; and the honour and dignity of being engaged in this special—this Christ-owned work. And taking into consideration the multitudes who have heard the Gospel clearly and plainly preached unto them, what a small expenditure of money has been incurred to attain such a great result."

In the matter of finance the Society stands well, but it requires more supporters, in order that workers may embrace present opportunities, many and effectual. Certainly those who benefit by the work value it, for the thank-offerings from the places where missions were held amounted in the aggregate to £890. The hon. sec. of the Society is Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, who will supply information and make arrangements for evangelistic meetings.

Sea-Shell and Children's Scrap-Book Missions.—The work of these little agencies has been formally incorporated with the Ragged School Union. It is hoped that by this arrangement continued usefulness will be given to a simple effort, which in the past has been the means of bringing much joy to the poor children. With 200 separate Missions in affiliation, with thousands of afflicted children under visitation in their own homes, with a series of Holiday Homes in the Country and many Pleasant Evening centres in London, it will be obvious that all kinds of gifts can be turned to good and practical account in this vast area of need. The secretary of the R.S. Union is Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Resting Times.

IN THESE sweltering June days the very sound of the word "rest" is welcome; how much more so the thing itself, when the physical frame is exhausted, and the spirit sympathetically feels the strain? It is not good to grow tired of true, honest work, but we cannot avoid becoming tired in it—even in "the Lord's work," so called. For all such tired ones, and especially for her wearied, working sisters, Miss Mason has provided a quiet resting place these thirty years. The name of those who have been helped and reinvigorated during that time must be Legion. Certainly the history of Miss Mason's Houses of Rest in London and Eastbourne prove that the approving smile of God rests on her truly Christian institutions.

The annual meetings of the friends of the House of Rest are always delightful occasions, and the thirtieth anniversary on Friday afternoon, held in St. Paul's Parish room, adjoining the Finchley-road House, was as enjoyable as any we have attended. The room was full, and the restful spirit of the work pervaded the proceedings of the afternoon. Mr. John Cory, a friend of all good causes, was to have presided, but in his unavoidable absence Mr. Seagram pleasantly did the duties of the chair. Mr. Cory sent a letter, and the promise of a good subscription. Miss Mason's statement was of an informal sort, but all the more interesting perhaps on that account. Her report has been published, and we can honestly commend its perusal, not only as a live record of the year's experiences, but as a means of grace. Miss Mason told of the origin of the work in a little cottage in the country thirty years ago, and thanked God for its steady growth to its present dimensions. She felt distinctly moved of God to begin the work, and the call has been clear throughout. The Houses of Rest are specially designed for humble workers, who are indifferently paid and cannot afford an expensive holiday. Therefore they can never be self-supporting like an ordinary boarding-house; though payments are made according to ability. During the past year well on to 900 workers have sojourned in the two houses. The Eastbourne branch has been a channel of blessing, physical and spiritual, to hundreds. Miss Mason was sorry to report the death of a tried and faithful friend, who had largely helped the work of the homes, and who gave the first thousand pounds for the Eastbourne House. Faith in God is one of the corner stones of the work, and we doubt not Miss Mason is well assured that though the human channels may change, the Great Source and Giver of needed help will raise up other almoners of his bounty towards his tired servants. "We do not create needs," she said in closing; "we seek to meet them when they arise."

Our sister always manages to get a goodly platform for her annual meetings, and we notice that some of the same speakers come year by year, so strong and so sustained is their interest in the good work. The first voice heard at last week's meeting was a new one—that of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. Having examined the report, he had come to the conclusion that this effort is clearly on the line of God's purpose, of his presence, and of his power. These three points were very profitably expanded and applied to the circumstances of the gathering. Dr. Monro Gibson spoke as an old friend and near neighbour, but as one who always liked to be present. He rejoiced in the better health which Miss Mason personally is experiencing, and thought she might even look forward with confidence to her jubilee. The key-note of the Homes, he said, is prayer, and the key-note of the anniversaries is always praise. Excellent addresses followed, full of stimulus and timely exhortation, from Rev. W. Lancelot Holland and Pastor Fuller Gooch.

The special need which Miss Mason desires to meet at this time is the "doing up" of the Eastbourne House, which will cost £100. We have observed with pleasure in the printed report that our notice of last year's meeting brought considerable help to our sister in the maintenance of the St. John's Wood House; we trust some reader or readers who know the benefit of these resting times to the busy workers of to-day will again show their interest in a practical form. We must not overlook the Aged Workers' Home which adjoins the main building in Finchley-road, and which our representative had great pleasure in inspecting on Friday afternoon at the close of the meeting. It is a truly delightful home for old women workers whose days of active toil are over. Ten beautiful rooms have each their happy, grateful occupant; three other rooms will be filled when the furniture is provided—a hint to any with superfluous chairs, couches, etc. The house itself, 10, Finchley-road, is a dwelling fit for a queen; Miss Mason acquired it for a third of what it cost. But it is not a whit too good for the King's daughters, coming from many lands, who tarry for a season under its hospitable roof.

[522]

Evangelical Church of Italy.

THE Evangelical Church of Italy last year added five to its list of congregations, and many smaller groups of believers. With 132 additional places regularly visited by evangelists, the field of operations has been enlarged to 208 boroughs, an increase of fifteen in the year. In nearly all the congregations there were signs of revival, and 349 persons were admitted to membership. There are in connection with the Church twenty-seven Sunday schools and six day schools. The twenty-fifth report says:—"Taking into account the ten thousand adherents, we are able gratefully to say that the Lord has graciously permitted the Church to carry forward its proper evangelistic work among a mass of the population equal to about 15,000 persons, including members, catechumens, school children, and adherents."

The report is full of good things. If on the one hand there are evidences that while the Church sows the good seed, enemies are sowing tares, there are also many proofs of Divine blessing attending the work. We make a brief typical extract from the section on Florence:—"The parish priest, Giuseppe Gondolfi, who is now studying for the ministry, has for ten years struggled with his conscience as to leaving the Papal Church. Only this year has the Lord given him the grace to break away and to embrace the Gospel. In his letter of abjuration, with which he joined our Church last June, he says: 'My mind was enlightened by the Holy Ghost to see myself, as in a glass, a poor wandering sinner, in need of Christ, to bestow on me that rest of soul I could nowhere else find, and I embraced Him with my whole heart. For the love I bear to Christ, the only fountain of human salvation, I hereby promise, in full faith and holy enthusiasm, to give myself to the preaching of the Gospel and to spare no efforts to call sinners from error to the truth.'

"There follows a very touching account of the conversion of Giulia Nardi, the beloved wife of Petroni, our evangelist in Mottola. She was a great reader of novels. One night, having nothing to read, she went out, and attracted by the singing, entered an Evangelical Church, and the words, 'Redeemed, not with corruptible things, such as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ,' moved her to faith and penitence. The Bible became her study thereafter. Her conversion awoke the disdain of her companions. 'You will never find a husband,' they said. 'Quite content it should be so,' she replied. On marrying Petroni, she became a true helpmeet. 'Stand firm in the faith, Pietro,' was her daily encouragement to him. On her deathbed, she wished for an hour to be alone with her Jesus, and when her friends were admitted, she said: 'I see a great light; I see Jesus my Saviour. I am not going to die, I shall fall asleep in Jesus. We shall meet again in Paradise,' was her comfort to surviving friends, who once had sneered but now in floods of tears confessed: 'That was a real Christian.'

The foreign secretary of the Evangelical Church of Italy is Rev. J. R. McDougall, D.D., Presbyterian Church, Florence.

Bahamas.—In 1794 a few Christian slaves erected a chapel on the island of New Providence. Having got into a ruined condition, it was recently restored, and has been opened as a mission hall, with encouraging prospects. Contributions towards the cost of renovation may be sent to Rev. George Lester, Nassau, Bahamas.

An Excellent Example.—A Christian lady recently held a prayer-meeting for ladies only at her private house in North London. The friends assembled represented the Church of England, Quakers, Open and Exclusive Brethren, Methodists, Baptists, and Wesleyans. The heartiness with which "Draw me nearer" was sung, showed that the inner spirit of all was the same. What a good thing it is that Christians are beginning to grasp hands over party walls!

Letter to the Editor.

UNEMPLOYED CHRISTIANS.

DEAR SIR,—A short time since an advertisement appeared for a village evangelist (undenominational). A fortnight later a notice was published stating that the number of applications was very great—apparently so very great that no immediate decision could be arrived at. I know nothing of the advertisement beyond the rest of the public, and do not happen to be acquainted with a single person who has answered it, although I sympathised with those who did. Having, however, given proof of a long-continued interest in village life, I beg to be allowed to turn to its advantage the striking fact disclosed in the notice to which I have referred.

One ought to be glad that such a very great number of Christian men are anxious to be of service to one of the noblest classes in the country—the agricultural labourers, but that gladness is turned into sadness when one reflects that the desire of all but one of them will remain unsatisfied.

Is there no help for such a state of things? What keeps us out of the Lord's vineyard until someone hires us? 1. Not belonging to some denomination. 2. The necessary "penny a day" to live.

These are the practical difficulties, and for some of us they are insurmountable, because they arise out of trying to think and act in conformity with the highest authority (1 Cor. i. 10; Matt. vi. 19.)

Are we shut up, then, to a choice between competition for the favour of some human patron, or perpetual exclusion from the Lord's vineyard? Not if we can recognise and act on the principle of a common life in the service of God.

Alone, few of us can do anything. When Christ began to preach the Kingdom of Heaven, He associated Himself with twelve others. And when He sent them forth, He sent them two by two. There must be community in this work.

It may be, among the very many persons waiting to be hired as village evangelists, there may be some who would be willing to combine together, and, as faith in God and faith in each other grew, to become one in things material as well as in things spiritual. And if such a community would labour with their hands during a portion of their time they might reasonably hope to obtain the necessary "penny a day," but if not, will the word of Christ fail? (Matt. vi. 26-33).

More might be said, but I will not trespass on your space further, except to say that I should be pleased to enter into correspondence with anyone interested in this method of work in the villages. —Yours faithfully, RICHD. HEATH.

11, Oliver-street, Rugby, May 23.

Notes from Tibet.

MISS FERGUSON, writing from Yatong, Tibet, describes a visit of the Chinese frontier officer, with his retinue of soldiers and attendants, some of whom received Gospels readily. She says:—"Three of the Chinamen spoke English well, and one of them expressed regret that we could not visit down the valley, because of the ignorance of the Tibetans. This is how the Chinese put the blame on the Tibetans, who would be charmed to have us down the valley. But if we cannot yet go down the valley, the people can and do come to us."

"One real advantage of having the shop is that the people can come freely for Gospels, and pay us a visit without fear. While the Chinese were here the new rupon (officer who has 250 soldiers under his charge) came from Giantze with a few officers and soldiers. The rupon who has been here for six months will retire to a district nearer Lhasa, taking with him the 250 soldiers now spread over the Chumbi Valley, while the new-comers take their place. The rupon who goes to-morrow has often been in here with his silver prayer-wheel, and to all of them Miss Taylor preaches Christ."

"I have long believed that God was mightily working for the opening of Tibet, but now I see Him doing it. Loved ones at home, on whose hearts God has laid this land, never had greater need to pray than now; but they should not forget their praises. It is to faith that God will give the hearts of this people, in many ways quite child-like. The darkness is dense, the working of Satan incessant, but the Almighty can give to his yielded people victory in every battle, and we are proving Him daily."

Among the many points in Bishop Thorold's Life worth noticing, this is certainly one, viz., that he believed in gathering a congregation before spending a lot of money in erecting a building. In the Diocesan Society for South London he went on the principle that men, not buildings, living agents, and not bricks and mortar, were to have the larger part of its income. He could see no use in building churches till there were worshippers to fill them. It is simply sad to see the money that is too often put into buildings while the souls of men are uncared for, and also the wretched attempts that are sometimes made to fill empty or half-empty places by re-pewing them and making them "more attractive." The attraction does not lie in decorations, but in the Gospel preached and in the power realised.

[541]

Great complaint is made of the amount of Sunday trading in large numbers of streets in such parts of London as Walworth. Tradesmen carry on their work as if every day were alike, and even men selling tips for coming races occasionally go about the streets. The question is very rightly asked, Why cannot London enjoy the same quietness on Sunday as provincial cities? The only answer seems to be that London is a law to itself, and often a very bad one.

A significant discussion on the question of Sunday cricket has taken place in connection with the working men's club at South Stoke, near Reading. After an exhaustive debate, over which the chairman of the parish council presided, and in which the freest expression of opinion was given utterance to on both sides, a vote was taken, in which the suggestion was negatived by the working-men themselves with practical unanimity. The chairman himself was in favour of the game being permitted on the village green, and said that he saw no difference between the playing of such games and the opening of museums on the Lord's Day. But in the end his opinion was overborne by the common sense of those who saw what such a legalised innovation would lead to. The working-men of South Stoke are to be congratulated on their manly and far-seeing attitude on this question.

We are surprised, however, at the apparent absence of the religious argument in the discussion, as reported by The South Bucks Advertiser, though the religious objection was doubtless the real reason for the rejection of the motion. And behind this local question, there is suggested the wider one of the general attitude of the nation to the right use of the Lord's Day. Nothing has hitherto so marked the English nation from Continental nations as its feeling of reverence for the Day of Rest as opposed to a day of pleasure. There are, however, ominous signs of a slackening regard for the sanctity of this central Christian institution, and it is of the greatest importance that the highest point of view should be taken with regard to its meaning and place in our lives.

Preachers, teachers, and parents should urge the fact that the Lord's Day is meant to be more than a mere day of idleness. It is the one universal fact in the world of social custom bearing witness that man is a spiritual being, and that the first day of the week is his great opportunity of giving his spiritual nature its true place in his thoughts. The greater the hurry and rush of life becomes in the week, the greater is the need for a day in which we turn our thoughts to those things that belong not merely to time but to eternity, and cultivate the soul's relations with our Maker and Saviour. Any argument on this question which falls short of a clear grasp of this truth, endangers the true conception of what the Lord's Day is, and what it can do for the nation and the individual.

The deterioration of some men of only nominal Christian principles, when once they are removed from their usual restraints, has seldom been so shamelessly revealed as in the letters of a young Englishman published in last week's Independent. At home he would not see a man hung for the world, but at Bulawayo "it is an amusement" to see Matabele spies shot by a firing party standing ten yards off. Crowds go out to see it. It is the finest amusement, the grandest fun, "to pot niggers off in battle," and see them falling like ninepins. The cruel Matabele have done some dreadful things, but dreadful things are being done to them by Englishmen.

It sends a shock to one's heart to read in such a periodical as The Homiletic Review, that "this is the age of murder in all Christendom." For proof it refers to an article in The Forum, which traces the increase in the number of fatal offences, until it reaches a total of 15,000 per annum in Europe, and 10,000 in America, the United States being responsible for an average of between 3,000 and 5,000, and Great Britain for only 250. Italy is responsible for nearly 3,000, the largest number of any country, and Rome is the worst place; Spain comes next. Italy's sad pre-eminence is attributed by some to the existence of the vendetta system, and by others to a general disregard for human life, and readiness to use the stiletto on the slightest provocation. We suspect that the practice of carrying arms has a good deal to do with the sin. Recent events at home must have made many hearts sad and ashamed for the violence and cruelty which still lurk in our midst. Whether we are better or worse than we used to be, we are shamefully bad.

Habit is one of the greatest powers for good as well as evil in life, but there is one direction in which even good habits may become a snare to us. There are many habits that we form, entirely good in themselves, and in relation to our needs at the time of their formation, which ought, as we grow older and wiser, to give place to others still better. For life should expand as well as consolidate, and the true man is as eager to stretch out to a larger and fuller existence as he is to retain and weave into the very fibre of his character the best elements in his past. We should, therefore, take care that we do not fossilise in our goodness, and lose the power of initiative, which is one of the marks of a vigorous life. The mind must be kept open to new ideas, the heart to new affections, the will to new movements that are in the direction of a more ample progress. Whatever we lose of the child-nature, we should guard against losing anything that affords capacity to make new beginnings and form fresh habits. This is in accord with the Divine procedure as well as the highest human wisdom, for

God fulfils Himself in many ways,
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world.

The "strong man" spoken of by our Lord can be no other than the human will. The binding of man's will in the bondage of wrong is antecedent to the entering into the strong man's house and the spoiling of his goods. It is a question of will between men and the destroyer of their souls. Elsewhere the Bible speaks of those who are taken captive by him at his will, not theirs. The will of the Evil One dominates that human will which does not either flee from him or resist him, will opposed to will. God, surely, is on the side of that human will which antagonises the devil.

There is one great change in the family training of this generation which is ominous of danger—that is, the lessening place given in many Christian homes to the Bible. The old custom of learning off by heart passages of the Book, which was perhaps made too much of a burden on the young minds of previous generations, has given place to an almost entire neglect of all attempt to fill the minds of children with the precious words of life which it contains. Meanwhile, the strain of ordinary school life increases, and the amount of literature, absorbing in its interest, but not always elevating in its tone, which is within the reach of young children, becomes ever larger and larger. A great work is being done by the International Bible-Reading Association in promoting the reading of the Bible, but unless parents take a more personal interest in the endeavour to make their little ones commit its teachings to memory, we shall have a generation of people who will be less and less acquainted with the treasures of truth that are stored up in the text-book of true religion. It was one of Paul's sources of joy in the companionship of Timothy that "from a babe" he knew the Scriptures "which are able to make wise unto salvation."

It was a better religion in the eyes of Jesus to care for publicans and sinners than to sit aloof from them, afraid of contamination. The spirit of fellowship is his spirit; the spirit of exclusiveness is the spirit of the world. To find ourselves nearer to our fellow-men is to find ourselves nearer to God also. Jesus was close to men because He dwelt ever in the Father's presence. Something more of his Spirit seems to be descending upon the Church again in these days. It has never been wholly absent, otherwise the Church must have died. It has manifested itself in every revival of religion. It has gone forth in the enterprise of modern missions, and has made the heir of our ancient civilisation the friend and helper of African savages and South Sea cannibals. At home it is coming to us in the spirit of brotherhood and sisterhood which constrains some Christians to go and live in the slums and work for the poor and forgotten.

Time was when men cultivated the art of conversation for its own sake, when in distinguished centres of social life you could hear wit and wisdom poured forth in the most beautiful language. That is an attainment almost if not quite lost. But the Christian art of speaking truthfully, kindly, wisely, ought never to be lost. It is possible of attainment by all, and should be sedulously cultivated. It is not the art of saying a smart or stinging thing, but of speaking the truth in love, and speaking at a time and in circumstances so happily chosen that none but the most wayward would reject or condemn it. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear" (Eph. iv. 29, R.V.) Power to build up implies solidity—not frothy rubbish; "as the need may be" implies suitability to person, to time, to condition—not random talk or conventional platitudes; "that it may give grace," be as salt in meal, have helpfulness in it. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Slavery in Madagascar.—M. Lebon, French Minister for the Colonies, was examined by the committee on the Colonies, on the question of the abolition of slavery in Madagascar. He declared that the erection of Madagascar into a French colony would entail the application to the island of the laws of France, including the law of 1848 pertaining to the abolition of slavery. The government, however, reserved to itself the right of promulgating this law at the time which it deemed fitting, in order that the situation might not be complicated by a too hurried application of its provisions.

Motives in Doing Good.

IT is one thing to do good, and quite another to do good only for its own sake. There is just now a loud call on every side, summoning every one of us into the harvest-field of well-doing. What with tracts, sermons, appeals, our indolents are made remarkably unhappy, and the good, easy-going Christians of other days are sadly put to it to find a refuge from the serious tide that promises to bear us on to broader waters every day.

But, on the whole, we do not see much disinclination to accept the signs of the times, for in every direction earnest hearts and ready hands seem offering themselves to do the work of God. At such a time criticism and caution might seem misplaced; but no true work will suffer, and no faithful heart will be discouraged, by a serious examination of the motives that underlie our service. Everything is to be gained, and nothing to be risked, by a strict appeal to the highest rule of action, and by keeping well in view that fairest and wisest of Christian rules, "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity."

It would, indeed, be a happy thing for the churches and for all good doing if givers and workers could be made to see how much simplicity and singleness of heart enhance their service or their work. The aroma of a gift is in the delicate grace with which it is given, and the charm of any service is in the beauty of its unsullied simplicity.

This is true of all gifts and all services; but it is intensely true of all giving and service in the Christian Church. Nothing is more painful than when a giver looks to "take out" his gift in authority and place and power. It is bad everywhere, but it is positively painful in the church. Equally un-Christlike is the service rendered only for the sake of excitement, or the love of novelty. It would be a shame to hint that these motives obtain to any great extent amongst us, but it would be a greater shame if, while they exist at all, we failed to point them out as grievous hindrances and fatal sins. The offices of a church should be looked upon as serious trusts, and not as personal appendages; as solemn charges given to men in the sight of God on behalf of the people, whose grave duties should be discharged with an anxiety for their right fulfilment, that would exclude all personal feeling and self-will. The mere possession of wealth should be the last qualification for these solemn trusts.

The giving in the church, also for its various work of well-doing, should all be "with simplicity." The widow with her mite, and the rich man with his well-spared gold, should bring their gifts with one spirit to the sacred place; all ostentation and pride forgotten in one holy fellowship of thankfulness. As far as may be, the extent of individual giving should be kept unknown, except when, for example's sake, open confession may be made "to provoke to love and to good works."

But, even then, the spirit of emulation should be the spirit of loyalty to truth and of love for God's work. For the true voluntary principle is as much violated by shaming men into giving as by compelling them to give. It may be impossible in these evil times to rely on pure love and loyalty, but it is well to keep before us the ideal of Christian giving, whether of service or of wealth.

True Christian giving, then, covets no announcements, and true Christian service desires no reward; and neither the one nor the other depends on man. For "men come and men go," but the doing good or good-doing to which the loyal Christian heart has trained itself knows no vicissitude, since it depends on altogether other motives than the presence of a leader or the plaudits of an onlooker. We should always be animated and prompted by that one and only motive—true and lasting and binding—"For His Sake."

Hull.

R. H.

The Insidiousness of Sin.

"A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."—Gal. v. 9.

THIS old proverb is used by Paul twice, once in his Epistle to the 1 Corinthians v. 6, and again in Gal. v. 9. The leaven is always used in the Bible as a symbol of evil, except in our Lord's parable when He likens the kingdom of heaven to the leaven which a woman hid in three measures of meal. In Hebrew there are two words for leaven, one meaning "to boil" or "swell," and the other "anything that is sour or fermented." The English word comes from a root meaning to raise.

Leaven, as it was used of old, and still is to-day, is dough kept till it is sour; then it becomes corrupt, and begins to ferment. For this reason its use was forbidden at the Passover, and at all times was it unlawful in offerings made by fire to the Lord. Even the shewbread was probably unleaven bread. Honey was in the same way forbidden, because it easily ferments. Hence it became a symbol of impurity on account of its corrupting tendency.

As all fermentation rose from corruption, leaven especially was regarded as impure in itself, and the cause of imparting impurity; it was then looked on as a fitting illustration of sin.

In Corinthians Paul speaks of the bad moral influence being like leaven, because it will injure and affect the whole church. In Galatians he is speaking rather of false doctrine and wrong teaching, which will spread and do harm to many. He seems to say, If you begin to admit the old observance of the Mosaic law, you may end by being in bondage to it, and if you cherish the false teachers, their influence will grow and increase like the small lump of leaven in the dough.

When leaven is placed in the dough, it secretly and silently begins to work. By its little bubbles it slowly and surely causes the flour to rise and swell, and it gradually goes on, until it has affected the whole mass. Then the dough becomes expanded and light, and by kneading can be made into bread. It is this spreading, or diffusive tendency, that is the important feature. It has the power to assimilate itself to that on which it acts, and thus to change and alter the substance, until it becomes like to itself. This is just the process which sin carries on first in the heart and life of each one, and then it spreads to other lives and hearts.

If we let evil thoughts and desires lie in our hearts, however small they may seem to us, they will grow. Selfishness is just like leaven: it spreads through all we do in play and work, it makes us envious, greedy, jealous, and proud. We think too much about ourselves, and want our own way in all things, and seek our own pleasure at all costs. It makes us vain and foolish, easily offended, often unkind, and always inconsiderate of others. It permeates all we say, and affects all our conduct.

Evil and sin do more than injure and corrupt the individual; they are actively hurtful to others, and this not merely as an example that is bad, but they are morally and spiritually contagious or catching. What the evil influence does in the individual, it does through the individual to the mass of many individuals.

Sin is like the spot of leprosy that not only spreads over the whole man, but will infect others with the fatal disease. It is like the little fungus called "dry rot," which will impart its growth right through a building. It is like poison in a cup that will affect all in the vessel. The Matabele have poisoned the springs in South Africa, so that if their enemies drink of the water they will die. Sin is like some kinds of diseases that are contagious—that is, transmitted by touch or contact, such as small-pox. Sin is also infectious—that is, infused into the system by being diffused through the air and breathed by people, so that they take the invisible germs of fever or diphtheria. One case of cholera may decimate a whole district. Thus the Black Plague of old was carried from village to city with the most terrible and fatal results. So in nature mildew spreads and may ruin a harvest. Thus blight multiplies and corrupts a whole field of wheat, and the potato disease will sometimes increase until all the potatoes are spoilt, and famine follows, as it has done in Ireland. Such is the awful power of sin, that it is inherent in its nature to damage all it comes in contact with.

So one sinner may make many. One bad example will lead others astray. One bad member of a family gives trouble and suffering to all. One wrong-doer in a class can be an injury to all. One evilly disposed boy may permeate a school. Hence Solomon says, "One sinner destroyeth much good." Like Achan, who by his wickedness caused Israel to sin. No more fearful record could be made than that which is said of some of the kings of old. "Manasseh made Judah to sin." Again and again is reference made to "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin," and "Nadab, the son of Jeroboam, did evil in the sight of the Lord, and in his sin he made Israel to sin." True, indeed, is it that "evil communications corrupt good manners"; they bring wicked thoughts, that increase like a swarm of lice, infesting the heart and lips, and bringing forth bad habits, that work lasting mischief for vice and misery. Little sins are like parasites that feed on living creatures, and eat their way into the flesh, and multiply, until sometimes they kill the life on which they feed. So deadly is the power and influence of sin upon the lives of young and old, that our only safety is in the removal of the old leaven of wickedness and unrighteousness, and the coming in of the new leaven of grace and purity. For this we need the saving power of Christ, in answer to the earnest prayer, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." J. JOHNSON.

Sule.

Jews in Jerusalem.

SIR,—A gentleman, who lately spent many weeks in Jerusalem, writes:—

"In the Jewish quarter within the city the most abject poverty prevails. I have visited all the Jewish 'colonies' outside the walls. What has touched me is the utter hopelessness of these unfortunate Jews. The superintendent at Abraham's Vineyard can tell of the numbers who come crying, 'For God's sake give us work.' Those who are employed at the vineyard do work well and briskly.

"Your society ought to be congratulated on possessing a place like Abraham's Vineyard. This morning some ten poor creatures dragged their emaciated bodies to the vineyard, begging for work. Starvation was on their faces. In a place like this they could find instant relief and employment. The poverty is simply appalling.

"I recommend your committee to concentrate their efforts on the work there and to add to the industries as much as possible."

The above speaks for itself. The committee is most anxious to follow the advice given. An English gentleman is on his way out to Jerusalem to carry on the work as far as, and as quickly as, funds will permit.

E. A. FENN.

41, Parliament-street, Westminster, S.W.

Prayer for Missions.—At the recent anniversary meeting of the American Baptist Missionary Union, Dr. Mabie, the travelling secretary, pressed on his hearers "the prayer register," that is, a list of churches willing to give themselves to special periodic times of prayer for missions. This, by the way, was how Baptist missions started under Carey.

Letters from So. Africa.—22.

I HAVE received the following corrections of passages in my Letters, for which I heartily thank the writers:—

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

SIR,—In this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN there appears one of Mr. Morgan's interesting letters from South Africa. In it he makes reference to a Mr. Bevan, who, he states, is a brother of the late Mr. R. C. L. Bevan. In order to avoid misapprehension, I would ask you to correct this statement. The Mr. Bevan referred to, if any relative at all, must be a distant cousin of the late Mr. Bevan, my father. Thanking you in anticipation,—I am, yours faithfully,

F. A. BEVAN.

Trent Park, New Barnet, Herts, June 14.

The subjoined is addressed to myself, with the request that I should not publish it. But I think that by omitting name and place I shall fulfil the spirit of this request, while I give my readers the benefit of my friend's information.

DEAR SIR,—Having had much pleasure in hearing you preach and speak when here, and having, as is my usual custom, after a time with the children, taken up THE CHRISTIAN (of 12th ult.), I turned specially to "Letters from South Africa, No. 8," and am much troubled to note how impossible it is for friends at home to learn the truth of what is going on abroad. If a letter from you is full of error, what must others be? After a residence here of over a quarter of a century, and in travelling in the Transvaal and the O.F.S., I say that it is not true that the Dutch "will not permit the native to be taught to read, and rule them with the whip, as in the old slavery days."

Lord — would, I have no doubt, most heartily shake by the hand his coachman whom he thought to be a true Christian; would he have the same pleasure in handing over to him his daughter in marriage? Yet that coachman is many generations in advance of a South African native. When will the Christian take a Christian view of both whites and blacks out here?

Why say "No effort seems as yet to have been made to reach these Coolies with the Gospel of Christ"? The Rev. Mr. Booth is not alone here, and he has given up his profession in order to devote himself entirely to the Coolie.—Yours most faithfully,

I scarcely think my Letter No. 8 was full of error, but I am more than pleased to withdraw the two statements to which exception is taken. It really is not so strange that there should have been two inaccuracies as that there have not been many, considering the very various and often contradictory statements and opinions which had to be weighed and sifted before the Letters were written.

My kind censor himself errs in writing as though I had advocated the intermarriage of white and coloured people. I have written exactly the reverse of this. See Letter 5.

Before I left S. Africa I wrote to a clergyman in Durban, who has devoted himself to the Coolies in Natal, expressing my regret that I had done him an injustice, not having heard of his good work, and asking him kindly to send me some particulars of it.

An objection to my remark about the Orange Free State was also made to me by Rev. A. A. L. Albertyn, brother of Rev. Andrew Murray's colleague at Wellington. I received from him, just before I sailed, the following letter, which it gives me much pleasure to insert:—

DEAR SIR,—You will remember that at the Wellington Convention I promised to send you an account of mission work done by the Dutch Reformed Church of the O. F. State, among natives resident within its limits. Since you leave for England within a few days, my time for collecting information is very limited. I am, therefore, unable to give you a full account. From the few particulars I am able to give, you will, however, see that mission work, though not carried on to such an extent as it should be, is not altogether neglected.

There are in the Free State thirty-six Dutch congregations. With one or two exceptions, local mission work among the natives is carried on in each of these, under supervision of the Dutch minister and his Kerkraad—i.e., elders and deacons. In nearly every Dutch congregation there is a native chapel, erected almost entirely by contributions obtained from the members of the Dutch Church. These chapels contain from 100 to 500 seats, and cost from £200 to £1200 each. In nearly every one of these congregations there is a school for native children, and very often an evening school for adults.

Concerning the mission work done in eight out of the thirty-six Dutch congregations, I am able to give you the following particulars:—

Members of Native Congregation.	Native Children attending School.
100	50
50	20
75	71
220	48
90	57
93	33
350	50
316	60

Of the mission work done in the other twenty-eight Dutch congregations I am at present unable to give you any statistics. Religious worship is usually conducted by a native local preacher. Very often, however, this is done by the Dutch minister or one of the Dutch elders or deacons. The sacraments are always administered by the Dutch minister. The missionary spirit is becoming stronger every year in the Dutch Church. The Lord be praised!

In addition to the above, I may state that, according to the Report of the Inspector of Public Schools, just published, the Free State Government gives support to seven (7) native mission-schools, attended (on the day of inspection) by 548 native children.

Trusting that these few particulars will interest you and other readers of THE CHRISTIAN,—I remain yours in Christ Jesus,

A. A. L. ALBERTYN,
Minister D.R. Church.

Rouxville, Orange Free State, May 8, 1896.

THE VOYAGE HOME.

I left Cape Town on the evening of Monday, May 18, in the Arundel Castle. We reached Gravesend on the evening of Wednesday, June 10, and the East India Docks on the following morning. The Arundel, a comparatively new vessel, of the Castle Line, is one of the steadiest boats afloat. Her commander, Captain Winder, who combines the cautiousness of the Scot with the geniality of the Irishman, when his duties did not require him on the bridge or elsewhere, devoted himself to the comfort of his passengers. He is fond of singing, and, weather permitting, generally has a service of song on Sunday evenings for passengers of all the classes.

On one of the Sunday mornings a very timely address was given by Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Edinburgh, on "Unconscious Influence," in which he emphasised the importance of walking circumspectly at all times and in all places; and especially urged the responsibility of setting a good example before the young. Among the passengers was Rev. Mr. Helm, of Grahamstown, with Mrs. Helm, and a son and daughter. The latter delighted the company with her natural and unaffected singing. Mr. Helm, whose prayers on two occasions were memorable, is a brother of the missionary of the same name, of whom a sketch was given in THE CHRISTIAN of May 31.

Those who are not pressed for time find that these intermediate steamers have their own advantages. They call at one or two more places than the mail-boats, and thus give more opportunity of getting ashore during the voyage.

On Sunday, May 24, we arrived at St. Helena, where the Royal Standard was flying in honour of the Queen's birthday. Some of the passengers went to church or chapel, while others walked over to Napoleon's tomb. There was a general air of depression upon the island, which has declined in importance since the opening of the Suez Canal. But we found an illustration of what one man may do, even amidst depressing surroundings. There had been a clergyman—Rev. Mr. Ellis—on the island for four years, during which he endeared himself to the people. He then left for England, and subsequently went to Mafeking. His successor wished to leave, and the people begged Mr. Ellis to return. He complied, and said he was come home—the island was home to him. He only lived five months, but during that time he organised a Church Lads' Brigade, one hundred strong, with forty juvenile recruits. The smartness of these boys, after so brief a time, was surprising. Their drum and fife band played remarkably well. Mrs. Ellis was returning home to England with us, and the band, in boats, escorted her to the ship, playing "Home, sweet Home" and "Auld Lang Syne." On board they sang several hymns, in which others joined. The character sought to be impressed upon the boys may be gathered from the "Brigade Prayer" ("sanctioned by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury").

Grant, O God, that we Thy sons may never be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under his banner, against sin, the world, and the devil; and to continue his faithful soldiers and servants unto our life's end, through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

We landed at Ascension Island for two hours, and subsequently, for three or four hours, at Las Palmas.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Speech Day at the Leys.

AMID the dust of the controversy that has gathered around the work of elementary education in these realms, we are in danger of overlooking the still more important services rendered to the community by our secondary public schools. These influence our youths and young men at an age when they are capable of forming and retaining right views of life, its calls and responsibilities. The Leys School, Cambridge, under the wise and masterful headship of Dr. Moulton, has earned a good degree among the educational seminaries of the country. Those who receive preparation at the Leys for the serious business of life, or for further studies at the University, are trained in all the higher branches of learning, and take on the external polish which such a cultured atmosphere produces. But they also have the advantage of moving among influences that are potent in moulding the moral and spiritual nature. During the eighteen years of its existence the Leys School has gained a wide popularity. Its benefits are open to youths from all parts of the Empire, and though founded under Wesleyan auspices its religious teaching is of the most catholic description.

"Speech day" is always a red letter occasion for the scholars and their relatives, parental or otherwise. Wednesday of last week was probably equal in the interest of its proceedings to any previous reunion. Everybody was thankful to find Dr. Moulton recovered from his attack of illness and able to be at his post. The only drawback to the comfort of the brilliant assemblage was the steadily descending showers, which stopped all outside sport or diversion. Even in that matter, however, there was the satisfaction of knowing that the copious rain was to a great extent saving the farmer from crop-failure.

The school sermon last week, preached in the beautifully-decorated hall by Dr. Monro Gibson, was well worth going from London to Cambridge to hear. A more appropriate address to the young students, or one more likely to be treasured up and remembered, it would be difficult to imagine. Paul's words to Timothy, "That they may lay hold on the life which is life indeed," was the text, and the discourse was a homely, but most valuable and weighty utterance on what constitutes the highest kind of life, and how it may be laid hold of. The address was couched in language easily apprehended, and the illustrations were peculiarly happy.

After a sumptuous luncheon the prizes were delivered to the successful competitors of the year, at another crowded gathering in the hall, and some of the prize compositions were recited by the boys. The Lord Chancellor had promised to present the prizes, but State duties kept him in London, and his place was taken by Lord Walter Gordon Lennox. One of the students, in the course of a clever little speech of welcome, expressed the ardent hope of all that Dr. Moulton might long be spared to direct the affairs of the school.

A Large Gathering of Friends mustered at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday last to welcome back Mr. R. C. Morgan, who for many years past has acted as chairman of this meeting, week by week, on Mondays. Mr. Morgan gave some deeply interesting information about the spiritual condition of the South African Colonies—especially emphasising the important function discharged by the several Young Men's Christian Associations at Capetown, Durban, Johannesburg, and Pietermaritzburg.

Notes on Mission Work.

JOHANNESBURG, S.A.

ONE of the most interesting meetings for natives is held by the workers of the American Board of Foreign Missions in the market square every Sunday afternoon. Here may be seen a crowd varying from two to four hundred natives, all dressed in European garb, and many in the most fashionable male attire. The missionary, who is as innocent as possible of having any complicity in this vain show-off, gets all the blame; and these peacocks among their fellows are a favourite weapon used by despisers of religion and by worldly-minded professors as an argument against all efforts to educate or Christianise the heathen.

One of the first effects of the preaching of the Gospel among the heathen is

THE "EVOLUTION OF CLOTHES,"

And the natural pride and vanity which formerly decked the person out in native fashion gradually goes to the same extreme in civilised equivalents, where the grace of God has not really changed the heart. Many earnest Christians from abroad are pained and puzzled, and oftentimes misled into harsh judgments upon missionary methods, by accepting the oft-repeated statements made to them by apparently sincere and devoted colonial friends that "all teaching and Christianising of the natives has one inevitable result, viz., the spoiling of them, unfitting them for service, filling their minds with exaggerated ideas of their importance," etc. The result is a loss of interest in missionary enterprise, a loss of the sense of responsibility for the welfare of the souls of the heathen, and a loss of faith in the sufficiency of the Gospel of Christ to make saintly characters out of sinners of every nationality.

Traced to its real source, it will be found that this argument has its origin and foundation in self interest. The wish is father to the thought. The argument is generally followed by this perfect demonstration: "I have had four servants, three were what are known as raw kraal natives, and the fourth a Christian kaffir from a mission station. This Christian kaffir was the worst of the lot, lazy, impudent, wanted higher wages, always wanting to be off to school or church, and generally unreliable. Give me a raw kraal kaffir before your christianised native!" Put into simple language, it is this: "Natives were created to be the everlasting bond-servants of the white man; the proper course of treatment is to keep them in absolute ignorance; the raw kraal native must remain the raw kraal native to the end of the chapter through all his generations, lest I should be incommoded, lest perchance my servant might inconveniently want to go to church on Sunday, or to school some week evening." Change the colour of your servant, and you find the same self-interest insisting upon the lower classes of whites being treated in the same fashion. They were born to be servants, and to rear their children as servants for the favoured upper and middle classes. What right have they to send their daughters to be dressmakers and shop assistants, or to have any aspiration above being domestic servants all their lives? The impudence of the suggestion almost takes one's breath away! Surely ministers of the Gospel should be prohibited from preaching the communistic doctrines of Jesus to the lower classes, and board schools should be rigidly suppressed. The natural result of education is aspiration, and aspiration means self-improvement.

CHRISTIAN AND KRAAL.

In the large majority of cases, the so-called "Christian" native is no Christian at all; he is only a native who has adopted European clothing, and begun to attend some night-school, and picked up some slight smattering of the English language. They are rendered more susceptible to the vices of the European, exposed to the undue familiarity of foolish employers and degraded white fellow-servants. The temptation comes to dress inordinately, and to ape the manners and habits of the European; and, without the controlling graces of the Spirit, it would be strange indeed if any human being of any race were not under such circumstances frequently injuriously affected.

The raw kraal native, remaining wedded to his heathen customs and excluding himself by virtue of his lack of understanding of their language from familiar intercourse with Europeans of low moral standing, remains in many cases more servile and unpretentious than the native who is beginning to emerge from serfdom, and whose horizon has suddenly expanded. But the vices of civilised society force themselves also upon him; the drink-fiend knows no distinction; the habitations of the white man draw nearer to his formerly distant, secluded home: his wives and children are subjected to the new temptations, and there is no counteracting principle to protect them from their degenerating influences, even though it were admissible for a Christian to acquiesce in the proposition that the native should be preserved in his original darkness, superstition, and ignorance.

BLIND SELF-INTEREST.

In insisting upon the one point, that the raw heathen makes a better servant than the semi-educated native, self-interest quietly and complacently closes its eyes to the darkness, the superstition, the cruelty and the abominations of heathenism; and leaves entirely out of account the value of the soul. Fancy the appropriateness of a sentiment like the following from the lips of a professing Christian: "Mission work spoils heathen natives as servants. It is of first importance that we have good servants. Rather let the heathen souls perish and go down to eternal darkness than spoil them for service." Yet this is the logical sequence of the application of the objector's proposition.

Admitting that in the preliminary stages of education some of the natives may in measure be unduly inflated with ideas of their self-importance, a measure of education is absolutely necessary if they are ever to read their Bibles and be led by the Holy Spirit. The desire for education arises instinctively in many of their hearts, and these will gain the education one way or another. Will any Christian be bold enough to say that in such a case it were better to let the native learn without the controlling and sanctifying principles of Christ's Gospel, than to associate the two, making one the handmaid of the other? The only antidote for human pride and self-exaltation is crucifixion; the only soil in which true humility will ever flourish is in the renewed heart. These are only to be found in Christianity; and Christianity must be taught before it can be accepted. Thank God there are monuments of the grace of God—Christ-like lives adorned with the fruits of the Spirit, amongst the people of every tribe in South Africa, to prove that it is not the fault of the Gospel but the natural corruptness of the unregenerate heart that is the cause of shortcomings. Christian people little think what dishonour they cast upon the Saviour, and what leanness they bring into their own souls, when they so readily assent to the allegation that "preaching the Gospel to and teaching the natives, does more harm than good."

The open-air meeting on the Market-square is conducted partly in the Zulu language and partly by addresses in English, translated by an interpreter into Zulu. The singing is in Zulu, and is heartily taken up by the crowd. The leader, Rev. H. Goodenough, announced a few Sundays ago that the voluntary contributions at these open-air services for the year just closed had totalled over sixty pounds sterling.

A. W. B.

Bible Education Council.

In the Chapter Room of Anderton's Hotel, on Monday evening, a special meeting of the Bible Education Council was held, under the presidency of Canon Trench, formerly of Notting Hill, for the purpose of considering the effect of the Government Education Bill on the religious education of the country. The council was called into being at a time when unsectarian religious education was seriously threatened in the London School Board, and it comprised many leaders of Evangelic thought. A resolution was carried to the effect that Clause 27 of the Education Bill, which makes provision for sectarian religious instruction in public elementary schools, imperils the Biblical and simply Christian religious instruction which the council exists to protect; and should it become law it will necessarily engender bitterness and strife between those who value the religious education of the young, and will strengthen the hands of the advocates of purely secular instruction in all State-aided schools.

In the course of discussion Rev. R. Taylor (Upper Norwood) said that he had never taught even his own children the specific doctrines of the Westminster Confession, because he felt that to convey dogmatic teaching to children would have the effect of creating a conception of God which was not Biblical, was not true, and was not embodied in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE St. Giles' Christian Mission enjoys the good word of all who are acquainted with its beneficent operations. For thirty-six years it has been working, and all along it has been growing, so that it is not easy to-day to summarise its agencies. While work for the good of the sick and helpless, and the poor in general, in their haunts of squalor and circumstances of helplessness, must be taken into account, it is not astonishing that operations among discharged prisoners, juvenile offenders, and the wives and children of such as have had to suffer for the committal of crimes, should specially impress the magisterial mind, and ensure for the Mission the patronage and support of judicial and civic authorities. So, not for the first time, the annual meeting was held this year in the Mansion House. The meeting was held on Monday afternoon, when the Lord Mayor presided over a numerous and sympathetic assembly.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, treasurer of the Mission, read a report full of interesting facts and figures on the evangelistic, social, and philanthropic work. Dealing with work among discharged prisoners day by day from the London local prisons, this statement showed that 29,375 such persons were released last year. During the same period the Mission provided 20,309 prisoners with a free meal immediately upon their release, and read and expounded God's Word to them. Moreover, 6353 have signed the temperance pledge, and 5491 were assisted to make a fresh start in life. "I need not point out," remarked Mr. Bevan, "that if the Mission did nothing else but assist over 5000 discharged prisoners annually, it would do a work of great importance to London, and, in fact, to the community at large." Friendless juvenile offenders came from all quarters, judges and magistrates continually sending such to the Boys' Homes of the Mission, where some 500 are received annually.

After some sympathetic remarks by the LORD MAYOR, and a brief statement by Mr. WM. WHEATLEY, superintendent of the Mission, an address was delivered by Mr. MONTAGUE H. CRACKANTHORPE, Q.C., taking account of the serious amount of crime chargeable to young people, and referring with satisfaction to recent measures, administrative if not distinctly legislative, whereby such offenders, if committed to prison, are kept severely apart from older and hardened criminals. Mr. R. M. LITTLER, Q.C., chairman of Middlesex County Sessions, spoke of the obligation of the community at large to the Mission for its excellent work. Mr. T. A. DENNY deplored the evil surroundings in which so many come into the world, making it easy to believe that thieves may be born as well as made. Dr. ROBERT ANDERSON, Assistant-Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, followed, maintaining that the community has a right to be protected from the ravages of professional criminals. He specially commended the Mission for its work of rescuing young people, who might otherwise swell the army of crime and become the criminals of the future.

Dr. Pierson at Mildmay.

LARGE audiences gathered on Thursday evening, Friday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday evening last, to hear addresses by Dr. Pierson. The address on Thursday evening was a well-sustained plea for the authority of the whole canon of Scripture, as contained in the Old and New Testaments. On Friday afternoon the topic was "The Believer in Relation to the Holy Spirit," a subject that always elicits the deepest interest. On Friday evening Dr. Pierson dealt with the vast subject of "The Lord Jesus Christ as Prophet, Priest, and King." The interest increased meeting by meeting, until on Sunday evening the hall was crowded with an earnest and attentive congregation.

This week Dr. Pierson is delivering farewell addresses at Exeter Hall. The last of the series will be delivered this afternoon at 3 and 8 p.m.

Mr. Tinworth's Works.—No living artist has drunk more deeply and simply into the spirit of Scripture story than the sculptor in terra cotta, Mr. George Tinworth. Some exceedingly interesting additions to his gallery of Bible pictures were exhibited at Messrs. Doulton's show-rooms, Lambeth, last week. They are chiefly scenes from the life of Moses, and exhibit all the sacred imagination and skill in execution that mark Mr. Tinworth's productions. We trust his deft and reverent hand may long retain its cunning.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 21.

"THOU SHALT BE GATHERED INTO THY GRAVE IN PEACE."—2 Kings xxii. 20.

AS a matter of fact, Josiah's death was not a peaceful one. He persisted in going into conflict with Pharaoh-nechoh, king of Egypt, against the latter's earnest remonstrance (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 20); and, in consequence of his hardihood, met his death. His servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo (ch. xxiii. 30). Is there, then, any real contradiction between the prophet's prediction and this sad event?

Certainly not! The one tells us what God was prepared to do for his servant; the other what he brought on himself by his own folly. There are many instances of this change of purpose in the Word of God. One of them is known as "his breach of promise," or "altering of purpose" (Num. xv. 34, marg.). He would have saved his people from the forty years' wandering in the wilderness, but they made Him serve with their sins. He would have gathered Jerusalem as a hen gathers her brood, but she would not.

Let us beware lest, a promise being left us, we should seem to come short of it; lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, and frustrating some blessed purpose of his heart. Eye hath not seen, nor heart conceived, what He has prepared for those who love Him. But we may limit the Holy One of Israel; we may so restrain Him by our unbelief as to stay Him from the mighty works which are in his thought to do for us.

MONDAY, June 22.

"LIKE UNTO HIM WAS THERE NO KING BEFORE HIM, THAT TURNED UNTO THE LORD WITH ALL HIS HEART, AND WITH ALL HIS SOUL, AND WITH ALL HIS MIGHT."—2 Kings xxiii. 25.

This chapter is a marvellous record of cleansing and purging. We are led from one item to another of drastic reform. Nothing was spared that savoured of idolatry. Priests and altars, buildings and groves came under the searching scrutiny of this true-hearted monarch; and, as the result, it was possible to keep such a Passover as had not been observed during the days of the judges or the kings (v. 22).

How much our enjoyment of the solemn feast depends upon our previous efforts to put away from our lives all that is inconsistent with the law of God. We hardly realise how insidiously evils creep in. Before we are aware, we have fallen beneath God's ideal, and adopted the customs of our neighbours, or of those with whom we come into daily association. All such declension hinders our joy in keeping the Passover. It is needful, therefore, that there should be times when we turn to God with fresh devotion, and in the light of his holy truth pass the various departments of our life under review, testing everything by the Book of the Law. In Josiah's case, the sacred volume was recovered from long neglect; in our case it needs to be re-read in the light of higher resolves. This would be like a new discovery. Our ultimate rule is always the will of God, appreciated with growing clearness, and used as a standard by which to judge the habits and tenets of our life.

TUESDAY, June 23.

"HE CARRIED OUT THENCE ALL THE TREASURES OF THE HOUSE OF THE LORD."—2 Kings xxiv. 13.

Carried to Babylon at this time were doubtless the sacred furniture of the Temple, and amongst the rest the golden vessels in which afterwards Belshazzar drank wine with his lords, wives, and concubines, as they praised the gods of gold and silver. Amongst the rest was the golden candlesticks that afterwards illumined the terrible inscription, "Mene, mene." But the eye of God was on them, and they were safely brought back in Ezra's days, for we are expressly told that Cyrus took out of the temple at Babylon the gold and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple in Jerusalem (Ezra v. 14). And they were safely weighed in the house of God by the little band, which acted as their convoy across the desert (Ezra viii. 33.)

[536]

May we not take the story of these vessels as illustrating God's care for his people? They are precious vessels in his sight, to bear his name and perform various offices in his house. Sometimes, alas! they are carried into captivity, and serve other purposes than those for which they were originally designed. But even then God's watchful eye is upon them. He will bring them again from the land of strangers and restore them to their former place. Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as streams in the south. Too long we have been alienated from our loftiest purpose. Make us purged and cleansed vessels, meet for thy use, and prepared to every good work.

WEDNESDAY, June 24.

"FOR HIS ALLOWANCE THERE WAS A CONTINUAL ALLOWANCE GIVEN HIM OF THE KING, EVERY DAY A PORTION, ALL THE DAYS OF HIS LIFE."—2 Kings xxv. 30.

Is it to be supposed that the king of Babylon took more care of Jehoiachin than God will take of us! Jehoiachin had resisted his suzerain, and cost him a great expenditure of men and treasure, but nothing which had transpired in the past hindered this provision of a daily supply. Will God do less for thee, his child? Would it not come as a relief if you were to be told that, from this moment till you die, you could always have a sufficient provision of all the necessities of life? But, if you are a child of God, that promise has already been made. Do not be anxious, but believe that God's word is at least as sure and as efficient as man's.

The allowance was continual.—It did not begin with plenty, and gradually dwindle to scraps. The supply was maintained year after year. Will God drop off your supplies, think you, because He forgets, or because his power is exhausted? You know that each supposition is alike untenable. What He has done, He will do. The storehouses of nature open to his key. His are the cattle on a thousand hills.

Every day a portion.—Jehoiachin had not the provisions of a year or a month put down at his door, but as each day broke he was sure of the day's portion. It may be that God is dealing thus with thee. Only manna for the day: daily strength for daily need.

All the days of his life.—Jesus is with us "all the days," and He is the Bread of God, in whom is every property necessary for life. All the days are included in God's care for us, of birth and death, of sunshine and shadow. All must be well, because all is foreseen and provided for.

THURSDAY, June 25.

"ADAM, SETH, ENOSH, ETC."—1 Chron. i. 1.

This is an ancient graveyard. The names of past generations who were born and died, who loved and suffered, who stormed and fought through the world are engraven on these solid slabs. But there is no inscription to record their worth or merit. Just names, and nothing more.

How strange to think that if Christ tarry, our names will be treated with the same apathy as these. So far as this world is concerned, we and all our generation shall pass away. As the flowers of the field, so we shall perish from the earth.

But each of these lives fulfilled a necessary part in the progress of the race. Each was in turn father and son, each passed on the torch of life, each contributed something to the fabric of humanity rising like a coral island from unknown depths. The hill-tops would not be possible but for their lower courses which touch the valleys. We could not have the somebodies without an immense number of nobodies. The flowers of the race were prepared for by the slow progress of the plant through years of growth.

But each was the object of the love of God. Each was included in the redemptive purpose of our Lord; each contributed some minute particle to his nature; each is living yet somewhere; each will have to stand before the judgment bar of God; each is predestined to live in the unknown world that lies on the other side. It is a stupendous thought, to imagine the whole race, headed by Adam as hero, like one vast far-spreading tree. Ah, reader, be sure that thou art taken out of the first Adam, and grafted into the second—the Lord Jesus!

FRIDAY, June 26.

"THESE ARE THE SONS OF ISRAEL."—1 Ch. ii. 1.

It is noticeable how irrevocable the Divine sentence is on a human life. Of Er, the grave, impartial voice of Scripture says, he was "wicked in the sight of the Lord"; of Achan, he was the "troubler of Israel, and committed a trespass in the devoted thing." These sentences are recorded with such precision as to admit of no dispute, no appeal, and they sum up the life.

But was there not much else in each of these men? Were these not tender or chivalrous moments? Did they never shine for a moment in some transfiguring ray? Was all their life dyed with these sad and sombre hues? Ah, it may have been so—still the one thing that the Scripture tells of them is the sin in which all their life seemed to culminate and express itself. With unerring accuracy God can distinguish the one act or word by which the character is revealed. He may forgive it, but He holds it up as the epitome or summary of what the life was.

Let us see how we live, walking before God with reverent fear, watching and praying, because any moment may give birth to a word or act, which may characterise our life in all coming time. But, it must be remembered that all these things emanate from the heart. The issues of life are thence, it must be therefore watched with all care. What a man thinks, that he is. The chance word or act is a true indication of the inner life. Therefore it is preserved for all after time by the voice of God. See that your heart is perfect before God. There is forgiveness, but there is also the unerring verdict.

SATURDAY, June 27.

"THESE WERE THE SONS OF DAVID."—1 Chron. iii. 1.

But how different they were to the Son of David! Contrast any one of these with our blessed Lord, and what an infinite chasm between them. Solomon was the most reputable of them, but a greater than Solomon was born in Bethlehem, and cradled in a manger. Surely the least earnest must be struck with the difference in these sons, and that Son. But in this difference is there not the most conspicuous proof of the miracle of his birth? Even were there no story of his wondrous birth, we should have felt convinced that something like it must have happened, in virtue of which He should be the Man of men, the one absolutely flawless and perfect flower on the stem of humanity. With new emphasis we read the familiar words, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that Holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

We, too, who have been born once, need to be born again. To be born of a David does not ensure perfectness of heart and life. We need to be born again, or we may repeat the sins of an Ammon, an Adonijah, an Absalom, though born of parents who are after God's own heart. It is a serious question to ask whether, like David, we have called great David's greater Son our Lord. This is the true mark of the new birth. The recognition of the supreme lordship of Jesus is imperative, for the peace and right ordering of the heart and life. So we pass to our true stature in Jesus.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

The Cattle of the Bible.

THE domesticated cattle of Palestine are very much like our own, but there is not that diversity amongst them for which this country is famous. In some places the animals are larger than others, but this difference is occasioned by the way in which they are fed. In the days of the Israelites' prosperity they were far more numerous than now, and were treated in a better fashion.

One reason for that was, cattle were constantly needed for the sacrifices, and as it was necessary that every animal that was brought to the altar should be absolutely perfect, great care had to be taken that they did not deteriorate.

Another reason was that in those days the ox was largely fed and fattened for the table, but now the flesh of the cattle is practically unused as food, that of the sheep or goat being always employed. Calves used to be largely used for food; for example, in the parable of the prodigal son, where the father prepares a great feast in honour of his son's return, orders the fatted calf to be killed. Abraham, too, when he was visited by his three heavenly guests, had "a calf, tender and good," killed for them.

But the chief use of the ox has always been that of an agricultural labourer, ploughing being always done by them, and many allusions are made to this in both the Old and New Testaments.

When understood in this sense, oxen are almost always spoken of in connection with the word "yoke," and as each yoke comprised two oxen, it is evident that the word is used as we employ the term "brace," or pair. The tolerably stout beam of wood is cut of a sufficient length to rest upon the necks of the oxen standing side by side, and a couple of hollows are scooped out to receive the crest of the neck. In order to hold it in its place two flexible sticks are bent under their necks, and the ends fixed into the beam of the yoke. In the middle of this yoke is fastened the pole of the plough or cart, and this is all the harness that is used, not even traces being required.

Such a rude implement as this would be likely to gall the necks of the animals, unless the hollows were carefully smoothed, and the heavy beam adapted to the necks of the animals. This galling nature of the yoke, so familiar to the Israelites, is very often referred to in many places in the New and Old Testaments. The earliest mention of the yoke in Scripture is a metaphor.

After Jacob had deceived his father, in procuring for himself the blessing which was intended for his elder brother, Isaac comforts Esau by the prophecy that, although he must serve his brother, yet "it shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck." And our Lord Himself uses the same metaphor in the well-known passage, "Take my yoke upon you, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

The instrument with which the cattle were driven was not a whip, but a goad. This was a long stout stick, armed with a spike at one end, and having a kind of spud at the other, with which the earth could be scraped off the share when it became clogged. As a weapon it was often used.

After the land was ploughed and sown, and the harvest was ripened, the oxen were used again, first for threshing out the corn, and next for carrying or drawing the grain to the storehouses.

Threshing was a very simple affair; a circular piece of ground was levelled and beaten very hard and flat; then the corn was thrown on it, and a number of oxen were driven about on it till the constant trampling of their feet had shaken the ripe grain out of the ears. This was very hard work for the oxen, and this is probably the reason why God commanded that they were not to be muzzled, but were to be allowed to eat as much as they liked.

In the winter the chief food of the cattle was the straw and chaff which remained on the threshing-floor after the grain had been taken away, for the Jews had no idea of keeping the grass by making it into hay as we do.

Except a few yoke of oxen, which were kept in order to draw carts, the cattle were turned loose for a considerable part of the year, and ran about in herds like wild animals, and it is to this habit of theirs that many scriptural allusions are made. For example, Ps. xxii, "Many bulls have compassed me, strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. They gaped on me with their mouths (or their mouths opened against me) as a ravening and a roaring lion." This alludes to the curiosity of cattle, which have a habit of following an object which they do not understand or dislike, and surrounding it with looks of grave wonderment. Even in their domesticated state this habit prevails. When I was a boy, I sometimes amused myself with going into a field where a number of cows and oxen were grazing, and lying down in the middle of it. The cattle would soon become uneasy, toss their heads about, and gradually draw near on every side, until at last they would be pressed together closely in a circle, with their heads just above the object of their astonishment. Their curious, earnest looks have always been present to my mind, when reading the passage above quoted.

The Psalmist does not necessarily mean that the bulls in question were dangerous animals. On the contrary, the bulls of Palestine are gentle in comparison with our own animals.

The custom of turning the herds of cattle loose to find pasture for themselves is alluded to in Joel i. 18, "How do the beasts groan! The herds of cattle are perplexed because they have no pasture." We can easily imagine to ourselves the terrible time to which the prophet refers, "when the rivers of water are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness," as it is wont to do when a spark falls upon grass dried up and withered by reason of the sun's heat and the lack of water. Over such a country, withered by drought and desolated by fire, would the cattle wander, vainly searching on the dusty and blackened ground for the tender young blades which always spring up on a burnt pasture as soon as the first rains fall. Moaning and bellowing with thirst and disappointment, they would vainly seek for food or water.

The cattle were branded with the mark of their owners, so that in these large herds there might be no difficulty in distinguishing them when they were recaptured for the plough and the cart. On one of the Egyptian monuments there is a very interesting group. It occurs in the tombs of the kings at Thebes, and represents a ploughing scene. The simple two-handled plough is being dragged by a pair of cows, who have the yoke fastened across the horns instead of lying on the neck, and a sower is following behind, scattering the grain out of a basket into the newly-made furrows. In front of the cow is a young calf, which has run to meet its mother, and is leaping for joy before her, as she steadily plods along her course.

The Israelites considered keeping cattle as an honourable occupation. Saul, even after he had been appointed king, was acting as herdsman when the people saw the mistake they had made in rejecting him as their monarch, and came to fetch him from his retirement.

Chief among the multitude of idols of the Egyptians was the god Apis, represented by a bull; and during the long residence of the Israelites in Egypt they became so accustomed to seeing this animal worshipped, that even when their minds were filled with the miracles that had been wrought to deliver them, and with the cloud of Sinai before their eyes, Aaron himself made an image of a calf in gold, and set it up as a symbol of the Lord. And in spite of the terrible and swift punishment that followed, the idea of ox-worship still remained among the people, for 500 years afterwards afterwards Jeroboam, "who made Israel to sin," made two calves of gold, and said to the people, "behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. And he set the one in Bethel, and the other he put in Dan." Many other kings followed his example, for we are told they "departed not from the ways of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin."

Extracted from Rev. J. G. Wood's "DOMESTIC ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE." (Longmans, Green, & Co.)

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

No. 15. Minnie Jolly, South Africa. No. 15, 16, 17. Alice Henderson. No. 17. Walter Henderson, West Indies. No. 21. Jean Scott and W. Ernest Craik, Canada. Vera Sigström, Mary Johnson, Eva Bennett, America. No. 20. Tessie Ben Orlie. No. 13. Queenie Dale. No. 17. Eugénie Marais.

No. 23 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

Fannie and Alec Waring, Violet Broxholm, Bella and Thomas Mack, Charles Bewley, Arthur Barker, Lillian Ryan, Christine and Hannah Barker, Elsie, Philip, and Helen. Willoughby, Keith and James Miller, Margaret Macphie, Oswald Mayon, A. Rowland, Lois Beard, Marguerite Potter, Willie McMurtry, Kathleen Foweraker, Arthur Cordell, Dorothy Morrison, Florrie Smith, C. A. Stennett, Walter Thomson, Elsie Warren, Ezra Matthews, Kathleen Cole, Mary and Ruth Braithwaite, Emily and Florence Palmer, Vernon and Jack Clarke, Elsie Simpson, George and M. A. Cowell, Irene and Gladys Gill, Tom, May, Lena, and W. J. Hunter, Christie and Reginald Lawson, Martha and Catherine Rogers, Caroline and Maggie Wight, Marion Connell, Elma Tebb, Raymond Harbottle, Daisy Amett, Edward Rainey, Hetty and Harold Wodson, Smelair and Moffat Jackson, Richard Lewis, G. E. Ethel, and E. A. Paisley, Ada Saunders, Florence White, Joanna Pearman, Edith Corrick, Beatrice Cashford, Eva Winnemay, Lily Clarke, Cecil and E. Yebury, Dorothy and May Vickers, William and Roberta Meikle, Muriel Shaw, Harriette and Lottie Orr, Gerald Heaton-Smith, Annie and Mary Fleming, H. Morris, Christabel Swift, Jane, T. A., and K. G. Kirkpatrick, Margaret Rased, Nina Coote, Elsie Jones, E. T. King, Bertha Steadman, Barbara Sheild, Dora and Edith Corrie, Lucy Soltan, Elma, Dorothy, and Annie Grove, Kathleen and Brereton Code, Willie Wainstein, Fritz Tatzlaff, Fred Wainstone, Mary Ormiston, May Hamson, Margery and Trevor Matthews, E. H. Dora, and Arthur Jones, Louis Berthe, Arnes Head, Beulah Cheal, Daisy Knight, Charles Sanders, William Corrick, Sydney Cashford, Geo. de Jakman, Florence Meredith, Charlie Millicede, Jessie West, Reginald Findlay, Muriel Joseelyne, Lizzy Hill, Nettie Thomson, Ethel Williamson, Walter, Maggie, and Jessie Corrie, J. T. Stanley, Violet Stradert, M. Daisy Bentley, Dora Walters, Edith and Margaret Gray, Bertha Courtney, Mary Start, Ada Heap, Ethel and Kathleen Light, Maurice and G. G. Williams, Charlie and Marjorie Hogge, Sissie Watts, Dora and Kate Symes, Rabie Vincent, Daisy Petrides, John and Eva Gray, Madeline Irwin, Bertha Kelsey, Leslie E. Frank, Frances Devenish-Meares, Frances Bennett, May Meredith, B. and H. Poole, Ethel Morgan, Harry and Bruce Malahar, E. T. Elliott, Rose Wyllie, L. Culley, P. Leigh, Sydney Marston, Oswald, and Horace Roberts, Bertha Fowler, Kate Giddings, Ruth van Millingen, Edwin and Robert Poole, Netta and E. B. Black, Nellie Benney, Edith Hearn, Ada and Mabel Davis, Katherine, Rowland, Teresa, and Lilian Blackie, Raymond Theobald, Leonard Browne, Jessie Bone, Marcus King, Margaret Davison, Lionel and Gladys Calvert, M. H. Daniels, Genina Grouhliac, Stella Byrne de Satur, Cyril Bennett, Hal and Victor Armstrong, Conyers Baker, Ruth Harrison, Angela McGulikan, Elma Ishmail, Emily Biddcombe, A. T. Benoh, John Menzies, Cecelia Reid, Norah, James, and Edith J. Lowe, Fredda Hutton, Amy and Maude Nottage, Arthur and Edith Quick, Josie, Elma and Lena Cheal, Agnes Miln, Katherine Blair, Ruby and Daisy Allen, Thomas Rayner, Eva and Ethel Hutchings, Christine Arnold, Eva Monti, Meta and Fan Trotter, Thomas Harris, Frances and Maudie Wood, Percy and Cecil Colett, Mary Thorne, Clara Lyddon, Louisa Morse, Nellie and Arthur Crouch, Emily Norster, Walter Stainer, Elmina, Jessie, and Isabel Deane-Roe, Alice Skinner, Annie and Edith Clarke, John and Margaret Hogg, Ethel Fielder, Lavinia Barnes, Frances and Dorothy Harte, Edna and Josie Gekran, Kate and Maggie Fletcher, Grace Dawson-Scott, Ethel Walls, Irene Hutchinson, Eileen and Theodore Roberts, Grace Wright, Eric Chance, Nellie Lovegrove, Grace Colvin, Annie Iredale, Kathie Arrol, Theodore Hill, Connie and Alice Roase, Ada and Willie Palmer.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 24).

- (a) Speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me (Luke xii. 13). (b) By "one of the company" to Jesus.
- (a) Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. (b) By Jesus to his disciples. (xii. 27.)
- (a) He that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes. (b) By Jesus to Peter and the other disciples. (xii. 48).
- (a) We have eaten and drunk in thy presence. (b) By Jesus to his hearers after one of them had said, "Lord are there few that be saved?" (xiii. 26.)
- (a) I know you not whence ye are. (b) By Jesus to his hearers after one had said "Lord are there few that be saved?" (xiii. 25 or 27.)
- (a) In them therefore come and be healed, and not on the Sabbath day. (b) By the ruler to the people in the synagogue. (xiii. 14.) (c) With his stripes we are healed. (d) Spoken of Jesus Christ. (Isaiah lii. 5.)

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Lois Beard, May and Daisy Greenbrook, Lextie Jack, Hilma Medill, Susie and Ethel Cumbers, Jessie, Margaret, and Lillian M. Poole, Elsie Hancock, Ruth Coupe, Rosetta Sherwin, Maggie Buchanan, Edith and Maude Tyson, Margaret Davison, P. R. Robinson, Maurice Gant, Reg and Thomas Harris, Muriel Taylor, Jack and Vernon Clarke, Rosal and Phillimore, Grace Rettle, Nellie Clark, Raymond Whitwell, Helen Beckett, Arthur Llewellyn, Edith Hayward, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry, Willie G. G. R. Compton, Betty Stocks, Cecil Broad, Willie and Victor Bellerby, Mary Plumb, Herbert Bourdon, Evelyn Shaw, Rill La Brooy, Dorothy, and Evelyn Hower, Bertha and Arthur Courtenay, R. H. Williams, Emily and James Dellow, Stuart Ellacott, Willie Wheeler, G. W. Fisher, Rose Anton, Evelyn Molr, James Matthews, Minnie, Elsie, Marion, Wilson, Dolbe Salt, Arabella Onslow, Harold Stevenson, May Bligh, M. F. Arthur Cordell, Teddie Dobson, H. Brookhouse, Hoffman Scott, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Dorothy and May Vickers, Daisy Groves, Connie and Alice Roase, Raymond Harbottle, Noel Wright, Reginald Mayes, May Pell, Ahne Bazett, Helen Jordan, Millicent and Wallace Bentley, Bertha Linney, Nellie Dowsett, Flora King, Eva Monti, Christine Arnold.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 25).

A. For children UNDER THIRTEEN only.

In 1 Sam. iii. 4.

- (a) Of whom is it said, "His eyes began to wax dim?" (b) How did he die? (c) How old was he then?
- (a) How many times did the Lord call Samuel? (b) What did he reply? (Children under eight stop here.)
- (c) Do you know any hymn about this incident? If so, write out one verse or more.
- (a) Who and what were Hophni and Phinehas? (b) What happened to them?

B. For children OVER THIRTEEN.

Every dot represents a consonant, and when filled in with the right letters they will be found to form texts on "Faith" in Hebrews and James. Example:—

a . . . o . . . ai . . . e . . . u . . . ie . . .
and be not faithless but believing
(1) u . . . i . . . ou . . . ai . . . i . . . i . . . o . . . ie . . . o . . . ae . . . i . . .
(2) e . . . e . . . o . . . ai . . . i . . . i . . . a . . . o . . . o . . . i . . . ea . . . ei . . .
a . . . o . . .
(3) o . . . ai . . . i . . . e . . . u . . . ae . . . o . . . i . . . ie . . . o . . . o . . .
e . . . ie . . . e . . . o . . . i . . . o . . . ee . . .

Give chapter and verse of each.

Personal Paragraphs.

I have to thank several of my little friends (AGNES HEAD, JAMIE DE HAILES, ANTHONY and — BENTALL, MINNIE GIDDINGS, ETHEL WALLS, FRANCIE and FLORENCE HOYTE, and "ADDRESSHAIG") for the beautiful boxes of flowers, texts, and sweets, which were sent to the Children's Hospital, Shadwell. JESSIE DEANE ROE.—Your name has been inserted. QUEENIE DALE.—I hope you will try for a prize the next competition. ETHEL WALLS.—Thursday morning is in time, so your answer must have been incorrect. VERA SIGSTRÖM.—I am very glad you have enlisted two friends, and I hope they will continue sending. You can write on thin paper, and on both sides. HETTY AND HAROLD WODSON.—Thank you for your message to the sick children. ANTHONY BENTALL.—I am pleased you are going to try again, and hope you will be successful next time. You should not get discouraged. LITTLE CRITIC AND APPRECIATOR.—I am glad you read so carefully; the error occurred in the printing. A LITTLE GIRL, aged five, writes, "I was dreaming about my Bible Questions last night. I hope I have done them right."

UNCLE TOM.

(For notices of Children's Special Service Mission, see page 23.)

Jesus and the Villages.

Mark vi. 6.—"He went round about the villages teaching."

By Rev. W. RUSSELL CALEY, M.A.

TO us who live in country towns and villages, it is a cheering thought that Jesus never overlooked such places; nay, more, that most of his time, in praying, preaching, healing, was spent amidst the solemn, quiet glories of the country, and not amidst the rush and whirl of crowded city life.

With his openly-expressed claim to universal sovereignty over the wills, actions, and lives of men, we might naturally have expected to find Him settled in some great centre of human activity, striving to reach and influence the rulers of Church and State, aiming to convince the powerful in politics or position. But his thoughts are not as our thoughts, and "the desire of all nations." He whom "many prophets and kings had desired to see, and had not seen," now devoted energy, sympathy, and love to the multitudes scattered over the Galilean hills "as sheep having no shepherd." The simplicity of the rustic peasantry doubtless attracted his pure and guileless nature, while the calm of mountain, and field, and lake harmonised with his deep and earnest contemplations. Let us trace one word (καμιν) through the New Testament in connection with the acts and words of Jesus.

(1) Jesus was born in a village (John vii. 42). "In Bethlehem," that quaint, picturesque old village, standing on a long narrow ridge, the home of shepherds, and simple folk, fragrant with the hallowed memories of David, and Boaz, and Ruth.

(2) Jesus had village friends (Luke x. 38), "in Bethany." How sweet to Him, after the hurry and bustle of the day, to turn aside, and in the evening stillness walk to Bethany (Mark xi. 11), sure there of a hearty welcome (Luke x. 40), of a peaceful evening spent in holy converse with those He loved, and who loved Him. Would that all such village converse was thus sanctified and blest! "Weary, and worn and sad," must the Saviour often have gone there, and enjoyed, in its sublimest aspect, "the communion of saints."

(3) It was in a village the colt was found for the Triumphal Entry (Matt. xxi. 2). Truly this fact throws a bright and suggestive "side-light" on our Lord's character. He was no distrusted stranger to those villagers. "The Lord hath need of him" was quite enough for it to be "straightway" sent. In those quiet hamlets of the great city He was known, and honoured, and loved.

(4) It is with a village we associate some of our sweetest thoughts of the Resurrection. Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 13, 28), with the memorable walk to it, must ever remain amongst the gems of Easter. We see Resurrection glory and life had not changed the charm of the country to Him; no place so absolutely "at one" with the inexpressible joy and rest of the Great Deed done.

But not only are villages connected with some of the most important events of our Lord's life, they are intimately associated with his work.

He worked systematically: none too small or remote for his attention (Mark i. 38, 39—a slightly different Greek word, yet inclusive of the one we are thinking about), and all alike the subjects of his wisdom and tender care. When we ask what He did in these villages, we get but one answer—He taught, preached, healed (Matt ix. 35; Luke viii. 1). His message, "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God," was to bring joy, and light, and life to the most secluded home, the most benighted intellect. And our duty, our privilege, is to imitate his example, "to follow the steps of his most holy life." Terribly dark are many of our rural districts, a perfect disgrace to our Christianity, steeped in ignorance or sacerdotalism. We must remember it is an absolute duty "to go throughout the villages preaching the Gospel and healing everywhere" (Luke ix. 6, R.V.).

[548]

We can but wish there was the same eager desire in the villages now to become acquainted with Jesus that there was then (Mark vi. 56). What anxious haste and wondrous unity of sentiment! Cannot we rouse our villagers to a similar desire after Him? for we may be sure a like result will follow communion with Jesus Christ. "As many as touched were made whole."

Yet we sadly note that villages sometimes rejected Him (Luke ix. 53): "The light shone in the darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not." But the same Divine compassion that forbade the would-be baptism of fire, directs us to remember "what manner of spirit we are of," and to endeavour by prayer and gentle persuasion to effect that which angry vehemence and unbridled zeal can never accomplish.

The last mention of villages in the New Testament is a very encouraging one (Acts viii. 25), for it carries us back to this very Samaritan district, formerly so hostile to the Saviour, but now so strangely, strongly altered "in the spirit of its mind"—a field white with the harvest, where apostolic reapers bore home joyfully the sheaves of golden grain (Acts ix. 31).

Fellow-Christians, despise not the villages; remember our Master said we shall find in them those who are worthy (Matt. x. 11). Let us look them up, search them out, and set them to work—"following his steps."

Watton, Norfolk.

Signs of the Times.

WHAT means this gathering of the saints?—like birds

Preparing for their migratory flight?
This upward looking and these earnest words?
This separation of the sons of light?

It is a sign which e'en the world might see,
Although this generation heeds it not:
It is a call from coming wrath to flee,
A ray of coming glory forward shot.

O'er all the earth is raised the midnight cry,
"The Bridegroom cometh!" and the saints prepare,
Believing that the hour is drawing nigh
When they shall rise to meet Him in the air.

It is a sign that standeth not alone,
Signs multiply and Scripture is fulfilled,
Back to the land by heaven's gift his own
Israel returns and Canaan's fields are tilled.

In distant workshops, hid from vulgar eyes,
Pillars lie ready for the sacred shrine,
When Zion from the dust again shall rise,
And New Jerusalem in splendour shine.

On earth distress of nations—like a wave
Of troubled ocean rolls the tide of woe
O'er hapless peoples whom no power can save
Or light upon their hopeless prospects throw.

The Gospel spreads from land to land apace,
The Church increases as the time draws nigh,
Souls flee to Jesus in this day of grace,
As doves for refuge to their windows fly.

And error spreads—another sign foretold,
Spirits of evil leading men astray,
And dark desertion from the Christian fold,
For Antichrist's appearance paves the way.

Blessed is he that watcheth unto prayer,
And sets his heart and mind on things above;
He shall with Christ the coming glory share,
And dwell with Him in everlasting love.

Montreux.

W. MILNE.

Field-lane Refuges.—The annual meeting of this institution was held on Tuesday night, under the presidency of Lord Compton, M.P. Mr. Peregrine Platt, secretary, said that during the past year there had been admitted into the male and female refuges 476 men and 287 women; the schools for boys and girls at Hampstead contained 124 boys and seventy-nine girls; and the youths' institute had thirty-four boys. Altogether the work had been carried on with undiminished activity and with marked success. Temperance had occupied a prominent place, and some 350 pledges had been taken. The Ragged church services, held on Sunday mornings, had been well attended, and all other branches were showing cause for much encouragement. In conclusion, Mr. Platt said that in the crèche 3772 attendances had been made in the year. Several congratulatory and commendatory addresses followed.

Gospels and Genealogies.

PREBENDARY REYNOLDS, in his address at SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C., on a recent Wednesday, stated:—The Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, are greatly in agreement. Everyone has peculiarities; but sections, put side by side, are almost identical, sometimes in two, sometimes in all three. The agreement is what we expect, and the differences are, as Chrysostom said, proof of their truthfulness. It is not necessary to hold that the three are derived from one older, in other than the true sense that they rest on the original facts of the Lord's life and his words, as remembered and related by the Apostles. The language spoken by our Lord and his Apostles was that common to the people, Aramaic; and this gives that basis to the three which led to the error that there was an Hebrew Gospel prior to the three. If there had been a primal Gospel, the agreement of the three is explained, but their differences are unaccountable.

It is an error to think that each Evangelist had the same motive. In St. Matthew we have more of the Jewish view. St. Mark is greatly descriptive as to the intense activity of Jesus, is rich in dialogue, and shows how readily and wisely the Lord answered all questions. St. Luke presents us with a view more suitable for the world at large, somewhat of a Pauline sense. St. Matthew shows the fixed form which the truth has assumed in Jerusalem, and was guide of the mother church. St. Mark, so descriptive and vivid, was to enlarge and deepen godliness: it strengthens hope in the second coming of Jesus, and specially shows He had through death to enter glory. St. Luke is a more "literary, reflective, expansive elaboration," not less doctrinal than historical; in it are various hints as to the call of the Gentiles.

St. Matthew (i. 1-17) shows that Jesus was the Son of David, the son of Abraham (verses 18-25); that Joseph, lineally of David, though he knew the state of Mary, married her, that he might acknowledge her Son as his. This Son was to establish the throne of David, the Royal line being continued by those various and renowned women, who, in the most extraordinary manner, were ancestresses of the Messiah. St. Luke ascends to Adam, and thus connects the Saviour with the whole human race. St. Matthew carries the line through Solomon, St. Luke through Nathan, another son of David. Two names only, Salathiel and Zorobabel, are the same in both, but these persons are to be regarded as living at different times, because St. Matthew names ten, St. Luke nineteen, between them and Jesus. Some think the genealogy given by St. Luke is that of Mary, that of Joseph, by St. Matthew. Thus Jesus, both on the mother and father's side was of David's line. According to this (Luke iii. 23) Eli would be the father of Mary (Lightfoot says Jewish tradition coincides), and when Joseph is called his son, it means "son-in-law," as is frequent in Scripture.

Our Soldiers.

SIR,—Two of the cavalry regiments to which I am chaplain have been sent out to camp here for four months. This gives me a unique opportunity for evangelistic work among the men. To carry such out successfully I need two marquees, one to be fitted with a piano, books, games, and writing materials, to attract men; and a second, to be used as a mission-hall. I have one marquee, fitted as I have described, at my own expense. Here we hold services on Sunday, and a short service every night. But few men can stay after 9.30, and very few would come to the tent if it were used only for meetings. They will come to amuse themselves, and having come, it is easier to get them to come into the meeting.

If I had a second marquee I could have an evangelistic service earlier in the evening, and there would always be a place ready for Bible-reading and prayer. At present the few earnest men gather in my sleeping tent for their Bible-reading and open prayer-meetings, but six are a tight fit in it.

Few Christians know the awful temptations which surround soldiers. These tents are a haven of refuge. I have asked for £50, and have received £7 10s.—

Yours faithfully,
R. DEANE OLIVER,
Twesledown Camp, Aldershot. Chaplain.

Rev. C. H. Yatman,
AMERICAN EVANGELIST.

GOD has given to America many noble evangelists, and the Republic has cheerfully given them to the world. Rev. C. H. Yatman, or, as he prefers to be called, plain Mr. Yatman, occupies an honoured position amongst them. The life of Mr. Yatman is not only interesting because of its results in many fields of labour, it is full of encouragement and hopefulness to thousands who are filled with a yearning to do the Lord's will. Though a comparatively young man, and called into evangelistic work somewhat late in his life, the results are already striking. They have been achieved not by the use of any extraordinary talents, but simply because he has emptied himself of personal inclination and desire, and has allowed God to fill him with Divine fervour and love and understanding.

It was in the parlour of the Young Men's Christian Association at Cape Town that Mr. Yatman recently gave to a correspondent a few particulars of his life. It may be well to let Mr. Yatman tell part of his story in his own words:—

I was born in Fredon, New Jersey, in 1853. All my family were Presbyterians, and I had a straight-laced bringing up. The first step in my religious life was taken when I was fourteen years of age, when I joined the Park Presbyterian Church in New Jersey. Not very long afterwards, through unfortunate circumstances, I lost all the religion I had, and I became the black sheep of the family—the only one of the five children who left the church of their parents. I was married before I was twenty, and that was the best thing I ever did. The responsibility pulled me up, and made me face the situation fairly and squarely. My wife and I were both converted soon after our marriage. I was converted in a business office in New Jersey. Although I was a prodigal son I had not wandered into a far country. Immediately after my conversion I commenced Christian work. I went to the Park Church, which was a magnificent building, with as good a preacher as ever lived, but there was that formality which is born of Metropolitan life. I was full of vigour, and when I came back to God I looked for a Church that had warmth and life and love.

At that time there was a Methodist preacher in New Jersey of the name of Dr. Spelmeyer, and without much thought about doctrine or Church government I joined his Church. He was a big-souled man, with a lot of earnest young men around him. Whilst I was a member of that Church I was called to the ministry when I was twenty-seven years of age, and was, after the usual term of probation, ordained an elder of the Church by Bishop Walden, and commenced the active ministry with a pastorate in New Jersey. Whilst there the work of the Young Men's Christian Association was taken up by several of the leading business men of the city, and they persuaded me to become their manager and general secretary, at the same time retaining my ministry. I accepted the appointment for three months, but the work grew rapidly, and my estimation of the worth of Y.M.C.A. work developed so much that I left the "regular" ministry and retained the position for six years instead of three months. From Y.M.C.A. work I went into evangelistic work, and in 1885 I was compelled, reluctantly, to give up my connection with the Y.M.C.A. for the purpose of devoting my life to evangelistic work in various parts of the world.

Such, briefly, is the autobiography of this man of God, but the story is capable of expansion.

In his first pastorate Mr. Yatman received a veritable "baptism of fire." He was sent down into the lowest slums of New Jersey. His mission hall was surrounded by saloons, drinking and gambling dens, and all manner of evil resorts. Frequently his meetings were disturbed by "The Dirty Nine," one of the vilest gangs in New Jersey. They led him a terrible life, but the Lord laid it upon his heart to work for their conversion. The story of his success is one of the most pathetic and the most thrilling to be found in the annals of home mission work. Briefly it is this:—

One day he met one of the "Dirty Nine" in the street, and asked him to introduce him to the club, but he refused. Some time afterwards he saw them all standing at the corner of one of the most dangerous streets of the city, and he planted himself right in the centre of them, shook hands with them, and invited them to the meeting. Every one turned up to the next meeting, and, as Mr. Yatman expresses it, "it was as if the demons of hell had been let loose." He, however, gave them a second invitation, with the same mournful results. A third invitation brought every man up again, some of them carrying old tins and pans and kettles for the purpose of making the meeting a lively one. That night he asked God to be especially near him. Nearly all the male members of the mission had deserted him. He prayed and preached and sang to them, but it all seemed a dismal failure. When it was over he walked across the platform and leaned against the door. He felt heart-broken, and the tears poured down his cheeks. Just before leaving, however, he turned towards the hall again, and saw that the leader was in tears. Mr. Yatman was too much overcome to speak to them; all he could do was to give them another invitation, and soon after they came to the meeting he had the blessed joy of seeing every member of the "Dirty Nine" crying for mercy. Some of these men became the backbone of his mission, and the grandest home missionaries in the city.

(From Photograph by Mr. Rothberger, Denver, Colorado.)

Another important part of Mr. Yatman's evangelistic work is the mission which he has conducted at Ocean Grove, a summer seaside resort on the skirts of the Atlantic. Thirteen years ago he inaugurated the work there. During the first season the congregation reached about 250 each morning, but it has grown with marvellous rapidity, and last summer Mr. Yatman addressed about 2000 people, holiday-seekers, every morning.

Mr. Yatman makes no attempt to become a polished orator, but his addresses are marked by winning earnestness, by bright cheerfulness and unbounded faith. He intersperses his addresses with telling anecdotes, and he possesses the faculty of forcing home the truth, and making it absolutely plain to the simplest. His power over young men is wonderful. He has lived with them, worked with them, and knows something of their hopes and aspirations, temptations and weaknesses, and to many a doubting one he has been a veritable father in God.

Since September last Mr. Yatman has conducted missions in New York, Seattle, Salem, Oakland, and San Francisco; thence he crossed over to Honolulu, and afterwards to New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa. His work among the Chinese and Japs in San Francisco was owned of God, and led to many conversions.

Mr. Yatman has never been heard in England up to the present time, but he has received invitations to conduct missions in the United Kingdom, and is hoping to be able to accept some of them during the forth coming autumn.

"From the Love of God."

At a recent temperance meeting, Miss Willard related the following incident:—

One of our temperance workers went at Christmas time to the wretched home of a man whom we had long known as a "hopeless case" because of drink, and left some fruit and flowers for himself, his wife and little children. That man told me the story in this fashion: "When I came home and saw the fruit and smelled the pretty flowers, and knew that nobody could ever call at our house for their own pleasure, I fell to setting up a bad motive for whoever it was that brought them. I was so full of bad motives myself that this was the most natural thing for me to do.

"So I said to my wife, when she told me the lady's name who brought them, 'Is her husband running for any office?' But I knew myself that he did not want my vote, and never would; he was too old to run for office. Then I said, 'Did she ask you to do anything in the church work?' and my wife answered, 'No.' Then I said, 'Molly, what do you think was the reason the lady brought us these nice things?' And turning toward me with her eyes full of tears she answered: 'Why, James, I thought it was the love of God.' When she said that I leaned up against the wall and did some thinking different from what my custom was. And then I turned to her and put my hands on her two shoulders, and I said, 'Molly, if the lady came to see us from the love of God, I shall never drink whisky again.'

Fifteen years have passed away, and that man has never touched another drop. He is one of my best friends in the town where I have lived well-nigh forty years; he has won the respect and regard of everybody. When I went home a few weeks ago, before sailing for England, I did not go to see the family of the President of the University, for I knew they did not need me, but I made it a point to visit James and his wife and children. It is good to be met by so much of love and faith as they manifested toward me. I went out to see their new blacksmith's shop, and they told me of the comfortable brick house they were soon to build near by. James is now almost blind, but his face is the face of an evangel, and he said the world never was so full of sunshine to him as it was these days. When I bade good-bye to that faithful wife, who has suffered so much, and whose face, though it has a new joy, will never lose the lines that are the record of years of long past suffering, as I gave her a kiss, and said, "Let us be good while we are absent one from the other," she murmured in my ear the sweetest words that I have heard in many a long day, and they were these: "You helped us to be good."

West Greenwich Ragged School.—The annual meeting of this institution was held at Blackheath on Saturday, June 6. Mrs. Ireland, of Pond-road, kindly granted the hospitality of her house and grounds. The report, presented by the secretary, Mr. Robert McClure, showed that at no period during the forty-six years of this Ragged School's life has it exhibited more vigour. Addresses were given by Mr. J. W. Fegan, Rev. P. Ireland Jones, and Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union. The chairman, Mr. Alexander Young, cleared off the balance of debt and gave the institution a good star for another year by a donation of fifty pounds.

"The Night also is Thine."

Ps. lxxiv. 16.

THINGS to which we have long been accustomed fail to strike our attention forcibly; but, though we may not be much impressed by them, the phenomena of day and night are widely different. Imagine the glories of a calm summer morn, the splendid dawn, cloudless blue sky, every variety of landscape brought into view, the rich colours and exquisite fragrance of tree, plant, and flower; the flight and song of birds, the hum of insects, the sparkle of the sea. And as we gaze on such a scene our souls endorse the words of the Psalmist in the first part of this verse, "The day is thine"; this becomes Thine well; this is worthy of Thee.

But there comes the inevitable change; the sun disappears, and with it the gorgeous scenery; damp, chill vapours arise, clouds obscure the sky, the wind moans, the song of birds is hushed, the wild beast leaves its lair, the robber and murderer are afoot, and numerous other features of terror gather under the darkness of the night. And now, we almost feel as if we had entered a different domain—as though we were no longer within the territory of the ruler of the day, and perhaps we do not say so heartily, "The night also is thine." Yet so it is. The phenomena have changed, but the ruler is still the same.

Let us transfer these thoughts to the moral sphere. Day and Light are the recognised symbols of joy, gladness, prosperity, health. Your health is good; your spirits are cheerful, your business is prosperous, your home is happy, your friends are plentiful; and under all this brightness you can say heartily, "The day is thine"—Providence smiles, God is good.

But there is another side. Health fails; business goes badly; friends desert or die; the home is troubled; the gloom of sorrow's night overhangs. Can you say under these circumstances, "The night also is thine"? It is just here that this brief text meets us. It gives us an assurance worth having. Night may not be pleasant, but it is something to know that the ruler of the day is also ruler of the night. The throne may be veiled, but the ruler is there still.

What, then, does this brief text mean? What does it involve? "The night also is thine." That means:—

1. He made it. Natural night is part of his ordination as much as day (Gen. i.). There is no defect here, no accident; it is part of the constitution of nature, part of the plan of Providence. How calmly we regard the natural night; we are not disturbed by its shadows; we know it is right. And so, in the spiritual sphere, crosses, trials, sorrows are not accidents or the result of failures. God has something to do with them. It is not "some strange thing" happening. How at once this thought changes the aspect of things. Though the trouble may still have to be borne, it is no small relief to the mind to know that it is the result of design, decree, permission.

2. He governs it. Darkness cannot hide from Him. The forces of evil are open to his eye and beneath his control. This is true morally and spiritually. The Christian's trials are not evils which have broken loose, and which are left to work their will upon him. In Naham i. 3 it is written, "The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm." Could you stand somewhere out of the track of the storm and watch the whirlwind in its path, it would appear as though the wind had it all its own way; yet there is a Master hand controlling it, for "the Lord hath his way" in it. So does He govern all the forces that seem to work against his people. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

3. He uses it. The night is his to employ for useful ends. Though night has its terrors, it has also its uses and advantages. It cools the air and earth in summer time, refreshes vegetation, and gives rest to man. And equally true it is that the night of trial accomplishes useful ends in the experience of the people of God. It disciplines the spirit and checks dangerous growths. He tells them things "in the darkness" which they never knew before. And as the darkness of the night brings into view the stars which were hidden by day, so in the night of trouble often the light of certain truths appears which had not previously shone upon the mind.

And then, lastly—

4. He limits it. While night follows day, yet day succeeds night. Night cannot last for ever. Now it seems like a tolerably equal contest, but the victory will be ultimately on the side of day. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." "There shall be no night there." "I will see you again" (says Jesus) "and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." Sorrow is inevitable for a time, but it shall ultimately give place to joy. Everything typified by "night"—sin, ignorance, suffering, shall be banished, for the "Sun of Righteousness" shall "arise with healing in his wings," and where that sun shines night will be impossible.

JAMES L. STANLEY.

The Token of the Rod.

WHEN Korah, Dathan and Abiram murmured against Moses and Aaron, Moses left his vindication entirely in God's hands, and God Himself gave the token of the priesthood of his chosen ones—the token of the fruitful rod (see Num. xvi. 5, "The Lord will show who are his and who is holy, and will cause him to come near unto Him").

Does not this teach us that resurrection life is God's token of the priesthood of the believer? In Num. xvii. we find that twelve rods were laid up before the Lord, and the rod of Levi was inscribed with Aaron's name. There was no natural life in the rod itself; severed from all earthly source of nourishment, it was only a bare stick. It is a fit emblem, surely, of those who have been brought to feel that in them "dwelleth no good thing"; that they have no power in self, no life, no source of life in anything earthly; that they have been brought to an end of themselves, and are perhaps only conscious of this one thing—that they belong to Christ, and his Name is written upon them. Blessed thought for all such! they are not driven away from God, but called to come nigh, just to wait in his very presence, before the mercy sent.

But only one rod blossomed. That one was laid up in faith, in the glad expectancy that God would do something, would work in his own wonderful way.

We often do not understand the force and meaning of the very blessings for which we long and plead, but our part is to expect God to do great and wonderful things in us and for us, "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

In the morning Aaron's rod was living, beautiful and fruitful, manifestly from no earthly source, but with Divine life alone. To the soul that waits in the very presence of God the Holy Spirit comes in fulness and power, making the life of Jesus manifest, the life out of death.

This life is very beautiful, rich in blossom; it cannot be other than fair when it is the life of Jesus. It is no longer a "trying to attract," or "trying to win," but there is an attractiveness and loveliness of character shining forth, at once the outcome and evidence of the life within—"the beauty of the Lord upon us"—"perfect through his comeliness."

There is fruit too, and ripe fruit (R.V.). Such a life is one to sustain and feed others, and also—wondrous thought!—to feed, to satisfy the Lord Himself.

The church of Jesus has so many members always needing help from others: always dependent, instead of helpful; having nothing to give to hungry souls—but this new life is a fruitful life, fruitful at once, and yet bearing ever fresh fruit.

What became of the transformed and transfigured rod? It was laid up for ever in the ark, in the holiest of all (Heb. ix. 4). That new and blessed life can only be maintained as the believer is hidden in his Lord; and hidden there, "abiding in Jesus," he ever dwells in the secret-place of the Most High.

Oh, the rest to the weary soul, weary of struggling after holiness, with painful effort and conscious failure, just in weakness and nothingness to lie at God's feet, that He may do it all, and then just to abide hidden in Christ, for ever and ever in Him, in the Holiest of All.

JANET CLARE.

Mrs. Ginever's Homes.—A drawing-room meeting was held on June 11, at Crouch Hill, when Rev. J. R. Wood presided. He stated that 172 children are now in these homes. They had been scraping the barrel, and pleaded for help. The orphans who sang so sweetly and recited so nicely greatly interested the friends present. At Broadstairs, afflicted orphans ineligible for other orphanages are received. Many cases are waiting admission, and help is much needed.

Barnwell Theatre Mission, Cambridge.—On Tuesday last week the twenty-first anniversary of this Mission was celebrated by a tea and public meeting. The meeting was presided over by Mr. W. K. Vawser, hon. superintendent, who dwelt upon the good work the Mission had accomplished during past years, and of the great numbers that had been led to decision for Christ. Other speakers followed, testifying to the spiritual work going on through the agency of the Mission. During the evening Mr. Vawser, in the name of the workers and attendants of the Mission, presented to Mr. Hart, of Corpus Christi, a handsome testimonial, in appreciation of his work amongst them. Mr. Hart is now leaving Cambridge.

Rev. T. Connellan's Mission.

In July last year we moved into Dawson-street, where we have a publishing office and a small hall for meetings. We have seating accommodation for about fifty people, but have had frequently to try and find room for seventy, all, with perhaps half a dozen exceptions, Roman Catholics. Had we a hall large enough we could easily gather in many more. They come freely, listen reverently to the Gospel, and no policeman has ever been called in from the inception of our meetings to the present hour.

Really marvellous openings among the intelligent people are every day being manifested. God has given some converted Roman Catholic young men as workers. The cycle has been requisitioned for the purpose of visiting inquirers and distributing suitable literature. Plans have been perfected for placing suitable literature with students in ecclesiastical colleges and nuns in convents. Priests have not been forgotten, and fruit has already been gathered from seed thus sown.

As the work develops so does the expenditure. Friends will greatly help the work by organising public or drawing-room meetings, at which the writer or some of the converts will be glad to speak, or by sending to this office for collecting cards.

THOMAS CONNELLAN.

51b, Dawson-street, Dublin.

Work Among Lepers.—In her last report Miss Mary Reed says:—"We have had a blessed year. The great event was the purchase of more land and the erection of new homes for the men and boys of the institution. Ninety-six have been enrolled in both (male and female) branches of the Institution. Seven received baptism, and at present there are twelve who have repeatedly requested it." Many who are aware of Miss Reed's self-sacrificing work among her fellow-sufferers will gladly remember her in prayer.

Miss JACKSON (Hon. Sec. for London).
185, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

THE EVANGELIST.

Neglecting Salvation.*

YOU need only be a little less than fully in earnest, and you will certainly fall short of salvation. You may have a good deal of feeling and a hopeful earnestness; but if you are only less than fully in earnest, you will surely fail. The work will not be done. You are guilty of fatal neglect, for you have never taken the decisive step. Who of you is a little less than fully in earnest? You are the one who will weary yourself for nought and in vain. You must certainly fall short of salvation.

It must be a great folly to stop at anything short of effectual effort. Many are just enough in earnest to deceive themselves. They pay just enough attention to this subject to get hold of it wrong, and do only just enough to fall short of salvation, and go down to death with a lie in their right hand. If they were to stay away from all worship it would shock them. Now, they go to the assemblies of God's people, and do many things helpful; but, after all, they fall short of entering in at the door into Christ's fold. What folly is this!

Why should any of you do this foolish thing? This doing only just enough to deceive yourself and others, is the very course to please Satan. Nothing else could so completely serve his ends. He knows very well that where the Gospel is generally understood, he must not preach infidelity openly, nor universalism, nor atheism. But if he can just keep you along, doing a little less than enough, he is sure of his man. He wants to see you holding fast to a false hope. Then he knows you are the greatest possible stumbling-block, and are doing the utmost you can to ruin the souls of men.

This salvation is life's great work. If not made such, it had best be left alone. To put it in any other relation is worse than nothing. If you make it second to anything else, your course will surely be ineffectual—a lie, a delusion, a damnation! Are you giving your attention effectually to this great subject? Have you the testimony in your own conscience, that you seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness? And have you become acquainted with Christ? Do you know Him as your Life and your Hope? Have you the joy and peace of believing? Can you give to yourself and to others a really satisfactory reason for the hope that is in you?

This is life's great work, the great work of earth; and now, in whom of you is it effectually begun? You cannot do it at all without a thorough and right beginning. I am jealous of some of you that you have not begun right, that you have mistaken conviction for conversion. Like some of Bunyan's characters, I fear you have clambered over the wall into the palace, and did not come in by the gate. Do you ask me why I fear this of you? I will answer only by asking a question back. Don't you think I have reason to fear it? Have you the consciousness of being pure in heart and of growing purer? Do you plan everything with reference to this great work of salvation? What are the ways of life that you have marked out for yourself? and on what principle have you shaped them? On what subjects are you most sensitive? What most thoroughly awakens your sensibility? If there is a prayer-meeting to pray for the salvation of sinners, are you there? Is your heart there?

It is infinite folly to make the matter of personal salvation only a secondary matter; for to do so is only to neglect it after all. Unless it has your whole heart, you virtually neglect it; for nothing less than your whole heart is the devotion due. To give it less than your whole heart is but to insult God, and to insult the subject of salvation.

What shall we think of those who seem never to make any progress at all? Is it not very plain that they give much less than their whole hearts to this matter? It is most certain that if they gave their whole hearts intelligently to it, they would make progress—would speedily find their way to Christ. To make no progress is therefore a decisive indication of having no real heart in this pursuit. How such escape, seeing they neglect so great salvation?

The Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Jesus said: They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

* The conclusion of a sermon in THE WAY OF SALVATION, twenty-five discourses by Charles G. Finney, late president of Oberlin College. (4s. R. D. Dickinson.)

The Son of Man is . . . a friend of publicans and sinners.

Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through his poverty, might be rich.

Christ Jesus . . . made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

Luke v. 31 32; Luke vii. 34; 2 Co. viii. 9; Phil. ii. 7, 8.

Aggressive Work.—22.

ONE day I leisurely sauntered into a big glass conservatory, about 150 feet square, which is being erected in one of our public parks here. In a small gallery running round inside, about 30 feet high, stood two men like foremen talking together. I called out to them, "This would make a grand place in which to speak, would it not?" One of them replied "Yes." I then shouted out, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). "Do you hear that?" and the answer came, "Yes." I also asked, "Do you believe it?" But I could not make out the reply. There were a number of men working on the ground floor, and one of them objected to my "preaching" there. I think he was a Romanist. My experience is that the greatest opponents to the Gospel in our land are Romanists.

Whilst passing a friend's house, and trying to look through an aperture in a gate alongside, a well-dressed man stopped and asked whether I wanted to know who lived there. I answered "Oh, no!" He then smiled and said, "I know you; you once asked me a question, and I have never forgotten it, never forgotten it." He was moving away, when I wished him to tell me all the circumstances of the case; but he hurried off smiling. A good while ago I had evidently asked him whether his soul was saved, and the question had gone home.

Lately I tried to catch an omnibus going to a football game, but was too late. The timekeeper said a gentleman, a doctor, whom he knew, had also missed the omnibus, but had gone for a cab; and then, pointing to him in the distance, he remarked that he was sure the doctor would be glad if I would join him. I overtook him just entering a hansom, and at once asked if he would allow me to join him, and pay half the fare, as I was going to the match. He readily consented. We drove for about twenty minutes, and I availed myself of the excellent opportunity of preaching the Gospel to him during the most of the journey. It was sad to find how dreadfully ignorant he was of the way of life, although an educated man. Such men would be ashamed to be ignorant of many other subjects, yet not at all ashamed of ignorance upon that.

Not long ago, a middle-aged gentleman said to a railway official here, who happened to be a Christian man, "Have you seen that fellow lately?" "What fellow?" he asked. "Why, he who goes about asking people if they are saved. I don't know his name. I think he is a merchant." "Oh, yes! You mean Mr. Drysdale?" "Ay, that's his name. Twenty years ago he asked me whether my soul was saved. What a piece of nonsense and impudence!" Poor fellow! he could not speak about it without losing his temper, and so he became quite angry. The railway official replied, "Yes, I have seen him, and I think such questions do a deal of good." The gentleman said, "Why, you're as bad as he." The inspector replied, "I see, sir, that you have had the harpoon in you yet." "What do you mean?" asked the other. And then the inspector explained that when the whale plunged away into the deep with the harpoon in it, in course of time it was brought back again; and so he believed the question which had so annoyed him may be the means in God's hand of bringing him to the Saviour. The gentleman said nothing, but walked away.

A young man in an office here lately remarked that he always endeavoured when travelling by the overhead railway here, to enter the carriage in which I was, on account of the Gospel words I spoke aloud. He said my short impromptu addresses gave him something to think about during the day, and were most helpful to him. His relations had been rather afraid of him owing to his fast, godless life, but now they rejoiced in being able to say that through these Gospel words spoken from time to time he had become quite a changed character. To God be the glory.

Liverpool.

D. M. DRYSDALE.

A Victorian Mission Station.

[By OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ON a recent Saturday afternoon, when making my way to Melbourne from the far east of the Victorian Colony, I stepped out of the train at Stratford, 138 miles from the metropolis. A few minutes later a train coming from Melbourne arrived. Rev. Herr Hagenauer, who alighted, invited me to his home, eleven miles distant. After about an hour and a-half's drive we reached the station, Ramahyuck. We were warmly welcomed by Mrs. Hagenauer.

Ramahyuck is one of six or seven stations under Mr. Hagenauer's control. Originally started by the Moravian Missionaries, of which Mr. Hagenauer is one, the work has been carried on partly by them, and to some extent by the Presbyterian and Episcopal churches. Mr. Hagenauer was a few years ago appointed by the Government as general superintendent of the Aboriginal Mission Stations in Victoria, and secretary of the Society for the Protection of the Aborigines. The office is in Melbourne, while the stations are in various parts of the colony. Ramahyuck, in Gippsland, is still partly supported by the Presbyterian Church; 2300 acres were devoted to the use of the Mission at this place, 1660 acres are to be resumed by the Government and used as an Agricultural College and grounds, leaving a section—640 acres—to the Aboriginal Mission. Adjoining this 640 acres is a farm belonging to Mr. Hagenauer on which he has built a house of his own.

At Ramahyuck there are at present about eighty or ninety souls, and altogether at the various stations there are some 500 aborigines settled. These aborigines work the land, do housework, etc., or are employed by squatters or farmers in the mission districts. Indeed, here, all the buildings, large and small, have been built by the blacks.

Sunday was a delightful day in every sense of the word. At 7 a.m. we assembled in the old mission-house, when the young people were catechised by the worthy pastor. These people, though so low in the scale of humanity, can be raised to a wonderful pitch by the humanising, civilising, enlightening power of the Gospel. And, although some have still something of a wild look in their features, most of them are quite intelligent-looking, some are actually handsome fellows, and some of the girls are beaming and bright. Living amongst these aborigines, the missionaries have been greatly blessed in their labours, and the change that has taken place during the past thirty or forty years is a complete triumph of missionary effort.

At the chief service of the day, I had the privilege of conducting the worship, and it was quite inspiring to look upon the faces of these dusky brothers and sisters as one endeavoured to expound the Scriptures. Some of the farmers, both Colonial and German, also attend worship here on Sunday, so the little building was well filled. In the afternoon I had the pleasure of addressing the children in their Sunday-school, also held in the church. In the evening Pastor Hagenauer conducted a homely "evening prayers" in the church, which consisted largely in the reading of Scripture, with expository remarks, and the singing of hymns and prayer. There is quite a charm in the homely patriarchal style of the worship of our Heavenly Father as carried on in one of these Moravian settlements.

On Monday the week's work began again both in the household and the huts, and in the fields and gardens. Dairying, ploughing, hoeing, clearing, shingling of roofs, fencing up of gardens, and so forth, were soon going on, and the settlement presented quite a busy scene. Some of the men were working at a distance, and would not return for a time. The visit has left some of the brightest memories, and it has given me a very good idea of the great work carried on by the missionaries to the aborigines of Australia in Victoria.

Bethesda Town Mission, Portsmouth.

Arrangements have been made for carrying on the work of this mission on the same Evangelical lines as when Commander Key had superintendence. He remains as a member of the committee. The work, consisting of Gospel services, cottage meetings, open-air and rescue work, tract distribution, etc., is very useful in this naval town, with its teeming masses, and the committee earnestly invite the help of friends. The present superintendent of the mission is Mr. George H. Fison, 1, Cavendish-road, Southsea, Portsmouth.

"Rivers in the Desert."

IN these days of educational controversy, it would be more honouring to God, we think, if there were a simpler and stronger faith in the innate power of his revealed Scripture to reach and change the human heart. Ecclesiastics tell us that an interpreter or expounder is essential, and, of course, every sectarian expounds according to his personal or church bias. The history of Mrs. Robertson's Association for Free Distribution of the Scriptures proves that God, speaking through the Scriptures as they are humbly read, can be his own interpreter, and can impart saving truth to the receptive reader. Mrs. Robertson's new report is called "Rivers in the Desert," an appropriate title in every sense. Most cheering and refreshing are the instances given of the way in which the life-giving streams of truth in the Bible flow on for the comfort of thirsty and weary world-pilgrims. We note a few of them. The opening pages tell an incident now ten years old, but well worth repeating:—

"Not many months of 1886 had gone by before a Korean visiting the mission house saw lying on the table two Gospels. Curiously he read to himself their novel titles, 'The blessed tidings of Luke,' 'The blessed tidings of John.' And before the missionary was aware of what had happened he had concealed the volumes in the folds of his long, loose sleeves. Little did the workers realise how greatly their cry for blessing was being answered in the heart of this one man! But when he returned soon after, his face beaming, and stood before them holding up the two books exclaiming, 'Oh, it is good! it is good,'—they knew that God had heard. Without note or comment, without a word of explanation, he had come to understand 'the blessed tidings.' There, standing before them, was the first Korean convert; unhelped of any but God, he had accepted simply, and in its fulness, the gift of life."

From Mr. Eglon Harris, Orizaba, Mexico:—

"The Lord has in a remarkable degree opened doors to us in barracks and prisons. The officers and governors at first opposed even the tracts, but little by little prejudice has yielded, and a desire to know was springing up, ending in the liberty granted us. Here in Orizaba, all the prisoners having at least three more years to serve have received each a Bible or Testament."

"Three weeks ago I was at Ulna, an island used as a convict prison; the first prisoner to whom I gave a Testament said, 'This is what I have been wanting for a long time, but I had no way or means of obtaining it.' Another said, 'Oh, how kind to think of us!' Then he slipped a carved ring into my hand and ran away with the book."

"When I last visited Tehuacan I saw more fruit of free distribution. A woman followed me to my lodging and then introduced herself as one to whom I gave a Bible more than two years ago; she said she had found no greater joy than in reading about Jesus. From the conversation that followed I found she had a very fair knowledge of his redeeming work, and was really trusting Him for salvation."

From Signor Cav. Capellini, Rome:—"On my return to Italy I went to the camps and the summer manoeuvres, distributing to all, both soldiers and officers, Bibles and Testaments; and as in a country besieged by an enemy, the arrival of a waggon-load of bread rouses the spirit of the population and they all rush forth to possess themselves of a loaf, so it was at my arrival at the camps, with my carriage full of Bibles and Testaments. And who would have prevented me, from motives of economy, from going so far to supply the wants of those who were hungering and thirsting for the Word of God? The sight of them would have moved the hardest heart to make any sacrifice so that such a good and holy work should not be stopped. I will not here give a detailed account, but I can assure our friends that this distribution has been the means of the conversion of many souls to the Lord Jesus, and many officers and non-commissioned officers who were atheists, but who were desirous of instruction, and came to our schools for English, French, or German, were willing to read the Word of God, and having been convinced of the truth by this means, have not only been converted, but have also proclaimed the truths of the Gospel to their companions and relations."

[552]

"Among the special distributions of interest in connection with the Association during 1895, may be mentioned one to the Indians brought over to be employed in the Indian Exhibition; and the Testaments given to French soldiers on the eve of their departure for Madagascar, and also to Spanish soldiers going out to Cuba. These distributions were usually occasions of great solemnity, many of the dear men feeling they might never return to their native land, and therefore the Word which was able to make them wise unto salvation was received with eagerness. We had after testimony in some cases, that on the voyage out the soldiers were constantly to be seen reading their Testaments, and we cannot doubt that to many among them the Word came with power. On all hands we hear of fresh openings, and glorious opportunities for freely distributing the Word of Life. With all earnestness, then, we entreat all who love that Word, to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Do not let this work, on which we know the blessing of God must descend, be hindered for lack of funds."

These are but specimen cases out of many such given in the report. Copies may be had from Mrs. Robertson, Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.

Franco-Swiss S.A. Work.

By MARECHALE BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

(Concluded.)

IN Switzerland, my husband has been leading special campaigns in public halls and in tents, with his "desperado brigade," which have been remarkably owned of God, scores finding salvation. Several cases of entire healing of "incurables" have also occurred, which have borne the test of time. Among the converts of these campaigns present at the Zurich meetings a few days ago were six young men, all intelligent and well educated, nearly all of good position, and all are becoming officers, and by a peculiar coincidence they are all tall, averaging nearly six feet. Among them is a cousin of my husband's, who had never prayed or read his Bible for nine years, but who was converted during some of the commissioner's recent meetings at Neuchâtel.

To those who know the history of the Swiss work it seems almost incredible that we should have been able to hold a crowded meeting in perfect peace in the finest hall of Berne. Since our opening there in March there have been 200 good cases of conversion from among the 300 who came to the penitent form.

What words could describe the recent Ascension meetings! The town lands of Beaulieu at Lausanne were granted by the Municipal Council for the erection of our three tents, one of which holds three thousand people. Another of similar size was erected at Zurich. In the latter city, only eight years ago, the police broke up even our 5 a.m. prayer-meetings, on one occasion smashing in the door with a hatchet. And yet we were able to march a procession last Thursday of 1500 through one of these cities, and 2500 through another, with 200 musicians, through immense, orderly, and, for the most part, respectful crowds, without there being any need for the services of the police escort. The weather was perfect, and the tents were pitched upon two of the loveliest spots of earth, just above the two cities.

Our friends of the early days have, almost without a single exception, all remained in cordial sympathy with the work, and were nearly all present, among others Madame de Guigins, Monsieur Couvert, Monsieur Bovet, Monsieur and Madame de Watteville, Monsieur Lombard, members of the Audeoud-Monod and the De Perrot families, Monsieur Schindler, etc., etc.

"Oh! how we felt the presence of God!" writes one of them. What a Divine day! Hundreds of souls re-consecrated themselves to God publicly, besides a great many who came out before all to seek salvation.

It was a painful separation from those who have passed with us through years of such fierce persecution, expulsion, imprisonment, and bodily injuries of all kinds.

The wife of Monsieur Ruchonnet, the late president of the Confederation, was with us on the Lausanne platform as a consecrated woman of God, and personally joined in helping those seeking salvation.

God, in his goodness, had seemed to make everything combine to cheer us at the close of this long struggle of fifteen years. What sunny, holy memories will ever hang around these parting days. All nature seemed to join in the thunderous songs of praise to God which rose from six thousand people, many of whom had known the hour and the power of darkness in the bygone days of fierce persecution, when they had to stand alone for God; the passing breath of angels' wings seemed often to be felt among us.

Ihn will ich preisen mein Leben lang (Him will I praise through all my days) "was sung perhaps a hundred times," says a reporter describing the Zurich meetings. "Long, long will those words ring in my ears."

Blessed and encouraging as are such days, there is always the overwhelming feeling of the little that has been accomplished; and yet we ought to testify to the glory of God that while met in council this week for the last time in Paris, his presence was granted us in a most remarkable degree; and such an indescribable current of Divine love and such a spirit of union pervaded this company of men and women gathered from all parts of these lands—born in the fire so to speak—that we saw before us the promise of mighty harvests in the future. We had the assurance that this people will not fail nor falter in self-sacrificing labour for the salvation of France. The Divine influences and holy union of soul were quite indescribable.

I want to ask our friends to continue to our successors, the Commissioners Booth-Hellberg, the sympathy and help they have given us. Our dear comrades, who have just left India, have between them nearly twenty years of experience in work for God, in various important posts, and have seen much blessing accompany their efforts. We believe it will be so here also; we have prepared for them a cordial welcome, and shall do all in our power to facilitate their task. We ask all friends of the work in France to do their share also. Work in Catholic countries particularly needs encouragement and support. And, oh! how our hearts shall ever turn in prayer towards these lands and this work which has been dearer to us than life!

CATHERINE BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

Colwyn Bay Convention.—Those who were present at the meetings convened by Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crossley, from June 7 to 12, will not easily forget the six hallowed days. The truth of holiness of heart and life was clearly set forth. It was shown that a profession of holiness, unaccompanied by the burden of souls and an intense yearning to reach the perishing, is not the holiness of Christ. The need for intercessory prayer was largely dwelt upon in the morning meetings. From day to day many came forward in full surrender and simple faith. In the meeting for praise many testimonies proved how real and heart-searching had been the testimony given.

Village Tales.

I.—MISS PRISCILLA.

MISS PRISCILLA had for thirty years lived in her own hired house at the end of the village street, and thirty years she had been the backbone of all the Christian endeavour of the place, if not the originator.

She had been heard to say, after the first church tea held at her house: "I'm only a stranger among you as yet, speaking socially; but really I have been your sister for twenty-five years, for I was fifteen when I first gave my heart to the Lord, and all his children are brethren."

"I wish we acted a little more as if we believed it, dear friend," the minister had said to her; "perhaps you have been sent among us to show us how to dwell together in 'brotherly love.' At present we cannot develop brotherly unity without gossip and censure following. I am sorry to say that our usual attitude is not a family one."

"Ah, minister," Miss Priscilla had replied, "I have heard of your kind heart, and what you have been saying is only oratory, I know."

Miss Priscilla was not rich, as men count riches, but she was "filled with the Spirit," which is to have love, and understanding, and righteousness all in one. After making up a little basket she would say:

"I am going over to see Mrs. Queed; poor thing, she needs all the sympathy we can give her, and I feel I have neglected her. She is not well."

"Sympathy, indeed!" snorted the listener. "She belongs to no church, and spends her time saying nasty things of everybody. I should give her a wide berth—her tongue is positively dangerous."

"Hush, dear! Don't you suppose the Lord knows? We can leave all that with Him. He never said, 'Avoid one another,' or 'Disparage one another,' did He? I think Sarah Queed's case needs love."

No one ever knew what passed between the two women, but when Miss Priscilla followed Mrs. Queed, two Sundays after this, into her own seat at church, many turned the gaze of censure within, and acknowledged to themselves that Miss Priscilla's way was best. The minister got into the way of calling upon Miss Priscilla, and laying before her the difficulties of his parish work.

"They seem to be growing too much for me," he would say. "I came here full of resolve and hope, but I am full of disappointment and bitterness, now. I am at the end of my resources."

"That is what our Lord has been waiting for," had been the answer, as Miss Priscilla fell on her knees, the minister following her example, and leading in prayer, which came with fresh force from his deepest heart.

After that, the minister never let more than twenty-four hours pass between his prayer-times in Miss Priscilla's parlour, and it was noticed that his sermons and his pastoral visits had lost their note of dissatisfaction, and that the number of those who sought the Lord's table increased at every gathering.

"Our minister is looking very tired," mooted Miss Priscilla at the weekly sewing-meeting. "And no wonder! He has six or seven hundred persons to think of and help, and all of us expecting something from him whenever we see him. I vote we give him a holiday."

There were ominous silences or whispered grumblings at this.

"Let Miss Priscilla send him away if she wants to give him a rest," said one, who did not enjoy the "luxury of giving."

"I think she wants us to share in the pleasure," suggested one of Miss Priscilla's latest converts, no other than Mrs. Queed.

"He has never had a holiday," said a third, "and I don't see he needs one now. He has got a fresh lease of hope just lately."

"Well, if he has never had a holiday, he more than needs one now," said the proposer. "How shall we start the list?"

So the thing was settled. The minister and his wife had a second honeymoon, and came back with new ideas, fresh themes, renewed courage and hope, and hearts bubbling over with love and gratitude.

"I never knew how I loved my people," said the minister on his first Sunday home, "until I had left them. That knowledge makes my home-coming a cause for fresh thanksgiving to God."

And his people felt it. Not for ten years had such blessing flowed into the little gathering, and out from it to others, as on that memorable Sabbath. The hearts of all were touched anew.

"I know I have to thank you first for this," the minister had said the next day to Miss Priscilla. "And I do. You are a brave heart."

"Ah," the little woman had said, "you do not know me. I am a great coward—I dread the thought of my death-bed."

The minister was surprised, but he did not say so. He felt he had not much to say to one who had taught him so much.

"It says," he reminded her, "'In such an hour as ye think not.' He knows your fear of death, our Lord, and He will be very gentle with you."

"Yes, I know the words, and also those others, 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end.' But 'tis my shame that I cannot grasp them," had been Miss Priscilla's answer.

And now, at the end of thirty years she was dead, and those who loved her wondered how they were to be comforted for their loss. Some of these and the minister were in her little parlour.

"She had always dreaded dying," he told them. "This strange fear was very strong in her until it came to the end."

"But she died so happily and peacefully," they reminded him.

"Yes," he replied, "I asked her how it was with her, after the doctor had said she could not live, and she told me she was quite resigned, and oh! so happy, but that she dreaded dying as much as ever. 'I dread the final struggle,' were her words."

"If ever there was a saint, she is one," said Mrs. Queed, "she taught me to know the love of God, and to love his people. Dear soul, I wish we all had as little to dread from death as she."

"As I held her hand when her pulse was failing fast, I asked her," said the minister, "if all was well with her. 'Never better, for my Lord is with me,' she replied, 'faithful to his promise, "when thou passest through the waters I will be with thee"; but hold my hand, for the end is not yet.' 'It is very, very near, dear friend,' I whispered, for I saw the dark shadow crossing her face, and her eyes were dim. Then she drew me down to her, and tried to repeat a verse of the hymn, 'Jesus, Lover of my soul,' so I sang it for her. I felt her hand relax in mine, and I saw the beginning of a new life upon her face, as a glorified smile illumined it, and she met my eyes with a gaze of wonder. 'Is—this—death! It is—the arm of my Father—bearing—me—to—rest. Jesus! new life—love! Tell them—how easy!' And so there was no fear and no struggle, but joy, and I knew then, from this fresh lesson I had learned from Miss Priscilla, that my God shall supply all our need, whatever it be, out of his riches in glory, and, old as I am, I am glad to have one more realisation of this."

M. B. GERDS.

The Second Chautauqua (or summer assembly of Sunday-school teachers) is now being held at Matlock by the Sunday School Union. Dr. Agar Beet described it as "a holiday sanctified by intelligence and devotion." The early morning meetings for prayer and praise have been peculiarly helpful and uplifting, and in many ways the Chautauqua is proving a blessing to the town as well as to its members.

Students at Keswick.

THE Executive Committee of the British College Christian Union is arranging to hold the Fourth Annual Students' Conference at Keswick, from Tuesday, July 21, to Monday, July 27. The blessing which God has been pleased to bestow on the students' work from the very first, and the manifest power and influence of the Student Volunteer Convention at Liverpool, inspire hopes that the coming Conference will be no less significant than its predecessors.

It will be remembered that the British College Christian Union stands distinct from the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, which deals exclusively with foreign missions; and that its purpose is to organise the students in the various universities and colleges of the country, with the object of strengthening their own spiritual lives and winning their fellow-students for Christ.

Special attention is to be given this year to (1) the organising and conduct of Bible study groups; (2) the deepening of spiritual life and working of missionary societies in theological colleges; (3) Missionary study: this department will be directed by the S.V.M.U.; a new system of organised study of missions is to be introduced; (4) special meetings for presidents and secretaries, to enable them to fulfil more effectively their high calling.

Speakers who have promised to take part are: Mr. D. A. Black, Miss G. A. Golloch, Prof. Laidlaw, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Mr. G. L. Pilkington, Mr. Eugene Stock, Rev. E. A. Stuart, Rev. Canon Taylor-Smith, and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. Let us "ask in faith, nothing wavering," for the presence of the Lord in this gathering. F. A.

Letter from Dr. Griffith John.

DEAR SIR,—The following extract from The Chinese Recorder will interest the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. It will give them some idea of the remarkable progress the missionary work has been making in China of late. The Editor writes:—

"In the Mission hand-book just issued from the Mission Press, Shanghai, we note the total number of communicants in the various Protestant churches in 1893 was something over 55,000. Making due allowances for losses by death and defections, we suppose it would be reasonable to count an average nett gain of over 5000 per annum. This would bring the present membership of the churches in 1896 to some 70,000. But the ratio of increase is a continually increasing one, so that we may be safe in inferring that the number is even considerably larger than this. And when the amount of preparatory and foundation work which has been gone through is remembered, the books and tracts prepared, text-books and educational works, medical and scientific works, schools and colleges founded, there is certainly much cause for encouragement and call for thanksgiving."

Such is the extract, and I have read it with deep thankfulness. Compare the present with the past. In 1842, the year in which our first treaty with China was concluded, there were just six communicants in the whole of China—that is, in connection with the Protestant Church. In 1855, the year in which I arrived in China, there were about 500, certainly not more. In 1860, the year in which our last treaty came into full operation, there may have been 1000. In 1890, there were about 38,000; and now there are more than 70,000, representing a Christian community of not less than 150,000 souls.

The past five years have been years of exceptional trial, and yet the increase in church membership has been exceptionally great. In spite of riots, massacres, and all kinds of outrages, there has been, since 1890, an increase of more than 30,000 communicants. It took the first thirty-five years to build up a church of six members, while a church of about 70,000 members has been built up within the last thirty-five years. We commenced our first century in China with nothing; we shall commence our second, in all probability, with more than 100,000 communicants, representing a Christian community of not less than 300,000 souls. Is not that something worth thanking God for?

The modern mission has not been a failure in China. Looking at it in the light of numerical increase, it has not been a failure. But that is not the only way of looking at it. There are results which cannot be represented in figures, and they are the results which cheer my heart most as I think of the future of the work.—Yours sincerely,

Hankow, April 18.

GRIFFITH JOHN.

[553]

Mr. Moody's Bible Institute.

A TESTIMONY.

IN response to the request as to what the Institute has been to a student, the following testimony is given:—

"I was converted in 1888, during a mission in April of that year, conducted by Dr. Guinness in Liverpool Y.M.C.A. My attention was called to the work of the Bible Institute in 1891 through reading an article in the London CHRISTIAN. I wrote to Mr. Moody seeking admission to his school at Mount Hermon. Shortly afterwards I received a reply to the effect that that school was full, but recommended that application be made to the Bible Institute, Chicago. I made application. Forms were filled, testimonials given, and in a few days the answer came, 'Your application received and accepted.' The joy which that conveyed was truly great.

"The Institute was reached about midnight during the month of October, 1891. The door-man wanted me to find accommodation in some hotel near by until the office opened in the morning. I informed him—he, by the way, is working successfully for the Master in India—that I had but two dollars and a few cents, and to stay at an hotel would ruin me, consequently he took pity on me, and gave me a room. I shall never forget the genial friendship of the boys, their happy faces and earnest prayers. To me it seemed another world, and I felt truly blessed. After working hard at washing dishes, waiting on table, and a number of other pleasant (?) occupations, I was informed by the superintendent that I had been granted a scholarship, which meant tuition, board, room, and washing free for two years. This was an unexpected boon. It came at the right time, for my money was all spent.

"During the two and a-half years that I was at the Institute, my time was fairly well occupied, preaching, visiting, personal work, music and lectures. During the World's Fair, Mr. Moody gave me charge of a tent on Chicago-avenue. The experience gained during the months of the World's Fair campaign to me were invaluable. I think they were the most profitable months of my Christian life. Contact with such men as Dr. A. J. Gordon, Prof. W. G. Moorehead, Rev. J. McNeill, Henry Varley, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Mr. George C. Stebbins, Mr. Ira D. Sankey, and others, the different lines of work and varied methods used to win men from shame and sin, the manifest results, the lectures and addresses, the soul-stirring music. For all these privileges and opportunities, I thank God and the Bible Institute.

"I left the Institute at the end of two and a half years, with a fair knowledge of the work and the need of the world, how to use the voice in song, and a good number of friends. I took up the work of my present charge some thirty months back, and have immensely enjoyed my labour. I was accepted as a student of theology and licensed to preach March 27, 1894, and ordained a minister of the U. P. Church December 19, 1894. The work here was small at the beginning, but God has richly aided us. During my time as pastor we have taken in something like 175 members. We have a Sabbath school of some 600 enrolled scholars, with a corps of thirty-five officers and teachers. The present building has become too small, and this very week we break ground for our new church with a seating capacity of 800 to 1000.

"I consider the Institute the right place for the right man, but cranks and such like soon find they are not wanted. The worthy superintendent has his eyes open, and can, as a rule, readily detect the character and good qualities, and an honest, persevering student will not be denied any of the help and assistance possible. When I say God prosper the work of the Institute and spare the lives of its founder, superintendent, and teachers, I voice the wishes and prayers of hundreds who through the teaching received have a good conception of the present need of men and how to supply that need."—Record of Christian Work.

Of the 521 students enrolled at the Institute during 1895—twenty-nine denominations were represented, Methodist Episcopal taking the lead, with eighty; Presbyterian, seventy-eight; Baptist, fifty-seven, and Congregational, forty-one. These students came from twenty-eight different States and from other countries. Canada takes the lead, sending thirty-three; England, twenty-three; Ireland, thirteen; Scotland, seven; Germany, eight; Wales, four; Norway, three, and two each from Denmark, Bavaria, Sweden, France, Switzerland, and one each from Russia, China, Japan, and New Zealand. They represented 101 professions and occupations. 150 dols. will help to put a student through one year; 75 dols. six months.

Letter to the Editor.

"THE DAY OF REST."

DEAR SIR,—IN THE CHRISTIAN to hand by this mail I notice the subject of your twelfth letter from South Africa is "The Day of Rest." You must permit me to say that I think you have misunderstood the position which some of us take on the matter. As you have quoted from a pamphlet of mine, I may perhaps be allowed a word in reply. I should be sorry for the quotation which you have given from that to go forth as a summary of my position, or that of any here who oppose the teachings of the Seventh Day Adventists. You quote as a summary expression what is but a fraction of one of the propositions made by me. At the beginning of my tract there are a few lines which give a much more complete summary than those quoted by you. They are as follows:—

"The Sabbath was an institution given to the children of Israel when they came out of Egypt; it was a part of that law which is done away with in Christ; it was a type of spiritual blessing to be possessed by those who have faith in Christ; and it was never given to Christians, because we have the reality and not the shadow."

That summarises not only my own position, but that of many others on the Sabbath question. But that paragraph only deals with the Sabbath; and because we believe the Sabbath has passed, you have concluded that we repudiate a day of rest. You speak of our denying that God has ever given a day of rest to the world at large.

You must bear in mind that in teaching that the Sabbath has passed we are only opposing those who try to bring us into bondage to the law given through Moses; and their first step is to bring us back to the observance of the Jewish Sabbath. We say the seventh day Sabbath was given only to the children of Israel, and we challenge anyone to produce a passage in the Old Testament that speaks of it being given to any but to them. In the New Testament, in the Epistles written to Gentiles, we find nothing said about the Sabbath beyond saying that it was nailed to the cross with the handwriting of ordinances that were against us, that it was a shadow of things to come, and that no man is to judge us in regard to the Sabbath. In other parts of the New Testament we find only references to Christ's observance of it (and He being born under the law placed Himself under this seventh-day law), to incidents occurring on it, and to it being, with Canaan, a type of the rest which believers in Christ enjoy.

The only passage you quote of general import is, "The Sabbath was made for man; not man for the Sabbath." That passage surely cannot contradict all the passages in the Old Testament, which distinctly state that it was given to the children of Israel as a sign to separate them from the other nations, and as a memorial of their deliverance from Egypt. Is not this the explanation? The whole of the law as comprised in ceremonies, observances, sacrifices, etc., while given only to the Israelites for observance, was given, through them, to the whole world, for its lessons to be learned by all. Everything that was typical of Christ, or of something possessed in Him, was given for all men. The types may pass, but the lessons remain; and the lesson of the Sabbath was given that we might learn how God sanctifies us (Eze. xx. 10-13), and also that we might know the rest there is for us in Christ (Heb. iv.)

Now, the Sabbatarian says: "You believe that Sunday is the Sabbath? Show me in the Bible where the day was changed? Show me where we are commanded to keep the first day instead of the seventh? Show me where the seventh day law is binding on the first day of the week?" And you can show him none of these things. If the Sabbath remains, it must be kept according to instructions. There is nothing in the Bible about a change of day.

We have in the New Testament the first day of the week, the Lord's day, marked off from all other days; we have the disciples meeting on that day; we have it mentioned as the day which the early Christians set apart for worship; but we have not the slightest hint that that took the place of the Sabbath, or that the Sabbath law was considered to apply to it. If space permitted, I could quote from the fathers of the second, third, and fourth centuries to show that the early Christians, while regarding the Lord's Day as a sacred day, never considered that that was given instead of the Sabbath, or that the Sabbath law applied to it. I could quote from Luther, Calvin, Dr. Dale, and many others, to show that our position of the Lord's Day not being the Sabbath is no new one.

As Christians we acknowledge the Lord's Day. Christ has claimed it by the Resurrection from the dead, and by the gift of the Spirit at Pentecost. The example of the early Church bids us observe it. To those who recognise themselves as the Lord's, no Act of Parliament is needed to enforce the observance of this day. Those who do not yield themselves to the Lord, we have no right to force, on religious grounds, to observe what is essentially a religious day. We cannot extract religious observance by Act of Parliament.

But we are citizens as well as Christians. If the need of one day's rest in seven is proved by experience, and if it is written, as I firmly believe it is, in the physical and mental needs of men, we have a right to say that it is necessary for the good of the community for there to be a weekly respite from work; and as we legislate on moral and social grounds on other matters touching the welfare of the community, so we have a right to ask for legislation here. We do not go as Christians to Government and ask it to help us to observe a day that we freely grant should be observed by us, and which we esteem it a privilege to observe; neither do we ask Government to persuade men by force to observe a day, whom by religious arguments we cannot persuade to observe it. But we go as citizens, taking common ground with the rest of our fellow-men, to ask that in the interests of the community there may be a weekly respite from work. If we ask for legislation on religious grounds we have granted the principle of the right of the State to legislate on religious matters, a principle which we are not inclined to grant.

From the above I think you will see your difference with a large section of Christians in this country is not so real as you thought.—Yours heartily,

ERNEST BAKER,
Baptist Minister.

The Gardens, Cape Town, May 5.

After the Chinese Riots.

You may be interested to know that work has been resumed again in this Sz-chuan province, where the late riots were perpetrated. Nearly all the missionaries who had to leave are now on the field again. Some, alas! have been unable to come back, the nervous shock proving too much for them. The health of some has been seriously impaired; they have been obliged to abandon mission work in China, and may be invalided for life. The mission I represent have lost three families from this field, all valued workers and friends. They are engaged in mission work still—two in China on the coast, and one has been transferred to Japan.

The native Christians seem to be bright and happy. Their faith was sorely tried, but they have stood the test, for which we thank God and go forward. All seem anxious to do what they can to spread a knowledge of God, believing that a true knowledge of Him and his love will effectually prevent such disturbances again. The opinion of some of the missionaries (I believe a large number) is that mission work has been pushed forward instead of backward.

The people are as friendly as usual; the magistrates very much more so than before the riots. Should the magistrates continue to favour us thus there will be no more riots in this province for a long time to come. This marked change in the officials towards us is a cause for deep thankfulness. We do not curry favour, but we need justice. This is all we ask at the hands of the officials in this province. England, America, and France have taught them a lesson which it is to be hoped they will not soon forget.

R. WELLWOOD, A.B.M.U.
Sui-fu, China.

State-Regulated Immorality.

THE great crusade against Government licensed and regulated immorality, which led to the crowning victory of repeal of this system in England in 1886, came to the front again last week, when Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER presided, at Westminster Town Hall, over the annual meeting of the Ladies' International Association. This Association was always prominent in the twenty-years' agitation against the Contagious Diseases Acts in England and India, and since they were repealed has joined with the Federation for abolishing the Police des mœurs in those continental countries where it exists.

On the 11th inst. the entire sitting capacity of the great hall and gallery was fully utilised. Mrs. Butler has returned to England after vigorously joining in a public agitation against open vice in Geneva—the only Swiss city which is tainted by this sinful system—being municipally regulated by code. Her audience at Westminster, while largely composed of those who fought the English Parliament for repeal under her lead, also contained scores of a younger generation, whose adhesion is gained because of the many attempts which are being made by doctors, military men, and a certain section of members of Parliament, to secure some system of again licensing and supervising public immorality by Government in England and in India.

Dr. NEVINS told the meeting how the editor of one of the two great medical papers in London had for years persistently advocated re-enactment of the C.D. Acts, and with equal obstinacy had refused to print a single letter or argument in favour of repeal. Yet all the statistics of the health of the British Army at home and in India, as furnished by the Government, prove conclusively that disease among soldiers has largely decreased since those Acts were repealed in 1886. Dr. DRYSDALE, who has been hon. physician for the Rescue Society and at specialist hospitals for women for many years, also spoke strongly against any re-enactment of this regulation system, and testified to his great admiration of Mrs. Josephine Butler for the ignominy she had faced for so many years in the cause of public morality. Sir Wm. Wedderburn, Bart., M.P., Mr. James Stuart, M.P., Mr. Walter McLaren, ex-M.P. for Crewe, Mr. Percy W. Bunting, M. Le Messurier, and many ladies, were among the other speakers who addressed the meeting.

Mrs. Josephine Butler's speech was mainly directed to an explanation of the recent contest in Geneva, which she considers was as great an episode in the crusade for public morality as anything that ever happened in the most crucial and exciting times in England. For the first time the adult male population of Geneva was asked to vote for or against the system. The vote was in favour of it. This defeat of the cause of morality, Mrs. Butler and other Abolitionists attribute (1) to pernicious association with the system, which has existed in Geneva since Napoleon introduced it for the convenience of his soldiers 100 years ago; (2) to the fact that the questions on which the popular vote was taken were so artfully worded as to constitute deception. But so greatly has the Genevese public been educated on the moral aspect of the case that Mrs. Butler considers this defeat only a prelude to an early victory.

This meeting is certainly a warning that any attempts to reintroduce the C.D. Acts in any form in England will be instantly opposed by a party of righteous combatants who are alert, and in solid, organised phalanx on the side of purity, and an equal standard of morality for all men and women alike. Literature and information on this question may be had on application to the Secretary, 1, King-street, Westminster, S.W.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, St. Paul's, Onslow-square, June 19; Bradford, June 22; Leeds, June 23; Caistor, June 24; Spalding, June 25; Highbury, June 25; Highgate, June 27. Mr. B. Herklotz, Bradford, June 19; Whitley Beaumont, near Huddersfield, June 20; Bradford, June 20-22; Leeds, June 23-24; Wetherby, June 25; Thorne, June 26; Gargrave, June 27; Bingley, June 28. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Hamilton, N.B., to June 18. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Brighton, June 18. Mr. Hankinson, Trowbridge, July 11-19. Mr. E. Hughes, Guildford, June 18. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with caravan, Litchington, to June 20; Basingbourne, June 21-30. Mr. Arrowsmith, Swanbourne, June 21; Akeley, June 23, Cuddington, June 26; Great Missenden, June 28; Weston-super-Mare, July 5-12.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending June 27, 1896.—Sun., June 21, Acts xvi. 1-13; Mon., June 22, xvi. 14-24; Tues., June 23, xvi. 25-40; Wed., June 24, xvii. 1-15; Thurs., June 25, xvii. 16-34; Fri., June 26, xviii. 1-17; Sat., June 27, xviii. 18-28.

Y.W.C.A.

NEW HEADQUARTERS.

LAST week we noted the holding of a meeting at Portman House, in connection with the acquisition of new headquarters for the Y.W.C.A. in George-street, Hanover-square. In his remarks on that occasion Lord Kinnaird said the committee were persuaded that in this house will be found a permanent home and centre worthy of the Young Women's Christian Association. It is spacious enough to provide a central institute and offices for the London Association, as well as offices for the World's Y.W.C.A., with its "Continental" and other divisions, the British National Council, the South of England division, and, in addition, will afford space for a good gymnasium, and for a hall capable of holding 500. The house, which is a freehold property and a substantial solid structure, will readily adapt itself to the requirements of the work. Centrally situated, it is in the immediate vicinity of Regent-street, Oxford-street, and Bond-street, and within easy reach of the thousands of young women employed in business in the West End, to whom it will prove a permanent and incalculable benefit.

The financial responsibility involved in the purchase of the new premises has received the careful consideration of the committee. They felt that before concluding the contract for this house, they ought to be relieved of all responsibility in respect of Morley Halls, and 16a, Old Cavendish-street, which they at present occupy, and this was made a definite subject for prayer at the first meeting held in the premises before they were secured. The lease of Morley Halls has been taken over by a substantial tenant, and no reasonable doubt existed of being able to dispose of 16a, Old Cavendish-street when the Association are prepared to vacate it.

The Association appeal to Christians to contribute the £9000 still needed for the purchase money this month. A sum of £800 was the result of the Portman House meeting. Contributions will be received by the treasurer, Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

NOTES FROM INDIA.

BYCULLA, BOMBAY.—A Bible class was recently begun in the Home. Five came, which was a good beginning. More have promised to come next Sunday. Also the monthly Bible-reading of the Byculla branch is held here, so the Home is really being used.

COLABA, BOMBAY.—Miss Hotsnaile, since becoming sec. of Colaba, has worked up the branch very well. Here is the only weekly Bible-reading, and she has a monthly one to suit those who cannot come more frequently. There is a junior branch, also a Bible-reading on Sundays for ladies' maids on Malabar Hill.

BANGALORE.—There is a very bright Association here, and there have been very pleasant meetings; but as this is the hot season almost every one is away at the hills. There are a number of people speaking English who are unvisited. Their children are growing up without even learning to read and write. Mothers' meetings are unattended. Why? For need of more workers. In one crowded part of the town house after house is filled with poor Eurasians, so poor that they are hardly able to earn an honest living. A little is being done among the soldiers and their wives, but oh, so little.

DARJEELING.—There is a general spirit of expectancy that God is going to do great things here, and souls are thirsty. If only they will give in to Jesus.

The annual meeting [of the officers of the Edinburgh Association was recently held. The delegates included the Countess of Moray, Lady Overton, and others. Gratifying progress was reported among the fisher folk at Peterhead. Nearly £1000 is raised annually for missions.

An Indian Conference.—A three days' missionary conference was recently held at Kodaikanal, India. Over 100 missionaries attended. We all returned to our homes feeling it was good to have lost sight for a time of different modes of church government, and to have met and taken counsel one with another, realising, in deed and in truth, that "we are all one in Christ Jesus." Those of us who went up from the heat of the plains, with its burden of work and responsibilities, felt it had been a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. M. A. ROBINSON.

Pondicherry.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Forest Committee of the Corporation have granted permission to the District Council of the N.E. Metropolitan Union, to form a Y.M.C.A. Camp in Epping Forest from August 1 to 10. The mornings will be devoted to conferences, Bible readings, etc. Afternoons to picnics, rambles, and athletic exercises, the evenings to conferences, lantern lectures, etc.

The Hackney Association has lost its second missionary member on the Congo. Two others have volunteered to fill the gaps. One has already entered college, and the second hopes soon to follow. Three others hope to leave this summer for various parts of the foreign mission field. The same Association has organised a series of fortnightly holiday parties this summer to the English Lakes, Norfolk Broads, and North Wales.

The annual meeting of the Hazelwood Holiday Home was recently held in Exeter Hall. Mr. T. W. Morphey read the annual report, in which it was stated that nearly 1200 visitors had enjoyed the privileges of the Institution during the past twelve months. The committee will be glad of help in furnishing the large recreation room, towards the building of which the visitors themselves have liberally contributed.

The Norwich Association has held a very successful congratulatory meeting to celebrate the freeing from debt of its extensive premises in St. Giles'-street. Mr. J. J. Colman (president) occupied the chair, and was supported by the Mayor (Mr. J. Moore), Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.A., M.P., and Rev. Dr. Barrett. The property was purchased in 1885 for £3550, but by the alterations necessary that outlay was nearly doubled.

The Year Book, issued this week by the National Council for first circulation among the delegates to the British Conference at Derby, is an exhaustive survey of the progress of the movement throughout the world. The "World's Table" shows that the Y.M.C.A. is now represented at 6232 centres, and that the enrolled membership is 511,750. In Great Britain the centres are 1298, and the membership 98,899. No fewer than 116 young men from the English and Irish associations in the course of last year entered the ministry or the mission field, or went into training for work in one or the other of these spheres.

Christian Endeavour.

THE Bristol Methodist Council has by a large majority recommended the Wesley Guild to the societies of the district. A vote was also given in favour of the Guild being associated with the Christian Endeavour movement.

The C.E. movement has taken firm root in some parts of Madagascar. Almost all the churches in Antananarivo have such a society, and so have many of the stronger congregations in the villages. A great united gathering was held on April 20.

The Rev. Arnold Streuli, of Moss Side Baptist Church, and the Rev. W. H. Towers, of Oldham-road Independent Chapel, Manchester, have accepted invitations from the Rev. Dr. Clark to speak at the approaching International Christian Endeavour Convention at Washington, and have arranged to leave for America on the 23rd inst.

The handbook of the Epworth League in Canada gives some good advice. Leaders in Endeavour meetings will appreciate some sentences. "Beware of the stereotyped form of service. Often have the pledge recited in concert, sometimes at the beginning, and sometimes at the close of the meeting; sometimes all standing, and sometimes sitting, or with bowed heads. It is a good plan to get as many as possible to take part at the very beginning of the meeting."

Gospel Tent Work.—Mr. Thomas Radcliffe writes from Church Aston, Newport, Shropshire:—"About twenty-one years ago a committee was formed, consisting of Rev. H. O'Rourke, vicar of Sheriff Hales, Rev. C. Cuthbert, rector of Aberhafe, Mr. J. Howard Maclean, who was president, Dr. Cranage, and myself and others. The work has been carried on ever since with much interest and manifest blessing. The tent is pitched for about four months in each year in the most needy districts of Shropshire and Staffordshire, and the simple Gospel of God's grace is declared nightly, and twice on the Lord's Day by the evangelist who accompanies it, he being assisted by Christian friends in the various districts visited. I regret to say that we are compelled to have a new tent this season, and therefore any help you are able to give will be doubly welcome, especially as so many of the old supporters of the work are dead. We often find those who, years ago, received real blessing from the work carried on in the tent."

Personalia.

Mr. Warwick Pearse, son of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, having adopted the educational profession, has lately been appointed to the teaching staff at Clayesmore School, Enfield.

Dr. Lunn has retired from the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as he says, "in order that I may serve the Church of God more effectively in English Wesleyan Methodism."

Rev. J. D. Kilburn has been delivering a course of lectures on "Memory and its Use" to the students at Neukirchen and at the Johanneum (founded by Professor Christlieb) at Barmen. The results of the lectures have been beyond his expectations, and apparently beyond those of all concerned.

Bishop William Taylor, of Africa, has been relieved of his duties by the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. The aged bishop is to be succeeded by Dr. Joseph C. Hartzell, who, as secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society, has done much for the education and uplifting of the liberated slave and his descendants in the United States.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin.—An immense gathering of members and friends met in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Monday night to celebrate the fiftieth birthday of Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin, J.F., who has acted as general secretary of the Tower Hamlets Mission for twenty-seven years. Mr. F. N. Charrington, who presided, referred to Mr. Kerwin's untiring labours in the East-End for over a quarter of a century, inside the Mission and outside in connection with parochial affairs. On behalf of hundreds of friends, he presented Mr. Kerwin with an illuminated address, a silver tea and coffee set, and a pocket-book containing one hundred guineas.

Professor Henry Drummond.—The numerous friends of Professor Drummond, in many lands, will have seen, with deep regret, recent notices in the newspapers telling of his physical prostration, now continued for almost eighteen months. We are very sorry to learn that as yet there is small sensible improvement in the Professor's health. Since the beginning of the present year he has been a close prisoner on his couch at Tunbridge Wells, virtually unable to move and at times in suffering. The physicians seem unable to classify the mysterious ailment which has laid him low; but are not unhopeful of an ultimate, if prolonged and tedious, recovery. We are sure he will have the prayerful sympathy of our readers. He bears his illness with patient fortitude and cheerfulness.

Evangelistic Notes.

Cranagill.—A successful series of tent meetings has been held during the last three weeks by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference evangelist, at Cranagill, near Portadown. The attendance was very large, and the results most encouraging.

New Sampford, Essex.—A fortnight's tent mission, conducted by Mr. Hugh C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society, has just been held in this village. Although the population is but small, the congregations were good, and it is believed that good has been done.

Wilts.—During the past fortnight Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has been holding meetings in Salisbury, Shaftesbury, and Enmore Green. He has been much cheered by meeting with those who received blessing when he paid his first visit to the district fourteen years ago.

Edinburgh Castle.—Mr. Charles Inglis has been preaching here during the past month. Believers have been profited, while the addresses to the unsaved have been owned in leading men and women to Christ. Mr. Inglis is holding a mission during the next fortnight in a large marquee at Harlesden Green.

Bermundsey.—Mr. C. Edwards, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, has finished an eight days' Gospel Mission at Jamaica-row Congregational Church (Pastor Rev. H. Rosier). It has proved a great blessing to all who were present. The people were deeply interested in the pictorial lectures entitled, "Clocks and Christians," and "The Life and Death Railway."

Dane Hill, Sussex.—Mr. James Shields, of the London Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission here. Several professed conversion, and believers have been strengthened and refreshed. Mr. Shields, who has been much blessed amongst children, held children's meetings nearly every afternoon. A good work was also done in the open-air on Sunday afternoons.

Belfast.—A three weeks' mission has been held in Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast, by Mr. J. Bennet Anderson. The services were much appreciated by the people of the district. Every night there were anxious inquirers, and many professed to have found Christ at the meetings. The minister of the church, Rev. W. Witherow, now conducts a Bible class every Monday evening for those who decided for Christ, and his heart is much cheered by the number of men and women who attend. After closing his mission in Westbourne Church, Mr. Anderson began another in Great George's Street Church, in another part of the city on Sabbath, May 24, and here also the Word was with power. After rest, Mr. Anderson will commence a mission in a large tent in the Shankhill-road, in connection with Rev. Henry Montgomery's Church.

A series of united evangelistic services is being arranged by the Nottingham Free Church Council for the autumn. The list of names of special preachers, which includes Rev. John McNeill, is compiled from eight denominations.

Scottish Notes.

A LADIES' auxiliary has been formed of the Glasgow branch of the Scottish Armenian Association.

A scheme is being matured for having special Gospel missions within the bounds of the Edinburgh Free Presbytery.

A three days' convention has been held at Douglas Support, Coatbridge, convened by Rev. Sholto Douglas. There was a large attendance.

In the F.C. Monthly for June there is a protest against the "inappropriate and incoherent prayers offered in the pulpit." Pastors are urged to be less discursive and more specific in their petitions.

The Jewish Evangelical Mission in Glasgow has done good work among the Jews in the city. There are large attendances at the meetings, and much interest is shown by the Jews in the efforts made on their behalf.

Messrs. McGregor and Crawford, of the Edinburgh Gospel Mission, are at present labouring in the far north of Scotland. They have closed a mission at Janetstown, near Thurso, where much interest was taken in the work.

Irish Notes.

The one-hundred-and-twenty-seventh conference of the Methodist Church in Ireland begins its proceedings in Dublin on Wednesday, and is likely to be one of the most interesting assemblies of the kind held in Ireland for a long time. It consists of 150 ministers and a similar number of laymen, and although no burning question is to come before it, yet many matters of vital interest will be considered. Rev. Dr. Waller, President of the English Wesleyan Conference, will occupy the chair.

The general assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church came to a close on Wednesday last week, after having been in session for nine days, and getting through an enormous amount of work. It was decided to allow the music question, which has been a burning topic in the Church for many years past, to rest; thus individual congregations are at liberty to do as they please in the matter. On the whole, the proceedings were very harmonious and encouraging, and the Moderator, Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, won golden opinions for the way in which he presided.

The Zenana Mission of the Irish Presbyterian Church is doing a splendid work. It has now fourteen lady missionaries in India, and one in China. It has two ladies in training for India, and three ladies are about to sail for China in August; consequently the Society hopes soon to have twenty missionaries in the field. In India at present there are twenty-one schools for girls under the care of the ladies of the Mission, and in these there are ninety-two teachers and 1603 scholars. Many of the missionaries hold high-class medical degrees, and for such labourers there is a vast field in India and China.

Mrs. Hilton's Creche and Branches.

DEAR FRIENDS,—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN have taken such a warm interest in my late wife's institutions from their origin, that I beg to be allowed to say a few words to them. My family are doing their best to manage the institutions efficiently till arrangements can be made for them to be carried on by other hands, but the current expenses have been and are going on. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that the help so long given by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN should be continued. Help is urgently needed at this moment.—Very sincerely yours,

JOHN HILTON, Treasurer (pro tem.)

Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney.

[We trust our readers will render a hearty and full response to Mr. Hilton's appeal. The long-continued illness of the late Mrs. Hilton prevented her from taking the steps necessary to keep the claims of the work before the public, and her husband deserves special sympathy in his earnest desire to place the future of this valuable effort on a solid basis.—ED.]

Obituary.

REV. D. REOCK.

I HEAR with sorrow of the death of Rev. D. Reock, at Zeila, East Africa, on May 23. He was preparing for mission work among the Gallas: "Oh for more of Jesus in me! He is able to save," are the concluding words of his last letter to me.

Aden.

WILLIAM LETHABY.

REV. RICHARD TYACKE.

The death is announced, at the advanced age of 93, of Rev. Richard Tyacke, for sixty years Vicar of Padstow. A native of Cornwall, he held three curacies in the county before beginning work at Padstow. With the exception that he has been blind for a few years his faculties were keen to the last. "As Vicar of Padstow," says the Western Morning News, "he was held in the highest esteem, and in his dealings with his parishioners he knew no difference between Church and Dissent. It was no uncommon occurrence in years gone by for Dissenters to help to make up those crowded congregations which assembled to hear him. Wherever he went, or was driven, he received the kindest greeting, and quickly recognised by their voices those who addressed him."

REV. J. H. ROBINSON.

News has been received of the death of the venerable Rev. Joseph Hiram Robinson, a native of Mossley, who entered the ministry of the Methodist New Connexion sixty-six years ago, and who died at the house of his son-in-law, Professor Saunders, at Ottawa, Canada. The deceased, after twenty years' work in some of the principal circuits in England, was sent out by the Conference to become general superintendent of the Canadian missions. He was also appointed the editor of the weekly newspaper, the Christian Witness. After giving twenty years' service in Canada, Mr. Robinson returned to England, and succeeded the late Dr. Cooke as editor of the Connexional Magazines for a period of four years, afterwards returning to Canada, where he spent the remainder of his days. His physical energy, mental alertness, and raciness as a speaker, writer, and preacher were remarkable.

REV. D. MITCHELL.

Rev. David Mitchell, minister of the Free Church of Kirkurd, Peebleshire, died with startling suddenness in Peebles on Sunday week. He was present at the ordination of Dr. John Connel Ramsay, who is about to proceed as a missionary to Livingstonia, Africa, in the Free Church of Peebles in the afternoon, and preached the sermon on the occasion. He also attended a meeting in the same place in the evening, when an address was given by Lord Over-toun. At the close of the meeting, in company with Mrs. Mitchell, he set out to drive to Kirkurd, and when scarcely a mile beyond the town the horse shied, and immediately after he was observed to be ill. He was conveyed back to Minden, Peebles, where he passed peacefully away at half-past eleven o'clock. His death is attributed to heart disease, from which he had been suffering for some time. Only three weeks ago he was unanimously elected colleague and successor to Rev. A. C. Fullerton, of Buchan Memorial Free Church, Glasgow.

MR. THOMAS HOLT.

We have heard with sorrow of the murder of Mr. Thomas Holt, of the Central Soudan Mission. It is said to have taken place in November last, when he was travelling down to the Benue river, after visiting Kano, Zinder, and Yakoba. The small party, consisting only of Mr. Holt and his Lagos cook boy, with an Arab and seven negroes, were attacked by some Pagan natives. The Arab says he was badly wounded himself, and the whole party ran for their lives. Mr. Holt was struck by two poisoned arrows, and, falling from his horse, was killed immediately. The Arab eventually found his way to Ibi, on the Benue, and gave the sad news to the officials of the Royal Niger Company. In his last letter to Mr. Hermann Harris, dated Kano, April 22, he said: "God has been wonderfully gracious to me. For twenty-three days I have not even entered into a house, except only to salute the king at Zaria, yet I am enjoying the very best of health. Though Kano is the largest city, and probably most central town in the Soudan, it is not the best place to commence work, for the following reasons:—(1) Health (water is very bad); (2) On account of many Arabs residing here, Mohammedanism has a firm hold of the people; (3) It would be many years before married missionaries could reside here. The journey up to this point is so trying. My proposal is to form our first station there, as it is in easy reach of the Benue, and by that course with the coast. From this point the whole of the Soudan can be attacked, as we can strike out in all directions."

Request for Prayer.—On behalf of Gospel work in the villages of Ayrshire.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.
The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.
Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address.
The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—
For Great Britain and Ireland .. 6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries .. 8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada .. 2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY .. 2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.
4 Copies monthly .. 2s. per annum.
8 " " .. 4s. " "
12 " " .. 6s. " "
24 " " .. 12s. " "
Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE attention of readers in London and neighbourhood is directed to the announcement elsewhere of two days' Conference and Bible Study at Chingford, Epping Forest, to-morrow and Saturday. The subjects set down for consideration are deeply important, and the larger the attendance the more extended will be the resultant blessing.

We cannot pretend to any feeling of disappointment at the dropping of the Education Bill. With its political aspect it is not in our province to deal, but in its religious aspect we are deeply interested. Those who in their desire to promote the cause of religious education among the people have thrown their influence on the side of this Bill, would, we are persuaded, sooner or later have found themselves bitterly undeceived. Had it become law, it would have reawakened the fiercest religious divisions and denominational animus, penetrating into family and social circles now happily free from them. The great body of the parents, who are the persons primarily concerned, were quite content with the existing system, by which the simple reading and expounding of the Scriptures were a part of the school curriculum. We hope the Government will take warning by the fate of their bill, and not seek in the future to help on that "clericalism" which in France is proverbially described as "the enemy," and which has taught the people to hate the very name of Christianity.

On the 29th inst. an interesting ceremonial will take place at Gainsborough, when the memorial stone of the John Robinson Church will be laid by Mr. Bayard, the American Ambassador. John Robinson was the founder of the American Commonwealth; from the "Separatist" Church at Gainsborough the first exiles went to Holland, who afterwards proceeded to New England in 1820. The present Congregational Church at Gainsborough dates back to the year 1776. English and Americans are joining without distinction of sect to help the present effort to provide for church extension in the town, and a large party is likely to go down on this occasion to celebrate it in a fitting manner. May it be a renewal of spiritual life in the town, and may a large portion of the fire and enthusiasm of the noble Puritan descend on the church which will ever be associated with his honoured name!

The wreck of the Drummond Castle has touched all British hearts with pity for the dead and sympathy for the living who mourn their loss. So far as knowledge of the circumstances of the disaster goes, there is no ground for blaming anyone. It appears to have been a pure accident. As such it is a sharp reminder of the limitations of human power. A well-equipped vessel, officered by able and trustworthy men, enjoying all the advantages of modern science, goes to the bottom in a few minutes, because a rain-cloud has for a while shut out of view the guiding beacon of the lighthouse. The safeguards of modern life become, under certain circumstances, so many lures to destruction. Half an hour's slow steaming might possibly have saved this vessel and all on board, but in these days of haste we cannot or will not wait.

This sad event illustrates a danger that is as common in the spiritual as in the physical life. Men will, in order to attain their end, encounter risks that are unjustifiable, and so often bring sad consequences on themselves. They make haste to be rich, and in doing so, step as close to the rock of dishonesty as they dare; they desire pleasure, and follow it to places where they ought never to find themselves; in order to attain a purpose worthy enough in itself, they employ doubtful means. Once, twice, three times they may do this, and escape; then suddenly they are caught in the wiles of error, and on the rocks of passion, and go under before they are aware of the nearness of temptation. On the ocean of life the right course is the safe course. The "old paths" that have been trod and tested are the best to follow; they are often not the quickest or the easiest, but they lead straight on to safety and to rest.

The holiday season is fast approaching, and our readers will soon be scattering in all directions to their favourite haunts beside sea and mountain, moor and hillside. Many are eagerly looking forward to the time when they will be permitted to throw off the harness of daily work, and give themselves to the free and untrammelled enjoyment of the beauties and inspirations of nature. As there is no holiday permissible from the yoke of duty or the demands of the Divine law, which follow us everywhere, it is well to keep in mind the needs of the spiritual nature, and to prepare for such a holiday as will bring us back to our work not less but more pure and holy.

There is a way of taking a holiday which so far from refreshing the soul, leaves it impoverished and wearied. Those who go with a single eye to pleasure not seldom miss it, and come back unfitted to take a true place in the struggles of life. And there are those who in their foolish desire to have "a good time" spend more than they ought, and come back to find that the strain is appreciably increased by their vision of unpaid bills. No holiday can be adequate and noble which is not also a holyday.

There is another way in which some of those who call themselves followers of Jesus Christ, sometimes fail in this matter. All their thoughts are centred in themselves during their holidays, whatever be the case at other times. They save up for their annual holiday as for a sacred thing, and curtail their thought for others, forgetful that by a little self-sacrifice they may help to make some poor souls happy, who otherwise can get no holiday at all. We never enjoy rest and change so much as when we are able to think that we have been the means of helping others to a period of rest and change also. It should be our care at this season no less than at Christmas time to share our happiness with those who have fewer blessings and opportunities than we have, especially now that there are so many organisations appealing for help in the name of the poor and the over-worked. This is the kind of mercy that is truly twice blessed, blessing him that gives and him that takes.

Teetotallers beware! In the course of evidence given before the Licensing Commission last week by Mr. Richard Bannister, deputy principal in the Inland Revenue branch of the Government laboratory at Somerset House, some strange facts came to light regarding the composition of so-called teetotal drinks:—

According to law beer must not contain more than 2 per cent. of proof spirit. In 1895 he examined 638 samples of herb beer, and found that 318, or 49·8 per cent., contained more than 2 per cent. of proof spirits, and 130, or 20·3 per cent. of the whole number, contained more than 3 per cent. of proof spirit. The spirit was developed generally by fermentation, and without the knowledge or intention of the manufacturer, who was usually innocent in the matter. Answering Mr. Caine, the witness referred to several drinks advertised as non-intoxicants, and said he found that parsnip beer contained 13·7 per cent. of alcohol more than public-house beer.

This is not a trivial matter, and those who desire to be faithful to the spirit as well as to the letter of their pledge should lay it well to heart, and see that they do not fall into temptation or wrong through inadvertence. The only safe method is to avoid all appearance of evil, and to drink the beverages that nature provides, with as little interference with her processes as possible. This is not the first time that the public has been warned of this danger.

Dr. Norman Kerr has told a representative of The Daily News that there can be no doubt about the great growth of morphinomania both here and in America during the last fifteen years. In England the victims have been mainly among literary men and doctors; many working men's wives and middle-class people also are addicted to chlorodyne. He says that the overwhelming majority of English or Americans who take opium in any form regularly become slaves to it; in four or five weeks after taking the first dose they are hopelessly bound. A few brain-workers begin to take it to increase their mental activity, but usually the habit is begun by taking it to relieve pain or to give sleep. From which medical testimony it may be gathered that, on the whole, it is a good deal better to endure pain, and to fight sleeplessness, than to resort to any of these specifics: and, further, knowledge is not in itself enough to guard anyone from danger: moral qualities, fortified and braced by the truth and the Spirit of God, are our surest defence.

The Church Times calls attention to the immense amount of mischief that the education of the streets after dark, and even in the long summer evenings, does for thousands of town children. More harm is done than in all the hours besides. Workers in the slums and poor districts will greatly diminish juvenile crime if they persuade parents to send their children to bed early. Conductors of children's meetings, bands of hope, &c., should not keep the children later than 8.30 or 9. Quite in a line with this good old-fashioned advice of "early to bed" is the custom now widely adopted in American cities of ringing the curfew, as a warning to young persons to get home. Gas and electricity are useful for those who must be out late, but they have done harm in promoting late hours among all classes and ages.

In these days, when gold rings and diamond rings are so popular, it was a wise and brave thing of Mr. Birrell, M.P., in his address at Mill Hill School, to draw a contrast between Mr. Cecil Rhodes and Dr. Moffat. After describing the flattery given to the former, and the wonderful work done by Dr. Moffat, he said :—

Yet if one were to go on the Kaffir circus of the London Stock Exchange and mention the name of Robert Moffat—people would say, "What name is that? Whose claim is that? Rhodes we know and Robinson, Barnato we know and Beit; but we've never heard of Moffat."

If we could get our boys to give their admiration rather to the men who have done great deeds and lived self-sacrificing lives, than to those who have heaped up treasure, there would be a brighter future for England and the world.

Prime Ministers do not usually commit themselves unless they are sure. We may, therefore, take the language of Lord Salisbury on the subject of International Arbitration as almost amounting to a pledge of the establishment of a court of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States. He thought there was every hope that these two countries would give "the first instance to the world of the triumph of the principle which would tend to abolish war more than anything had done before." If our Government pursues negotiations in that spirit they can hardly fail, along with the American Government, which is similarly well disposed, to lead two of the mightiest nations of the world into a new path of peace and progress. It is also something to be thankful for when a Prime Minister calls arbitration a more civilised way than war of settling national disputes. A new and better way of thinking is springing up; and while diplomatists are following it, private individuals should do all in their power to encourage them.

A provincial Methodist who has come to reside in London writes to The Methodist Recorder, saying that he was in London, worshipping in a magnificent church, eight months before he heard a sinner invited in old-fashioned style—or, indeed, in any style—to Christ. He is puzzled to know what the ministers whom he heard were aiming at. Even in a sermon on John iii. 16, the way of salvation was not pointed out, nor were sinners invited to believe. When he had been four months at this large church he asked the circuit steward if they ever had any conversions in it, and he replied, "I don't remember to have seen or known of any for years." This is a painful testimony, even when every allowance is made on the supposition that the experience may be exceptional, or that the forms of setting forth the truth may have been strange to "a provincial." The bare result, or no result, shows the inefficiency of the preaching, whatever the cause. But Jesus cannot be lifted up in vain; He will draw men unto Him.

[544]

Amid all the sensational literature of the time, it is refreshing to find that there is a real demand for old-fashioned authors, who are being brought anew before the public. There are some whose works are being published in English for the first time. Among them are the "Pensées" of Joseph Joubert, an old French writer of the eighteenth century, whose wisdom and spiritual insight are great. Here is a passage that is peculiarly appropriate to the present time :—

Why is even a bad preacher listened to with pleasure by pious folk? It is because he speaks to them of what they love. But you who explain to the men of this century, and speak to them of what they have, perhaps, once loved, or what they would fain love, should bear in mind that they are not yet enamoured of your subject, and you should take care to speak well.

The German mystics are perennially interesting and helpful to those who desire to live the life of the Spirit. Just now, largely owing to the powerful influence of the Rev. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, there is a deep interest shown in the works of Jacob Behmen. Dr. Whyte has just written a glowing and informing preface to a volume of selections from Behmen's works, which has been selected and translated by Miss Charlotte Rainy, mainly of passages from the Evangelical portions of the great mystic writings. They are full of suggestive and stimulating thought, and worthy of careful and prayerful study.

Dr. Robertson Nicoll recently informed the students of Hackney College, that he did not know in the English language a single great or complete book on prayer, "a book dealing frankly with the teaching of Scripture." Neither does he know a book which teaches us what forgiveness means; there are many books on the way in which forgiveness comes, but not on forgiveness itself. Very likely no one else knows of any such books, and yet, scattered up and down in religious books of all sorts, how much knowledge on these themes is held in solution; it only wants precipitating. The books on the Lord's Prayer are a multitude, and, after all, that is the essence of all true prayer. The nature of forgiveness, too, has perhaps been regarded as so simple that no book was required for its exposition. That such an opinion is well founded we doubt, for the simplicities are always the mysteries. Dr. Nicoll has undoubtedly pointed out a lack, and in doing so has taken the means to get it supplied. What saith the Scripture on prayer and on forgiveness?

Rev. Arnold Thomas doubts whether we are so careful about our souls as our fathers were about theirs. Perhaps not; for have we not been told with mingled pity and scorn for the last thirty years that it was a mean and pitiable thing for a man to be anxious about his soul? We were to regard all anxiety as selfish and unworthy of us as Christians. Now there are two kinds of care for the soul—the care that thinks only of self and forgets others, and the care which knows that if a man's own soul is not in health he can be of no use to others, and therefore he watches and prays. Mr. Thomas no doubt meant the latter, but in the denunciation of the former, which has been so common, the latter has often been confounded with it. The diligence, the watchfulness, the exertion, the prayerfulness, which are enjoined by our Saviour, and exemplified by his apostles, have been made to appear, whether purposely so or not matters not, as things better omitted than practised. Our fathers laboured at personal religion, and we cannot safely make it easy.

"Vernon Lee," in a curious article in this month's Fortnightly, on "Deterioration of Soul," has the following luminous remark :—

There are very few persons who are as thoughtful for their soul and its organs as for their heart, eyes, lungs, or digestion; and most of us live recklessly among contagions and submit ourselves to strains in the spiritual order such as few of us would expose ourselves to in the bodily.

This is true in a more rigorous sense than this gifted writer would probably allow. Nothing is more characteristic of this age than a nervous dread of contact with supposed infection of a physical kind. We take care of our skins in a way which would raise a smile on the part of our forefathers. At the same time we are continually pouring scorn on the idea that we should be solicitous as to the influences that play on our spiritual natures, and despise the "religious invalidism" which seeks to safeguard the soul amid the innumerable infections that fill the air. "First things first"; let us be sure to see that while we are not neglectful of bodily health, we are still more careful of our soul's welfare, and run into no danger except in the pursuit of duty, and the fulfilment of acts of Divine service.

When Paul, in his old age, recalled his persecutions and afflictions, he recorded with joy that the Lord had delivered him out of them all. The deliverances, however, were not all in the same way. This is the trial and the victory of faith; we get out of one difficulty presently to find ourselves in another; but if we continue faithful we are delivered as often as we are afflicted. The danger with every new trial is that we shall forget the meaning of past deliverances, that the darkness of the present shall blot out the brightness of the past. So David, when hunted on the mountains, and often saved as by a miracle, said in a despondent mood, "I shall one day fall by the hand of mine adversary." So the disciples, when at night they toiled in rowing against a wind that was contrary to them, were full of fear at the sight of what they believed to be a spirit. And yet only the day before the Lord had fed five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes, they themselves being the distributors of his bounty. Why this fear to-day with so much yesterday to comfort and encourage them? Because "they understood not concerning the loaves, but their heart was hardened." The miracle was not a parable for life; and the mercy of the hour is not understood until it becomes a pledge of the mercy of the Lord which endureth for ever.

"My son, attend to my words." The wise man asks for attention because he knows that he can do nothing until he has gained it. Attention is the first thing required of every child and the unintermittent demand made upon every man. Attention is the measure of apprehension; apprehension is the measure of appreciation; appreciation is the measure of understanding; and understanding is the measure of obedience. A child whose eyes are roaming all round the room can learn nothing; neither can a man whose thoughts are wandering all abroad. The reason why the scholar did not master his lessons was because he did not let them master him, did not allow them to claim him entirely. The Bible, our greatest teacher, teems with calls to attention and with complaints of inattention. "Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." "I called, and ye refused." "We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away from them."

The Bitters of Life.

Exodus xv. 22-27.

By Rev. JOHN SMITH, D.D.*

WHAT is your general view of the bitters of life? Are they simply untoward incidents, to be obliterated by every means in your power, which, when they cannot be evaded, are to be proudly endured, and got rid of and forgotten at the earliest possible moment? If that be the position of any, then they are not, in the deepest sense of the word, believing men.

What is it to be a believer? He is one who has put himself into the hand of Christ and yielded up his will to Christ, because Christ undertakes the whole task of his eternal salvation. He is a new creature, with a new motive power, in a new environment. And Christ is on the throne of the universe that as Mediator He may overrule all things for the ends of his kingdom. Nothing happens by chance. Providence is Christ's mechanism for proving and trying us. Special trials are ordained for particular, disciplinary ends, and not merely to expose our weaknesses; but that from new and striking standpoints we may see the fulness of resource and privilege that is ours in Christ.....

No one will accuse us of undervaluing positive statute and express revelation, yet we feel as if it were impossible to exalt too highly, as regards their epoch-making importance in individual experience, the ordinances of God in providence. Go back to the fountain-head of all that is most distinctive in your spiritual life, and you will find that well-head to be some Marah sweetened by Divine power, in answer to the cry of faith. Some great sorrow, some crushing disappointment, seemed to annihilate life's joy; till in the trouble you saw that God had appointed you an ordinance—a cross of the Divine will to be borne, a command to be obeyed. How you entered into the depths of the Divine judgment, as you went on in that way which God marked out for you to tread! What a new hold you got of God through his stooping to meet your need! Your whole Christian character, and every characteristic spiritual force within you, bear the stamp of the crisis, contain the particular pulse of vision and power which you won in that conflict hour.

But we have to advance further before we can see all the meaning of Marah—all the sweetening which comes from the experience of pain. Not only does providence reveal as well as law; but when God makes Himself known in a special providential dealing, He erects the truth contained in that dealing into a great constitutive principle, which is seen in its own place to govern all God's dealings with his own. Take time to grasp this, for it contains an important truth. David passed through a terrible Marah of persecution at the hands of Saul. Once and again it appeared as if there were nothing for him but death. As he bowed to that will of God, seen in his persecution, he soared up to a stronger and more implicit trust in God. Every touch of bitter in his trial intensified his faith. Thus God made the testing of persecution his training for kingship. What he won from sorrow became the very spring of his prowess and his triumphs.

The Mark of a Saint is not perfection, but consecration.—Westcott.

* FROM THE PERMANENT MESSAGE OF THE EXODUS. (35. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

To Sunday-School Teachers.

By Dr. THEODORE CUYLER.

A MOST responsible post you occupy; for in our Sunday-schools are tens of thousands of children who receive no moral or religious instruction save what they receive in the school. Many of them have ungodly parents and live in prayerless homes. Have you ever weighed as you ought the tremendous truth that unless you are faithful to these young immortal souls they may be lost—for this world and for another? "He is wise that winneth souls."

The first duty that I take the liberty of pressing upon you is the duty of teaching your children God's Book. When Robert Raikes established the first Sunday-school his original purpose was first to teach poor, ignorant children to read, and then to read the Scriptures. The Bible was the only text-book. In my own childhood, on my grandfather's farm, my good mother was the superintendent, and she had a single scholar. She required me to commit carefully to memory a certain portion of God's Word every Sabbath. After that she gave explanations and instructions upon the passage thus learned by heart. By this wholesome process I was made to imbibe the pure and "sincere milk of the Word" without any adulteration or admixtures. That in itself was an immensely valuable acquisition, and the sacred syllables remained lodged in the memory as a precious possession for ever. Now, how far do you require your scholars to study the Bible for themselves? It is the custom of many teachers to prepare the lessons very thoroughly. By the aid of commentaries and "lesson helps" of various kinds they master the lesson, and then they come and pour it into their children's ears. The children are like young robins in a nest, who open their mouths widely, and swallow down the worm or the grain of corn that the mother bird drops in. It is a passive and receptive process throughout. This method requires but little else from a scholar than simply to sit still and listen. Is this the best way to instruct a child? The word "education" (in its original etymology) does not mean to put in, it means to draw out. And how can you draw out if your scholars have not been putting anything into their minds before they come to school?

I am confident that if Sunday-school scholars were required to commit a part at least of the Bible lesson to memory, and then to tell the teacher what they had learned by their own efforts, it would be worth a hundred times more than all the cramming that the teacher can administer. What costs nothing is seldom valued or retained. The cramming process neither strengthens a child's mind, nor disciplines its memory, nor imprints sacred truth upon the soul. The teacher does all the work, and the scholar reaps but little benefit. I entreat you to give your scholars more to do. Insist on their repeating to you accurately a portion of the blessed Book. Encourage them to tell you their ideas about it, and to state whatever of difficulties they may have. Study the lesson thoroughly; but remember that it is not your knowledge of the lesson that is the main thing, but their knowledge of it, and in order to secure their knowledge they must be compelled to study for themselves. Simply to pour truth into the passive mind of a child is too often like pouring water into a sieve; a precious little of it is carried away. There is a lamentable amount of ignorance of God's Word among thousands of young persons who have attended Sunday-school for half a dozen years, and this is too often chargeable to the false method employed by well-meaning teachers.

Make much of ethical instruction. Explain to them the right and the wrong of things in everyday conduct. Take, for instance, the temptations to intoxicating drinks. If every Sunday-school teacher would carefully instruct his or her scholars as to the deceitful and dangerous nature of all intoxicants, and would endeavour to make them intelligent and conscientious teetotallers, it would do more to counteract the terrible drink curse than any agency that could be employed. As it is, a generation of children are growing up of whom a majority hardly know the A B C of total abstinence, and I fear that one reason is the failure of Sunday-school teachers (as well as parents) to point out the danger of playing with the serpent of strong drink. We never can stop the sale of the accursed stuff until we do more to stop its use; and the true time to begin is with the young. What I have said in regard to drinking applies also to falsehood, profanity, dishonesty, uncleanness, and other vices. You are to mould character. Deal plainly with sin of every kind and the sinful heart that lies behind it. How vitally important to have a Christly character yourself!

If you are a wise and faithful teacher your chief aim and prayer will be the conversion of your scholars to Jesus Christ. Your main reliance must be on the power of the Holy Spirit. Yet you are to do your part. Remember that it is not enough to ask a child, "Do you love Jesus?" or to urge that child to "rise for prayer." Conversion means change of heart, change of character, and that is to show itself by change of conduct. Impress on your scholars that the only proof of faith in Christ and love of Christ is keeping Christ's commandments. Mere emotion is short lived. Strike for something deeper. Exhort your children to break off from their besetting sins and to obey Christ. Childhood is the best time to make real Christians, and the worst time to make shallow and sham Christian professors. A solemn trust is yours, and if you are wise and faithful you may win a crown of glory that an archangel might covet. It is a glorious thing to be an earnest, untiring, and devoted Sunday-school teacher, wise to win souls and mould character for heaven. And it is an awful thing to be a trifler or blunderer with children's souls. If you love your Master and love your work and love your scholars, you may ask Christ's help, and He will give it.

The Cry of the Children.

THE hand of God was laid heavy on me;

No work, no pay, and the cupboard bare;
On the children's faces that Sabbath morning
Were appealing looks that were hard to bear;
I could look into their tearful eyes no longer,
So I wandered abroad with my load of care.

Down by the woodlands of old Tirconnell,
By the ancient abbey, the sunny bay,
Where seagulls skim on their snowy pinions,
And wild birds warble their blithest lay;
Where leaves are greenest and flowers are brightest,
O there's joy in the air on a summer's day,

"Is there joy for all but the little children?
They who should laugh, do they only sigh?"
Has God no pity for souls immortal,

When He paints the lily and guards the fly?
With his heart of love, and his hand almighty—
Yes; God will respond to his children's cry."

Such thoughts, as the sun of this glorious morning,
Have broken the mists of the gloomy night;
And I know that though some of God's ways are hidden

I see it as plain as this sunny light—
That the darkest road that our Father leads us
Is a path of mercy as well as right,
Donegal. J. K.

"Friedenheim,"—Under the presidency of Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, the annual meeting of the supporters of "Friedenheim" (a Home of Peace for the Dying) took place on Saturday afternoon in an adjoining building—the lecture hall of the school for the Blind, Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W. It was stated that there were thirty-one patients in the Home on Jan. 1, 1895, that ninety-seven were admitted during the year, that seventy-seven had died, that twenty-one had been discharged (the same number as in 1894), and that thirty were within the walls on Dec. 31 last. Attention was by several speakers drawn to the number of applicants for admission suffering from cancer, it being pointed out that there is urgent need for further accommodation for these distressing cases.

Letters from So. Africa.—23.

I RETAIN the title of these Letters although I have returned safely home.

The Arundel Castle, in which I sailed, was the intermediate steamer of the Castle Line which preceded the lost Drummond Castle. Having so recently passed the same way, thankfulness for our safe voyage cannot but mingle with the pain and sorrow with which I think of the appalling calamity that has befallen the vessel which followed us—and deepest sympathy with the anguish of those who so suddenly suffered death, and with the agony of their bereaved friends. These feelings I am sure are intensely shared by all who were my fellow-passengers, and all our ship's company.

The fact of the experienced and veteran Captain Pierce once and fatally missing his way, must impress us all with the perilous possibilities which lie in every voyage, and with gratitude to God for every deliverance of which we are conscious, and for the many more of which we are unconscious. When our pilot came on board in the Channel someone bade him welcome in a way which evidently implied discontent with the progress we had been making. I felt indignant at the remark, and am now constrained to express the thanks which all who were in our vessel must feel, that with the prospect of a very short time on shore for himself and his officers and crew, our Captain Winder kept far enough away from the dangerous coast to secure a safe if possibly a somewhat longer, passage. Yet the good hand of God was no less upon his children who from the foundered vessel were landed so suddenly in Paradise, than upon ourselves.

I must now return to mention some places and subjects which I have passed over in speaking of the voyage home.

LOVEDALE.

A twelve hours' drive from Grahamstown, mostly through drenching, but welcome, rain, brought us to Lovedale, the most important educational institution, of a missionary character, in South Africa. Here we were warmly welcomed by Dr. James Stewart, the Principal, and Mrs. Stewart.

The first evening was made interesting by a gathering of workers and friends to meet and congratulate a native teacher, a very capable and estimable young woman, who was shortly leaving for Mafeking, where she was to be married to an equally capable and estimable young man, who had been trained as a carpenter at Lovedale.

On the following day (Sunday), our friend and occasional correspondent, Mr. David Hunter, with two companions on horseback, and Rev. Mr. Lennox and myself in a buggy, went seven miles to the kraal of Oba, a heathen chief, where, after ringing the church bell with a key on a frying-pan, or some equally primitive device, and waiting an hour for the people to gather, we got together a congregation of a hundred men and women in and outside a large hut used as a schoolhouse. They listened earnestly to three addresses from their visitors, the native evangelist conducting the meeting. Amongst them were some of Oba's friends and counsellors. A wife of one of these had become a Christian. The other women endeavoured to induce her to rejoin their heathen dances, but she refused. They then told the husband that he should coerce her, which he declined to do. Then they suggested that he was himself going to forsake heathenism and become a Christian, to which he replied, perhaps he was. His presence and evidently interested attention at the meeting seemed at least to show that he was favourably disposed toward the Gospel; but his relation to the chief, who was decidedly opposed to it, was a serious obstacle, for "How can ye believe who receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour which cometh from the only God?" The meeting was continued by the evangelist after we had left, and it was said that seven of the hearers had expressed a desire to know Christ as their Saviour.

(566)

A neighbouring chief and his people had already received the Gospel, and a Scotch proprietor of an ostrich farm, who has been forty years in South Africa, told me that he once had land near the heathen chief's location, and lost a thousand pounds' worth of stock of various kinds; but when he removed to the neighbourhood of the Christian chief he lost nothing.

While we were holding the meeting among Oba's people, Mr. Robertson, of Livlezi, was giving to the students at Lovedale the account of that station of the Livingstonia Mission, which appears on the next page.

In the evening we had tea with Mr. and Mrs. Geddes, the house father and mother, and 300 male students, the great majority of whom are coloured. Some pay £12 and some £8 per annum, and are provided for in accordance with their payment. The following Sunday I took tea with a large roomful of young women students. They also manage the large laundry, and do the finest needlework.

I believe I am correct in saying that while Lovedale is the largest and most important educational missionary institution in South Africa, it is also doing the most of actual missionary work. Two ministers who recently visited it came thinking that it was a place of education only, but left with an entirely different assurance.

I spent eight days there, and found it a hive of industry, the busiest and most indefatigable worker being Dr. Stewart himself. I visited the various class-rooms, and found the whole procedure remarkable for its thoroughness. In a recent article in the Sunday at Home on "The Colonial Missionary Society and South Africa," it is said:—

"To understand native work in South Africa you must understand Lovedale. Originated in 1824, and called after the Rev. Dr. Love, of Glasgow (the first secretary of the L.M.S.), it began with twenty students. Now there are 800 under instruction, of whom 500 are boarders. They come from all parts of South Africa, some journeying over 1000 miles! 'The Gospel of Jesus Christ,' says the Rev. Dr. Stewart, who so ably presides over the institution, 'is the life and soul of all the teaching given, the inspiration of the entire effort, and thus the keystone of the arch, giving stability, permanence, and utility to the whole.'...Waggon-making is one of the favourite industries at Lovedale. To make a good waggon which will carry four or five tons, over rough roads, through stony rivers, and on journeys of almost any distance, requires strength, accurate measurement, and exact adjustment of wheels and other parts, in order to secure satisfactory work."

I have before me a handsome quarto volume of 120 pages, containing fifty views from photographs of the lovely spot where the work is carried on, of the buildings externally and internally, and of some groups of students and teachers, with nine descriptive and explanatory chapters by Dr. Stewart, who, as the life-long director and superintendent of the institution, is at the same time necessarily writing to some extent his autobiography.

Perhaps I shall more concisely and more accurately express the character of Lovedale and its teaching by quoting Dr. Stewart's concluding sentences than in any words of my own. He says:—

"O my countrymen, and men of other civilised countries as well—more favoured and blessed than that unhappy continent—how badly we have used the great gifts and powers God has bestowed upon us in our dealings with Africa and its people! How ruthlessly have many portions of that continent been laid open by some who have traversed those regions for the first time! Our own countrymen, with all their faults, have not been the only or the greatest sinners in this matter. How poorly even at the best have we discharged the great duties God has laid upon us in virtue of the gifts he has bestowed! Still, in God's time, apparently, a better day is coming, for clearly 'O'er that weird continent morning is slowly breaking.'

"We return again in a final word to the one power and influence sufficient for the regeneration of Africa. It has been the keynote through all these pages. That one force is the religion of Jesus Christ, taught not merely by the white man's words, but, what is far better, by his life, as showing the true spirit of that religion. Civilisation will also need to bring various forces, important and subsidiary; but yet without the main factor the problem will not be solved. Disappointment will be the only result, if the best and most potent element is left out. This is appeal and reason enough to all Christian men who can either go to Africa or aid at home in the great work of its regeneration.

"The coming King of this earth is Jesus Christ. He is the world's Larger Hope. The hope of a better and happier day does not lie in socialistic panaceas, or in dreams about equality, in a world where no two men are or remain equal for a single day, nor in the wholesale distribution of the hard-won fruits of honest industry among the lazy and dishonest. These are the remedies of a well-intentioned, but badly-instructed and sometimes crazy, benevolence.

"These ill-regulated remedies only make matters worse. They are the falsehood of extremes, and the exaggerations of human thinking, applied to those everlasting truths which fell from the lips of the greatest human Teacher. The little grain of truth they contain has been stolen from Christianity itself. A saner spirit, and a more robust common sense, and a sounder interpretation of what Christ has taught, and above all, the practice and the spirit of those teachings, must come first. That the law of his kingdom—love itself—will yet become universal law among men is the dream of poets and the hope of all Christians. It has been, and remains so, even in the face of spectral doubts, and the pain and perplexity of the constant facts of daily life; no other power can bind men together. That law is, in the world of spirits, what gravitation is in the world of matter. Hence it is true that

All things grow sweet in Him,
In Him all things are reconciled;
All fierce extremes,
That beat along time's shore,
Like chidden waves grow mild,
And creep to kiss his feet.

Within his reign
Are no more tides that murmur and complain;
Nor ancient foes that seem
Their life from out each other's Hate to draw. . . .

"He alone it is—

Who brings the fading flower of poor humanity
To perfect blossoming and sweetest fruit.

"Many, no doubt, regard all this as a dream. That cannot be helped. This truth will be the world's experience later on, when experiments have been made with all other remedies, and all have been found empty, futile, and void. One of the plainest and saddest facts of the present day, as the result of our justly-boasted nineteenth-century civilisation, is that individual happiness and general contentment are not keeping pace with modern progress. Man's heart, insatiable as the sea, needs something more."

That "something more" is the life eternal which consists in knowing the only true God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent. To communicate this life-giving knowledge to the sons and daughters of Africa is the purpose for which the Lovedale institutions have been established and carried on, with the good hand of God upon them.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Syria and the Hauran.—According to intelligence received from Damascus a revolt has broken out among the Druses in Syria, and four companies of Turkish troops have been annihilated, several guns being captured by the insurgents. The situation in the Hauran is very serious. Mussulmans and Arabs joined in the attack upon the Turkish troops.

Livlezi Valley Station.

LIVINGSTONIA MISSION TO NYASALAND.

(Dutch Section.)

The following address was delivered to the students at Lovedale, Cape Colony, by Mr. W. GOVAN ROBERTSON:—

OUR station lies to the south-west of Lake Nyasa, about five days' journey from Blantyre and about three from the old station upon the lake. The climate is trying. The heat is not so very oppressive, but fever affects both Europeans and natives. During six years at Livlezi we have had five deaths, and one of our number had to be invalided home.

There are 50,000 people under our chief, but only a few have been touched by the missionary. There are many races or tribes in the district, and for many generations it has formed the hunting ground for the Arab slave agents. The result of this is that the people are very broken-spirited. They are unable to make a stand in war, but flee at once. They are, however, able to weave cloth, and make hoes and spears; they cultivate their lands, and lately have gone to Blantyre as carriers and labourers for the planters. They have been made slaves by many peoples, especially the Awiza and the Ajawa, and at present they are subject to the Angoni, a branch of the Amahlongwa. These crossed the Zambesi in 1825, fleeing from Chaka. They went a considerable distance northward over the country, and one branch broke off and settled down in our neighbourhood.

They were very disappointed in not finding many cattle in our district, but the natives tell a story of one of their wise men, who, wanting the Angoni to leave the country, by a trick persuaded them to go the other side of the Shiré. The Angoni wandered about there for some years, but were driven back by the Ajawa. They are now very few in number, have almost entirely lost their language, and have adopted the language and customs of a large portion of the native population, who are now their slaves. This domestic slavery does not seem to be oppressive. It means that the people are the servants of the chief, and have to supply him with food, wives, or any other thing he wants.

There is also a considerable amount of export slavery. For the last ten years the Ajawa have stirred up the Angoni to fight amongst themselves, helping one side or the other, and receiving men or women slaves in payment. The British lately fought against Mponda (an Ajawa chief), and from his village they liberated 379 slaves. The Angoni are in such minority in the country that they must use means to assert their authority over their slaves. They do this by working upon the native belief in "uniti" (wizards). This is to us a terrible difficulty. Perhaps a village is a little independent, and has to be checked by the chief. This he does by sending down a witch doctor with "mwabve" (a poison). The natives take this poison, and believe that, as they are innocent of the charge laid against them, they will prove their innocence by vomiting, and so recovering; but, alas! many do not vomit.

RELIGION.

The people believe in this spirit of evil, which can only be got rid of by shedding of blood or taking of a life; therefore by "mwabve" they kill another man. They believe in one universal God, but calling Him by different names. One name, "Mulungu," means the Unknown Creator. Other names are: "M'pambe," which means the Almighty; "Lezi," which means the Nurse; and "Chiuta," which means the Slayer. These are not different gods, but the same One. He is worshipped by sacrifice.

If the people are setting out on a journey, they consult the "Ula mau" (diviner), and if the reply is unfavourable they make sacrifices of flour, etc., until the reply is favourable. If there is drought or a visitation of locusts, they sacrifice to their god. They think he is visible in the form of a certain snake. They believe in a god of life, and think that if a man kills an animal he must, before eating, cut a piece off the liver and bury it under a tree (to appease the god of life). If a man kills another in war, he has to be purified by sacrificing, sometimes even to the extent of taking a slave's life, and thus appease the god of war.

They are thorough believers in a future state, and when burying a dead person they always put the instruments of the dead man in the grave, and also unbind the body before covering the grave. They say they do not want their friends to walk bound as slaves in their future life. When a headman who was a favourite in a village dies, the people desire that he should return and live among his people again. A witch-doctor is consulted, and if the spirit of the dead man is willing to come back, great preparations are made in the village to receive him. Beer is brewed, and much prayer (with dancing) is made. They suppose his spirit returns, and occupies a new basket which they prepare. This basket is guarded very carefully, the children being warned that if they quarrel, or the older people fight amongst themselves, the spirit will go away. We who are Christians, shall we not much more wish that the Holy Spirit should come and dwell with us, and should we not be equally careful that we do not grieve away the Holy Spirit by our sins?

They marry very early. That is a great difficulty in our schools, as girls marry at the age of twelve or thirteen, and are practically lost to the school. Polygamy is, of course, universal, the wives living in different villages. They have some very cruel customs. If twins are born they always kill one of them; even if a child cuts its upper teeth before the lower, they throw it into the bush.

OUR WORK AMONGST THEM.

South Angoniland had been unvisited except by a few Europeans, when Dr. Henry opened up the station seven years ago. The reigning chief, Chikusi, was disposed to be friendly to the mission, owing to an incident that had occurred some time previously. Albert, the first Livingstonia convert, had been sent by Dr. Laws to open negotiations in Angoniland for establishing a mission station. At the same time Chikusi's village was visited by a herd of elephants, which destroyed the gardens. Chikusi, whose other name is Elephant, and who thinks he is related to the elephant, blamed Albert for raising up dissension in the family. The chief sent out his hunters to kill the elephants, but they were unsuccessful. Albert then got a message from the chief, that unless he presented the tusks of an elephant next day he would have him executed. Albert and his boys, on hearing this, had a prayer meeting, and then went off to hunt the elephant, and they were successful in killing it, and the next morning they presented the tusks to the chief. Hence Chikusi was friendly to the mission. Shortly after I went to the place, five years ago, the young chief, a lad of sixteen, had succeeded his father. His first act was to kill off the old headmen, who had been friendly in his father's time—a somewhat similar case to Rehoboam. The young men whom he selected in their place were inclined to war and not friendly towards us.

Mponda, an Ajawa chief, was not friendly to us because we had settled on the slave road, between our chief and himself. He frequently sent up presents to the young man asking him to remove us out of the road, and the young man was rather inclined to do so, but his great-grandmother was always friendly towards us, and restrained him. He afterwards resorted to stealing, and our house was broken into, probably by the young chief's orders. The deposition of Mponda by the British Administration last year, enraged the young chief, and he determined to have a hit at the white man, and sent his army to drive us and other Europeans out of the country. But the bulk of his people, being friendly, took advantage of a shower of rain as an excuse to return home. The station was last year transferred to the Dutch brethren.

INDUSTRIAL WORK.

When I first went to Livlezi, there were no Europeans nearer than 120 miles, viz., Blantyre. So you can understand that the natives knew little of Europeans or European workmanship. We had to build our own houses, first of wattle and mud, but latterly of brick. We had to teach brickmaking and building, and we have now six or seven who can saw timber or do simple joinery work. We have some brickmakers, and builders, and also one little chap who sets up as a tailor. Some now build square houses for themselves, and a number have bedsteads and chairs, so there has been some progress. We also do a little —binding up sores and wounds, etc. When I went there first, after perhaps spending weeks treating a sore or wound, we were frequently asked by the patient for payment. But this last year in three cases the natives offered to pay a fee.

MEDICAL WORK

We have about 500 regularly attending schools in the various stations of the district.* The scholars are not very far advanced. About 150 can read and write. We have fifteen teachers—eight boys and seven girls—receiving an average pay of one shilling per month, able at least to read their Testament, etc. The chief has actually got in his employ two scribes who have run away from the mission.

EVANGELICAL WORK.

We have service at the station on the Sunday, with an average of 130 attending. The villages are visited every Sunday morning by some ten or twelve boys, who go out to sing, read, and speak to the people on passages prepared on the Fridays at class. In the afternoon a prayer meeting is held. Twenty-two older people come three times a week to receive more instruction from the Bible, and eight boys and girls are coming with a view to baptism. Last year we built a new church and school. I commenced it, and when it was completed I asked the natives to give anything they liked towards paying for it. They heartily agreed to this, bringing a fowl, a basket of maize, etc., as a contribution towards the cost of their church. Before I came away £13 15s. 2d. had been collected, quite enough to pay for building the church.

All this looks very nice, but we have causes for discouragement not easily described, but prominent, chiefly from those who go and do wrong when they ought to know better. We have been greatly distressed by locusts during the last four years. The natives tried every way they could to get rid of them—charms, sacrifices, worshipping spirits, and "mwabve"; but we did not feel it laid upon us to make any special effort to get rid of the locusts till last year, when we were led to have special meetings for prayer. The meetings were well attended, and the week was spent in prayer, asking that the locusts might be removed. God graciously answered us, and the locusts disappeared from our immediate neighbourhood. Now notice this: two or three who knew better offered sacrifices to the spirits, but the locusts did not disappear from their gardens. This is a fact, and I give the names of two of the owners of the gardens—Daniel and Kubvundiko. Though some may be inclined not to believe this, it is the case, and was remarked upon by the natives. Is not this answer to our prayers a sign that God is blessing us? May not unbelief hinder us from seeing what is but a small thing with the Almighty God?

We are not altogether alone now. Four stations of the Zambesi Industrial Mission lie between us and Blantyre. These are helps, as we now can work in thorough harmony. There is near us a new Scottish Baptist Industrial Mission which, by its position and the methods adopted, unfortunately causes irritation. We only touch on a small portion of the great continent; many districts within a few days' journey have never been visited by white people. Do not only pray for our people, but take an active interest in them, so that you may have some of the joys of those who are privileged to plant the Church of our God where his name had not been hitherto mentioned.

When the news got about that I was leaving, no fewer than fifty headmen came to say good-bye, and though it was very wet when I left I could hardly get along for the crowds of people that came to see me off. Though we were feared when we first went there, yet when I came away their treatment was very different, and I believe that some came to say farewell because they had received blessing.

* This includes sub-stations, C.P. Maclear and Gowa.—W. G. R.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 28.

"BECAUSE I BARE HIM WITH SORROW."—1 Chron. iv. 9.

THE products of sorrow have been the rarest gifts to mankind. The books, hymns, discoveries, deeds, to which men and women have been urged by sorrow, or which have been borne to the world amid heart-rending soul-travail, are those which will never be allowed to die, because perennial sources of inspiration and comfort. It was thus with the child of whom we have this brief record.

This prayer is one which we might becomingly weave into the petition of each new morning hour. Notice its four petitions:—

To be blessed indeed.—Not the lower springs only, but the upper ones also; not life alone, but life more abundantly; not those only which pertain to the body or worldly circumstance, but those spiritual blessings in the heavenlies, that are the best donation man can give or God bestow.

A larger coast.—There is a godly ambition which may be reverently cherished for wider influence over men, not for its own sake, but for the Master's. You may feel that you have fulfilled the measure of your present possibilities, and have unexhausted powers and desires. Tell God so, and ask for a wider extent of territory to bring under cultivation for Him. This is better, than to run hither and thither to men.

Thine hand with me.—The father puts his hand on the boy's hand as he draws back the bow-string, and strengthens the arms of his hand. So will the mighty God of Jacob do for thee.

Keep me from evil.—You cannot keep your heart door shut when a tumult of temptation or care assaults it from without, but God's peace and grace, like angel sentries, can avail thee. Though tempted, thou mayest be kept in the temptation and delivered from the evil.

MONDAY, June 29.

"THEY CRIED TO GOD IN THE BATTLE, AND HE WAS ENTREATED OF THEM."—1 Chron. v. 20.

Whether they cried to God before they went into the battle we are not told; but probably they did, because we read that the war was of God, and it is hardly likely that they would have prayed to Him in the midst of the fight, when the foemen's blows fell like hail on their armour, if they had not prayed before they entered the bloody fray. Men often excuse themselves for neglecting their morning devotions by saying that they will surely look to God, as they require his gracious help, in the midst of the day's temptations and needs; but, as a matter of fact, when once they are plunged into its war they forget to look up. You must direct your prayer in the morning, and look up whilst the early shadows lie long on the dewy grass, if you would keep looking off to Jesus, amid the din of the fight.

It is very lovely to contract and preserve this habit of looking upward, and crying to God in the battle. When our feet are slipping, when the foe seems about to overmaster, when heart and flesh fail—how refreshing and strengthening to fling one eager look or cry to heaven, and say, "I am thine, save me." There can be no doubt as to the issue. God is always intreated of those who put their trust in Him. Sooner might a mother forget her sucking child than God be unmindful of one sigh, or tear, or upward-glancing look from his own.

TUESDAY, June 30.

"HEMAN THE SINGER."—1 Chron. vi. 33.

This is a very brief record to put on a man's grave, but a very expressive one. To know that Heman is to know a good deal about him. From this clue we might almost construct his entire personality and character. And it would be well if this could be said of us that we had ministered with song before the tabernacle of the Lord.

[563]

Would you be a singer; not on Sundays only, but always; not with your voice only, but in your heart; not only when the sunshine pours into the open casement through the swaying boughs of honey-suckle, but when the shutters tell of bereavement and removal—then remember these rules:—(1st.) God must put the new song into your mouth; (2nd.) You must be fully consecrated to Him, for the song of the Lord began after the burnt-offering was complete. (3rd.) You must not go into a strange land, for it is not possible to sing the Lord's song there.

Sing on, dear heart, sing on. There is nothing that scares the devil off so quickly as a hymn. Luther said, "Let us sing a hymn, and spite the Devil." There is nothing that so well beguiles the pilgrim's step, and quickens his pace, when the miles are growing long and weary. There is nothing that brings so much of heaven into the heart; then every movement is rhythmic, every service praise, every act thanksgiving. Sing when times are dark, it will make them bright; go down into the valley of shadow with a song, and you will find yourself singing when you awake on the other side.

WEDNESDAY, July 1.

"IT WENT EVIL WITH HIS HOUSE."—1 Chron. vii. 23.

It is an old-world tale, and those tears have long since been wiped away. What led to the death of so many of the stalwart sons of Ephraim is not quite clear, but apparently they made a raid from the hill-fastnesses on the men of Gath to lift their cattle, and were repelled with great disaster. At any rate, they were slain by men of Gath, that were born in the land. This suggests a significant train of thought. We must beware of the tendencies and impulses which were born in us, which we have inherited.

They are strong in all of us. Parents transmit to an awful extent their own passions. What a reason this is for carefully curbing them. I have known the children of drunkards, grown to middle-life, who have confessed that they have never spent a day without the conscious craving for alcohol. These are the men of Gath, born in the land, who will slay us unless we are on our guard.

There will be irremediable sorrow if we yield to them. Many days of mourning will not avail to wipe out the sad and bitter memory of disaster, when once they have wreaked their wild will on us. These within, if permitted, will, like traitors, open the door to Satan without.

But faith is the victory. He that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God; He, in whom Jesus lives as the stronger than the strong man armed, shall be kept from falling, and preserved unto God's heavenly kingdom. Walk in the Spirit, and you shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh.

THURSDAY, July 2.

ESH-BAL . . . MERIB-BAL.—1 Chron. viii. 33, 34.

Baal was the idol-god of Zidon and of many surrounding nations. This idol, representing the sun in his productive force, was worshipped with impure and scandalous rites. The introduction of this name into the appellation of one of Saul's sons indicates the secret root of the declension and consequent misfortunes of that ill-fated monarch. In the earlier part of his reign he was perfect in his allegiance to Jehovah—Jonathan means gift of Jehovah—but as the years went on he became proud and self-sufficient, he turned to Baal, the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, and an evil spirit rushed in to take His place, as wind rushes in to fill a vacuum.

The name which Jonathan gave his son had another significance. Merib-baal is one who opposes Baal. It is as though he would indelibly stamp upon his child an undying hatred and opposition to that idolatry which was undoing his father's character and kingdom. In this choice of his child's name we also gather the deep-seated piety and devotion of this noble soul, whose heart was true to God amid the darkening shadows of his father's reign. It was this that probably drew David and him so closely in affinity.

How absolutely necessary it is for the peace of a household that there should be a oneness of devotion to God! Where that is the first consideration, there is peace and blessedness, and that it may be so it is of the greatest importance that the parents should be constant in their godly allegiance. The ruin of Saul's home, family, and realm began in his disloyalty to God.

FRIDAY, July 3.

"CHOSEN TO BE PORTERS IN THE GATES...APPOINTED OVER THE FURNITURE...SOME HAD THE SET OFFICE OVER THE THINGS THAT WERE BAKED IN PANS...THESE ARE THE SINGERS."—1 Chron. ix. 22, 29, 31, 33.

What a busy scene is suggested in these words. When the morning broke, it called to duty first the porters who opened the house of God, and then, after due ablution, each band of white-robed Levites began its special service. There was no running to and fro in disorder, no intrusion on one another's office, no clashing in duty, no jealousy of each other's ministry. It was enough to know that each had been appointed to his task, and was asked to be faithful to it. The right ordering of the whole depended on the punctuality, fidelity, and conscientiousness of each.

So it is in the Church of Christ, each is specially gifted for some post to which he has been set apart. One to see to the gates, admitting souls to the kingdom; one to the baking in pans, attending to the feeding of the household of God; others to the psalmody, as the hymn-writers of our praise and holy song. How beautiful it is when we dwell together in this unity, not envying one another, or interfering in each other's ministry. Whatever is successfully done by the Church is accredited by Christ to each faithful servant, just as the impression produced on the audience by an orchestra is the result of each instrument, even to the piccolo, doing its part. Whatever is done by the whole, is done by each part of the whole. Be content with the position to which thy Master has assigned thee, and let thine eye be single unto Him.

SATURDAY, July 4.

"SO SAUL DIED FOR HIS TRESPASS."—1 Ch. x. 13.

It is suggestive to ponder the threefold analysis of Saul's trespass as given here. He kept not the word of the Lord; this probably refers to his failure to execute the sentence on Amalek; he asked counsel of one that had a familiar spirit; this errand had taken him to Endor on the eve of the battle; he inquired not of the Lord, this was conspicuously the case in his persecution of David.

Do we sufficiently inquire of the Lord? We ask the advice of our friends and religious teachers; we sometimes use doubtful methods of ascertaining God's will, as allowing the Bible to drop open, or interpreting some coincidence in the way we secretly desire to follow; besides which there is an increasing tendency in society to use the crystal, to consult spiritualistic mediums, to employ palmistry. These latter, of course, repeat the sin of Saul, in going to Endor; and the resort to them on the part of children of this world shows that the heart of man must have something exterior to itself for worship and trust, and if it has forsaken God it will deal with the devil, rather than drift on alone. But let us all cultivate more carefully the blessed habit of waiting on God. If we ask Him for guidance, He will be sure to impart it; only we must put aside all selfish and personal ends, desiring to know his will, with a single purpose, and an unalloyed determination to follow it at any cost. Each believer has access to the Urim and Thummim stone of Divine direction.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

The Forget-Me-Not, WHAT IT TEACHES.

THE story of how this flower got its name is a very old one. I am not sure that it is true; still, it is very pretty, and will bear repeating. A German knight and his lady were wandering one day along the banks of a stream. The lady's fancy was taken with some beautiful blue flowers growing in the water. In trying to reach them for her the knight lost his footing, fell in, and sank beneath the stream. But he managed to catch hold of the flowers. He had just strength enough to throw them on to the bank at the feet of his lady love, and with the words "Forget-me-not" upon his lips, he died. One cannot imagine that the lady ever did forget the kind knight who had lost his life in trying to gratify her passing wish, but his words may serve as a warning for us. It is sad to think what a deal of forgetting there is in the world. Mother has a bad headache. "Willie, Cissie," she says, "please go about as quietly as ever you can, there's dears." "All right, mother," is the answer. Yet a few minutes afterwards Willie and Cissie bound out of the room, slamming the door behind them as if there was no such thing as mothers and bad headaches. Then when mother asks gently, "What about my poor head?" Willie and Cissie are filled with sorrow, and each of them solemnly declares "I forgot." What a pity!

I would there were no worse forgetting than that; no girls who wanted to be fine ladies, and went off and left their poor mothers to do all the hard work; no boys who ran away to sea and broke their father's hearts. For the forgetting is generally all on one side, and that side is not father's or mother's. Dr. Paton, the great missionary, tells how his uncle, when a boy, had gone away to sea and had not been heard of for a long time. Whether it was the boy's fault or not I am unable to say, neither was his mother. But that did not matter to her; for every night the dear old woman would pray for his return, and, before going to bed, would throw the cottage door wide open, crying out, "Come home, my boy Walter. Your mother wearies so." Of how many thousand mother-hearts, aye, and father-hearts also, is this a true picture. Then don't forget the old folks. Remember that "first commandment with promise"—"Honour thy father and mother."

But if God would have us remember our parents, how much more does He call us to remember Him. It is, indeed, just possible for fathers and mothers to forget their children; the Bible tells us so, and we can see it, alas! in our every-day life. Not so God. Not one sparrow is forgotten by Him: and will He then forget any of those for whom He sent his Son to die? Yet we often forget Him. Surely we forget Him when we rush in from our play and sit down to dinner without first giving Him thanks; when we go out in the morning or lie down at night without kneeling down and saying "Gentle Jesus," or "Our Father who art in Heaven"; when we put the Bible which mother or teacher has given us away in some box or drawer, there to remain—oh, so beautifully and dreadfully clean. The Forget-me-not, God's sweet token of remembrance, his little riverside angel, will teach us better than that. I think it is pointing us to the words of the wise man of old, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth" (Ecc. xii. 1), and to the song of the Psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits" (Psa. ciii. 2).

But I want for a moment just to turn my subject upside down. See, I have hidden away these flowers of the stream, for their lesson is told. Come with me while I pluck some others which are only to be found in the beautiful fields of God's Holy Word. Strange as it may seem, there is something about us which the great God of remembrance does forget. When we are sorry, and ask his forgiveness, for Jesus' sake, He forgets our sins. Blessed thought! When He forgives them He also forgets them. How unlike us. "I will forgive this wrong, but I am sure I can never forget it." Too often this is the thought of our hearts, and sometimes it slips out from our lips. God does not do things by halves like that. Listen—"I, even I, am He that blot out thy transgressions...and will not remember thy sins" (Isaiah xlii. 25). "Thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back"

(Isaiah xxxviii. 17). This is forgiveness indeed, and should call forth our deepest love. The God who so wonderfully forgets is surely worthy of being eternally remembered. F. E. HUDSON.

The Bible Searcher Prize Competition.

Second Quarter, April-June, 1896.

RULES.

[Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following RULES is STRICTLY OBSERVED? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions if necessary.]

1. Those children may enter whose names appear in the following list:—

Violet Ashworth, Ruth Brathwaite, Catherine, Lillian, and Teresa Blackie, Cecil Bradford, Catherine Bailey, Nettie and E. B. Black, Norman Draby, Katherine Blair, Victor and William Bellerby, Lillian Berman, Helen Beckett, Violet Broxholm, Jessie Bone, Leonard S. Brown, Maggie Buchanan, Enid Campbell, Jack and Vernon Clarke, Mary and William Charles, Edith Clarke, Ruth Coupe, Arthur Cordell, Annie Cole, Annie Cooper, Marion Connell, Fanny and Jessie Cockram, Florrie and Bell Dance, Grace Dawson-Scott, M. H. Daniels, Anna Davis, Mary Deane, May Dring, Stuart Ellacott, Minnie Eisle, M. E. Kathleen Fowleraker, Bertha Fowler, Minnie Giddings, Daisy Groves, Ruth Harrison, Dorothy Harris, Elsie Hancock, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Ada Heap, Gwendolme Hill, Elizabeth and Mary Hull, Freda Hulton, Ethel and Eva Hutchings, May and Tom Hunter, Muriel Josephyne, Elsie Johnson, Helen Jordan, Sinclair and Moffatt Jackson, Susie Keen, Bertha Kelsey, Marcus King, Billie La Brooy, Arthur Llewellyn, Percy Leigh, Nellie Loverlove, Norah Lowe, Margery Matthews, Trevor Matthews, Angus McQuilken, Bella and Thomas Mack, John Menzies, Hilda Medill, Robert Melkie, Charlie Millidge, Winifred Nash, Arabella Onslow, T. Marley Oldham, Ethel M. K. A. and Geo. Paisley, Florrie Palmer, Douglas Parkes, Emily Palmer, Ada Palmer, Christine Parker, May Pell, Isabel Phipps, Margaret and Lillian M. Pook, Mary Plumb, Edith and Arthur Quick, James S. Roy, Connie and Alice Rouse, Elmina Roe, Oswald and Horace Roberts, T. M. Stanier, Hilda Schaffer, Evelyn Shaw, Walter Stainer, Dollie Salt, Rosetta Sherwin, Harold Stevenson, Edgar Soltan, Dora and Kate Symes, Elma Tebb, Louis Tibbitts, Maud and Ethel Tyson, Willie Weinstein, Phillis and Noel Wright, Marlen Wilson, Helen Wilmshay, Raymond Whitwell, Fred Winstone, Edgar Yerbury.

* As all the children have not yet sent in their answers to Bible Searcher No. 25, there may be some among the number who can enter the competition. If such is the case a card will be sent stating if they are eligible.

Those children who are rendered eligible by the second list of No. 25 will receive postcards this week.

2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—

DIVISION I. Those under TEN years of age.

" II. Those between TEN and THIRTEEN years of age.

" III. Those between THIRTEEN and FIFTEEN years of age.

" IV. Those over FIFTEEN years of age.

3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.

4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, your DIVISION, and your AGE last birthday.

5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.

6. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed.

7. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 6 has been observed.

8. Answers may be posted any day (except Sunday) up to, but not later than, TUESDAY, July 7. The results will be announced in THE CHRISTIAN of July 16.

9. Marks will be apportioned for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc. In each division 100 marks may be obtained, the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

10. Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be RE-EXAMINED after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly. Although the questions will take longer to do than usual, remember (1) that you are working for a prize; (2) that you have more time than usual for doing them.

DIVISION I.

1. (a) Whose son was David? how many brothers had he?

(b) What did he do while he lived with his father?

(c) Why did he go to Saul's camp?

(d) How did he fight Goliath?

(e) How did he kill him?

2. In which Psalm do the following sentences occur:—

(a) "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?" What answer is given?

(b) Who is called "The King of Glory"?

3. Give chapter and verse in the Gospel of John of "Jesus wept," and say what caused his sorrow?

4. To whom and why were the following passages spoken (St. Matt.):—

(a) "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

(b) "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth."

(c) "I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof."

(d) "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head?"

DIVISION II.

1. (a) To whom was it said, "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour"? (Judges). Give chapter and verse.

(b) What sign did he ask for?

(c) Why did he want it?

(d) Why and how was his army reduced?

(e) How was the battle won?

2. Give the psalm and verse in which the following occur, and finish the verse in each case:—

(a) "Like as a father pitieth his children."

(b) "Create in me a clean heart."

(c) "Cast thy burden upon the Lord."

3. (a) Where is Christ called "The Good Shepherd" in the New Testament?

(b) What did He give for his sheep? and what promise did He make to them?

4.—What reply was given to the question, "How long dost Thou make us to doubt?"

DIVISION 3.

1. (a) Which fast is acceptable to God? (Isaiah).

(b) What promises are made in reference to this?

2. Supply consonants in place of the dots, in the following texts, each of which refers to calling upon God. Say where each is found (Isaiah):—

(a) a . . i o . e . o . a . . . a . . . e . o . e a . . . I . i . . a . . . e i . e a . e . . . e . .

(b) . c . . . e o i . o . e . . a . . . e . . . o . u a . . . e . . . o . . . i . . . i . e . . e . s . e . a . .

3. (a) "I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious."

(b) "What shall I do, Lord."

(c) For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain

To whom and by whom were the above texts (all mentioned in the same book) spoken, and on what occasions?

4. Find (with consecutive letters) the name of a person buried in each of the following texts:—

1. "Fear not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

2. "For every one that calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

3. "Trust in the Lord, and do good, dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed."

4. "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things."

5. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation."

6. "But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done."

DIVISION 4.

1. Give one verse from the Old Testament where our own righteousness is spoken of, and one in the New of the righteousness which is ours through Christ.

2. Give (with chapter and verse) any promises in respect to keeping the Sabbath Day holy.

3. Give twelve references to "the fear of the Lord" mentioned in Proverbs.

4. Give (with chapter and verse) God's promises to him that overcometh.

5. Where do the following verses occur? Give texts in the New Testament which correspond in idea:—

"Arise ye and depart; for this is not your rest" (Micah).

"The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good" (Prov.).

"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved" (Jeremiah).

6. Double acrostic.

1. A man who hated the Jews.

2. One who wavered.

3. A sin offering.

4. A giant.

5. A river.

6. One who had thirty sons and daughters (Judges).

Give the name of each of the above. The initial letters of each give the name of a prophet who brought this message from God, "Consider your ways!" Say who he was, and in whose reign he lived.

The final letters of each make the name of another prophet who reproved a king. Give his name and that of the king.

Foreign list:—

Nos. 14 and 15. John Field (Sydney). Nos. 21 and 22. Jean Scott (Canada). Nos. 22. Vera Siström (America). W. Arnold Craick (Canada). Gerhard Menter (Malta). No. 29. Queenie and Llewellyn Dale. No. 19. Charlotte Cane (South Africa).

No. 24 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

S. C. Boyman, James Roy, Netta and E. B. Black, Margaret and John Hogg, Leonard Browne, Helen, Elsie and Philip Willoughby, Maudie and Amy Nuttall, Ruth Harrison, Clara Barron, Nellie Benny, George and M. A. Cowen, Ethel and K. A. Paisley, Elma Tebb, Barbara Macomber, Hetty and Harold Wodson, Charlie Millidge, Duncan Payne, M. H. Daniels, Oswald and Horace Roberts, Enid Campbell, E. Yerbury, Minnie Giddings, May Hunter, May Dring, Moffatt and Sinclair Jackson, Margaret

589

Hasse, Edward Rainey, Edith Hearn, Norman, Vera, and May Petrides, Norman Braby, Olive Tritton, Maggie Thomson, Hugh Tufnell, Nora, and Edith Lowe, Bessie, Maggie, Mabel, and Kate Fletcher, Elsie and Grace Wright, Ruby and Daisy Allen, Bertha Kelsey, Violet Ashworth, Harry Kortright, Percy Leigh, Douglas Paige, E. T. Elliott, Edie Nash, Lillian and Katharine Blackie, George O'Beirne, Rowland and Geraldine Webb, Edith Harris, Christine and Hannah Parker, Lillian Bevan, Isabel Phipps, Maggie Goodland, Louis Berthé, C. A. Stennett, Dorothy Patten, Grace Dawson-Scott, Annie Baxter, Edwin Sharpe, Alice Short, Lily Dawe, Freda Hunton, M. T. Colville, Thomas and Bella Mack, Nellie Lovegrove, John Menzies, Dorothy Cooper, Nellie and Arthur Couch, Mary Maitland Kirwan, Trevor and Margery Matthews, Lionel and Gladys Calvert, Harriet Lynham, Lottie Orr, John Gray, Isabel Deane Rowe, Muriel Shaw, Frances Devanish-Meares, Florrie Mackenzie, Angus McQuillan, Gertrude Edwards, J. W. Ingle, Jack Gilson, Raymond Theobald, Dorothy Harris, Meta Trotter, Roberta Meikle, Leslie G. Frank, Oswald Mavor, Elise Warren, William Mackenzie, Marjorie Hogge, Eva, and Ethel Hutchings, May Meredith, William McMurray, Marion Connell, Theodora Hill, Ethel Light, Gerrie Scott, Susie Keen, Ada Heap, Hubert Malcolm, Nettie Thomson, Fanny and Jessie Cockram, Thomas Rayner, Annie Fleming, Fred Winstone, May Hanson, Fritz Tatzlaff, Willie Weinstein, J. and T. Stanier, Hannah Lovell, Ethel Fielder, Lavinia Barnes, Arthur Barker, Ethel Walls, Lucy Soitau, Louie and Nannie Tibbits, Laura Kirk, Ada and Mabel Davis, Kate and Dora Symes, Eva Wimper, Edna White, Joan and Eileen Johnson, Elsie Johnson, Arthur and Edith Quick, Elsie Simpson, Katherine Blair, Mary Charles.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 25).

- A.—1. (a) Eli. (b) On hearing of the death of his two sons, and that the ark of God had been taken by the Philistines, Eli fell backward and died. (c) Ninety-eight years.
2. (a) Four. (b) "Speak, for thy servant heareth." (c) "Hushed was the evening hymn," etc., or "What voice salutes young Samuel's ear," etc.
3. (a) They were the sons of Eli and priests. (b) They were slain in battle by the Philistines at Eben-ezer.
- B.—1. But without faith it is impossible to please Him (Heb. xi. 6).
2. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone (James ii. 17).
3. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen (Heb. xi. 1).

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Edith Hayward, May Meredith, Nellie, Florence, Victor, and Willie Bellerby, Christine Arnold, Josie, Lena, Elma, and Percy Chel, Maude Bailey, Alfred, Arthur, and Edward Llewellyn, Isabel Phipps, Martha Rogers, Herbert Braddon, Hannah and Christine Parker, Lillian Bevan, Irene Llewellyn, Rosalie Clark, Emily Bridgewater, H. M. Jordan, Catherine Bailey, Elsie Hancock, Violet Broxholm, Emily and Florence Palmer, R. H. Williams, Charlie Milledge, Noel and Phillis Wright, J. Hughesdon, Theodora Spencer, Cyril Bennett, May Pell, Daisy Groves, Eva Jones, Annie Cooper, Maggie Woods, F. Grigg, E. T. Elliott, Douglas Paige, Ross Wylie, P. Leigh, Cecil Bradford, Emily Dellow, James Dellow, Winifred and Erna Nash, Helen Beckett, Arthur Rench, Gwendolue Hill, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Kathleen Light, P. R. Robinson, Rose Brant, Jack Harris, Mary and Willie Charles, Eric Chance, K. A., Ethel and George Paisley, Ethel Mackenzie, Bell and F. Dance, Guinefred Leigh, Minnie Elsie, Bertha Fowler, S. T. Elliott, Alice and Constance House, Elsie Johnson, Maggie Buchanan, Annie Tawse, Hannah Bridgman, Daisy Bligh, Gertrude Ashby, Willie Wheeler, Gracie Dodington, Raymond Harbottle, Rosalind Philimore, Bettie Stocks, Kathleen Dodington, Basil Morgan, Gordon Remington, Annie, Bella, and Lizzie, Jack, Hilda, and Constance Schaeffer, Evelyn Shaw, Dorothy, and May, Vickers, Lillian, Teresa, Katherine, and Rowland Elsie Scott, Elsie Johnson, Maggie Buchanan, Enid Campbell, Elizabeth and Mary Hull, Jessie Bone, May and Jack Gilson, James Roy, J. W. Ingle, James Matthews, Clara Barnes, M. F. Nellie Dowsett, Arthur Cordell, Norman Braby, Maude Tyson, Dorothy Harris, Hilda Medill, Jessie, Lillian, M. and Margaret Pook, Lexie and D. J. Jack, Susie Cumbers, Maurice Grant, Frances and Florence Hoyte, William Oldham, "S.E. College," Rosetta Sherwin, Helen, Elsie, and Lillian Woughlough, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Bertha Kelsey, Marian and James Freagard, Dorothy Sharpe, M. G. Jocelyne, Raymond Whitwell, Hal Armstrong, Bertha and Dorothy Linney, Nancy Bellerby, Maggie, Kate, Bessie, and Mabel Fletcher, Effie McCallum, Hugh Tufnell.

Personal Items.

NANNIE and LOUIE TIBBITS, ANTHONY and F. BENTALL, and ARDRISHAIG.—Thank you very much for the flowers; I sent them to Miss Sharman's Home for Orphan Girls. ANNIE GROVE and ETHEL FIELDER.—Thank you for your nice letters. EFFIE SIMPSON.—I hope you are better now. JEAN SCOTT.—Do not use such thick paper, your letter was over weight. QUEENIE DALE.—I am glad you like doing the questions so much. BELL DANCE.—I hope your eyes will soon be quite strong again.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Spalding, June 25; Highbury, June 26; Highgate, June 27. Mr. B. Herklotz, Wetherby, June 25; Thorne, June 26; Gargrave, June 27; Bingley, June 28; Greystones, July 5-28. Mr. Hankinson, Trowbridge, July 11-19. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with caravan, Basingbourne, to June 30. Mr. Arrowsmith, Cuddington, June 26; Great Missenden, June 28; Weston-super-Mare, July 5-12. Mr. J. Lewis Field, Knockholt, Sevenoaks, June 27. Mr. A. E. Gwyn, Guilford, July 11-12. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birchington Bay, June 27 to July 6. Mr. E. Hughes, Leyton, July 10.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending July 4, 1896.—Sun., June 28, Acts xix. 1-12; Mon., June 29, xix. 13-27; Tues., June 30, xix. 28-41; Wed., July 1, xx. 1-12; Thurs., July 2, xx. 13-24; Fri., July 3, xx. 25-38; Sat., July 4, xxi. 1-14.

Reformed Episcopal Church.—The annual general synod of this body was held in Christ Church, Harlesden, on June 15, 16, and 17, under the presidency of Bishop Eldridge. The meetings were characterised by an earnest devotional spirit; while the report showed marked progress in every direction, increase in finances, in church property, and in communicants, with many openings for the development of the work. Revs. Dr. Bowman (Lis-cow, Cheshire), Cecil Johnson, and W. F. Allen (Boston, U.S.), preached special sermons, and the Lord's Supper was administered to a very large company. The quiet maintenance of the principles of the Church, i.e., Episcopal government, liturgical worship, and evangelical truth, was strongly emphasised as the desirable attitude of the Church in the present day.

Spurgeon Orphan Homes.

NOT the least of the many monuments to the piety and labour of the late C. H. Spurgeon is the Stockwell Orphanage, for the maintenance and Christian education of five hundred fatherless children. Originating in a sense of the urgency of pure religion and undefiled before God, it has, from its foundation in 1867, been conducted on definitely religious lines, and with sound practical wisdom.

Among the guiding principles of the institution are:—(a) It is conducted on the separate home system; each home is presided over by a Christian matron. (b) It is unsectarian; children are received, irrespective of their denominational connection, from all parts of the United Kingdom. (c) Candidates are selected by the committee, not elected by subscribers. By this arrangement the most needy, helpless, and deserving secure the benefits of the institution. (d) No uniform is permitted, in order to prevent a costume from becoming a badge of poverty. (e) The children receive a plain, but thorough English education and training, to fit them for the respective stations they are likely to occupy. (f) The supreme aim of the managers is always kept in view, to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." These principles have conduced to successful work, and secured for the Orphanage a warm place in the hearts of many Christian people.

The annual Festival and Founder's Day, which was observed on Wednesday last week, brought together a large assemblage of supporters and friends. There was the usual perambulation of the grounds and inspection of the houses; the singing of the children was enjoyed, also the performances of the band. These, however, were the least substantial of the day's engagements. The more serious "events" took the form of meetings, in the beautiful Spurgeon Memorial Hall and on the lawn, at which account was given of the progress of the institution, and its claims upon the benevolent public were set forth by Christian workers, representing various denominations, the platforms being as broad as is the sphere of the blessed influence of the Orphanage itself. The meetings were presided over by Mr. W. R. Rickett and Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A.

At both gatherings Dr. J. A. Spurgeon read an abstract of the report, which was very encouraging in its details. The total income from all sources was £17,138; the heavy deficiency of the previous year had been paid off, and the year closed with a good balance in hand. Substantial legacies were reported, and an appeal was made for the steady support of regular contributors. Mentioning the hospital, with its important ministry, Dr. Spurgeon intimated that it would rejoice the hearts of the trustees to secure a Home at the seaside to which sickly children could be sent for the benefit of their health. It is hoped that some philanthropist will come forward and generously supply this need.

Among the incidents rehearsed was one of a young man, formerly an inmate, who is about to enter Cheshunt College in training for the ministry. Rev. W. J. Henderson, B.A., told the story of Mrs. Hillyard's interest in the work. That lady, who made the first substantial contribution towards the institution, finding herself embarrassed as to what to do with the sum of £20,000, which she wished to devote to benevolent purposes, consulted a friend, who suggested that the money should be entrusted to someone enjoying public confidence and having a reputation to maintain. Then, when a name was asked for, the gentleman said "Mr. Spurgeon"—to his own astonishment, for he was not particularly in agreement with Mr. Spurgeon's views and opinions, but, as he said, the name "jumped to his lips."

Addresses of warm appreciation were delivered by Revs. J. Grundy, J. B. Meharry, and Thomas Nicholson, and prayer was offered by the venerable Rev. John Spurgeon, who admirably bears his many years. He praised God for the work wrought by his famous son, and invoked the Divine blessing upon his grandsons. The speakers in the evening also had a hearty hearing. Rev. Urijah Thomas remarked that whatever else might be lacking, there is catholicity enough in the churches to ensure co-operation in aid of the Orphanage. There is, he said, no church in the country that may not rejoice in the fact that the greatest Baptist teacher of his time was enabled to found such an institution. Rev. Charles Spurgeon spoke in tender terms of his own position as an orphan, whereby he was enabled in some measure to realise the feelings of many of the children who were being cared for in the Homes.

Rev. D. J. Hiley, another Bristol minister, alluded gracefully to the celebrated institutions connected with the name of Mr. George Müller. He congratulated the Orphanage managers on being able to support children at a less cost than is the case in the workhouse, and, in addition, to secure for them moral and spiritual advantages which are beyond the scope and sphere of the Poor Law authorities. Rev. W. Townsend followed with some words. What with processions, entertainments, and illuminations, happy hours were spent by young and old, the day being fragrant of the founder and good for the orphans and their friends.

Prayer for Rain.

THE country of which Moshuli is the capital borders on Khama's territory, and has suffered terribly from the rinderpest, locusts, and drought. The young missionary just arrived there sent a telegram to the convention at Wellington, asking for prayer; but the people prayed themselves. Morning and evening they held meetings. On the Monday the public prayer-meeting called by the chief was held in his courtyard, where over 3000 people were seated on the ground under a burning sun, most of them Christians, some raw heathen. The king himself conducted the service. After giving out a hymn, he led in prayer. Then he read the law from Exodus xx., and prayed earnestly, "Lord, send us thy Spirit to show us our sins," etc.

Addressing the people, he said: "Bakhatla! I cannot talk to-day, I have sinned. Our oxen are all gone, we have no corn, it is so awfully dry. We pray for rain; why does not God send it? Why, because we have sinned. I do not speak of your sins. I speak of my sin. The Lord made me your father, and what have I done? When you sinned I did not reprove you; I did not punish you. I loved you too much. Bakhatla! I confess my sin. I do not mind that the Lord has taken away my oxen, but my heart is sore for you. I have asked the Lord to take away my hidden sins, though that may cost me dear. I do not want you to suffer for my sin. Last year we had the smallpox. The Lord removed it. What did we do to show our gratitude? What did I do? May God forgive me." Then he said, "God loves us very much. He sent barnti (teachers) among us. Each time He gives us others in the place of those He takes away. Do we listen to them? Do we love them enough? We know they pray much for us; do we help them with our prayers? Bakhatla! pray, pray, pray much for me, your father. I am sinful; I have been like a naughty child." Then again he prayed earnestly for forgiveness.

In the afternoon the Christians met again in the church. The missionary spoke again on, "Ask, and ye shall receive." Then there were about twenty prayers. Several spoke, Lincluse spoke a few words on Luke xxi. 34, 35, 36. His attitude all day was most touching. The afternoon meeting most solemn, and, adds the lady who wrote the above, we have taken heart, for Christianity tells; it is real, very real.

A few days later she writes, "We had a beautiful, beautiful rain. The Lord has answered our prayers. This morning we attended one of three meetings for prayer. The people were sitting outside. We found it was the chief who was praying, thanking the Lord for the rain, and for bringing the teachers to sit and hear the Word, and meet with them in prayer. He came and shook hands with us, and we walked home together. We asked how it went with him, 'Oh, good, good, very good. My heart is very glad. We have asked. God has given. Now all the other people will say, 'The Lord loves the Bakhatla very much, they are his child.' He has given much rain, and He is going to give much more. All the sickness will be washed from the land. God is too good.' He told us that out of 3,800 head of cattle that had the rinderpest only six remained alive."

Rev. Jonathan Simpson, PORTRUSH.

IN the Irish Presbyterian Church, indeed it might be said throughout the Presbyterian churches of the world (for Mr. Simpson has been round the world), there is no name better known than that of Rev. JONATHAN SIMPSON, of Portrush. For more than fifty years he has ministered to the Presbyterian congregation of Portrush, with a faithfulness and a zeal that have never flagged, and with a self-denial and a devotedness that have never been surpassed.

Sixty years ago, Portrush was a small fishing village. It is now called the Brighton of Ireland. Sixty years ago the Presbyterians in the place were few in numbers, without any church buildings. Now they own and occupy a large and beautiful church which for several months in the year is filled to its utmost capacity. With this capacious church is connected lecture-room and day schools, all beautiful and complete, without a farthing of debt on the whole suite of buildings. For all this the Presbyterians of Portrush are indebted to the wisdom, and energy, and self-denial of Mr. Simpson. But it must not be supposed that he devoted himself only to the furtherance of the material edifices. From the first day of his entering upon the work of his ministry at Portrush, his constant aim was to bring sinners to God, and wanderers into the fold of the Great Shepherd of the sheep. In very early life he had tasted and seen that God was gracious; he had found in Christ a blessed Master, and in the way and life of Christ the happiness and joy of Christian discipleship. So it was that from the very first he set himself with much wisdom, and tenderness, and zeal, to win souls for Christ.

His success was very great. We have reason to know that in every part of the world many could be found to rise up and call him blessed. For we have seen at different times letters innumerable from east and west, from north and south, testifying to the great benefit the writers had received from his ministrations, from his pastoral visitations, his prayers, and his affectionate communications.

When temperance and total abstinence were unfashionable, Mr. Simpson threw himself with great ardour into the cause of their advocacy. An earnest and consistent abstainer all his life, and knowing the awful evils that the drink traffic brought upon the land, he was ever ready at any cost of time and labour and money to advocate the cause of temperance at home and abroad, ever ready at any hour of the day and night to lend a helping hand in the rescue of an immortal being from the overwhelming tide of drunkenness.

A great swimmer, he has often rescued, at the risk of his own life, unwary bathers from the treacherous and choking billows which break themselves in fury upon the cliffs and sands that encompass Portrush. The Humane Society has once and again given him its medal and certificate for his successful daring. We mention the fact as symbolical and indicative of his whole life and bearing. For whether as the active and efficient secretary of the Lifeboat Committee, or as the advocate of temperance, or the organiser and manager of day and Sabbath schools, or the active pastor of his devoted flock, Mr. Simpson's whole aim has been, like the Master whom he loves and serves, to save life and not to destroy it.

In his now famous work "The Annals of my Life," published last year, Mr. Simpson, among many other most interesting narratives, gives a lengthened account of the Ulster Revival of 1859, in which he took a very active and prominent part, and in which he was the blessed instrument of guiding many inquirers into the light and peace of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. Anyone who desires to make himself familiar with that wonderful dispensation of the Holy Spirit which effected such wonders upon Ulster in 1859, cannot do better than to read the chapter in his Annals headed "Narrative of Revivals."

Since his retirement from the active duties of the ministry at Portrush, the Lord Chancellor, at the recommendation of Sir F. Macnaughton, Bart., the Lieutenant of co. Antrim, has appointed him to the Commission of the Peace. And so Mr. Simpson continues to bulk largely in the public life of Portrush as one of the magistrates of the county. It is the fervent desire of many that he may long be spared to go in and out among the inhabitants of that beautiful watering-place as a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well, as a father of consolation to sorrowful hearts, as a helper, by his tender and touching prayers, to those in darkness and distress, as a burning and shining light holding forth the Word of Life.

(From Photograph by Mr. Kilpatrick, Belfast.)

Missionary Training in South Australia.

—At the annual meeting in May last of the Hope Lodge Missionary Training Home, which Rev. W. Lockhart Morton conducts at Belair, South Australia, it was stated that there are now thirteen young men in training, including one Chinaman, who is anxious to go back to his native land to evangelize his countrymen. There are also eight young ladies in training for mission work. In the course of the meeting Mr. Morton said that of the twelve missionaries already sent out, eight are in China, one in India, and three in Africa.

Romanism in America.—Dealing with the religious life of America in a recent interview, Rev. W. L. Watkinson says he found a fierce spirit of aggression in the Roman Catholic Church. With all their might the priests are striving to obtain their old supremacy. "Having spoiled the Old World, they are trying their hands at marring the New." The Roman Catholic Church owns immense property, and is largely reinforced by each shipload of emigrants. But on the native Americans Popery gains no hold, for there is no half-way house like our sacerdotal party to help on the way to Rome. The growth of Roman Catholicism is entirely due to the vast increase in the foreign population from the Roman Catholic countries of Europe.

The Armenian Sufferers.

ON Sunday, May 3, at noon, a most remarkable meeting was held in the old cavern-like Gregorian church of the city of Aintab. Over 3000 Armenian women were addressed in touching words by Mrs. Harris, of Cambridge, Eng., and she read the following letter, signed by Lady Henry Somerset and others:—

"TO THE SUFFERING WOMEN OF ARMENIA.

"Your brothers and sisters in Jesus Christ, who know of your sufferings for his Name's sake, are thinking of you by day and night. Your sorrow is their sorrow. They seek by all means in their power to obtain succour and deliverance. They thank God for those who have been faithful unto death, for now they are at rest they hear not the voice of the oppressor. They pray that you may be kept true and made strong, looking unto Him who, for our sakes, endured the Cross and despised the shame. They pray also that those may be restored who, in the midst of torments, have denied the faith; and they will not cease to pray that justice may at last be granted; and that you may at last dwell in peace and safety."

A similar letter from America was also read and these expressions of sympathy from Occidental Christians to their stricken Oriental sisters produced a wonderful effect upon this great audience of mourners, as they listened to the words which reassured them that they were not forgotten by the warm Christian heart of England and America.

Thousands crowd the churches several times a week and listen to the truth, and a Union Sunday-school work for children has recently been organised, in which over 2000 of Christ's little ones receive instruction each Sabbath noon. The thousands of smitten people in Aintab alone, who are receiving aid from England and America, desire to return thanks through THE CHRISTIAN for the sympathy and help given them in this their time of sorest need.

Efforts are being made to organise needle-work industries for thousands of Armenian widows and orphaned girls in various cities, and an appeal is herewith made to the benevolent women of England to co-operate in thus providing permanent employment to these poor people, by which they can be helped to help themselves.

(Mrs.) F. A. SHEPARD,

Director of Cottage Industries.

Aintab, Turkey-in-Asia, May 28.

Of the sixty-four prominent Christians from Aintab who have been in prison at Aleppo on account of the troubles, fifty-two have been released, and it is hoped that most of the remainder will soon be discharged. Of the twelve that are still in prison, five are among our most prominent Protestants, and are charged under various specifications with murder and rioting. The Italian Consul has just returned to Aleppo, after being absent in the Zeitoon affair for nearly five months. He reports the situation at Zeitoon and Marash as improving slowly. Much difficulty and delay is experienced in forwarding goods for relief work on account of the enforced idleness of nearly all Christian Katurjis (muleteers). Rates of transportation are often exorbitantly high.

Great destitution is reported in the Christian villages in the vicinity of Antioch, although there has been no general massacre or plundering in that region. No serious disturbance has occurred in the vicinity of Hassan Beyli. There is, however, much destitution there. As travelling becomes easier the crowds of patients at the hospital are increasing, and both the capacity of the building and the strength of our physicians are taxed to their utmost. Money is beginning again to be secured in fees and for medicines from those who have not suffered from the massacres. Our fifty patients have been accommodated in the "maternity ward." The demand for relief is diminishing, but more than two thousand cases are still unable wholly to provide for themselves.

British Y.M.C.A. Conference.

DERBY, JUNE 16 to 19.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Derby Conference will be remembered by Association men as one of the happiest of a long series. It was attended by more than 450 delegates. Among welcome visitors were:—Mr. Henry Conder (Manager G.I.P. Railway), president of the Bombay Y.M.C.A.; Mr. Burford, ex-president, Adelaide Association; Mr. Oliver, Kimberley, South Africa; and Mr. Wilson, Buenos Ayres. Credit is due to the Derby Y.M.C.A. Committee and their secretary, Mr. A. K. Yapp, and his assistants, for the admirable way in which the arrangements were planned and executed.

Three buildings were devoted to the use of the Conference. The Association House in St. Peter's Church-yard was the rendezvous, cloak-room, post-office, inquiry-office, etc. The Conference Sessions were held in the large hall of the Mechanics' Institute, called the Albert Hall—a prettily-decorated, airy room, just the right size to accommodate the delegates. The Drill Hall was devoted to commissariat purposes, a cold collation being served therein on two days of the Conference. The public reception on the first evening, the young men's demonstration on the second evening, and the conversation on the third evening were also held in this same capacious hall. All three buildings were in close proximity to one another.

Victoria Congregational Chapel was lent to the Conference for a noon-day service on Wednesday, when Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a very solemn address based on the words, "Lest I become a castaway" (1 Cor. ix. 27). The preacher expounded the passage as conveying to all the solemn warning that, although the believer could never perish, he might through unfaithfulness be rejected by the Master from active service in soul-winning. If Christians are to avoid the fate of the castaway, they must (1) make many sacrifices; (2) winning men must be the one purpose of their life; and (3) they must seek the endowment of the Holy Spirit.

All Saints, the parish church of Derby, was likewise placed at the disposal of the Association on the following day, when Archdeacon Sinclair preached from the text, "What is your life?" (James iv. 14). His theme was an urgent insistence upon the fact that the thought of a future destiny was the greatest factor in determining the course of a man's earthly life. Both churches were well filled; the collections, devoted to the local Association building fund, amounted to more than £57.

There was a crowded meeting for the preliminary devotional service, conducted by Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), and a very fervent spirit was manifested. Opening with the expression of an opinion that the world was getting more worldly and Christians were growing more spiritual, Mr. Montgomery led up to the point that the requirement of each believer was a "personal Pentecost." The preacher searchingly asked his hearers if they had each experienced this blessing. One man, one dozen men, so filled with the Holy Ghost, would revolutionise the world; a word from a man in communion with God is worth a ton of addresses. Praise and prayer followed, in which many delegates took part.

In the evening, a reception of delegates and friends took place in the Albert Hall, by Mr. Alderman Bottomley, ex-Mayor. Mr. Henry Bemrose, M.P., president of the local Association, supplemented the civic welcome of the Deputy-Mayor. Other local friends, including the vicar of Derby, added words of welcome. Sir George Williams and other friends responded.

THE CONFERENCE PROPER

commenced on Wednesday morning. But this again was preceded by a devotional meeting, at which an address was delivered by Rev. J. S. OWEN, Derby. [572]

His topic was the union, not the "reunion" of Christians. The delegates being too numerous to be introduced personally rose in batches according to their nationality. Sir George Williams raised a kindly laugh when a negro lad, a student in a Welsh college, rose with the Welshmen. He said he could not conceive how our black brother could be a Welshman!

Mr. ROBINSON SOUTTAR, M.P., read the first paper, entitled "The Bible in the Association." Commencing with the statement of the necessity for personal study, he proceeded to point out the great advantages of united study—not only because of the mutual help afforded, but also because of the increase of Christian charity engendered as men learned to recognise merit in, and to love brethren in other Christian communities. Mr. W. OATTS, Glasgow, next contributed a bright and helpful paper on "The Workers' Training Class." Then followed Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS (of Portman Chapel, London), on the "Advanced Bible Students' Class." The study in this section should embrace devotional, critical, historical, and practical subjects.

A fourth paper was read on "Individual Study" by Mr. H. B. WILSON (Birmingham). Then ensued a brief but lively discussion, in which Mr. W. H. Roberts (Plymouth), Mr. Solloway (Oxford), Sergeant Shand (Scots Fusiliers), Mr. Thomas (Welsh travelling secretary), Lord Kinnaird, and Mr. W. H. Mills (National Council) all took part; their contributions being compressed into fifteen minutes by the clock. They all tended to prove the great need that exists for systematic Bible study.

In the afternoon the delegates mustered in full force to hear a paper read by Mr. ROBERT McCANN, Travelling Secretary for Ireland, on

THE DEVELOPMENT OF AGGRESSIVE AGENCIES for reaching all sections of young men. The speaker claimed that the Y.M.C.A. was the largest and most successful work for young men in the world. In military operations the old order was ever changing, giving place to new; not so in the Y.M.C.A., the old methods being still the most successful; because they were supremely aggressive.

Mr. J. H. POTTERELL (London), who opened the discussion, spoke of successful methods of aggressive work that had been tested in the metropolis—inviting men to social reception by nationalities, and by common occupation in professions and trades. He also spoke of an effort to enlarge the number of workers by drawing in more Christian young men, who would join, not so much for the advantages of the Association rooms, but with the definite object of aggressive spiritual work.

Mr. F. HUNT (Reading) and Mr. R. H. FISHER (North Liverpool) both urged the importance of the work of the members in the Association rooms. Mr. S. B. GREER (Ballynahinch) spoke against the gambling mania, and aroused considerable feeling by suggesting not only that there was lukewarmness in the Association on the subject, but that some of the members were not free from the taint. This was understood to refer to practices in bazaars. Mr. R. H. HENSON (Finsbury Park), spoke of some successful aggressive efforts. Mr. HALEY (Wakefield) advocated the appointment of a Y.M.C.A. evangelist, and offered to contribute liberally to the cost. Col. SETON CHURCHILL advocated the appointment of a young man in every church in the interest of the Association, to look after young men who are strangers. Mr. J. W. REID (Leamington) and Mr. R. BURN (London) also spoke. The latter suggested that the success of the Association agencies depended almost wholly on the members fulfilling their functions. Mr. STEWART (Ringsend), Mr. HARDY (Darlington), and Mr. W. R. LANE (evangelist), continued the discussion. Mr. Lane thought it a mistake to confine evangelistic work wholly to young men.

A "quiet hour" followed, led by Rev. H. MONTGOMERY. Speaking in the course of the meeting on the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, Mr. Montgomery said that throughout the Book of the Acts there were many references to the continued descendings of the Holy Spirit. There is a larger blessing for each believer than he has yet received, and it can be obtained at once. In the evening was held in the Drill Hall, LORD KINNAIRD, who made a spirited speech, presiding. Referring to a deputation from local temperance societies, he took advantage of the occasion to assure the meeting that the hearts of all Y.M.C.A. workers were true to the principles of temperance, purity, and anti-gambling, and everything else that tended to oppose the degradation of the manhood of the country.

A MASS MEETING

Rev. J. K. NUTTALL (Liverpool) addressed the meeting on "Gambling," Mr. W. T. LEE (Cardiff) on "Infidelity," and Rev. F. B. MEYER on "Impurity." The address of the last-named was full of fervour as he pressed home on his audience the awful consequences of a vicious life. There was a general feeling of regret that time failed the speaker to point also to the remedy in an Almighty, Risen Saviour.

On Thursday morning a devotional meeting was conducted by Rev. J. Mursell, Derby. After this a new departure was taken, when a fresh topic was introduced by Mr. A. TAYLOR INNES, Advocate, Edinburgh, entitled, "The Influence of Modern Literature upon the Young Men of To-day." Although there were grave defects in our modern literature, in relation to religion and morality, it was better than that of other countries and of former ages. As in the world, so in literature which mirrors and anticipates it, there are bad things as well as good. Literature is a great gift to the young; it not only occupies the mind, it also expands it.

Rev. J. GLEN DAVIES (Newport, Mon.) said that much of what young men read in the present day was not literature at all. He thought most of the Christian journals of to-day were too pietistic. Mr. SPRAGGON (Southport) took part in the discussion; also Mr. LONG (Brighton), who thought reading unions should be established in connection with Y.M.C.A.'s. Mr. HERMAN (Leicester), a librarian of twenty-two years' standing, said the greatest difficulty is to get young men to read at all. They generally said, "Don't give me a serious book; I am tired out with my work." Mr. BELCHER (Kingswood) advised young men to read the history of their own country. We are being brought face to face with another fight with Rome. Reading history would enlighten young men as to the damning influence she has ever wrought on all countries under her control. Mr. CROWTHER (Librarian of Derby Public Library) and several other speakers thought that the Y.M.C.A. should give some practical guidance on the subject of reading for young men. Mr. SHARMAN maintained that reading demanded attention when young men were boys. The taste for reading was formed early. He feared in too many cases the devil got possession first.

An interesting paper on "The Claims of Heathen and Mohammedan Young Men on the Members of the Y.M.C.A.," was then read by Mr. FRANK ANDERSON, who is going to the Bombay Presidency as a Y.M.C.A. worker amongst native students. He urged upon Y.M.C.A. men that they are debtors to the young men of heathen lands. There is abundant grace in the Lord Jesus Christ to enable them to discharge their indebtedness. He strove by means of statistics, and the narration of pathetic facts and incidents, to impress this conviction firmly on the hearts of his hearers.

Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS followed with a most profitable Bible reading, setting forth six Bible claims and six Bible calls in relation to the evangelisation of the world.

Mr. J. C. WHITE (Calcutta) said it was possible to gather a daily audience of one thousand students in Calcutta to hear and confer upon the teaching of the Gospel. Capture these men, and they will capture the country. Rev. H. MONTGOMERY, in closing, cited the opinion once expressed by an American senator on foreign mission work; he reckoned they had "no religion to export." A friend explained to him the anomaly of this article, in that "the more you export the more you get." This is true in the Y.M.C.A.

In the afternoon the delegates proceeded by special train on the Great Northern Railway to Mickleover Manor, by invitation of Mr. and Hon. Mrs. Newton. During the garden party an al fresco session of the Conference was held, when papers were read on "How to Make the Rooms of the Y.M.C.A. more Attractive," "Association Journals and their Management," "Ladies' Auxiliaries," and "Boys' Work." After this "Question Drawer" was instituted. This is a popular function, because anonymous questions are given in, which elicit answers from the chairman or others on whom he may call. They embraced on this occasion inquiries touching smoking rooms, games, ladies' auxiliaries, an Association journal that can be localised, Temperance work in the Y.M.C.A., work amongst soldiers and sailors, boys' work, Association clubs, etc.

Then followed an eloquent address on work amongst soldiers, by Colonel PHILLIPS, who reminded his hearers that that day was the anniversary of Waterloo. Rev. H. MONTGOMERY gave a closing address on the three passages in which St. Paul spoke of "readiness"—(1) Ready to preach the Gospel; (2) Ready to be bound; (3) Ready to depart.

The closing engagement of the Conference was a conversazione in the Drill Hall, by invitation of Mr. and Hon. Mrs. Newton. Between one and two thousand guests assembled. An excellent address was delivered by Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, and a rousing speech by ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR, who spoke of the folly of the idea of external reunion with a Church which had never acknowledged its unscriptural errors, and was stubbornly adhering to them to-day. He aroused the Protestant feeling of the meeting to an ardent pitch, the guests rising and cheering and waving handkerchiefs in token of heartiest assent. Mr. J. COMPTON RICKETT, M.P., Mr. H. H. BEMROSE, M.P., and Mr. ROBINSON SOUTAR, M.P., also spoke.

On Friday, in charming weather, the Conference excursion was made to Chatsworth and Haddon Hall. After luncheon, at the former delightful spot, resolutions acknowledging the most kind and hospitable reception of the Derby Y.M.C.A., of the hosts and hostesses, and of numerous friends, were passed with acclamation.

Missionary Garden Party.—On Saturday last, at Harley House, Bow, E., a Missionary Garden Party was held, with a conference in the evening. The gathering was arranged by the Metropolitan District Council of the Young Christians' Missionary Union. Invitations had been issued to about 850 Sunday-schools and other centres of young people in East and North-east London, requesting each to send three delegates. Between 150 and 200 friends assembled, and the occasion proved to be both enjoyable and profitable. Particulars concerning the Young Christians' Missionary Union may be had on application to Secretary Y.C.M.U., College Buildings, Temple-street, Newington, London, S.E.

The Coming of the Lord.

By HENRY VARLEY.

THE study of Matthew xxiv. and Luke xxi., in relation to the conditions which our Lord said would be identified with the actual time of his coming to the earth "in power and great glory," yields in the light of events which are now transpiring some remarkable indications that the time of the end of this age is come.

Between the Scylla of mere human speculation in regard to Christ's coming and the Charybdis of an intelligent and cultured rationalism, which either sets asides or ignores the plainest statements given by our Lord in regard to his appearing and glory, it is necessary that we steer a clear and definite course.

The fact stated by our Lord that "that day will come as a snare upon all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth," is conclusive as to the unbelief and guilty silence which He declared would prevail at the time. The dividing line between modern philosophic rationalism and the great supernatural facts revealed in "the sure word of prophecy" is found here. To set forth certain of these facts is the object of this paper.

1. The national and world-wide unrest which everywhere exists, and the readiness for war found specially amongst the great and highly civilised nations of Europe.

2. The evident approach of the dissolution of the Turkish Empire, and the breaking up of the governmental rule of the Mohammedan power, so far as Jerusalem and Palestine are concerned.

3. The striking indications of Israel's national renewal and resuscitation, that which the Holy Spirit in a national sense speaks of as "life from the dead" (Rom. xi. 15).

4. The fact of the receiving of Christ Jesus the Lord as the Messiah by large numbers of the Jews during the past twenty years.

5. The recent return in unbelief of more than 50,000 of God's people Israel to Jerusalem and Palestine, in great poverty and sorrow, and as the result of bitter persecution and oppression.

6. The actual "arising" of the city of Jerusalem at the close of the long and weary centuries during which the Lord Jesus declared she should be "trodden down" of the Gentiles.

7. The desolation of Jerusalem and the land was to continue until (but not beyond) the end of the great epoch called by our Lord, "the Times of the Gentiles" (Luke xxi. 24).

8. "The Times of the Gentiles" comprehend 2520 years, during which governmental supremacy, at the instance of Jehovah, was to pass out of the hands of Israel and Judah into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, King of Babylon.

9. These "Times" began when Jehoiakim, the last king of the house of David that ever occupied his throne, was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar and removed to Babylon.

10. The date, according to the most recent chronology, was near to, if not in, the year 620 B.C. Add 1896 A.D. to 620 B.C., and the total of 2516 proves that we are very near the end of these Times.

11. "The Times of the Gentiles," interpreted in the light of Jewish and Gentile history, represent the predicted "seven times" of Moses, Daniel, and John. A prophetic "time" in Scripture is 360 years, "seven times," 360 by seven gives the total of 2520 years.

12. The time for the fulfilment of the New Covenant, involving the national resuscitation and the spiritual regeneration of Judah and Israel, according to God's promise, is at hand. (See Jer. xxxi. 31.)

13. The fact that the time of the "ingrafting" of Israel, in order to national pre-eminence as the Lord's chosen people and his "executive" on the earth, is contemporary with the time of his breaking in pieces of Gentile government to the ends of the earth.

14. The solemn truth, that if righteousness, peace, goodness, longevity, and the well-being of the millions of the earth, be the Divine intention in regard to government, the incompetency and unfitness of all rule and authority to secure these results has been during "the Times of the Gentiles" fully demonstrated.

15. The proved indisposition and inability of all existing monarchies and legislatures to rule in righteousness, and their practical infidelity as to any responsibility on their part to God as the Supreme Lawgiver.

16. The fact that "glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and goodwill toward [amongst] men," are results which have not been attained by any existing form of government on the earth throughout all the centuries of "the Times of the Gentiles."

17. The further fact that human government of every known form and character possible to men has, after an experience covering nearly 6000 years, been proved an ignominious and disastrous failure.

18. That the greatest need of the world at the commencement of 1896 is a wise, just, and competent ruler. That Jesus Christ the Lord is that Supreme and Competent Ruler. That, given his universal sovereignty, war must cease to the ends of the world.

19. That the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, "which in his times He shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," is, therefore, not only "the hope of the Church," but will bring and secure, after "the great day of his wrath," the salvation and deliverance of the world.

20. The coming of the Lord Jesus Christ into the air, there to receive his prepared people to Himself, may now, therefore, be anticipated with joyful confidence and expectation at any time, and for the following cogent reason:—

21. The times of the Lord Jesus Christ, when He shall reign as King over the whole earth, are not contemporary with "the Times of the Gentiles," but they immediately succeed them.

22. The Stone (Jesus Christ) which Daniel saw fall upon the fully developed image, and break it into pieces, clearly gives the arrival of the coming crisis. The great image shown to Nebuchadnezzar was a symbolic picture of "the Times of the Gentiles," and sets forth the rise, progress, development, and culmination of human government, during the whole period prior to the establishment of the kingdom of the Son of God upon the earth.

23. The scene is one of the most solemn judgment. The majestic words spoken by the great prophet may fittingly close this paper. "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them in pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them. And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" (Dan. ii. 34-35). Thus shall "the earth be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—A well-attended meeting of seamen and others was held at this Society's headquarters, on Thursday evening, to celebrate the third anniversary of the opening of these new buildings. Mr. John Bell (of the Orient Steamship Co.), who presided, expressed his interest in this society and in the class it sought to benefit. He felt sure that the hearts of all went out in sympathy towards those who had been suddenly plunged into sorrow by the foundering of the Drummond Castle. Rev. G. J. Hill reported a good year's work, and appealed for new friends and generous helpers. Some excellent and brief addresses were given by six students from the Pastors' College, all of whom expressed their deep interest in sailors. [573]

A Missionary Conference.

IN the Rink Hall, Blackheath, on Wednesday of last week, there were three largely attended and deeply interesting meetings devoted to missionary work abroad. It had been announced that the venerable Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, would be present as one of the speakers. At the morning meeting, however, Major MACKINLAY, chairman, read a letter from Mr. Müller regretting his inability to carry out his purpose, in consequence of relaxed throat, which had made him unfit for public work. His colleague, Mr. James Wright, had come to take his place. The chairman also read a letter by Mr. Albert A. Fenn telling of progress in Gospel work at Chamberi, Madrid. The day-schools are overflowing with children, and additional premises are needed. Mr. Fenn added that he and Mrs. Fenn much desired to return to Madrid, as soon as their state of health permitted.

"Fellowship in the Gospel" was the practical topic which Mr. Wright expounded as an introduction to the conference proceedings. Alluding to Paul's metaphor of the church as a body, with varied members in harmonious action, he described missionaries as the "feet of the body." Those who remain at home might be called "the hands." The secret of missionary fruitfulness is for every member of the body to be in vital fellowship with "the feet." What power this would give to the actual missionaries. Do not let us restrict the thought of fellowship to the giving of money.

A deeply interesting and encouraging account of his recent tour on the Continent was given by Rev. DAVID BARON. Some particulars of this journey have already appeared in our columns, in letters from Mr. Baron. He spoke of the passing away of the long dark and dreary night of Jewish unbelief, and the near dawning of a better day. All over the Continent, during his recent two months' travels from Holland to the Balkan States, he found many Jews willing to listen to the story of the Messiah and his salvation. There is great need for more itinerating evangelists among the Jews; the opportunity throughout Europe for taking the Gospel to them is indeed a grand one.

The third speaker of the morning was Dr. BAEDER, who had a still more wonderful story to tell than that of his Jewish brother. His account of experiences in different parts of Russia was like a chapter out of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles. He dwelt on the vastness of the Russian Empire and the great variety of nationalities to be found within its borders. The priceless service rendered to him in his many journeys by the British and Foreign Bible Society was acknowledged. He regarded the Society as the greatest monument of British Christianity. He told also of the remarkable freedom that exists in Russia for the distribution of the Scriptures, and of the help rendered by the authorities in the way of free passes for himself and other workers throughout the country, and free freightage for parcels of Scriptures. In these respects Russia is far ahead of Great Britain. The permission that Dr. Baedeker has received to visit Russian prisons is now extended to two fellow-workers. Some deeply-pathetic facts were given as to the condition of the Stundists and their fidelity to conscience and Christ in the midst of persecution and distress. The relief which he had been able to distribute through the kindness of Christians in different lands had saved many from starvation. The Stundists are grievously disappointed that no amelioration of their condition has been granted at the recent coronation of the Czar. They are still suffering greatly, but their numbers are not diminishing, and the Lord must have some great purpose in connection with them. Dr. Baedeker greatly cheered the company by his recital of the way in which God had smoothed his path during his late nine-months' tour through Russia. He said he was not done with it yet. He asked fervent prayer for the persecuted Stundists, for the empire generally, and specially for the young Czar.

The proceedings of the afternoon were opened with a short and suggestive Bible reading from Dr. NEATBY on the feeding in the wilderness of the "five thousand men, besides women and children." The compassionate heart of Jesus flowed out to the hungry multitudes; in like manner the hearts of his disciples now ought to flow forth in compassionate pity to those sitting in the shadow of spiritual death in all lands.

The first to report on work abroad was Mr. EWING, of the Argentine Republic. He furnished a singularly graphic account of his experiences in the Argentine with his Bible-carriage; of the opposition met with in some places from Romish priests; of the help afforded by officials, and of the wonderful receptiveness shown by the people to the Gospel message. The spiritually destitute condition of the vast continent of South America was very forcibly described. The Romish system in these lands is nothing but "baptized Paganism."

China was next represented in the persons of Mr. JUDG and Dr. WILSON. They had much that was gratifying to tell, especially as to the fidelity and devotion of Chinese converts. Dr. Wilson related the story of one convert in Hang-Chung-fu who has been much blessed in preaching the Gospel to his brethren, by the help of coloured pictures, illustrating Scripture narratives. These pictures, painted by native artists, vividly bring home the truth to the people, and enable them to understand it much better than foreign pictures could do. Some telling lessons in missionary work were drawn by Dr. Wilson from the example of Nehemiah in regard to the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem.

In the evening, under the presidency of Dr. McKILLIAM, and with a large attendance, very interesting addresses were given by Mr. Wright, Mr. F. S. Arnot, and Dr. Baedeker.

Dr. Pierson's Farewell.

ON Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week, Dr. A. T. PIERSON gave a series of addresses in Exeter Hall on practical themes relating to the Christian life, as closing up his present tour in Great Britain and Ireland, previous to returning to the United States. There were good attendances. The Doctor's expositions were marked by all the insight, spiritual force, and luminosity that characterise his utterances. Among the themes discussed were "God's Seven-sealed Book," "The Holy Spirit in the Believer and in the Church," "The Rest Life Entered by Faith," etc.

The body of Exeter Hall was almost full for the closing message of our visitor on Thursday evening. Lord KINNAIRD presided. In the opening prayer, Dr. James Spurgeon, referring to Dr. Pierson's early departure by ship, very touchingly commended to the Divine comfort those who had been so sorely and suddenly bereaved by the loss of the Drummond Castle, with the large company of souls on board. In a brief speech the chairman referred gratefully to Dr. Pierson's visit, and the messages he had been enabled to deliver. In the name of the company he wished Dr. Pierson God speed on his homeward voyage, and much blessing on all his future work. Some further words of goodwill towards Dr. Pierson were spoken by Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE, who was also exceedingly cordial in his references, from individual experience, to the hospitality extended to Englishmen when they visit America.

After some responsive words of personal thanks, Dr. PIERSON proceeded to give his closing address, on SERVICE—ITS PREPARATION AND REWARD.

Service, he said, is the consummate flower of the plant of God. The highest life is always life producing. Service is for the believer the end of salvation, and even of sanctification. We are intended to be co-workers with God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. The principles of service and the preparation for it are well set forth in 2 Tim. ii. 19-21. There is here a rare crystal of thought, throwing light on the service of the believer. After pointing out some striking "double parallelisms" in the passage, he noticed them in more detail. The Christian is not only a chosen vessel but a willing vessel. The first condition of being used by God is humility. Vessels of gold and silver, such as those referred to by Paul, are not always the most highly thought of by God. Paul deemed himself to be only "an earthen vessel." It is easy to say "only a vessel," but very difficult to mean what we say. What is it to be a vessel? It cannot make or use itself. So we must first be God's workmanship and then submit to be used solely by Him. Schemes and plans for our own usefulness must be given up. Pride of self is the greatest obstacle to service, and the last to be overcome. It takes a thousand different forms; kill it in one form and it rises in another. And the pride of humility is the worst pride of all. So the daily dying unto self is the foremost condition of service. Mr. George Müller once said that he never enters on any piece of work till he is satisfied of four things: (1) "Is it God's work? (2) Is it my work? (3) Is it God's time? and (4) Is it God's way?"

The course of preparatory humbling that had to be meted out to such servants of God as Moses, Israel, Daniel, Peter, John and Paul, before they were fitted for their life service, was cited as showing the need of such discipline in the case of all chosen vessels. Our defeats are more valuable to us than our so-called "successes." When we come to the point of real humbling, then comes true restfulness. No maxim out of Scripture had been more blessed to the speaker than one attributed to Mr. Müller, "Where anxiety begins faith ends; where faith begins anxiety ends." Pursuing his exposition of the passage, Dr. Pierson maintained that the Christian is not capable of self-consecration; that must be done by God. The believer must separate himself from evil, and God will do the rest.

God is so jealous of his work that He will allow nothing to be incorporated with it that has not his stamp on it. Service is not duty, but privilege. Everything that relates to God's work must be purged. Many of the Church's methods of raising the needed money are disowned in heaven. God must not be served with any unanointed thing. The Gospel message is God's appointed method; the Gospel ministry is not a profession, but a holy calling. The Church's money must be consecrated, and, though the Church defiles her hands with other sorts of money, it is a question whether God will deign to use it. Then there must be the prayer of faith, and that is one of the lost arts in the Church of God to-day. We multiply appeals to men, but how seldom we multiply prayer to God.

A closing word as to God's part in the preparation. "Meet for the Master's use." Every vessel must be shaped for its special use, and then prepared for that use. So there is with the believer, first the shaping and then the filling with the Holy Ghost. God may find it needful to break the believer, and then reconstruct him. But the filling of the Holy Ghost is the great requisite before the service begins. No matter as to the terminology, the crucial question is, Have we been filled with the Spirit for service? It is marvellous what new power comes when this Divine "chrism" descends on the believer. No child of God has ever come to the point of truly waiting for the filling of the Spirit, but God has very quickly bestowed it. Many of us are working for God without the power of the Spirit. Let us not stop till that strange and mysterious unction comes upon us that makes the whole man radiant with God's presence.

At the close of his address, Dr. Pierson led in prayer that all might refuse to go free, preferring to be the willing slaves of such a Divine Master as we have, and claiming the privilege of being moulded by God, and filled by the Spirit for service. The impressive service ended with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again," the large company standing; and by prayer from Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

France: Its Evangelization.

A VERY considerable acquaintance with the state of the French people in towns and villages is made by the constantly-travelling colporteurs—forty-seven of the British and Foreign Bible Society and sixty of the Société Evangélique de Genève. They know intimately, by personal contact with them, their habits and morals, and the way they regard religion. The very important change with respect to education arrived at by reforming and Radical representatives in the National Assembly, imposing "laïcité" in all branches of instruction, comes now to be understood not simply as anti-Roman Catholic, but as anti-religious, and the result, as may naturally be supposed, has been deplorable on the rising generation. At the same time conscience cannot be stifled in all, and contact with not a few reveals the fact that there are cravings for something better than a miserable "petit journal," with its loathsome contents, and a willingness to read the Book of God and encourage its reading in their children, and this in spite of the opposition of the curés. Not that this opposition is quite universal; several well-disposed members of the clergy approve of the sale of the Scriptures, and even purchase them.

The Pope, in his "encyclical letter on the study of Holy Scripture"—"a divine gift for the eternal salvation of the people"—admonishes "with paternal love all disciples and ministers of the Gospel to cultivate Holy Writ with respect and lively piety." This surely ought to discourage the almost general opposition of the Roman Catholic clergy to the circulation of Holy Scripture, we may say even the fanatical opposition, which leads to the burning of the Scriptures where they can lay their hands on them—a singular response to this injunction of their head!

In many cases the epithet Protestant does not carry with it the hatred of former times; on the contrary, very frequently the remark is made, "The Protestant religion is better than our own." A married clergy, and religious services in their own tongue and not in unknown Latin, with fees exacted for everything, which urges many to say "C'est un religion de poche"—all these alienate them from the priesthood, and predispose them to attend to disinterested overtures by Protestants in caring for their eternal interests. On all sides there are souls disgusted with superstition, dissatisfied with infidelity, and scandalised by the immorality of the priests, not a few objecting to their wives and daughters going to confession; they are waiting for something they do not find in the traditional religion of their fathers.

Bible colportage and tract circulation have done something, but the living voice is needed; and how few amongst the 36,000 communes have heard the voice of the Gospel preacher! Not a few cases have arisen where a single portion of the Word of God, received from the hand of the colporteur, and its influence in a single family, has led to inquiry in a village, and the ultimate establishment of an Evangelical station. The circulation of the Holy Scriptures in France, from the origin of our Bible Society, has been exceedingly large, and with respect to the distribution of tracts, even recently, since the establishment of the Dépôt Central in 1877, we can report a circulation of about seven millions by this agency alone; and, taking into account that a tract is generally read by several, this might reach the greater part of the population of France.

That population is now 38,343,192, of whom about 680,000 are Protestants, or less than one in sixty, and more than half of the so-called Protestants are either indifferent or rationalistic; this is fewer than the number which for conscience' sake were expatriated from the mother-country.

In the time of Admiral Coligny, the middle of the sixteenth century, a good third of France was Protestant, including three-fourths of the lesser nobles and many magistrates and lawyers. The Reformers were strongest in the West and North Dauphiné, and the South-East. How marked was the state of public opinion when Henry of Navarre and his consort and retainers could walk back from the Pré aux Clercs to their hotel singing the psalms of Marot. At the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, more than 700,000 worthy, industrious Christian citizens emigrated to Protestant countries, introducing their various handicrafts and important trades. England received many, for in the middle of last century there were thirty-five French churches in London, and several of these in the district called Spitalfields, named after the Hospital of St. Mary.

Louis XIV. had succeeded, Protestantism was annihilated in France, and Jesuitism triumphant; but the serious, religious, and stable element supplied in the Huguenot character was gone, and France lost its moral backbone, and never recovered itself, but became a dreary waste. The Church of France, enriched by one-fifth of all the landed property which had belonged to the Protestants, had everything its own way for a century; but it sowed the seed which produced that terrible crop in the awful events connected with the Revolution of 1789.

Happily, full religious liberty prevails now, and earnest Christians, although so few, have for the last fifty years been engaged in propagating the Gospel in their much-loved country. The following summary of the present work of the societies evangelising in the provinces will give their work at a glance. Work in Paris is excluded throughout:—

Name	Founded	Agents	Stations	Receipts
Société Centrale	1847	110	125	£7000a
Société Evang. France ..	1833	35	89	£3200b
Free Church	1850	20	33	£4240c
Société Evang. Geneva ..	1831	14	117	£5000d
Baptists	—	47	20	—e
Methodists	—	31	22	—f
McAll Mission	1872	45	80	£15,000g
Dept. de l'Ain	—	5	—	—h
Bretons	—	10	—	—i

M. Pointet's work of his Bible-carriage, aided by the Neufchatel Society.

OBSERVATIONS.

a Caisse Centrale at Paris—a work happily decentralised, having fourteen sectional committees.

b First French society in the field.

c For two years.

d This includes its sixty colporteurs, aided by the National Bible Society of Scotland.

e Aided by the A.B.M.U. of the U. States.

f Conference Française. Cook, an Englishman, began the work in the South.

g Including the work of the mission-boat.

h Work established by late Pasteur Pasquet.

i At Quimper, Presbyterian; Tremel, Brest, Voitures Bibliques work in Breton.

In addition to the many needy fields on terra firma, there is the riverain, canal, and coast population, boatmen, fishermen and sailors on its 4575 miles of navigable rivers, and 2900 miles of canals. There are at least half a million of boatmen employed at the ocean ports, and a large number difficult to estimate that man the canals, besides the mariners and fishermen on the coasts and islands. The McAll Mission-boat has a most encouraging experience, and also the mission-boat, the Good News, on the northern coasts, under the direction of Mrs. Cook, having a Sailors' Rest at Trouville-Deauville, managed by Mr. F. L. Brading, formerly in Algiers. There is also a Sailors' Rest at Roscoff, Finistère, and work amongst French and English sailors.

Nearly all the French societies have a great deficiency of funds, and are in anxiety about the future of their work. The same anxiety likewise exists for English efforts for foreign mission work. We may all have been looking too much to human resources—the great need seems to be a revival, and a wholly consecrated life in both managers and missionaries. Happily this to a considerable extent has wrought wonderfully in recent years in England, and men and means and spiritual blessing have been largely vouchsafed as the result; but the thirst felt and awakened by the Holy Ghost must first be felt, and then earnest believing prayer will follow. Heaven is big with blessing. God is a bounteous giver, and Jesus is the delegated storehouse of blessing. He says, "All power (all resources) are given Me in heaven and upon earth. Go ye." Our capacity to be filled is our need and emptiness. Let us see that we are doing his work, in his way, for his glory, and then in confident faith claim his resources, and be as the golden conducting pipes of Zechariah to convey the full and rich supply from its source to the waiting need. Let us cease from our "broken cisterns," and count upon "the fountain of living waters," ever flowing, tarrying never. Let us in faith resort to Him who is this fountain, and keep near the fountain, for we are such leaky vessels that thus only can we be kept filled. It may be that not only will our wants will be thus supplied, but in continued waiting upon God we may see the need of overhauling our work as to methods of acting and our understanding of that which is really of his ordaining for men and means.

GEO. PEARSE.

THE EVANGELIST.

Waiting God's Time.

I THINK that I can see him now, as he sat on the right-hand side of the hall in which the meetings were held, a dark-haired man, with a flat, pale face, solemn and quaint-looking. The after-meeting was nearly over, as I walked down to where he was sitting, and, quietly placing myself by his side, asked him, "Do you know that your sins are forgiven?" "I can't say that I do," he replied. "Why not?" I said. "Why do you not come to Christ?" "I'm waiting God's time," was the answer, given in a stolid, dogged sort of way. Feeling for the moment staggered by this unexpected reply, with which I had never been met before, conscious also of how much might hang upon the next few words, I silently lifted up my heart to God, praying for help and direction. Quick as thought I turned to the man, and said:—

"And can you tell me when that will be?"

If his previous reply had been a surprise to me, my question evidently fell with tremendous force upon his half-awakened soul. He had nothing to say, his mouth was closed, and, in quiet dependence on the Holy Spirit's power, I endeavoured to show him that "God's time" was the present, that He offered salvation "now"; that on his part there remained nothing to be done, there was nothing to wait for; salvation was to be accepted as a free gift. The result of the finished work of Christ. He listened intently, and when I asked if he would like to be prayed for, readily assented. Prayers were then offered by one or two of the village Christians, and we separated, I not feeling very sure whether B— had passed from death unto life or not.

The following evening found him in the same place, and again, during the after-meeting, I wended my way to his seat. "Well!" I said, "Here you are again. Are you going to accept Christ?" A somewhat aggrieved look came over his face as he immediately said, with great emphasis, "I did it last night." Once again was there cause to praise God for his saving grace, but I was to learn still more of the power of a few simple words prompted by the Holy Spirit in response to the cry of a child of God, face to face with the needs of an anxious unsaved soul.

Here let me state my own firm conviction that no two souls are constituted alike—each is an "unknown quantity" to the Christian worker, and therefore it is all in vain to catalogue and classify them as if they were so many natural specimens. Each has its peculiar idiosyncrasies, but the Spirit of God has the special features of each spread before Him as an open book, and the Christian who would be wise to win souls must wait upon Him for his illuminating power, and the wisdom to deal with each individual case. But to return to my story.

Not many days after the events referred to, my dear old host, rejoicing in the work of God going on around him, and for which he and his beloved wife had long laboured and prayed, returning from a walk, said: "I met B— C— this morning and he kept me for nearly an hour standing in the road listening to the story of his conversion, which he concluded by saying, 'She knocked me down and smashed me all to pieces, and then she picked me up again.'" So it was, the words spoken in conscious weakness had been used by God to break the stony heart, and destroy the paralysing effect of that sort of fatalism which the perversion of the blessed truth of God's electing love brings upon the soul of man. "Behold, now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation."

"Come, for all things are now ready," is the invitation, the responsibility of accepting which is ours. Do not let any soul be tempted by Satan to try and cast the blame of its unsaved condition upon God. B— still holds on his way slow and with a good deal to be desired, but sure and certain as to his soul's salvation, and always ready to testify as to the change that he experienced when he became the subject of God's free grace. L. J.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ.

JESUS said:—I lay down my life for the sheep. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us.

God is love. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

John x. 15; John xv. 13; 1 John iii. 16; 1 John iv. 8-10. [575]

Village Tales.

II.—MAYBLOSSOM.

IT was a warm afternoon in May; little purple clouds were sailing over a pale sky; the air was sweet with the odour of mayblossom, and a blackbird trolled forth his bold, heart-stirring song from the topmost bough of an apple-tree.

"How lovely all this is to a townswoman!" was the remark of a delicate-looking girl, seated in the porch of one of the larger houses at the new end of the village. "You, who live with it, will not find it so beautiful."

"If you have studied logic at your big college, you will find that your present argument is more than weak," laughed the speaker, one of the happiest types of womanhood to be met with anywhere. "Every day it is all more lovely to me: it has grown upon me, helped me, and taught me to see."

"You have been so good to me," said the invalid, "and have literally wheedled me back to life, so that I respect all you say; but that sounds rather far-fetched."

"That is only because you do not know," was the reply; "when you are stronger, we will talk about it all."

Just then old Molly, the village gossip, stood at the garden gate.

"Eh, ma'am, the bride is lookin' beautifuller than ever! Who'd ha' thought as that slip o' Miss Priscilla's tree 'ud ha' grewed to that! But 'tis the care and tendin' 't has had."

"Yes, Molly," said the mistress, "they have had much to do with it; but you must remember how it was grafted."

"Now, I must hear the story of this wonderful may-tree," said the girl in the porch. "You call it 'the bride,' and you speak of a history attached to it, and of its being grafted, while I can see it is a local celebrity. Tell me more."

"Twenty years ago I came to this village a stranger, as you came to it six weeks ago, and, like you, ill," said her friend. "The doctors said I needed country air and quiet, and they recommended this place. I had been only one day here when I received a call from the freshest-looking, pleasantest-voiced woman I had ever met. 'I've only come to bring you this,' she said, laying on the table in front of me a spray of the most perfect white Mayblossom I had ever seen. 'That is from my favourite tree,' she said, 'and it will tell you of our lovely spring here, which is going to revive and strengthen you, dear, and hearten you up.' 'How do you guess I want heartening?' I asked. 'There's a far-away look in your eyes,' said Miss Priscilla, 'which I do not seem to understand yet. Thine eyes shall see, and then it will all be different for you.'

"See what?" I asked, in my ignorance.

"The King in his beauty," was the low reply. "This," touching the mayblossom, "is an earthly reminder of his glory."

"I was a trifle annoyed, and thought her full of fantasies and far-fetched ideas; but I knew her at once as kind and true, and when she had gone I wished she could have stayed with me."

"I got slowly better, and when I returned to the city I knew I should not stay long there—my heart was restless and longed to be back. So I came and I stayed. I was hard and cold at first. I scorned the simple faith of Miss Priscilla and her friends; but when the spring came round I was captured by its loveliness, and spent hours with my first friend here, helping her in her garden. Gradually, I do not know how it was, my eyes were opened to 'see,' and her faith was mine. I had learned that I had a Father in heaven, stronger, tenderer than any earthly father, who loved me, and gave Himself for me, and the whole aim and tenor of my life was changed."

[379]

"I do not see how it needed changing," the invalid remarked.

"Nor did I, at first, but I soon found I had been leading a purely selfish life; and that while I attached a stern importance to religious observances, I was ignorant of a personal Saviour, of the meaning of life, and of the heavenly brotherhood of human hearts."

"But all that does not explain 'the bride's' existence," said the townswoman.

"I asked for a reminder of our first meeting," resumed the other, "and Miss Priscilla planted in my garden a slip of her may-tree. 'It was the means of our first knowing one another,' she explained, 'and blossoms are wonderful, though simple, instruments when used of God.' She was right, for I have found that a spray of mayblossom, a wild rose, a field lily have often said more to tired city souls of the wonders and truth of God's love than whole years of mere theology could do."

The invalid got well and returned to town, to her studies, her formal religion, and her environment of rush and selfish pleasure-seeking. Her letters to her country friend grew fewer, and at last ceased, and her village holiday became only a dim memory to her.

But her country friend did not so forget. This girl was one for whom our Lord laid down his earthly life to make her "an heir of salvation." "Oh, my Father, teach me how to bring this child of thine to thy feet, that she may serve Thee in newness of life for ever," she prayed.

Then, one day, she was stricken, and as she lay on her bed of pain, the minister came to see her; they had long been great friends. "This morning during one of the paroxysms of pain," she said, "I had a beautiful vision sent to me of God. You know dear little A——, my town visitor? I have been thinking so much of her, and this is the second time the may has blossomed since she left our village; but this morning I saw her, she came out of a cloud of darkness, and stood in a ring of light, and I saw her stretch her hands towards a cross in the light, and Jesus was there, as I have never seen Him in my imagination before—crowned, and receiving the worship of this new subject as a King."

"It is very beautiful," said the minister, "but do not attach too much importance to it. When our bodies are weakest, our imaginations are often strongest. We must get you well."

"I am well, dear minister, and I know that this laying aside is for the glory of God. He has me to Himself, as it were, and I seem to understand the meaning of some of his silences as I lie here." "The bride will soon be in her glory," said the minister, irrelevantly. "Yes," said the sick one, "not a bloom from it until it was grafted, and then every year, for six years, a wealth of blossoms." Then together the minister and his friend specially prayed for A——, that she might yield herself to God, and that her talents might be dedicated to Him instead of to the spirit of modern thought merely. "I want you to be very tender to her, should she come and I not be here," said his friend; "her education in a cold school of philosophy makes it hard for her to trust the unseen."

The minister bowed his head—he looked sorrowful—and said: "When she comes you shall be the first to influence her."

In the dawn, when her husband had gone in to see if she wanted anything, he found only her body—her spirit had gone to God. And to-day they were to carry her to the little God's-acre she had so often visited for others, and every blind in the village was lowered.

A visitor, walking up the street, remarked the sad aspect of everything.

"Is anyone dead?" she asked of a child sitting before a closed door.

"Hush! She's dead," said the child, pointing to the house she knew so well.

"I am too late, then. She will never know," cried the visitor.

"Yes, she knew," said the minister from behind. "She had a vision of you, and she saw you come out of the cloud into light."

For it was "Little A——," and she had come to see her country friend. The minister led her to the little chamber of silence; they had hidden the casket under a bower of mayblossom.

"Oh, if only I could have told her!" said the student. "Her influence has never really left me, though I tried to forget it. I had just finished what was to have been my magnum opus, an ethical contribution to modern thought, and was tired out, when I suddenly thought I must see something of the spring. I took a hansom to Hampstead Heath, and there I saw her favourite mayblossom in such profusion that I was quite overcome. I sat before a tree perfectly white with bloom, and I thought of all she had hoped and prayed for in me. I went home very sad, but quite resolved I would not publish my book; she should not have to sorrow over me in that way. And then next day I was calmer, and resolved to come and see her, only to find her gone from me for ever!"

"No; you are nearer to her now than before," said the minister, "for your spirit is in accord with hers, and she was given to know this."

When they lowered the casket into the grave many wondered what lay on the top—a pile of manuscript, nearly hidden by wreaths of mayblossom. Only two ever knew the secret.

"To her Saviour I have dedicated my life," wrote the student, later. "Her vision, her faith in me, are bearing fruit. Every moment I need to stretch my hands and gaze to Him, who is my crowned King."

And she who had the vision of faith sleeps where the purple clouds sail by, where the blackbird sings, and where loving hands have planted a tree bearing her favourite flower—the mayblossom.

M. B. GERDS.

Adieu—À Dieu.

(Acts xx. 32.)

TWO little words, oft lightly said,
With careless voice and tossing head;
Yet strong to cheer the sons of earth,
If breathed by those who know their worth.

"To God" we trust the schoolboy son,
His rough life journey scarce begun;
"To God" we trust our heart's delight,
When from our home she takes her flight.

"To God" we trust our sailors brave,
For Christ still rules the stormy wave;
The cannons crash; above the roar
We hear God's voice, and doubt no more.

When backward sinks the weary head,
And softly falls the watcher's tread;
When fades some loved one from our view,
How solemn sounds the word "Adieu!"

"To God" we yield the life He lent,
In smiles and tears of service spent;
The dust we lay in holy sod,
But upward mounts the soul "to God."

And doth not God our trust repay?
Though loved ones leave us day by day.
Each flower that death's sirocco dries
Shines forth a star in Paradise.

"To God" we yield a little while
The hand, the voice, the cheering smile;
To us He leaves their noblest parts,
Their lives, their letters, and their hearts.
But soon will dawn that longed-for day
When saints shall burst th' encumb'ring clay,
And all who watch shall glorious rise,
To meet their Saviour in the skies.

No partings then, no sighs or tears,
A long farewell to doubts and fears;
Mid scenes and joys for ever new,
Saints will forget the word "Adieu!"

A. J. BRIGHT.

From Joseph Rabinowitch.

THE Editor of The Watchword (Boston, U.S.), having asked Mr. Joseph Rabinowitch to communicate to him anything that might be on his heart, has received a characteristic letter, which appears in the June issue. One of the main burdens upon Mr. Rabinowitch's mind is the relation of Jewish believers to the European churches. He writes:—

"The Spirit is suggesting to me to warn my Jewish brethren from communication with such Europeans as call themselves Christians only because after they die they are buried in a Christian cemetery according to the Christian rite, when their life and tendency are altogether in a heathenly manner against Jehovah and his Anointed One.

"I am more and more convinced that for Jews truly converted to Christ there is no place among the adherents of the existing churches in Europe. My thirteen years' experience in the Lord's work among the Jews has shown me again and again that the faith in Jesus Christ obtained by the Jews 'by hearing' of the message from the lips of Christ's preachers, falls and slips out of his heart as soon as the Jew finds himself in a church among those who are Christians by birth. The cause of this is found in the fact that the Jew does not find in such church a sufficient supply of heavenly food by which he may keep up the growth of the 'blessed hope' of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. In those churches where the message of the second coming of our blessed Lord is ignored, the Jew pines away and turns into a phenomenal stuffed Christian.

"True faith in the second coming of our Lord, according to the Scriptures, is inadmissible without faith in the salvation and restoration of the Jewish nation; and such faith, sad to say, is not prevalent in the predominating churches in Europe. Consequently, the thought is pursuing me that, for the full success of the work the Lord entrusted to me to carry on among the Jews, it is most necessary to establish a special school for Jewish young men, where they may be trained on the principles of the apostles and prophets, in the spirit of the faith and hope of the glorious appearing of our Lord; that afterwards these young Jewish Christians may preach Christ and his appearing in glory in all parts of the world, wherever their brethren according to the flesh are scattered.

"Such a special Jewish Christian school, the aim of which ought to be to convert Jews to Christ, bringing them as a nation to their King, must stand apart from the influence of any existing churches and denominations in the world. The best place where it could be erected can be no other than the promised land, Palestine, which is only for a certain time in the possession of Turkey. There the pupils could be, from one side, guarded from the influences of the dogmatic beliefs, and, from the other, helped by the things they see in the study of their own ancient history which was enacted in the land of their ancestors, where Jesus Christ Himself accomplished his expiatory service; also being trained in the spirit of faith, hope, and love to Jehovah and his nation Israel.

"About all this I spoke to some friends of Israel in London four years ago. Probably from that source the report was spread of my intention to go to Palestine and make Jerusalem the centre of my activity. I am unceasingly in prayer to the Heavenly Father, who loves Zion and his nation Israel, that He for the sake of his well-beloved Son Jesus Christ, the King of the Jews, might help me at least to inaugurate the spiritual revival and restoration of Israel through such a school."

The Cabdrivers' Benevolent Association was founded in 1870, its principal object being to make some provision for deserving aged or infirm cabdrivers, who are broken down in health, or are unable longer to earn their living. The life of the cabdriver is essentially a hard one, notwithstanding recent measures to ameliorate his condition. His earnings are necessarily very precarious, and small in proportion to the nature and amount of his labour. Widows and orphans are assisted, also cases of exceptional distress. Sixty annuities of £20 a year each are at the present time being granted by the association to aged cabdrivers, who, but for this help, would probably have been reduced, after long years of honest industry, to the workhouse. The secretary is Mr. S. Sutherland Safford, 15, Soho-square, W.

Light in a Dark Place.

BOWERY MISSION, NEW YORK.

THE Bowery, so called when a country lane, is one of the most peculiar streets in the world. Here abound "Dime" museums, concert and dancing halls, public drinking saloons, houses of ill-fame, cheap lodging-houses, etc., and here congregate the outcasts of both sexes.

The man out of work, the thief, the gambler, the drunkard, and the courtesan reside in the cheap lodging-houses of the neighbourhood, many of which are dens of vice and crime. The street is especially well-furnished with drinking saloons, and the enterprising saloon keeper spares no expense to provide inducements to catch those who frequent or merely visit "The Bowery." The stranger who is not careful will easily fall into the traps laid for him by the vicious of both sexes, and lose his money at least, and possibly his life or reputation.

The street and the neighbourhood furnishes a wide field for religious and social reformers, yet little seems to be done to reach the souls of the large and drifting population. This is in a great measure owing to the dangerous character of the neighbourhood. But one bright light in this dark place has existed for several years, and the great good that has been accomplished since its foundation, and more especially in recent years, is well worthy of note.

The Bowery Mission is situated in the worst part of the Bowery, and the workers aim at saving the souls of the lost of both sexes, and to prevent the honest poor, and especially the strangers of this class, falling into bad hands. For these purposes a large mission-hall is open all day and the greater part of the night. Gospel services are held day and night. A very mixed congregation attend these services. Women from the streets, working-men out of work, and others, come out of curiosity, or for rest; and many are led to give their hearts to God and lead better lives. Those who wish to reform are helped to do so. Women are sent to rescue-houses, and men are provided for at the lodging-house of the Mission. A cheap-food depôt is also run in connection with the work, and the coffee-house is doing much to counteract the evil influences of the drink saloons. Several hundred each week avail themselves of the privileges, and daily there are some remarkable conversions. W. T.

Hyde Park Services.

MR. CHAS. COOK is celebrating his twenty-fifth year's ministry in Hyde Park amidst much encouragement, many distinct cases of conversion having recently occurred. One evening recently an Armenian and a German were both brought to Christ. Twenty nationalities are now represented by the converts of Hyde Park.

Despite the noise of the mountebanks and the blasphemy of the atheists, the grand old Gospel still attracts vast masses, who listen by the hour together to the story of a Saviour's love. One of the great truths which has been taught all these twenty-five years, and which has been the means of awakening many souls, is the coming of the Lord. By song and sermon this truth has been kept before the people.

On Tuesday last the choir attained its majority, and a friend who has valued their services all those years, at a meeting held to commemorate the event, presented each member with a silver or bronze medal, according to their years of service, in token of their honorary labours in so good a cause.

A special mission is now being held nightly in Hyde Park, at which Madame Annie Ryall is singing, and Mr. Charles Cook and his friends are preaching. A great number of backsliders have been brought to confession of their sins, and are asking prayer for their restoration. On Friday evening of last week, at the after-meeting held at the hall, a publican, a schoolmaster, and a young woman confessed faith in Christ.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of this Mission will be held on Tuesday, July 7, at Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, Edgware-road. Mr. T. A. Denny will preside, and Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. T. Richardson, and others are announced as speakers. We have known this work since its inception, and trust the celebration will be encouraging to Mr. Cook and his helpers.

Work in Whitechapel.

I HAD not been working long in Victoria Homes lodging-houses, Whitechapel, before I saw what an invaluable adjunct a dispensary would be to the Christian work already done amongst the 1000 men living in the homes. In getting to know their sick in the various institutions, especially in the Baker's-row Infirmary, I often learned that the men were only driven into dock as it were, when money was spent and clothes pawned, and this for the simple reason that they hoped they might recover, and retain their work. But, alas! health and work were often lost on this mistaken principle, and many a man found that his first night on leaving the infirmary was spent in the streets for lack of lodging money. Fresh hardships and cold, the results of such exposure, would compel him to re-enter the infirmary, and verily the last state of the man was worse than the first.

How to solve this question was hard and difficult. I was early set to long for a dispensary opened after working hours, where the men could be supplied with simple remedies, where the minor accidents of the day could be treated, and where chronic bad legs could meet with that daily attention they so much require. Living on a little more than the pension of an officer's daughter, it was impossible to start a scheme of this nature on my own resources. However, I felt God had Himself laid the matter on my heart, and I took my difficulty to Him. In due time I had a very kind offer from an able nurse, then lady superintendent of an East-end home. For a year we worked very happily together, bringing relief to many a poor sufferer. In the winter from twenty to thirty men applied for assistance nightly. They were saved perhaps months in the infirmary, and were also enabled to retain their work.

At the end of the year my friend was called to labour elsewhere. My trouble began afresh. After some difficulty, I got two workers temporarily, which arrangement tided us over the winter. I am most anxious to make a permanent feature of a dispensary in the Victoria Homes. Will some Christian worker—a trained nurse or lady student—who can afford to labour for the Lord con amore, and who could spare time to take more responsibility on herself than my helpers have been able to do hitherto, come to the rescue? It would be experience; it would be doing God's work. All particulars will be gladly given.

(Miss) KEIGHLEY.

63, Parfett-street, Commercial-road, E.

Mr. Sankey in New York.

IN New York Mr. Ira D. Sankey, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, recently entertained a large audience at the Y.M.C.A. building with sacred song and story. The service consisted of a number of hymns and reminiscences concerning their authors, with nearly all of whom Mr. Sankey has been personally acquainted. The pressure upon the seating capacity of Association Hall was so great that three or four overflow meetings were held in different parts of the building. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, after singing to the audience in the main hall, went the rounds of these overflow meetings, and, with others, kept the people entertained.

Dr. A. C. Dixon presided over the meeting, and on the platform were a number of well-known clergymen. Mr. Sankey told a touching story of Frances Ridley Havergal, and sang one of her hymns. He sang "My Ain Countree" with unusual effectiveness. Mr. Sankey and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins were about to proceed to Northfield, where they will take part in the annual conferences under the direction of Mr. Moody.

Requests for Prayer.—For much blessing upon the Gospel services at Margate in "The Hall by the Sea."—For a sufferer from a distressing nervous malady, with many consequent troubles, that grace and strength may be supplied to enable him to bear his lot.—For a tent mission, beginning on June 28, at North Berwick.—That a Christian man may have bodily and mental strength to resist a daily temptation.—For special evangelistic services in connection with the Congo Institute, Colwyn Bay, every Sunday from June 21 until September 20.—For blessing on addresses by Lord Radstock in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, on Sundays in June and July.

Rev. J. McNeill at Harrogate.

By A MINISTER.

THIS honoured evangelist has held a twelve days' mission in this noted inland watering-place, giving twenty-two addresses in the Drill Hall. Those who have attended the meetings have admitted how marvellously Christ has been placed in the forefront. Everywhere in the addresses Christ has been claimed as the only Saviour for men. All substitutes for salvation have been denounced as frauds, that can only work unutterable woe and ruin to those who rely on them.

The addresses have been mostly in couples, working into each other. Words plain, straight, searching, scathing, startling, or pathetic have been brought to bear on the vital issues of the soul and eternity, of sin, God, and salvation. Beginning on June 7 with "The Good Shepherd" and "Zacchæus the Publican," the preacher showed what surprising grandeur there was (and is) in Jesus as "Shepherd" and "publican's Friend." In the week that followed Jesus was honoured indeed. We were told: (1) How Christ condescended to knock at the heart's door. (2) How He saved Peter in the tempest. (3) How He strengthened the withered hand of the man who stood forth at his command. (4) How He fed the multitude. (5) How He would accompany for emergencies those who solicited his doing so. (6) How He delivered those who trusted after Daniel's fashion. (7) How He completely safeguarded all who stood behind the shed blood. (8) How his love made men care that others should know Him (as the men who let the man from the roof proved). (9) How He should be accepted: all excuses against laying hold of salvation and drawing help for its fulness were utterly unsound, untenable, and altogether worthless. The memorable week ended with thanksgiving for all it had yielded and made possible to expect and seek after in, by, with, through, and for Christ Jesus as revealed in the Word of God.

Prayer was offered that the Lord of the Sabbath might be present when the crowds should gather—and the prayers were answered. On June 14 a couple of addresses giving pathetic contrasts were heard: (1) Ruth going joyously with Naomi, as sinners should with Christ. (2) The young ruler leaving Christ sorrowfully, and to his own awful loss, as a warning against treating Christ in a similar fashion. Many were ready to ask, Who would not choose such a Saviour as Jesus? Who would be willing to turn away from such a Saviour as Jesus?

The days following are not likely to be soon forgotten. Monday revealed how David was delivered from his black atheistic dumps about Saul, by the God he had forgotten, who still lived to deliver others. Tuesday made clear how Elisha's servant had his eyes opened to see God as helper by Elisha's praying, and how sleeping and dead sinners could be awakened and filled with the life Jesus alone had to give. Wednesday opened (1) with the Blind Beggar at Siloam, who was cured by trusting in the dark; and (2) the Thinker of Psalm cxix. 59, 60, who thought and turned, and delayed not to keep God's commandments. The after-meeting made known that the turning time was desired by many, who requested prayer for their loved ones, and, best of all, for themselves.

Thursday brought showers outside, but these were nothing to the showers of blessing inside. David came with his three victories in one day—(a) over self, (b) over routine and pipe-clay customs that could only impede him, (c) over the giant. Naaman's leprosy and cure were also told graphically, and owned to stir hearts, to conquer in Christ's name, and to make trial of his power all the way through, until removed beyond the possibility of defeat or reftlement.

On Friday the preacher gave (1) Pharisee and Publican, (2) working out our own salvation, having God to work in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Real prayer was distinguished from false; Real ideas of salvation, as a gift and not as work, were dwelt on. Prayer is a reality when broken-hearted sinners or anxious saints make use of it. Jesus, Prayer, the Bible, the Promises, were all capable of being worked out and out and out, without possibility of being worn out.

So the days closed—with Christ enough now and for ever. Mr. McNeill was commended to God by prayer, and hymn from the choir that had helped splendidly all through. There never was a thin meeting. The free-will offerings met expenses. A special thanksgiving fund, at Mr. McNeill's suggestion, was secured for services during the coming winter, to stir up interest in the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. As a conclusion to the mission, a praise and prayer meeting was held on Saturday, when addresses were given by Mr. John Colville, M.P., and others. The mission has made it certain that Christ, in the efficacy of his atonement, in the sufficiency and blessing of his love, and in the unassailable perpetuity of his intercession for man, abides to love, conquer, and reign in the hearts of men.

Letter to the Editor.

GOING DOWN TO EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—A great victory had just been won; a great fortress destroyed by a miracle, as the people of God marched round it, waiting God's time. They had learned in Jordan death to self, and in Gilgal they had learned the putting off of the old man, and thus they were qualifying to be instruments of God in his victory.

But one wedge of gold and a Babylonish garment hidden in the army had grieved the Lord, while the self-confidence which measured their own strength against Ai instead of leaning on God, brought a crushing defeat. "These things were written for our admonition." It is alarming to see in so many quarters the old sin of going down to Egypt spreading. Many societies who desire to do God's work are having patrons to help them—men with great names but little faith. Others are trying to get money by still more questionable expedients. Our God and Father has entrusted his goods to his children as stewards, and they have the infinite privilege of having fellowship with Him, as fellow-workers together with Him, and can say, "Of thine own have we given Thee." Thus the gift is sanctified by prayer.

But all this seems to be forgotten by many in the present day. Not only do they look for or even depend on Cain's offering; they use all sorts of devices to get people to give that money from worldly motives, which apparently they will not give for the love of God.

There are, it is to be feared, many Samsons who have lost their eyesight and their power, and are "grinding in the prison house." The Delilah of the world has shorn them of their separation and their strength. Will you not warn them that "The arm of flesh will fail you," and the Egyptians shall help in vain? But "they that wait on the Lord shall not want any good thing."

4, Park-square, W.

Victoria Institute.

At a meeting at the Theatre of the Society of Arts, Adelphi, Dr. Walker delivered a lecture on "Herodotus and late Egyptian Researches," in which he corroborated Herodotus's geological descriptions of the rocks and stones of Egypt. Sir William Dawson said the lecturer brought to his memory a great many things that he saw in Egypt. He spoke of the culture of the Egyptians, their wonderful skill in conveying such large masses of stone to distant places and engraving their hieroglyphics so deep and clean. They polished their obelisks in the most beautiful manner. Fossil-shells were abundant in the Nile, and Herodotus in his book spoke of the piles of common oyster-shells he saw on the banks of the river. The sulphur-springs were curious and useful for cutaneous diseases. In the old days, as in the present, sulphur baths were much used. The water of the Soda Lake was used by the Egyptians in the manufacture of glass, and for other purposes.

A discussion was opened by Dr. S. Kinns, who referred to the inscription in the British Museum, which confirmed the Biblical account of Joseph and other events. Canon Gurney said twenty-five years ago there seemed to be a dispute between the Bible and the geologist, but Sir W. Dawson had stood in the gap. A Hebrew student and a believer in the Bible, he had brought incontrovertible arguments to prove the Bible to be a book of facts.

Scottish Notes.

REV. HORACE N. BONAR, son of the late Dr. Horatius Bonar, has been elected to the Free Church of Salton, in the Presbytery of Haddington. This settlement will continue the connection of the Bonar family with the ministry of the Free Church, interrupted by Dr. Andrew Bonar's death in 1892.

The meetings of the Pan Presbyterian Council in Glasgow so far as yet reported have not produced any discussions of supreme public interest. On Thursday able papers were read by several members on various aspects of the Church's influence—as a witness for revealed truth, as a teacher of holy living, as a helper to united service, etc. On Friday, among the subjects considered were Catechisms and Confessions, the educative influence of the Church on individual, family, social, and national life. On Saturday there was an excursion down the Clyde, and on Sabbath many of the Glasgow pulpits were occupied by Alliance delegates.

The convention at Bridge of Allan during the past week proved a season of real spiritual refreshment. A correspondent of The Daily Mail of Glasgow, says:—"The convention has abundantly proved its right to live. The question had to be decided at the meeting of committee on Thursday. It was felt by some that the expenses were too heavy and ought to be curtailed, the cost of the tent being a specially heavy item. The first six years were largely an experiment, and the question had to be settled whether there was sufficient justification for its existence as distinct from the many other local conventions. To have it in one of the churches in Bridge of Allan or in a church or hall in Stirling, it was felt would greatly lessen expense, but at the same time it would put the annual gathering on the same level with that of Dundee, Perth, or Edinburgh. The testimonies to the blessing attending the annual meeting in the tent were so numerous and from such distant parts that it was felt that the local meetings would not supply the place of the convention. To preserve its national and catholic character seemed a first consideration. It was found, moreover, that the expenditure on the tent could this year be materially reduced, and so, to the joy of thousands, it was resolved to continue as heretofore. The large and deeply interested audiences of the last three days doubtless helped to this decision."

Irish Notes.

THE friends who for some time have been endeavouring to preach the Gospel in the streets of Sligo gained on Friday last a victory over the local magistrates in the Irish Court of Queen's Bench, where it was decided that the magistrates were interested, and had no jurisdiction. As the result, the right to preach in the streets of Sligo has been secured, and the imprisonment some time since of the evangelists has been declared illegal.

The Committee of the Children's Special Service Mission for Ireland are, during this summer, making special efforts to reach and win for Christ the children—especially of the upper classes, who throng the various seaside holiday resorts during July and August. Special missions have been arranged as follows:—At Kilkee, during the first fortnight of July; Newcastle, during the second fortnight of July; Bangor, during the first fortnight of August; Portrush, during the second fortnight of August; with others in contemplation.

The annual Methodist Conference has been in session during the week in Dublin. Rev. Dr. Waller, of London, presided. Twelve candidates for the ministry were accepted and three declined. Two ministerial probationers were ordained to the pastorate and twenty-one continued on trial. Five ministers died during the year. The membership, which is now nearly 28,000, showed a net increase of 374, with 80,714 hearers, 1,387 class leaders, 561 local preachers, 379 chapels and 1699 other preaching places, 23,409 members in bands of hope and 326 Sunday-schools, with 2,765 officers and teachers, and 25,261 scholars. A new departure was made in devoting a whole session to the subject of holiness, and altogether the Conference, spiritually and otherwise, was one of the most hopeful and encouraging held in Ireland for a long time.

Ascot Races.—Many Salvation Army workers from London and other parts joined in the effort to pull down some of the strongholds of Satan and to lift up fallen ones at Ascot races on Thursday. For two and a-half hours we proclaimed the grace of God to save from worldliness and folly both in speech and song, and this despite unseemly interruption. About four o'clock the police, accompanied by the son of the clerk of the course, came to stay our testimony; the latter exclaiming to the writer that the authorities wished for "no religion at the races."

Bracknell, Berks.

A. E. SIDFORD.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LORD ROSEBERY made an interesting speech on the use and function of public libraries at the opening ceremony of the Passmore Edwards Free Library, Hammer-smith. He said:—

I believe that this great work of public libraries is a counter-irritant to intellectual apathy. It furnishes an inducement to those who wish not merely to improve their bodies, but their minds; who wish not merely to play, but to think; who wish to have an opportunity of retirement from the first-hand impressions of the world, and to form their impressions for themselves—to come to some temple of reading and of thought where they can form their own conclusions and their own convictions.

This, we fear, applies only partially to the actual facts. The statistics of public libraries do not present a rosy view of the kind of books most in demand in these institutions. In many places, the more solid and informing, not to say elevating, books, are, with few exceptions, left on their shelves unread, while the sections devoted to works of fiction, are almost exclusively patronised. When this is the case, we venture to think that the libraries are altogether missing their mark.

There are indeed few things more important than an education on the part of the public as to the selection of books, and the cultivation of a high and pure taste. Whether the difficulty is to be met, as Lord Rosebery suggested, by having some one as librarian who should be a kind of "book-tester," and who would be able to guide readers in their choice, is more than doubtful. This indeed should always be a guiding principle in the choice of librarians. But the trouble is that few people are anxious or willing to consult anyone on this subject. They read, not what they ought, but what they feel inclined to. Many parents try loyally to choose the books which their children read. But no external control can meet the difficulty. The only real remedy is to educate young people's taste, and fill them with a passion for high and noble thought. When the heart is set solely on things pure and lovely and of good report, and not till then, will the habit of reading tell for truth and righteousness on the people.

Mr. Gladstone, in a letter to The Daily Chronicle, has been explaining his silence on the question of the Armenian atrocities. Having read the Duke of Argyll's new book on the Eastern question, in which the case against the European Powers is put with unsparing force, he has been deeply roused; but he fears that speech in the present condition of international politics might be more dangerous than silence. His sense of the situation is put in the words, "to describe guilt beyond all bounds, language ought to go beyond all bounds." To the non-political mind, it would seem that nothing could be worse than the general conspiracy of silence on this question which reigns among statesmen just now. European diplomatists are surely heaping up judgment for their concerted inhumanity against man. There is need of some one to voice the suppressed indignation of all right-thinking people against the oppressors of the innocent and God-fearing. Still the unspeakable mischief and wrong go on, and the only resource seems to be to cry to the God of battles, "How long, O Lord, how long?"

Meanwhile, we hear that Russia is moving forward towards a final settlement of the Egyptian question by proposing a condominium, or concerted control, over that country. Theoretically there may be no fault to find with such an arrangement. But practically we have had in Armenia a fatal instance of the character of a "multiple control" on the part of several Powers. In the present temper of statesmanship we see that in such a case the interests of the "controlled" country are altogether forgotten in the game of "playing off" one against another; and that great nations will suffer a people to be exterminated rather than allow each other to take precedence in setting matters right. Nothing more humiliating or more shameful has been known in history than this deadlock produced by international jealousy. Modern armaments are reduced to an absurdity when their only use seems to be to hinder the administration of common justice and right.

The following from a lady teacher in a country village gives but a sample of a state of things that is, alas, but too common. Knowledge of such facts has had much to do with the antipathy shown by many devout and earnest Christians to the Education Bill recently before Parliament:—

I am truly distressed at the high Ritualistic teaching here, and because I teach differently in my school I shall eventually have to leave my place. Such is the feeling of the rector towards me.

I cannot understand why so little has been hitherto done for our villages. I myself can only give a few tracts, for my salary does not amount to £1 a week; then I can visit the poor and speak to them in their homes. I am not allowed, however, to teach in Sunday-school, and I long to hear of some one who could live here and teach the way of salvation.

Confession, penance, the sacrifice of the "altar" are constant themes of talk here, till one is grieved to the very core, and the whole village, once peaceable and quiet I am told, is now very different in character. Even families are divided, and envy, jealousy, strife, and drunkenness are rife.

"Obey the church" is another command; and to speak of conversion, the Second Coming, holiness, assurance, we are told is "cant."

I think readers of THE CHRISTIAN cannot do better than unite in prayer, earnest and believing, for the villages of our land, and may God help us in this our sore need.

The fate of the Education Bill at home, and of the education proposals for Manitoba, shows in an unmistakable way that there is an unconquerable dislike of priestly domination. All the papers ascribe the result to the same cause; even the strongest supporters of the Government at home have been amongst the plainest spoken in denouncing the interference of those clerics, whose main desire was, while educating children, to obtain power for themselves. The same repudiation of Romanist influence by the professed friends of Rome is seen in Canada. These are highly satisfactory signs of healthy feeling. That it should have sprung up so quietly, so suddenly, and so irresistibly, is one more proof that the strongest forces at work in nations are secret and often unsuspected by those who are supposed to be the best informed. Hence it is well to appeal to the best principles in the faith that they are dormant in a nation, and will come forth at call. Priestism has had a severe public rebuke, it will now begin again to mine away in secret.

"A Devonshire Magistrate" complains in The Daily News of the sad extent to which the practice has grown of publicans supplying intoxicating drinks to persons when drunk, though it is illegal to do so. His suggestion for remedying it is—the employment of a number of Government inspectors in plain clothes, to whom districts should be allotted, the men being continually shifted to new districts. Very good, but will magistrates convict? If anyone wants to be bantered and bullied in a police-court, let him bring a well-supported charge against a publican of serving drink to an intoxicated person. There are occasional convictions for the offence, but what are they in comparison of the breaches of the law? No doubt, as "A Devonshire Magistrate" suggests, "a few cases brought before the magistrates would have a most beneficial and deterring influence"—if the guilty persons were punished, but not if they were let off, and actions for damages were brought against the plaintiffs. The Bench wants purifying.

Much as we believe in using the law for the suppression of disorderly houses, friends ought to know that they set the law in motion at the risk of trouble and loss to themselves. Twice have Revs. Peter Thompson and J. Howard been tried for libel on account of certain statements they made concerning a public-house in Ratcliff Highway. Twice have the jury disagreed, and twice have these two ministers of the Gospel been compelled to pay the costs of their defence. Although they are not proved guilty, they are severely punished. We do not say this to frighten, but to counsel care. We knew of a very bad house, near to a refuge for poor girls, which was closed, at the suggestion of the matron of the refuge, by her landlord complaining to the police of a nuisance. The police moved; the real hand was never seen.

How a Lancashire woman got big boys and girls to read books for themselves, is told in The Review of Reviews. She told them the story of good books, or part of the story, and so interested them that they would be their own readers. Several of them became followers of Christ. There is a hint here for all friends of young people.

The newspapers lately have been full of manifold horrors. Murders, massacres, "wars and rumours of wars," disasters produced by cyclones, tidal waves, and shipwrecks, and other terrible events have been served up almost regularly with the morning meal. There is a demoralising influence in such reading, for the sensibilities are dulled and the imagination satiated with such details. It is not well to ignore the dark side of human life and destiny, but the taste for morbid details grows with what it feeds on, and produces a paralysis of the finest emotions. These are not the subjects which we should dwell on as our daily thought and meditation. Our hearts should be set on those things that make for the progress and uplifting of human life, and not on those that destroy and defeat it. We should ever remember, as Ruskin says, that history records twenty undoings for one deed, twenty desolations for one redemption, and thinks the fool and the villain potent as the wise and true. But Nature and her laws recognise only the noble; generations of the cruel pass like the darkness of locust plagues; while one loving and brave heart establishes a nation!

Mr. J. N. Nesbit, in the columns of The Morning, has been writing on the prevalence of suicide during the summer months, and points out the significant fact that there is no influence so strong as a deep religious faith in preventing this form of crime. Suicide seems to be mainly a "disease of civilisation," and pre-eminently of a godless civilisation. Both by the hopes and by the fears which religion inspires regarding the future, it restrains this evil tendency. In France and other civilised countries where religion is less powerful than elsewhere, the number of suicides is steadily increasing; and, saddest of all, is growingly prevalent among the very young. But where true religion prevails, suicide is rare, and is practically limited to cases of insanity. "Godliness" truly "is profitable both for the life which now is, and for that which is to come."

The very laudable attempt made of late to stop the cruel custom of stripping the small white heron of its delicate plumes for ladies' bonnets, has, unfortunately, not succeeded. Sir William Flower complains in a letter to The Times that the fashion of wearing them is as prevalent as ever. It seems that milliners are now selling the feathers as artificial, which is said to be untrue. Thus a lie covers a brutal outrage, and all for the sake of an ornament which is natural to a bird but utterly unnatural to a woman. How would these milliners or their customers like to be scalped? If birds and animals, with whose covering men and women are clothed, could tell their tale of woe, it would be as bloody and shocking as any told of savage warfare.

The place that superstition still has in controlling the world's history has been strikingly illustrated in the present insurrection of the Matabele people. Recent articles and letters on the causes of the rising dwell on the fact that the native "rain-makers" had persuaded the people that the drought which has prevailed in Rhodesia for the last two years was due to the presence of the white man, and that if they rose the drought would come to an end. By a curious coincidence rain soon followed, and the waning power of the weather-prophets immediately returned. The deluded people have thus been filled with the expectation of victory, and the terrible events that are transpiring show how strong is the hold these empty superstitions have on the native mind. It will be long before the darkness and ignorance that has produced such suffering and calamity will be dispelled, but the only hope of the future lies in that direction. There is no power like the Gospel of Christ to scatter these mists, and as soon as peace is secured it will be our duty, as a nation, to spread the blessed light in the darkness of that heathen people. Unfortunately, these events will make missionaries' work among the Matabele still more difficult for the time.

[286]

There is, among many preachers, a morbid dread of "commonplaces" in the pulpit. They are afraid above all things of being wearisome; and the result is a straining after what is novel, and startling, and effective. It should be remembered that life is made up of commonplaces; that it is the business of the pulpit to show the significance of ordinary duties, feelings, events, and facts, and to shed the light of the Gospel on the every-day-life of the people. The truest interest can be awakened by the calm and earnest treatment of common things. Homely illustrations tell far more than those that are borrowed from unfamiliar regions of thought; and if those who listen can be made to feel the power and meaning of the elements that go to the making of every-day experience, they will be helped far more than by the startling of their imaginations and the filling of their minds with strange, or ingenious and recondite analogies. The greatest Preacher drew the materials of his discourses from the facts of ordinary life, and feathered the arrows of Divine truth with similes and parables of the most familiar kind. We cannot do better than follow his example in this as in all things.

When Paul seeks to lift his brethren up to a high level of Christian living, he does so by bringing them down to a lowly estimate of themselves, and to a humble manner of behaviour towards one another. It is exaltation through humiliation, power through longsuffering, influence through love, to which he calls them. His appeal for worthy living in the eyes of all observers is based upon the nature of the Gospel which they had received. If they would always act as that, in its purity and graciousness, requires, they would be right in every respect. He makes little of the man, much of the Christian. "Whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal, and walk after the manner of men? For when one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?" Not that carnal nature, which was unsubdued, unsanctified, did he wish to see in the ascendant, but the spiritual nature, which is longsuffering, forbearing, gentle, unselfish.

When the Lord refused to take the thorn out of Paul's flesh He set us an example of the manner in which we should seek to aid persons in trouble; it is better to nerve than to endure and to conquer than to soften them with doses of comforting cordials. It is better that they should find strength to carry their burdens, than to slip them off, and get away without them. It has been rightly said that "the utter absence of sentimentality in Christ's relations with men makes his tenderness exquisitely touching." The disciples evidently imbibed his strong and gentle spirit, for the Gospels contain not a word of commiseration for his sufferings, neither is there in the Acts of the Apostles one sentimental reference to the stripes and imprisonments they record. If the modern sentimental custom of seeking to comfort and soothe strong and active persons under their sorrows makes "the pastorship one for women rather than for men," it will be well to get back upon old lines of service, rousing men to rise superior to their distresses and afflictions. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil"—kept from it, yet fighting it daily.

The Gospel in the Open Air.—I.

THE advance of time and the changes that mark its progress bring before us the question, How far does open-air work, as it has been carried on for the past thirty years, meet the exigencies of the present day?

There are three important features to consider—

1. That the "non-church-going masses" are to-day drawn very much more than formerly from the well-dressed and affluent classes. This is painfully obvious in any place of public resort during the hours of Divine worship.

2. That the spread of education has rendered audiences of all classes more sensitive in the matter of aspirates, grammar, and general subject matter than used to be the case.

3. That an open-air audience is, in the nature of the case, composed largely of careless, pleasure-loving, thoughtless persons, who are more or less indifferent, if not antagonistic, to the claims of the Gospel.

4. That their first impressions of an open-air service are necessarily gained from what meets the eye. Hence the importance of removing any unnecessary cause of offence; and of doing all that can reasonably be done to make the service attractive.

Under these circumstances it is more than desirable—it is essential—that open-air workers should earnestly seek in what way they may adapt their work to these conditions.

There is a felt need for more educated preachers, not to supplant those whose social and educational advantages have been less, but to supplement them.

But, it may be urged, the difficulty is to secure such speakers. To-day, as of old, "not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble, are called." But, thank God, there are some here and there, who having, like Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, seen their Lord suffering on Calvary for them, come forth with holy boldness, regardless of the scoffing sneers of their fellows, reverently to confess Him before the world. And whenever this is the case, a large and attentive audience is not far to seek. Let no man think it beneath his dignity, since it was not so regarded by the Son of God. Like draws to like; and the more well-dressed people—men or women—there are, the more will venture to stand around.

Many good speakers who freely serve the cause of the Gospel in mission halls and indoor meetings are lost to open-air work because of what they deem to be defects in the way it is generally carried on. Some of these we will consider next week.

A series of united conferences is being held in London to organise divisional councils in connection with the United Temperance Council. Such gatherings have been successfully held in Earlsfield, Southwark, Lewisham, Limehouse, Brixton, Camberwell and Battersea.

Kindness to Animals.—Sunday last, at the suggestion of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals, was observed in many churches and Sunday-schools throughout the kingdom as "Kindness to Animals Sunday." Bishop Mitchinson, preaching the annual sermon of the Society at Sibson, said that the day's Epistle and Gospel lent themselves to the subject of love to animals. A great Society existed for the repression of cruelty, but the Church Society existed simply to induce all teachers to set forth the principles of kindness. Christ, the founder of Christianity, was born among cattle, was tabernacled among the wild beasts, and remembered the colt when he sent for the ass, and the doves when He overthrew the money-changers' table. Christianity implied love for all living creatures, especially for those that were weak.

The World and the Word.

THE present condition of the world is deeply and painfully interesting. Its mental enlargement and material development, its many movements, activities, and almost universal contacts, as well as its immediate and future prospects, encourage the largest expectations. Its upheavals and disturbances, its confusions and distractions, its cross-currents and subterranean forces, in conjunction with its enlarging powers, give ground for serious thought and apprehension. For good or ill, or for both, the world is more than it was.

In the light then of its evident potencies and possibilities, of its obvious and growing problems, we cannot but ask the question, What does the world want chiefest, and most of all? To solve its difficulties, to develop its physical capacity and material resources; to fulfil its destiny in those higher and nobler forms of manhood, brotherhood of Divine life and character, what is the prime and absolute necessity? For an answer every man will go to his own place; the politician to his parliament, the educationalist to his school, the ecclesiastic to his church, and the optimist to his dreams.

Not less characteristic will be the devout Christian. With even greater confidence and emphasis he will reply, "The world wants the Word of God." In whatever doctrines it is parcelled, in whatever forms it is housed, whatever agencies may promote or expound it, the all-essential commodity is in the Word itself; all else is but transit or package. The astral world is infinitely vaster than astronomical calculation or observation. The potency of the world, on the one hand, and of the Word, on the other, are vastly greater than philosopher or theologian have yet discovered. Deep set in the long continuance of its fall, we forget that the world has God for its Maker and the purpose of God for its destiny. Tunnelling for doctrines, theologies, and even Gospels in the interests of souls and churches, we do not see that a larger mission and ministry belong to the Word of God because they belong to the larger possibilities of the race in all the full expression of its diviner powers and capacities. Commerce, with its advancement of civilisation and accretions of wealth, does not and cannot exhaust the purpose of man. Science and learning do not and cannot complete his destiny. Religion, with its output of true piety and its greater output of superstition, has neither matured his manhood nor his morality. Powers of heart, and mind, and soul, in human manifestation and Divine, still wait their full development and perfection.

It will be said that such a consummation is peculiarly the prerogative of the Son of God. He alone is able to put all things under Him, to crown man with glory and honour, and so to fulfil the kingdom, that God may be all in all. But this is only to establish and emphasise the larger ministry of the Word. The progress and victory of the living and of the written Word are one. For we are of those who believe in the Highest Criticism, who think that there is a divinely scientific purpose and efficiency with the Word which is detected less by the intellects of the wise than by the teaching of the Spirit of God.

Amongst the many signs of the times none can be clearer and more striking, none indicate more distinctly an unseen Hand, than the circulation of the Scriptures. Where a hundred years ago it was local and stationary, it is now expansive and expanding. For a few lands it has domiciled itself in hundreds.

Its less than forty versions then have grown into nearly four hundred—ten times more almost in the present century than in the previous twenty. For an annual circulation of thousands it has now an annual circulation of millions. From those who loved it it has passed to those who loved it not. It is astrir among Protestant, Papal, Greek, Georgian, Coptic, and Armenian Christians, and alike among Mohammedan, Brahman, Buddhist, and Confucianist. It is active with pagan and heathen, and records some of its greatest triumphs amongst the most sunken and abandoned. Is there no obvious meaning, no premonition, no intimation in all this? Without parallel in the world's history, can it have but one explanation?

How then does it happen that Christians are so largely unconscious of these modern movements of the Word of God? Why this great sight and so many that do not even look at it? Why this great work worked in our day and so many that decline to take part in it? Is it that the curtain of a society hides for them the Divine presence and process? Or is it that needful knowledge has never yet brought the spectacle within their view? The report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, for instance, reveals some of the most interesting and remarkable transactions of our times. But whatever be the hindrance, the work is too vast, too wonderful, too Divine, to be unknown and unassisted by Christian people. "Thou hast magnified thy Word above all thy name." God is one, and the Spirit of God in every true servant will reveal an absorbing interest in the fortunes of his Word. With a world so degraded and ignorant of God, with twelve hundred millions who have never seen one page or passage of that Book which is alone able to make them wise unto salvation, it is the solemn duty of every Christian so to labour and to give, as well as to pray, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified. F.

Munich, a hundred years ago, had but three known Protestants; but now the Protestant community in the city is so numerous that four churches hardly suffice to provide accommodation for the worshippers.

Rev. Dr. McLaren completed, on Sunday last, the fiftieth year of his ministry. Preaching on Sunday morning to a large congregation at Union Chapel, Oxford-road, Manchester, he took for his text the words, "Fellow-helpers to the truth" (John iii. 8). In the course of an interesting reference to the past fifty years of his ministry he stated that this was the text from which he preached his first sermon, on Sunday, June 28, 1846, at Southampton.

The Sunday-School Union Chautauqua, held at Matlock, proved an unqualified success. Matchless June weather favoured the excursions, while on alternate days Dr. Agar Beet, Professor Adeney, Mr. James Bailey, and others lectured to teachers on subjects connected with their important work. One of the charms of the gathering was the free and happy intercourse which Christian workers from all parts of the kingdom shared. At the last meeting Rev. James Wayman, of Matlock, testified that the presence of the teachers had been a blessing to the town, and a help to the churches in it. The next Chautauqua will be held shortly at Bourne-mouth.

M. J. S.
"Welcome" Mission, Harrow Green, E. —For thirteen years a useful work has been carried on in this poor neighbourhood in a disused public house. The operations have, however, been greatly hampered by lack of space, and hence strenuous endeavours have been made to erect a plain, suitable hall. These efforts have been, happily, successful, and the foundation-stones of a new building to hold 250 to 300 children were recently laid. At the annual meeting of the Mission it was reported by Mr H. E. Lester, J.P., that £570 had been raised, leaving £80 still needed to open the place free of debt. Towards this three friends have promised £20, leaving £60 to be secured. The opening, it is hoped, will take place in September, and the workers are most anxious to raise ere then the small balance required. The superintendent is Mr. F. T. Watt, 46, Layspring-road, Leytonstone.

Clerical Claims.

IS it possible that we are witnessing the beginning of a reaction against overweening clerical claims? The following is the substance of an article in The Westminster Gazette, entitled:—

"WHY ARE THE CLERGY NOT LOVED?"

The present situation represents in large measure a revolt against the clergy which extends far beyond the ranks of any one political party. We gladly endorse the plea that, generally speaking, the standard of duty is higher in the clerical profession, and their spirit more zealous, than at any time during the present century. Nevertheless, can anyone fail to be conscious of a strong undercurrent of satisfaction that the political action of the clergy has received a severe check?

The clergy, we take it, are paying the penalty of the Oxford Movement. That movement has an infinite deal to its credit, but its tendency and general result is to make of the clergy a class apart, with special and miraculous claims to authority and ascendancy. Against that the laity of all countries rebels sooner or later. In the old days, when the parson was simply a man and a neighbour, there was, at least in England, an almost total absence of the anti clerical feeling which existed everywhere on the Continent. But when the idea of Apostolic Succession revived, and the English clergy renewed their claim to be a caste superior, in virtue of their office, to the rest of mankind, the lay-man, if not the lay-woman, began to stand on guard. On the surface the division seemed to be between Protestant and Ritualist, and certain notorious battles between the two parties on the subjects of incense, candles, and vestments gave colour to that view. But the real line of division, which was gradually growing, was between lay and cleric. The Ritualists no more represented one party than the Protestants represented the other. Churchmen who cared little or nothing for ritual were yet profoundly influenced by the revived conception of the Church and the priesthood. Even Protestants who hated the Oxford Movement caught the general habit of magnifying the Church at the expense of the world. The best of the clergy no doubt kept their heads, preserved the distinction between their office and their personality, and while they exalted the one were duly modest about the other. But for men of inferior ability this has been an impossible task. They have given themselves airs, exalted themselves over the laity, and, either tacitly or openly asserted a claim which the bulk of the English laity have never admitted, and against which they periodically revolt...

In an "Occasional Note" the same journal says:—

The Times refers to the Canadian elections in language which is clearly not meant only for Canada. "In the opinion of some well-qualified judges the Church has been losing of late, in Canada, as in other lands, something of her old power over the laity. They are said to be less docile to her admonitions in worldly matters than they were, and even to resent her interference in politics. How far the action of the 'habitants' of Quebec may be taken to indicate the existence of such a tendency it would be, perhaps, premature at present to discuss. The fact remains that the Roman Catholic laity of the province have contumaciously defied and beaten the episcopacy at the polls." In Canada, as in other lands, and, we might add, not the Roman Catholic Church only.

It had not need be in the Roman Catholic Church only that the revolt is taking place. The advance of sacerdotal and Sacramentarian assumption is not confined to Rome, or the High Church. Clericalism has increasingly asserted itself in the Evangelical Church, and in Nonconformity, and there could not be a much more cheering sign of the times, so far as our civil and religious liberties are concerned, than that the people should cease to love to have it so.

Margate.—The second anniversary of the United Noon-day Prayer Meeting was celebrated recently. A statement was made by Rev. B. Brigg. With few exceptions, such as during the week of prayer, the meeting has been held daily, Sundays excepted. Representatives of all Evangelical churches have met on this common ground for earnest prayer. Ample testimony from residents and visitors alike have been received as to its helpfulness.

Letters from So. Africa.—24.

NOTHING during my sojourn in South Africa impressed me so much as the attitude of Colonists and Europeans to the natives. There is an endeavour to repress the coloured people lest if they become skilled workmen they should compete with the whites. But this is calculated to retard the progress of all races in South Africa. For example: A trader came to Morija wanting two young Basutos for superior situations, where they would be paid four times as much as the "raw Kaffir," whom many profess to prefer. The trader expressed his willingness to find situations for more of these trained and educated boys. Yet he was indulging in the current depreciation of "the mission native." There was a large meeting at the time, and Mr. Dyke asked him to estimate their number. He replied, "About three thousand." "How much does their clothing average?" asked Mr. Dyke. "Perhaps £2 apiece," was the reply. "Is that good for trade?" asked Mr. Dyke. The question carries its own answer, and indicates how every kind of industry would be increased with the increased wants of the people.

The Rev. Mr. Baker, in charge of the Wesleyan Institution at Edendale, told me that the people connected with that mission had a spending capacity of £2000 a year in Pietermaritzburg, whereas in their heathen condition they would not have spent £100.

Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, says, "It is computed that a raw heathen spends in the stores about £2 to £3 per annum, while a native who wears clothes spends £6 to £7 per annum."

When I looked into a heathen hut I saw nothing of any value, but in the hut of a Christian native there would be bedstead, drawers, shelves, books, ornaments, etc., as in an English cottage.

At the jubilee of the American Mission, some years ago, Mr. A. Parker, of Messrs. Parker, Wood, and Co., business agents of the Mission at Durban, regretted that the Colonists did not take greater interest in the work. Mr. David Hunter, general manager of the Natal Railways, said that the idea that the Christian native was inferior to the raw Kaffir was a wholly erroneous one, and he mentioned an illustrative case in proof of this.

In September, 1895, an article appeared in the Johannesburg Times, entitled—

"THE MISSIONARIES WHO FAIL."

Rev. H. D. Goodenough, the leading American missionary at Johannesburg, wrote in reply, and remarked that in a recent number of the New York Weekly Post, a journal irreligious in its sympathies, it was acknowledged that Bulgaria owed its freedom to the educational work of the American missionaries more than to any other cause. He then proceeds:—"Of course, it [Christian education] produces turmoil and tumult, as in Bulgaria, Armenia, and China. It has always been so, from the time when the mob set upon Paul and Silas at Philippi, and charged them with subverting their customers, to the latest atrocities in China. You say:—

The police records prove that with many natives education and Christianity are merely useful on account of the additional facilities they afford for humbugging the white man. It is certain that at kraals which have been subjected to the influence of the missionary there is more drunkenness among the men, more immorality among the women, and more picking and stealing all round, than in kraals where the inhabitants have escaped contact with the pious pioneers of civilisation.

"You do not tell us where these records are to be found, or to what cases you refer, neither do you give any proof at all of that which you pronounce as certain. I deny your statements and challenge you to the proof.

"In January, 1893, the superintendent of the Durban police made the statement in his report to the Town Council, that out of 284 natives arrested for theft during the preceding year in Durban, three-fourths of them came from the Lower Tugela Division, and that most of them could read and write. As the district mentioned was the one in which I resided, I wrote to the Superintendent and asked for a list of these thieves, with their respective chiefs.

"I found that according to the list sent me not three-fourths but about one-third were from the Lower Tugela Division. I visited the principal mission stations in the district and went through the list of thieves with the indunas of the stations, men who knew every person on the stations. The result of my investigations was that out of ninety names on the list from that district, I could find but two from mission stations, and one of these was from a heathen family and could not write.

"I secured from Stanger, Maritzburg, and Durban gaols the total number of native prisoners, and the number who could read and write. Here is the result:—Stanger, total forty-seven, of whom one could read and write; Maritzburg, total 168, of whom ten could read and write; Durban, total 287, of whom thirty-two could read and write.

"The facts were published at the time, and we challenged those who doubted our conclusions to make a more complete investigation. I suggested that an accurate record should be kept for a year of natives convicted of crime, and of the number who could read and write, and of the number from mission stations, and let the results be published. But my challenge was not accepted.

"Another fact. The statement having been made by the superintendent of the Maritzburg police that school Kaffirs made a great deal of trouble for the police, the Rev. Jno. Bruce, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, who resided in Maritzburg, and has a large national school there, resolved to test the truth of the statement. He sent to the superintendent a list of those who were studying in his school, and at the end of each week reported those who had left, and the new names added during the week. At the end of each week the superintendent reported the names of any arrested during the week. This was continued for six months, and during that time between 300 and 400 pupils had been in school, but not one of them had been arrested.

"You began and closed your article by reference to the heathen in the slums of great English cities, and suggest that 'missionaries in South Africa would be doing much more good in London, Birmingham, Manchester, etc.' The Christian organisation which, more than any other, has engaged in work in the slums of great cities is the Salvation Army. The head of the Army, General Booth, visited Johannesburg, and in a magnificent oratorical effort set before his audience his scheme for rescuing men and women from the slums of great cities. Yet your weekly edition contains but a half-column report of that visit, and no report at all of the great meeting on his social scheme. But this same paper devotes a whole page of four columns to a description of a brutal prize fight, which is designated in large headlines as 'A Grand Night's Sport.'"

The reader will have observed, on the one hand, the slipshod and careless way in which missions and missionaries are assailed, and the painstaking and thorough way in which such statements are met and disproved. But the attacks are still repeated, and will no doubt continue.

I suppose no one will question that missionary methods, both at home and abroad, are capable of improvement, but probably nothing would please the assailants less than such improvement. They dislike the Missions because they think they tend to elevate the natives from under their control, and much as they dislike Missions, in proportion as they become more effective they will dislike them more.

I believe there is no subject more vitally connected with the welfare of South Africa than the treatment of the weaker races. For God is overhead; and if He said that Canaan should be the servant of Japheth and Shem, He also said, "Let him that is chief be as he that doth serve." The sons of Ham were once the rulers of men, the masters of the world, and they may be so again, for that "the first shall be last, and the last first" is one of God's revolutionary principles.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Harley House, Bow.

HARLEY HOUSE is a synonym for missionary enterprise; the East London Institute stands for "Preaching the Gospel in the Regions Beyond." The seedling which Dr. Grattan Guinness planted twenty-four years ago has grown into a series of training colleges, from which many devoted men and women have gone forth for Christian service into the dark places of the earth. The midsummer gathering to bid Godspeed to outgoing missionaries generally follows the Mildmay Conference, in the same week, but this year the meeting has been held before the Conference. Friday was not only a day of saying farewell and commending missionary brethren and sisters to the God of all grace and power, but also a day of thanksgiving for blessings received from the beginning of the work "till this very day."

The afternoon assemblage was so large that Harley Chapel (kindly lent for the occasion) was well filled. The revered founder of the Institute took part in the devotional exercises, as also did Rev. James Douglas, who, since the death of Rev. J. S. Morris, for many years theological tutor, has rendered welcome service in the lecture hall of the college at Bow. In the course of a statement having the nature of a report, Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, who has succeeded his father as hon. director, remarked that altogether more than nine hundred men and women have gone from the Institute into various parts of the world. During last year 121 were in training, all of them intending to go forth into the foreign field. The annual cost of the work in its many departments—four colleges, various missions at home and abroad, and numerous adjuncts—was about £12,000. Dr. Guinness acknowledged the help of Pastor Archibald G. Brown and Rev. C. A. Schönberger in the work of the college, and rejoiced to introduce Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Luton, as the new theological lecturer, in succession to Mr. Morris. The party of students about to leave numbered forty-three, fifteen of them bound for the Congo-Balolo country, besides others for different parts of Africa, France, South America, and China. While some sources of income showed a falling-off when compared with the preceding year, the "Regions Beyond Helpers' Union" had made an increased contribution. Yet, as is the case with so many other enterprises, the balance-sheet showed a deficit.

Rev. G. D. HOOPER delivered an address on the work of the students, asserting the Biblical character of the studies and the Evangelical standpoint of all the activities. Pastor W. Hayward described the evangelistic work of the Institute. There are twenty-eight meetings every week in connection with the Berger Hall Mission. The medical work is highly valued, and a new hall for this has become a necessity. After these practical addresses, Mr. THEODORE HOWARD, who presided, spoke some kind and stimulating words on the true motive and spirit of Christian service.

Two of the outgoing missionaries followed: Miss MORRIS, who has India in view, said she should never forget Doric Lodge. Miss DAVIES told of the joy which filled her heart in prospect of working for Christ in Central Africa. These young women, with their single aim and loving zeal, seemed to have the true missionary spirit, and their words made a decided impression as to the value of the college curriculum, in which home work furnishes practice in qualifying for foreign service.

Rev. JAMES STEPHENS, of Highgate, delivered an address to the outgoing missionaries, deriving some helpful thoughts from Prov. xxv. 13. A faithful Gospel messenger may be to God as refreshing as "cold in the time of harvest." The message should be delivered in its fulness, and faithfully. In order to acceptable work the messenger must cultivate his spiritual life.

An open-air meeting in the College grounds was addressed by several of the outgoing party and others. In the evening the Lord's Supper was observed, Dr. Grattan Guinness presiding.

Notes on Mission Work.

JOHANNESBURG.

IN connection with the Prohibition crusade mentioned in a previous article, the following statistics have been compiled. A list of seven questions was sent to each manager of a hundred and twenty gold mining companies, the seventh question being, "Does your company favour the total prohibition of intoxicating liquor to the natives on these fields?" Forty-four official replies were received, from which it appears that these forty-four companies employ over 24,000 natives, and pay in wages annually over £975,000; that 12½ per cent. of the natives employed are daily incapacitated from work through drink; that 90 per cent. of the fights and thefts are the direct outcome of indulgence in intoxicants, and that thirty-six out of the forty-four companies above referred to advocate total prohibition. As several of the largest companies have not replied, and the list of replies embraces answers from many very small employers of labour, and there are over one hundred mines at work, the above figures can be safely doubled, and yet be considerably within the mark.

The amount annually paid in wages to natives on these fields is not less than £2,000,000. The number of natives daily incapacitated for work is not much short of 6,000. The wages those 6,000 natives would have earned annually is about £230,000. Any political economist will thus be able at a glance to see what a tremendous financial loss to the companies is caused by the liquor traffic with the natives. Had those 6,000 natives been fit for work there would have been no shortness of labour on any of the mines.

The moral degeneration is incalculable and appalling. The Chamber of Mines has sent in a petition to the Volksraad on the subject, and the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church is also presenting an influentially signed petition for drastic alterations of the existing law, with prohibition of the sale to natives all over the Republic as one of its clauses. The scenes and noises in these compounds on Saturday night make each of them a veritable pandemonium.

When we commenced our mission school we enrolled about thirty scholars. As the natives work alternately every week on the day and night shift from six a.m. to six p.m., or from six p.m. to six a.m., we opened day school from nine a.m. to twelve for the nightshift, and evening school from seven to 9.30 p.m. for the day shift. Fees were sixpence a week; pupils buy their own books. During the month we enrolled about one hundred pupils, but only about forty are in regular attendance. It requires some determination to rise at nine a.m. for school, when one has just retired at six a.m. after a fatiguing night's work, so we propose holding the day school from 2.30 to five p.m., as an experiment. A large proportion prefer learning English, and as their hearts are set upon it we find it wiser to yield, after pointing out the advantage of first learning to read in their own language. Twelve are learning Isiulu, and five Sesuto.

To show the cosmopolitan character of our school, one teacher is a South African Colonist, born in Natal; another a Scotchman, from the Island of Mull. The assistant is an educated Umxosa native, from Kingwilliamstown, Cape Colony. The pupils hail from Zululand, Swazieland, Pondoland, Matabeleland, Gazaland, Delagoa Bay, Inhambane, Natal, and the Transvaal. Some have had a little education elsewhere.

Some of our pupils are very dense, and we find that we have sore need of this very schooling before patience can have her perfect work in us. Several of our pupils are over forty years of age, and it is quite pathetic at times to see their distress at not being able to remember what has been drilled into them for days. Directly they are able to read we make the Bible our text book. When school is opened, we have devotional exercises; we read and expound a passage of Scripture and question them on what has been read. Some amusingly apt answers are given occasionally.

On Wednesday evenings we have singing class and a Gospel address. Saturday evenings we have a Gospel temperance meeting. On the Lord's Day we have a prayer meeting at 9.30 a.m., where inquirers are taught to pray and make their requests known to God. It is very touching and thrilling to hear the expressions of these dark souls feeling after God. They may have but a faint conception of what "a personal devil" means, but have no doubt as to his actual existence and malign influence on their lives.

When on the evening of our second Lord's Day services in the hall twenty-two of the audience expressed a desire to give up sin and follow Jesus, our feelings of gratitude and thankfulness and joy can better be imagined than described. Not that we expect every impulsive inquirer to blossom at once into a saint. We have the experience of our own souls and that gained in dealing with white converts for many years, to convince us of the necessity of a very definite work of the Holy Ghost in the human soul, lest the worldly self be simply transformed into a religious self. On every Lord's Day since, although our indoor audiences are comparatively small, we have had seekers after salvation.

Forty-five of our hearers are wearing the blue ribbon, a step which has brought them no small amount of ridicule and persecution. On inquiring for one of our scholars who had suddenly ceased to come to school and service, the reply was, "Oh, he has gone back to Satan!" "Why, what do you mean?" "His brothers have pulled off his ribbon, and threatened to send him off home at once if he does not give up coming to school and service, so he has gone back to Satan." After being absent for a week we saw him come to the Gospel-temperance meeting and sit at the back, as much out of sight as possible. When those who had pledged themselves were asked to rise, he rose instinctively, but sat down again immediately. This gave us a good opportunity of addressing him personally, and bidding him come forward and take his own place. With a pitiful expression of countenance he said it was of no use; his brothers had pulled off his ribbon, torn up his spelling-book, and threatened all kinds of things if he did not give it all up. We got him to stay behind, and prayed with him and were glad next day to see him at all the services. He has now resumed the ribbon, come back to school, and is inquiring the way to follow Jesus.

A very decided and definite opposition has arisen against our work. The natives see that to come to us means an abandonment of drink first, and then a breaking off and separation from their native customs and superstitions, and they do not wish to make the experiment. Some are candid enough to say, "We don't come, because we are afraid of getting converted!"

We are glad to have this definite line drawn, and would rather have small audiences and definite soul-searching work than large audiences and self-complacency. One Lord's Day afternoon we invited anyone who had cause to thank God for blessing received to rise and tell the audience so, whereupon Mavabazi (nicknamed "Whisky" by the miners) rose and spoke words to this effect: "I formerly walked in darkness and sin and on the road of Satan, but the Lord has given me a new heart, and I have left the road of Satan and sin for ever. How glad we would be to see four or five of you this afternoon come out and ask the Lord to do the same for you."

A stranger rose and said: "Friends of God, when I went away to Natal there was no house here, but I cannot tell you how glad I was on my return to find this house, and that God has sent these teachers to us. This is my first visit, and I want to express my thanksgiving to God." A. W. B.

Notes from South Africa.

SOUTH Africa is, par excellence, the country where moral and spiritual shipwrecks are terribly visible to all who care to observe. We need men of high spiritual influence, and attractive personality, who can bring to bear upon the many strangers a powerful influence for good and God.

This conviction is asserting itself among those who are responsible for evangelical work. The Presbytery of Cape Town are praying that the right man may be sent out from England to preside over the Gardens Presbyterian Church. Rev. Dr. Ross, who resigns the charge next week, and returns to England on June 10, to resume his work at Newcastle-on-Tyne, is an admirable type of the men we need—a man of marked spirituality, of high culture.

Rev. Philip Tearle, the president of the Wesleyan Conference, intends, during his year of office, to visit as many of the up-country mission stations as possible. He will commence in Cape Town in September, and afterwards proceed to the north via Kimberley. The greatest interest is taken in this visit.

The latest reports of the South African Wesleyan Missionary Society are encouraging. The year's revenue is reported at £123,757, and the expenditure at £124,720. But, notwithstanding this excess of expenditure over revenue, the deficit accumulated at the end of 1894 has been more than cleared off. Large numbers have been added to the church in every part of South Africa, the largest increase being 1222 in the Transvaal and Swaziland district. The total increase on the year is 1698. And yet there are many who allege that South African missions are more or less of a failure.

The Salvation Army is rapidly extending its work amongst the natives. Commissioner and Mrs. Ridsdell, the new commanders of the forces of the Army in South Africa, are expected in a few days, and great welcome meetings are being arranged. The Prime Minister, Sir Gordon Sprigg, has promised to preside over one of these gatherings.

The South African Mission is carrying out a work in Cape Town which God has been pleased to own and bless. Evangelistic meetings are held in the Skating Rink every Sunday afternoon and evening, and people of all creeds and nationalities crowd there in great numbers.

Rev. Dr. Ross returned to England by the Tantalion Castle. His closing sermons were full of close reasoning and lofty spirituality. As to the future of the church nothing has been decided, except that Dr. Ross has been requested to select a pastor on his return to England. During the twelve months 10,000 young men have attended the "Straight Talks" at the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday afternoons—a mighty testimony to the value of such bright services.

By the Tantallon Castle there also returned Rev. C. Pettman, superintendent of the Cape Town Wesleyan Circuit, and family.

The ladies who are responsible for the Cape Town Children's Mission—a splendid work, which is worthy of imitation in other parts of the world—have the joy of reporting that as the result of their labour they have passed 3000 children of the streets who never entered a place of worship through the mission. An encouraging sign of the work is that most of these have become regular worshippers at the various churches.

J. J. L.
Cape Town.

Ardrihaig, N.B.—In this lovely spot, so well known to tourists as the point where they change for the Crinan Canal, an unsectarian band has been working since 1891, when they began meetings in the summer in the open air, and in winter in an old dwelling-house known as "The Hospital." The work has gone on since, and God has been pleased to grant a measure of success. The present meeting place is a very old wooden structure in a decayed condition; hence it is imperative a new hall should be secured before winter. A plain brick building could be put up for about £60. Many who know the place may be willing to aid. The secretary is John Macnair, "Old Hospital," Ardrihaig, N.B.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 5.

"AND DAVID LONGED, AND SAID, OH THAT ONE WOULD GIVE ME DRINK OF THE WATER OF THE WELL OF BETHLEHEM THAT IS AT THE GATE!"—1 Chron. xi. 17.

DAVID had often drunk of this well. As a boy he had gone with his mother to draw its clear cold water. It was, therefore, associated with the happy days of childhood and youth that lay behind the haze of the years. In the sultry afternoon, as, from the cave where he was hiding, he looked across the valley where his ancestress Ruth had gleaned in the fields of Boaz, to the long straggling town of his birth, it seemed as though nothing could stay his passionate longing for a draught of the waters of the well of Bethlehem.

Sometimes longings like his take possession of us. We desire to drink again the waters of comparative innocence, of child-like trust and joy, to drink again of the fountains of human love, to have the bright fresh rapture in God and nature, and home. But it is a mistake to look back. Here and now within us, Jesus is waiting to open the well of living water which springs up to eternal life, of which if we drink we never thirst.

Purity is better than innocence, the blessedness which comes through suffering is richer than the gladness of childhood; the peace of the heart is more than peace of circumstances. We have solace in Jesus which even the dear love of home could not equal, and before us lies the reunion with the blessed dead. How shall we thank Him who, at the cost of his own blood, broke through the hosts of our foes, and won for us the river of life? Listen to his voice as He bids you drink abundantly. "Let him that is athirst take of the water of life freely."

MONDAY, July 6.

"ALL THESE MEN OF WAR, THAT COULD KEEP RANK, CAME WITH A PERFECT HEART TO HEBRON, TO MAKE DAVID KING."—1 Chron. xii. 38.

The crowning of David secured the unity of Israel. Because all these men of war converged on the chosen king, they met each other, and became one great nation. The enthroning of David was the uniting of the kingdom. Herein is the secret of the unity of the Church. We shall never secure it by endeavouring to bring about an unity in thought, or act, or organisation. It is as each individual heart enthrones the Saviour that each will become one with all kindred souls in the everlasting kingdom.

Is your heart perfect to make Christ king? We read in verse 33 of Zebulun, whose warriors were not of a double heart; the margin says they were "not of a heart and a heart." The double-minded man is unstable in all his ways; he is not to be relied upon in his loyalty or service to his king. The only blessed life is that of the man whose eye is single. It is only such an one that receives anything from the Lord. Let us ask that the thoughts of our hearts may be cleansed by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, that our hearts may be perfect towards Him, and that there should be no division of interest between the prince of this world and our liege lord Christ.

Let us learn to keep rank, shoulder to shoulder, with our brethren, and in step. Too many like to break the ranks, and do God's work independently. Fifty men who act together will do greater execution than five hundred acting apart. There is too much of this guerilla fighting. Let the soldiers of Christ move in rank, and keep step.

TUESDAY, July 7.

"AND DAVID WAS AFRAID OF GOD THAT DAY."—1 Chron. xiii. 12.

There was no reason for David to be afraid of God if he conformed to the rules laid down in Leviticus. There it was expressly ordained that the ark should be carried on the shoulders of the priests, because the cause of God must proceed through the world by the means of consecrated men, rather than by mechanical instrumentality. David ignored this provision when he placed the ark on the new cart. He disobeyed the distinct law of the Divine procedure. What wonder that Uzzah was struck dead! Fire will burn if you persist in violating its law. Obedience, on the other hand, studiously obeyed, so far as he knew them, the Divine regulations, and to him the ark was a source of blessing, just as fire will toil for us in our furnaces and grates, and be the greatest possible benediction to human life.

God is to us what we are to Him. To Pharaoh, blackness and darkness; to Israel, light and help. To the froward, He is froward; to the merciful man, merciful. To one of the thieves, the cross of Christ was the savour of death unto death, because his heart was impenitent; to the other, the savour of life unto life, because his heart was soft and believing. You need not fear God so long as you walk in his ways and do his will. He is to be feared only by those who violate his law. God is a consuming fire. He will make a breach on those who disobey Him. He will consume the evil of our inner life. But let him be welcomed unto the inner life, let the ark, which is the symbol of his presence, dwell within, and you will be blessed with all that you have.

WEDNESDAY, July 8.

"THOU SHALT HEAR A SOUND OF GOING IN THE TOPS OF THE MULBERRY TREES, FOR GOD IS GONE FORTH BEFORE THEE."—1 Chron. xiv. 15.

What was this "going"? It was not merely a fitful breeze stealing through the leaves. It was not the going of the wind, but of angel squadrons who were proceeding against the enemies of Israel. This thought often occurs in Scripture, as when Jacob met God's host, and the warrior-Saviour told Joshua that He was captain of a host whom God had commissioned to take Jericho, so also the horses and chariots of fire surrounded Elisha. Harken to the measured footfall of God's host, beneath which the mulberry trees sway, though no wind stirs the sultry air.

God's hosts go forth against his foes and ours. Perhaps we should feel less oppressed with the burden of the fight if we realised this. The battle is not ours but God's. He will deliver the Philistines to us so that we shall have to do little else than fight and spoil. Oh, believe in the co-operation of the Holy Spirit. Lonely missionary in some distant station of the foreign field, listen for the moving in the tops of the mulberry trees! God is stirring for thy succour.

Let us wait for our instructions. David inquired of the Lord; let us not anticipate Him. It is useless to go up until He has gone out before us. We may as well save ourselves from disappointment by quietly waiting for the salvation of our God. But oh, be sure that those who wait for God shall not be long before the God for whom they wait shall go forth before them to smite the host, whether it be the hosts of temptation that oppress the inner life, or the hosts of spiritual foes that oppose the progress of God's work.

THURSDAY, July 9.

"AND CHENANIAH, CHIEF OF THE LEVITES, WAS FOR SONG: HE INSTRUCTED ABOUT THE SONG, BECAUSE HE WAS SKILFUL."—1 Chron. xv. 22.

The carrying of the ark to its right place was associated with every expression of gladness on the part of king and people, but there were some who were specially set apart as the exponents of the general joy. In the old time such were David, Heman, Asaph, Chenaniah; in our time, Watts and Doddridge, Wesley and Toplady, Havergal and Keble.

It is good to be for song. Many a heart that cannot rank as a musician or poet, may yet be susceptible to the joy of the Lord, which is ever passing through creation, catching it up so as to express it. As the ark of the Lord comes to its place within you, sing.

Song is harmony with the life of God. The will of God sometimes enters life as a sigh, as David's first attempt to move the ark, but afterwards it becomes a song, as in the second attempt. Enshrine the ark of God with its tables of stone, its mercy-seat of fellowship, its worshipping Cherubim in the Holy of Holies within; and you will find sighs turned to songs, tears to thanks, mourning to the garment of praise.

Worship the will of God. Conform your life with it. Draw on the ground a circle to represent God's will, and step into it, resolving never to step out of its blessed precincts again. Dare to believe and confess that Paradise lies within, though it may be veiled to sight and sense. According to your faith it shall be unto you. If you believe that heaven is there, you will find heaven, and the ark of God will be a provocative of song.

FRIDAY, July 10.

"TALK YE OF ALL HIS WONDROUS WORKS."—1 Chron. xvi. 9.

We do not talk sufficiently about God. Why it is so may not be so easy to explain, but there seems a too great reticence among Christian people about the best things. In the days of Malachi, "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard." We talk about sermons, the latest phase of Scripture criticism, we discuss men, methods, and churches, but our talk in the home, in Dorcas meetings, in the gatherings of Christians for social purposes, is too seldom about the wonderful works of God. Better to speak less, and to talk more of Him.

But probably the real cause of our avoidance of this best of topics, is that our hearts are filled with so much which is not of God, and they speak out of their abundance. You may judge the contents of a shop by what is put in the windows, and you may judge of the inner life of too many Christians by the subjects which are most familiar to their lips. The heart does not seek for God and his strength, nor his face continually, and therefore we find it hard to talk of all his wondrous works.

But go back in thought to the day of Pentecost. One of the first symptoms of the descent of the blessed Spirit was that the crowd heard every man speaking in their own tongues the wonderful works of God. What God has done in the past, as recorded on the page of Scripture, what He is doing day by day in the world around, and in our hearts, may be a fit theme on which his children should talk to each other till He goes beside, and talks with them till their hearts burn.

SATURDAY, July 11.

"NOW, LORD, LET THE THING THAT THOU HAST SPOKEN CONCERNING THY SERVANT, AND CONCERNING HIS HOUSE, BE ESTABLISHED FOR EVER, AND DO AS THOU HAST SAID, THAT THY NAME MAY BE MAGNIFIED FOR EVER."—1 Chron. xvii. 23.

This is a most blessed phase of true prayer. Many a time we ask for things which are not absolutely promised. We are not sure therefore until we have persevered for some time whether our petitions are in the line of God's purpose or no. There are other occasions, and in the life of David this was one, when we are fully persuaded that what we ask is according to God's will; or we feel led to take up some promise from the page of Scripture, under the special impression that it contains a message for us.

At such times, in confident faith, we say, "Do as Thou hast said." There is hardly any position more utterly beautiful, strong, or safe, than to put the finger upon some promise of the Divine word, and claim it. There need be no anguish, or struggle, or wrestling; we simply present the cheque and ask for cash, produce the promise, and claim its fulfilment, nor can there be any doubt as to the issue. David's argument was not simply that his house might be established, but that God's name might be magnified for ever. It is good when we can lose sight of our personal interests in our keen desire for his glory. When we are so delivered from egotism, that Christ is all and in all. Let the attitude of your soul be more towards the glory of God, and as you quote promise after promise for the enthroning of Christ, the saving of men, and the sanctification of your soul, dare in humble faith to say, Do as Thou hast said.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

A Flyaway Dick.

ALL children like true stories, so I am going to tell you something that happened only last week.

I had taken my work into the garden, and was sitting there enjoying the sweetness of the flowers and the songs of the birds, when suddenly I thought that besides the blackbirds and thrushes I heard the voice of a canary. I looked among the trees, but could see nothing; still the little singer sang on, so I fetched from the house an old bird-cage. After putting water in it and sticking a piece of groundsel between the bars, I put the cage on the ivy-covered wall, and sat down to watch what would happen next. In a few minutes the sweet piping sound ceased, and, looking up, I saw a dear little canary close beside the cage, which he examined with his head on one side; then he hopped on to the top, and began to eat the groundsel, chirping all the time. Then you can think what was my disappointment when he spread his wings and flew away! But in about half an hour back he came, and this time he hopped inside the cage, and did not seem to be at all offended when I shut the door. I took him into the house, and after he had had a good dinner he tucked his head under his wing, and went fast asleep until tea-time; of course, the poor little man was sleepy, for we heard afterwards that he had been up all night.

Well he seems really pleased to have found a happy home once more, and is as full of fun as he can be, pecking at my fingers (all in fun, of course), and hopping on to my hand when I clean his cage. As you may think, we have, even in these few days, grown to be very fond of him, and when my father came in on Friday, and said that curiously enough he had found Master Dick's mistress, my heart rather fell, but you will be glad to hear that she has made him over to me as a present; she tells us that he escaped from her while she was cleaning his cage.

Now it may seem to some of you children rather a cruel thing for us to catch the little dick when he was singing so happily among the trees, but you know he would most certainly have died if he had been left to fly about at his own sweet will, for he would probably have caught cold, or other and larger birds might have molested him, or worst of all he might have met his greatest enemy—the cat, which to the little bird must look like a great lion. Don't you think that dickie may teach us this lesson—that our own way is not always the best, and that big people know what is good for little people better than they do themselves?

I have no doubt that birdie thought that it would be a fine thing to run away from his home and to be able to fly about just where he wished, but I fancy he soon found his mistake. Think what a long way the poor little thing had to fly across the fields all by himself, unaccustomed as he was to longer flights than his cage permitted, and then the dark quiet night, with no familiar perch to sleep upon. How the little creature must have wished that he had never left home. Like the Prodigal in the Bible, he was glad enough to return; he found, you see, that his own way was not after all so pleasant, and that control was really better than so-called liberty.

We may learn another lesson from the way in which God took care of the little bird, by guiding him all the way from his home to our garden (more than a mile), and making me hear him sing, and putting the thought into my mind of offering the tiny wanderer a home. All this teaches us that if God took such care of the birdie, how much more will He take care of us, his children, if we trust him! He tells us so Himself in his Word; if you look in the twelfth chapter of St. Luke you will find the verses.

So when you see the happy little birds flying about will you let them remind you that you are of more value in your Heavenly Father's sight than they, although He watches over each of them?

ETHEL RUTH BODDY.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending July 11, 1896.—Sun., July 5, Acts xxi. 15-26; Mon., July 6, xxi. 27-40; Tues., July 7, xxii. 1-16; Wed., July 8, xxii. 17-30; Thurs., July 9, xxiii. 1-17; Fri., July 10, xxiii. 18-35; Sat., July 11, xxiv. 1-16.

Little Things.

THE Lord is pleased to use little things, and through very weak instruments He shows his mighty power, and almost all little things are useful. Mr. Spurgeon says, "Little chips light great fires," "Little pigeons carry great messages," and "Little pitchers can do great service."

1. It was only a little coat. But what love it expressed! (1 Sam.). "Moreover, his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year." What happy times for little Samuel when his mother fitted on his new coat every year! The little coat was the expression of the mother's love—thinking, working, and blessing.

What is so pure, so good, so fair, so like the realms above, Within this frail and mortal world, as tender mother's love. There is only one thing purer and greater, and that is God's great love.

2. It was only a little cake, but what blessings it brought! (1 Kings). "But make me a little cake first, and bring it to me, and after make for thee and for thy son." This is not selfishness, but faith. Elijah represented God, and he put God first. This was a cake full of plums of blessing, food and supply for "many days" (v. 15). God's promises are like this little cake, full of blessing and sweetness.

3. It was only a little cloud. But what hopes it revived! (1 Kings). "Behold there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea like a man's hand." Prayer shut the heavens, and prayer opened them again. Oh, the mighty power of prayer; it will always turn a little cloud into a big blessing. It is recorded that in a time of great drought in Scotland, Dr. Guthrie had in his Sabbath morning service special prayer for rain. As they went to church in the afternoon little Mary, his daughter, said, "Here is the umbrella, father." "What do we need it for?" he asked. "You prayed for rain this morning, and don't you expect God will send it?" They carried the umbrella, and when they came home they were glad to take shelter under it from the drenching storm.

4. It was only a little coney. But what wisdom it displayed! "The conies are but feeble folk, yet they make their houses in the rock" (Prov.). Wise little builders, building their homes at the right time, the right place, and for the right purpose—for shelter, safety. Matt. vii. 24, 25.

5. It was only a little child. But what good service she rendered! "A little maid, and she waited on Naaman's wife" (2 Kings). She had kind thoughts, earnest words, a bright testimony, and did happy service. See verses 3, 4, and 14. The lessons from these little folks are all pointed and practical. Be thankful. Be trustful. Be hopeful. Be thoughtful. Be truthful.

C. EDWARDS.

The Time to be Pleasant.

"MOTHER'S cross," said Maggie, coming out into the kitchen with a pout on her lips. Her aunt was busy ironing, but she looked up and answered Maggie: "Then it is the very time for you to be pleasant and helpful. Mother was awake a great deal of the night with the baby."

Maggie made no reply. She put on her hat and walked off into the garden. But a new idea went with her.

"The very time to be helpful and pleasant is when other people are cross. Sure enough," thought she, "that would be the time when it would do most good. I remember when I was ill last year I was so nervous that if anyone spoke to me I could hardly help being cross; and mother never got angry or out of patience, but was just as gentle with me! I ought to pay it back now, and I will!"

And she sprang from the grass, where she had thrown herself, and turned a face full of cheerful resolution towards the room where mother sat soothing and tending a fretful teething young baby.

Maggie brought out the pretty ivory balls and began to jingle them for the little one.

He stopped fretting, and a smile dimpled the corners of his lips.

"Could not I take him out to ride in his carriage, mother, it is such a nice morning?" she asked.

"I should be glad if you would," said her mother.

"I will keep him as long as he is good," said Maggie, "and you must lie on the sofa and get a nap while I am gone. You are looking very tired."

The kind words and the kiss which accompanied them were almost too much for the mother. The tears rose to her eyes, and her voice trembled as she answered: "Thank you, dearie; it will do me a world of good if you can keep him out an hour; and the air will do him good, too. My head aches badly this morning."

Maggie resolved to remember and act on her aunt's good words, "The very time to be helpful and pleasant is when everybody is tired and cross."—Selected.

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign List:—

No. 17. Una and Bessie Whitehead, Annie Lombard (South Africa). No. 20. Eugénie Marais', Min le Marais', Charlotte Camé (South Africa). No. 21. Quentin and Llewellyn Dale (India). No. 23. Vera Sjöström and Jeanie Scott' (America). W. Arnot Craik' (Canada).

No. 25 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

J. G. and A. R. Webb, William Porter, Lucy and C. W. Jacob, Emily Biddlecombe, Robert and Marion Richards, Maggie, Walter, and Jessie Carter, Thomas Cole', Bella Mack, Lena, W. J. H., May and Tom Hunter, Trevor and Mary Matthews, Thomas and J. Stanier, Elmi, Tubi, Marion Peimer, Millie Passley, John Menzies, Minnie Giddings, May Williams, Elma Ishmail, Ethel and Bertie Wall, Kathie Arrol, Eva Monti, Moriel Lermitt, Hoffman Scott, Doris Austin, Grace Colvin, Winnie Shaw, Nancie Parker, William Gavin, Sabina Mackintosh', E. sie, Grace, and Ida Wright, Leonard Browne, E. V. Walsall-Kirwan, Nellie Bonnie, Amy and Maude Nottage, Mary Plumb, Ethelwyn Austin, Sissie Watts, Robert Poole, Nellie Lovegrove', Rubie Vincent, George and M. A. Cowell, John and Margaret Hogg, Mabel and Ada Davis, W. McMurray', E. B. and Netta Black, Carrie and Mary Wight, Chrissie Lawson, H. Robinson, Kathleen Cole', Jessie Boston, M. H. Daniels, Freda Hutton, Theodore Roberts, Collin Campbell, Mary and Ruth Halthwaite', Mary Douglas Maitland-Kirwan, Lucy Soltan, Edith and Dora Corrie, Elma, Annie, and Dorothy Grove, John and Eva Gray, Angus McQuillan, Daisy Annett, W. R. and H. F. Smith, Muriel Shaw, J. Robinson, Gladys and Muriel Calver', Horace and Oswald Roberts, Sinclair and Moffat Jackson, Annie, Charles, Beverly, Dorothy, Stanley, Edgar Kerbury, Ruth Coupe', Maude Knight, Hetty and Harold Wilson', May Watson, Edith Coote, Oswald Mavor, Ruth Harrison, Kathleen Henderson, Myrtle and J. M. Perry, Gershom Campbell, Dorothy Cooper, Barbara Sheld, Bella and Bertie Steadman, Elsie Jones, E. H. Ing, Eva Robertson', Gerald Heaton-Smith, Walter Thomas', Laura Kirk, K. G. James and Thomas Kirkpatrick, Frank Morris, Elton Hill, Eric Heaton-Smith, Flora King, Ethel Pettican, Ada Saunders, William Corrick, Eva Wippeny, Florence White, Joanna Pearman, Lily Clarke, Frederick Pearman, Edward Short, Bertie Butler', Sidney Cashford, Ella Dixon, Bertie Hunt, Maude George, Edith Sharpe, Harry Seeger, Annie Baxter, Lily Dawe, Maude Tennett, Maggie Buelth, Cecelia Reid, Alice Short, Rill La Brooy, Ada Macnutt', Kathleen Foweraker, W. Campbell, May Bentley, Violet Studdert, Dora Watters, Ophelia De Courcy, Dollie Salt, Margaret and Edith Gray, Lottie and Harriette Orr, Kathleen Cole, Louis and Ezra Matthews, Florie Smit', Fanny and Jessie Cockram, Susie Keen, Margaret Hassel, Edward Halsey, Meta and Fan Trotter, George Trotter, Frances Bennett, Marion Connell, Willie Weinstein, Fritz Talzlaiff, May Hanson', Fred Weston, Gertrude Edwards, Richard Lewis', Florence Judd, Lizzie Hill, S. C. Boyman, Raymond Theobald, Edith Simpson', Roberta Meikle', Daisy, Phillips, Noraan Holloway, Bessie Chene', C. A. Steinhart, Grace Ireland, Elsie Warren, John McGregor, Margaret Macphee, William Mallinson, Clara Lyddon, Mary Thorne, Louise Morse, Mary and Annie Fleming, Fannie and Alec Waring, Ethel Fielder, Edith Daisley, Lavinia Barnes Willie and Ada Palmer, Allen and Conyers Baker, Ruby and Daisy Allen, Evelyn, Dora and Arthur Jones, Jessie and Elmina Roe, Dora and Kate Symes, Arthur, Nellie, Henry and Annie Coueh, Thomas de Courcy Rayner', Mabel Birney, Emily Norster, Dunca', Payne, Winnie and Elsie Cockram, Edwin Peters', Arthur Barker, Harriet Lynham, Daisy and Eva Hutchings, J. A. and G. Gibson, Nettie Thompson, Daisy, Vera, May, and Norman Bridges, Charlotte Smith, Nellie Smith, Florida Pace, Jessie Joseph, Ada Heap, Katie Green, Harriet Cox, Martha Harding, Annie Clarke, Grace Dawson Scott, May Dring, Louise Berthe', Beia Campbell, Katherine Blair, Francis and S. phile Devenish-Meares, Theodora Hill, Dorothy Bevan, Nannie and Louie Tibbiss, Edith and Arthur Quick', Hubert Malcham, Reginald, Ernest, and Willie Findlay, Lizzie Hill, Harry Sutton, Norman Lowe, Marjorie Williams, Muriel and Charlie Hodge, Kenneth Dunbar.

This week, as you will see, we begin

A NEW QUARTER.

Let every child try and get as many Searchers as possible right so as to be able to compete for the next

PRIZE COMPETITION IN SEPTEMBER.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 27).

After reading the article on "Little Things"—

1. Give chapter and verse for each one mentioned.
2. Which verses in Matt. xviii. show that God values little folks?
3. Give one verse in St. John's Gospel which tells us of God's love to us; and one in his Epistles telling us what we ought to do in return.
4. Find in Philippians iv. a promise of God's care.
5. Give a text in James i. which tells us how to pray; and an example of successful prayer in chapter v.
6. Give examples from Matt. vii. of good and bad building.

[The verses need not be written out in full. Learn them and say where they are found. Children under eight do 1 and 2; those under twelve 1, 2, 3, and 4.]

Personal Items.

I have to thank all my little friends who have sent flowers; they are greatly appreciated in the hospitals where they are forwarded, and I receive many letters of thanks on your behalf. The children of Kingsdown Orphanage say:—"DEAR UNCLE TOM,—We are all very pleased to receive the sweet flowers. Some of us have names of flowers, such as Lily, May, Daisy, Rose. We thank you for your kind thought of us, and ask you please to thank the friends who sent the flowers. Now we shall feel that we know you when we have the Children's Page read week by week." EILEEN HILL.—I shall be very pleased if you will send copy of the hymn next time you send your answers. MAY DRING.—Thank you for your letter. M. T. COLVILLE.—Thank you for what you sent. I am going to make use of them soon.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Keswick, July 21-Aug. 5. Mr. B. Herklots, Greystones, Ireland, July 7-23. Mr. Hankinson, Curbridge, Botley, Hants, July 10; Trowbridge, July 11-17. Mr. A. Cowsmith, Weston-super-Mare, July 5-12. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birkington Bay, to July 6; Herne Bay, July 8-24. Mr. Hewlett, with caravan, Basingbourne, to July 6; Steeple Morden, July 7-13. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, Fakenham, to July 7; Rattlesden, caravan No. 2, to July 4. Mr. A. G. Doddridge, Portrush, during July. Mr. E. Hughes, Leyton, July 10. Mr. Josiah Spiers, North Berwick, in July. Mr. A. E. W. Gwyn, Gull Force Convention, July 11-12.

"When Thou Wast Young."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(John xxi. 18.)

"WHEN thou wast young"! It is not so very long ago, and even now the imperishable memories of those perished years come back in their fresh vividness and colour. Thou art a child again, playing on the beach, or dabbling bare-foot in the tiny wavelets that break in musical chime upon the sand. Or, thou art a boy helping to land thy father's nets, filling the baskets with their precious freight! Or, in thy manhood's early promise, thou art sharing his toils, battling with sudden storms, crossing and recrossing the moonbeam's silvery path, or making for home with a light keel, after a night of fruitless toil!

But always, and in every sense, thou wert the same impetuous character; the creature of the moment's whim; thy strong nature subject to no law save that of the moment's impulse; thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldst. If thou wouldst, none could stay thee; with all the strength and vehemence of thy nature, thou castedst thyself forward. This was thy strength and thy weakness. If the impulse happened to be right, thy power for good was immeasurable; but if evil, thou hadst to drink bitter cups of disappointment, and retrace thy steps with briny tears.

All through life that strong self-will of thine has been thy bane. It has marred thy peace, jangled the sweet music of thy life, broken the consistency and beauty of thy godly testimony. What hope is there of thy becoming a foundation-stone in the New Jerusalem, or unlocking doors with the keys of faith and love, or casting a healing shadow over withered souls, till this is dealt with? Look into the lives of others! Has God been able to make aught of them till He has broken them? What fellowship hath his peace with fleshly vehemence? What concord can there be between the Divine method and human impulse? What agreement can the spirit of Jesus Christ have with vain carnality? Thou who girdedst thyself must learn to be girded; instead of walking whither thou wouldst, thou must submit to be carried where thy flesh might not choose to be. There is a death to self and sin by which thou shalt glorify God, more than in the strenuous activities of life; and when it has been meekly borne, thou shalt emerge into a rarer life, a richer influence, a nobler beauty. Thou hast been Jacob, thou shalt be Israel, the Prince; thou hast been Abram, thou shalt be Abraham; thou hast been Simon Bar-Jonas, thou shalt be Peter, the Rock.

For this, thou must be an eye-witness of the sufferings of Christ (1 Peter v. 1).—On Calvary stood his cross, hewn from some forest tree, and there He bare thy sins in his own body. But in addition, He bore there the likeness of thy sinful flesh. In outward seeming it was nailed in his crucifying to the cross of shame. Sit down, and watch Him die, and reason with thyself, that if the likeness of thy sinful self, though borne by the sinless Saviour, was held up to shame between heaven and earth, under the curse of God and the reprobation of man, it must in itself be an evil thing, whatever garb it may assume. It is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be. It has no right to be the principle or pivot of thy life. It ought not to determine thy girdings and walkings. Thou shouldst ever meet its slightest symptoms by reckoning to it that death with which it was visited when the Master bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness.

Thou must also arm thyself with the mind of Christ (1 Peter iv. 1-4).—In the cross He yielded Himself absolutely to the will of God. He took away sacrifices and offerings and whole burnt-offering and sacrifices for sin pertaining to the law, because He knew that the Father had no pleasure in them, and He established in their stead an utter devotion to the will of God, by which will we have been sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

Thou must accept the will of God, as it consigns to the cross thy self-life, with all its willings, girdings, and walkings. Thou must acquiesce in the sentence which that good, and acceptable, and holy will has passed on thee and thy ways. Thou must drink the draught into which the dust of death has been mingled. Thou must take his yoke upon thee, and follow Jesus, becoming conformed into the likeness of his death, that thou mayest be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Arm thyself therefore with the same mind, that thou mayest no longer live the rest of the time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

Thou must also submit to the discipline of life (1 Peter iv. 12).—There is no incident in all thy pilgrimage, from the striking of the tent to its laying down, that has not been prepared with the express purpose of breaking down thy masterful, vehement spirit, and making thee so meek and gentle that thou mayest follow his steps Who did no sin, spake no guile, reviled not his revilers, threatened not in his sufferings, but committed Himself to the Righteous Judge.

Thou mayest toil all night and catch nothing: hear a voice calling thee from the boat to walk the tempestuous waves and sink; be led to the chamber of death and to the mount of glory; be compelled to stand by and see thy loftiest ambitions crumble piecemeal to the earth; be called to sleepless nights and anxious days; be permitted to be sifted as wheat and exposed to the fear of man that bringeth a snare. All these things will be permitted to befall thee to prove thy ignorance, weakness, and cowardice, and lead thee to seek that Divine life which alone can stand the stress and strain.

Thou must be filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts ii. 4; iv. 8; v. 31).—Not once alone, but twice, and thrice. Where self has reigned supreme, the Spirit must be enthroned; where the I-life has wrought to thy undoing, the Christ-life must work to thy salvation; where sin has reigned unto death, grace must reign through righteousness unto eternal life. These things can never be till thou hast claimed and received thy share in Pentecost. It is impossible to exaggerate the effect produced on the disciples by the day of Pentecost; no longer craven cowards, they waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight armies of aliens: no longer quarrelsome and place-seeking, each esteemed the others better than himself: no longer perpetually misunderstanding the Master's meaning, like good and wise stewards they rightly divided the sacred Word of truth. But such a change may be thine from this moment, if only thou wilt open thy mouth and draw in deep inspirations of the same Spirit, Who awaits to fill thee, as them at the beginning.

The necessity for the Holy Spirit will be more apparent if thou wouldst maintain that death to sin which is the only safe and befitting position. It cannot be maintained by thy own resolution; for how can self slay self? It can only be maintained by the Holy Spirit, through Whom Christ offered Himself without spot to God, and Who will first make thee very sensitive to the approach of temptation, and next will enable thee to meet it by re-affirming thy oneness with Jesus in his death to sin.

Thus, as the years pass, thy impetuous self will no longer be the spring and source of thy life, prompting thee to will, and walk, and gird. It will become starved, attenuated, atrophied, surrendered to death; whilst the strength of thy nature will be under the commands and promptings of that new nature, which is Christ. Another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither, in thy flesh, thou wouldst not, but wherein thy spirit then will find it sweet to go. Do not sigh for the tender grace of the days that are gone, when thou wast young. Purity is more than innocence; the slavery of Christ more perfect freedom than the service of self; the Cross the door to wider life than birth ever brought to the noblest sons of men. Thus, Simon Bar-Jonas, who trembled before a servant-girl, shall yet become Peter, the Rock-man and foundation-stone of the Holy City.

In Memoriam—

THOSE ON BOARD THE "DRUMMOND CASTLE."

Did not I weep for him that was in trouble?—Job xxx. 25.

HOW brief and bitter was the cry
That o'er the water rang!
How swift the sweep of agony,
The momentary pang!
One thrilling shock, one dizzy whirl,
One struggle for life's breath;
One mingling in the swaying swirl,
And all were claimed by death.

From those waste waters, dark and dread,
From solemn scenes of night
Some renovated spirits sped
To lands of living light.
Prepared by Him who came to save,
Glad glory broke around,
How short the battle with the wave,
And then—God's heaven found!
Safe in the Saviour's loving care,
Designed for loyal lays,
They only breathed one sigh of prayer,
Then joined his-choir in praise.
Soft music by the angels set,
O'erhushed the curling foam,
The clashing waters scarcely met
Before they were at home.

God comfort you, ye mourning friends,
Accept his perfect will;
Our Father with such sorrow sends
His consolation still.
Though mystery's dense film disguise
That will permissive here;
Yet "God is love," his work is wise,
He counts each sigh and tear.
To that deep love we now commend,
Your more than common care;
May all who mourn a Christian friend,
Remember he is there,
And stands on fiery crystal wave*
Beyond all surging strife;
Those waters mirror not the grave,
For they reflect—"The LIFE."

SELINA A. BOWER.

The Lingfield Settlement.

AN interesting service was conducted on Monday at the Farm which has been acquired recently at Lingfield for the purpose of inaugurating on English soil the scheme described by Miss Sutter in "the Colony of Mercy."

The Farm consists of 260 acres, and already is being brought under cultivation. A fine stack of hay and large supply of live-stock, and several fields of standing crops indicate the care already expended. There are a house-father and house-mother already in residence, two Christian brothers, and five or six men who are being trained in farm work. It is hoped to increase this number shortly to twenty, and ultimately to forty.

Archdeacon Sinclair, Dr. Monro Gibson, Revs. J. F. B. Tinling, Tolefree Parr, Peter Thompson, F. B. Meyer (chairman), and J. L. Brooks (director) took part, and it was felt that the experiment had already begun to justify itself. The vicar of the parish and the Baptist minister, together with a considerable number of friends from the neighbourhood, were present.

It is very necessary that £600 should be raised immediately to defray the cost of preparing the needful accommodation for the men. Contributions may be sent to Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, 4, Dalmeny-road, Tufnell Park, N.

Rev. R. J. Ashton, medical missionary, who was one of the first sent out by the London Missionary Society in connection with its Forward Movement, has (according to The Manchester Guardian) had to be recalled from North India on account of the state of the funds of the Society.

* Revelation xv. 2.

The late John T. Dorland.

BY the death of John T. Dorland, in April last, the Friend community was robbed of a very useful minister, and the Christian world lost a man of great influence. For the story of his career we are indebted to sketches which recently appeared in The Friend and One and All, from the pen of William King Baker.

JOHN DORLAND was a Canadian by birth, having been born in the village of Wellington, Ont., in 1860. He was the youngest child of a large family, and passed his childhood on the homestead farm and attending the village school. His parents belonged to the Society of Friends, or Quakers, and were among the most honoured in the place. Passing from school to college, he laid a good educational foundation. At the age of eighteen he underwent the spiritual change which turned the whole course of his career. His conversion was owing to the solicitude of another young man, who probably little thought that in pressing the claims of Christ upon John Dorland, he was bringing into the Kingdom one for whom God had signal service in reserve.

Setting aside his natural desire and ambition to study for the law, John Dorland yielded his life and powers to God, and prepared for Gospel work. After a brief engagement as a teacher, he undertook journeys in Canada, and paid a brief visit to England. In 1881 he married, and the following year took up his residence in the United States, visiting several Yearly Meetings. In the words of W. K. Baker: "It was during the time he resided in Cleveland that the Lord gave him that increased thirsting desire for Himself which made him adopt the prayer of Moses, 'I beseech Thee, show me Thy glory.' John Dorland then and ever afterwards found that a living thirst for God led not to self-seeking or pride, but resulted in a true abasement, even as Moses 'bowed his head toward the earth and worshipped,' or as Isaiah knew the uncleanness of his lips, as Job 'abhorred himself,' and as Paul was humbled. He also found the blessed fruit of true humility in a self-surrender which is ever ready, without self-consciousness, to say, as Isaiah, 'Send me,' or as Paul, 'I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision.'"

In 1888 John Dorland crossed the Atlantic on religious service, and attended the Dublin and London Yearly Meetings. The following year found him again in Canada, and in 1890 he made a tour through Palestine and the East. Having resolved to remain in England, he settled at Willesden Junction, and soon was full of work, speaking at conventions and other meetings, advocating the temperance cause, and advancing the adult school movement. Time would fail to tell of other travels in the East and the West, of commercial engagements, intermitting religious efforts, of domestic cares as well as public duties.

John Dorland was secretary of the Friends' First-Day School Association, and editor of One and All, the organ of the movement. The obituary sketch in that monthly says: "He seldom, if ever, missed attending the newly-started Willesden school, when he was at home from the country, or was not engaged at the Bunhill Fields or some other London schools. The quiet manner in which he placed himself alongside members, and, notwithstanding his many gifts, took the part of an ordinary member in the discussions, was ever instructive as revealing the unique tenderness and strength of his own character as well as the true adult school spirit.

"A gentleman, who was a constant attender of the Willesden School, and a keen judge of character, hearing of his death, wrote:—'I don't know when anyone has impressed me more by goodness, and gentleness, and Christ-likeness than he has done. Every word he spoke was so kind, and loving, and thoughtful, and his wisdom and prudence were very striking in all things I have seen him do or say. . . I sympathise with you all for losing so good a man and so kind a friend, but you will hear his voice for many a year, although you will see his face here no more.'"

His friend Mr. Baker writes: "The emphasis of living reality was given to what John Dorland said by what he did. Right conversation may influence, but right conduct is ever more convincing still. There were special and almost insuperable difficulties in the way of one successfully engaging in business, whose time was so largely devoted to the holding of meetings and to such constant service in Gospel ministry, but whenever circumstances permitted, John Dorland with patient and faithful devotion applied himself to business duties."

(From Photograph by Messrs. C. E. Fry & Son, 7, Gloucester-terrace, S.W.)

Our friend died at Didsbury, near Manchester, on April 18, leaving a widow and four children. One passage in his last address comes with the force of a solemn appeal: "My dear friends, are any of us wondering why the Holy Spirit is not working in our hearts, why He is not adding his seal to our service? May it be because Jesus is not yet glorified—because Jesus is not yet in his right place in our hearts, not yet first in everything? Beloved, put first things first, Calvary before Pentecost, Jesus on the throne of our hearts, and then the Holy Spirit will add his witness thereunto with rivers of living water."

The fragrance of John Dorland's life will be with us for many a day. Though only thirty-six years of age when he died, his life was rich in activity and fruitful of spiritual results. He put "first things first," and so accomplished in a short time more than some are able to achieve in lives of many years. May God multiply such teachers and preachers—men of spiritual energy, philanthropic devotion, and transparency of life.

Babes in the Wood.

[The following paragraphs are taken from Mrs. Kerwin's deeply-touching little annual report.]

WHAT a boon for a sickly London child to spend a fortnight at our Forest Cottage Home! What a revelation the cleanliness, the comfort, the abundance of good food, and fresh air must be to a poor child brought up in dreadful surroundings! No wonder that the change works like magic on their weakened bodies, and that rosy cheeks and bright eyes take the place of pinched faces and listless looks. No one who has not experienced it can understand how much these children need to learn of the decencies of life. Our Home is not only a Convalescent Home, but a happy school, in which the children learn how to mould their future life, should they ever have homes of their own.

Said a little girl the other day, pointing to the pantry, "What's that; what's inside that door?" And when told that it was a pantry, she wanted to know what it was for. "To keep food in, and to keep what we eat nice and clean." "Oh," replied the child, "we haven't got one, mother keeps the bread and butter and things under the bed, but nobody ever sees, for she puts a curtain round." And then she added, in quite Irish style, "If anyone ever came to see us, they would not be any wiser, for nobody ever does." A few days later, this same child said to the matron, "How nice it is to be here, not to have any beer-cans flung at your head." These few words revealed a sad picture of the place she called "home." Then think how much the daily life at our Home must impress the minds of the poor children who come to us. And the good influence does not end there, for there is the daily religious training that comes in the every-day routine; the morning and evening gathering of the children round the matron for their simple Bible-lesson and prayer. The "sweet story of old," told in a manner that will reach the youngest heart, and the easy text from the Word of Life, often find lodging places in the young minds to bring forth fruit hereafter to the glory of God. Those who already know the love of Christ are strengthened and encouraged to go on persevering in the good path. The vulgar song, the coarse jest, are stifled, and lips that knew no other way of expressing their joyfulness are taught the gentle rhythm of some sweet hymn.

To children who have left the Hospital after a severe illness our home is an inestimable benefit. Pale, sickly, and weak, a fortnight near the forest trees, and the lovely air of Wanstead Park, works wonders on their feeble bodies, and brings them, with the blessing of God, back to health, and fills their life with present joy. Not a few of the children have never before left their miserable homes in the back streets of London, and to such a run beneath our forest trees, or a rest in a shady nook, with the birds flying overhead, or singing in their leafy bowers, is a perfect delight. What gladness the wild flowers bring to them, and with what delight they are plucked, tended, and carried back to their dismal homes, that mother and sisters may see something of the fairy land from which they have come! For a time all thoughts of their sad lives are forgotten; no lessons to learn, no scrubbing to do, no fretful baby to mind, no weary trudge through hot, fetid streets, nothing to trouble or sadden or pain, but one blissful fortnight of ever-recurring pleasure.

During the past year, 186 children have spent a holiday at the Home, making a total of 1,023 since its establishment. We purpose continuing our work among those poor children again this year, and therefore plead with those who have so kindly taken an interest in this Home to help us again.

HELEN J. KERWIN.

Inchcolm, Wallwood-road, Leytonstone, E.

Blind in Workhouses.—According to annual custom, the blind in North London workhouses, numbering seventy-one, and their guides—in all, 120—were entertained on Tuesday, June 23, in the gardens of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind. They came from Islington, St. Pancras, St. Luke's, and Shoreditch Workhouses. The expressions of gratitude were touching in the extreme. The one regret which the hon. superintendents (Rev. H. and Mrs. Bright) felt was that the funds subscribed would not allow them to invite a far greater number.

The Evangelical Alliance.

JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

THIS week is an interesting and memorable one in the history of Evangelical Christendom. It is the Jubilee time of that excellent organisation the Evangelical Alliance. As already noted in our columns, the occasion receives an added quota of value and importance in the amalgamation of the Conference meetings with those of the usual Mildmay Conference. Some preliminary gatherings were held specially in relation to the Alliance. There was a celebration in Liverpool on Thursday last, when a civic reception was given by the Lord Mayor (Lord Derby), on behalf of the Corporation, and an evening meeting was held, presided over by Bishop Ryle. On Saturday there was a reception of some of the foreign delegates at Westminster Abbey. On Sunday sermons were preached in more than a hundred London churches and chapels, bearing on the principles and work of the Alliance.

On Monday afternoon a special prayer-meeting of friends was held at Exeter Hall. This was followed by an international conversazione and reception of delegates, when the Lower Exeter Hall overflowed with the crowd of ladies and gentlemen wishing to be present.

The public meeting in the Great Hall at 6.30 was marked by an immense and representative audience, gathered from many lands. The platform showed a fine array of venerable and well-known figures in the religious world. These were so numerous, it is impossible to enumerate or specify. Lord POLWARTH, as president of the British branch of the Alliance, was able to be present, and to preside, though he was hardly out of the hands of the physician, and was suffering from loss of voice. After an opening psalm of praise, earnest prayer was made, and thanksgiving offered to God by Dr. D. McEwan, of Clapham.

A resolution of thanksgiving to God for the blessed results that have followed the operations of the Alliance during the past half-century, and of desire for still further happy results, was moved by Dr. BROKERSTETH, Bishop of Exeter. He said he was glad to emphasise the point in the resolution which accentuated "the oneness of the Church of Christ." It was impossible that Christ's prayer for the unity of his Church should not have been largely answered these centuries since He left the world. He believed in his inmost heart that there is now, though not a perfect, yet a large fulfilment of our Lord's prayer, which did not refer to ecclesiastical conformity, but to essential unity. Many evidences of this oneness were thankfully mentioned by the speaker. The very differences ecclesiastically considered were a help to real unity of spirit, as they give occasion for the exercise of the Christian virtues of mutual charity and love.

The resolution was seconded by Dr. G. F. PENNECOCK (Presbyterian). All the ecclesiastical divisions in Christendom, he said, had not been able to destroy the unity of the one Church, and never can destroy it while Jesus Christ is the one Head. Christian fellowship, too, is better than ecclesiastical recognition. When we talk about making Christian unity we forget the mandate of the Holy Ghost, "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." This Alliance has helped all the churches to keep this unity. This unity has been more imperilled by attempts at external conformity than by anything else. Let us always recognise this unity in any Church in which Christ is the Head, and in every individual Christian who has the Spirit of Christ. If we have the cordial fellowship of our fellow Christians we can spare all else. On the basis of that fellowship we have in this Alliance Christian unity, and, as a result, Christian co-operation in all good work, and against every evil power.

A warm supporter of the resolution appeared in the person of Dr. J. H. RIGG (Methodist). He recalled the wonderful stir of feeling and depth of emotion that characterised the early gatherings of the Alliance. If the Alliance had done nothing more than keep alive the truth of Christian unity it would have done much. A warm reference to the work done by the Archbishop of Dublin (who was present) in promoting the spirit of unity was cordially cheered. The influence of the Alliance, said Dr. Rigg, though unobtrusive, has been felt far and wide, especially in furthering religious liberty on the European continent. The condition of things to-day in this respect in some parts of the Continent is vastly different from what it was fifty years ago. There is much reason therefore to be of good courage as to the future. He also maintained that organic union is not the way to real unity. In so far as it could be attained, it would be imposing an iron swaddling band that would suffocate the spirit of unity and prevent that liberty without which there could be no unity whatever. There is at present a reaction against such organic union. Variety of view is needed for the completeness of truth which is too large to be fully represented by any one body of Christians.

[594]

Some fervid words followed from the Archbishop of DUBLIN, as a representative of the ancient Church of Ireland. He was proud to be associated with the Alliance at such an auspicious celebration. While he did not desire corporate fusion, he did regard denominational differences as an evil, perhaps a necessary evil. Let us at least have fraternization and go on to federation; thus preparing ourselves for the complete fusion which we should realise in the life to come. The resolution was carried by acclamation, and the great audience then joined in singing the stately German chorale—

Now thank we all our God
With hearts and hands and voices.

"THESE FIFTY YEARS"

was the title of a bird's-eye view of the history of the Alliance, given by Mr. A. J. ARNOLD, General Secretary. Brief though it was in comparison to the amount of ground covered, it was much too lengthy for our columns. We can only give some salient extracts:—

To be strictly accurate, the Alliance is fifty-one years old, for it was at the conference in Liverpool in 1845 that it was practically founded. Even for two or three years before that date correspondence was taking place between friends of Christian union in Scotland and England on the one hand, and like-minded men on the Continent of Europe, and in America, on the other.

The interest thus evoked led in 1846 to the actual organisation of the Alliance, when some 800 brethren from all countries, and of fifty different Evangelical denominations, came together. This conference included many of the best men in all the churches, and some of the noblest Christian leaders of their time. They formed the Evangelical Alliance, not to create unity, but to give expression to a great truth—the oneness of the Body of Christ. The Society set before itself the promotion of brotherly love and union between the followers of Christ in various lands—by correspondence and otherwise; in seeking to maintain and diffuse the truth, to exert a beneficial influence on the advancement of Evangelical religion, and on the counteraction of infidelity, of Romanism, and of other forms of error and superstition, and the desecration of the Lord's Day.

The British organisation was the first formed (1846). Since then the great tree has been spreading its branches all over the world, sometimes taking the form of national organisations and at other times attaching themselves as branches to the British stem. There is now scarcely a country without its auxiliary of the Alliance. The latest addition to the Alliance family is Hungary. Only last month, during the visit of the deputation of the Evangelical Alliance, which was sent to Buda-Pesth in connection with the Millennial celebration, over 120 Protestants in that city, and including some dignitaries of the Reformed Church, and other eminent men, signed a declaration approving the principles of the Alliance and expressing desire to be recognised as a branch. In the General Conference the Alliance meets as a whole, and to-night we inaugurate the tenth of these great international gatherings.

I must omit all reference to a large number of subsidiary matters, and touch only some of the more prominent features of the work. First, the observance of the week of universal prayer. This season of united prayer was commenced in 1846, shortly after the formation of the British Alliance, and for some twelve years was observed among members of the Alliance only. Then came an urgent request from missionaries in India that this week of prayer should be extended, and that the Alliance invitation should be addressed to Christians generally throughout the world. This plan was adopted, and henceforth the invitation was issued in the name of the whole Alliance, and the programme for the week has been adopted universally by Christians in all lands, and the observance has extended throughout the world, till now it is difficult to name a country where this week of prayer, in the early days of January, has not been introduced. The reports received from distant lands constantly tell of revivals of religion and increased spiritual life as following the observance.

Secondly, conferences. I do not now refer to the fifty annual conferences of the British Alliance, and which have often had important results. I refer more particularly to the international conferences of the Alliance, two of which have been held in London, seven in other European capitals, and one in New York. These Ecumenical assemblies have marked a distinct and unique feature in the promotion of Christian union in the wider and international sense. Not only have these gatherings been helpful in promoting brotherly love between Evangelical Christians of all lands, but the addresses given on a great variety of subjects relating to Christian life and work have been invaluable, and form a library quite unique in its way.

It would be interesting to follow the various efforts made during the past fifty years by the Alliance to obtain religious freedom for our persecuted brethren and sisters all over the world. Almost every country in Europe and many lands beyond have witnessed the persistent but calm and unostentatious efforts made by this Evangelical Alliance in favour of religious liberty, sometimes by the British branch acting alone, and at other times by the combined efforts of the various branches in Europe and America. This department of work has always been a difficult and delicate one. In many cases publicity must be avoided, or the persecution of our brethren would be accentuated rather than relaxed. Care and caution have to be exercised in regard to the statements made, and while this has led some critics, and even a few friends, to complain of the slowness of our methods, on the other hand it has established for the Evangelical Alliance a reputation for fairness and absence of exaggeration, which has given it an authority and an influence far beyond the expectations of its most sanguine friends. [Mr. Arnold's able review comprised many instances of this intervention by the Alliance on behalf of the oppressed, but space forbids quotation.]

In closing, Mr. Arnold said:—

Numerous instances might be given, did time permit, of the value of this department of the work in many lands, but enough has been said to indicate the lines along which the Alliance has been moving; and surely it may be claimed that it has been an eminently practical organisation, and one upon which God has set his seal—giving it a power and influence which has already been felt throughout the world, and which by his continued favour will lead to still greater results, until the time shall come when full religious liberty will be enjoyed in all lands, and the perfect unity for which our Lord prayed will be manifested.

At the beginning of his review Mr. Arnold mentioned the names of some of those who were prominent in forming the Alliance. Of those, so far as he knew, only two were present at the jubilee—Dr. Angus and Dr. Newman Hall.

Thereafter followed an address of welcome by Lord POLWARTH. In the course of his address he said:—"We meet to realise that our union in Christ is a marvellous spiritual fact. As members of the one spiritual body of our Risen Lord we have each our separate sphere, our distinctive appellation, our peculiar privilege to minister to the welfare of the whole body corporate. We recognise the fact that outward environment, national influences, education, and the trend of the historic past, have all had their share in the moulding of different types of mind, of preference for different forms of Church government and worship; and not less, that great unalterable truths, viewed from different standpoints, received under different influences, like giant mountains assume different aspects, and leave different impressions according to the manner in which they are received."

"Unity of life with variety of manifestation seems to be God's order in the world of Nature; Life, adapted and adapting itself to the world's great wants and to God's great purposes. It is less God's method in the Kingdom of Heaven—that Kingdom Christ came to establish on earth? Many are vainly idealising what they term the Reunion of Christendom: they base their hopes of blessing to the world on ecclesiastical reunion, on a vast re-organisation of the outward visible churches of Christendom. We desire to speak with all respect of earnest men, animated by noble aspirations; but we are bound to state we fear it is a human—not the Divine—ideal. We are reminded how painfully in the past have the churches aimed at uniformity, and with what disastrous results. Our blessed Lord's prayer for his own indicates also the nature of that union as one not of human organisation, but of a spiritual nature, manifest by that harmony with Himself and his Father, which shall commend to the world the beauty of the Divine character, and the riches of his grace.

"Met, as we are, from all countries, and representing companies of hundreds and thousands and millions, all marching on in the service of our one Sovereign, we would realise to-day that, in view of the great work to be done, alike in civilised and uncivilised lands, it is a solemn duty to hush every contentious word, and to come under the sublime influence of that calm Voice which long ago rebuked the disciples, when, with the hour of his great sorrow before Him, He toiled towards Jerusalem, and they disputed who amongst them should be the greatest. Oh, that the Christian Church would realise the difference between dissent and dissension! Dissent may be a duty—only let men weigh well and calmly if such a call come from God or man. Oh, that the Christian Church would learn to respect the convictions, yea, even the scruples, of her people. The spirit of persecution and intolerance is opposed to the mind of Christ. It is our duty to uphold the great fundamental verities of our faith: but even this must be done in a spirit of charity and love.

"Let us not be satisfied with a merely sentimental declaration of union, and of maudlin affection, which may evaporate or turn to vinegar; but let this, our Jubilee gathering, bring us so under the sway of the Prince of Peace as that we shall be pervaded by a spirit of love not less than Divine in its origin, and human alike in its spirit of genuine manliness and deep sympathetic tenderness. Let us seek to make this Jubilee gathering a hallowed epoch in our history—a fresh starting point of development in the spread of a spirit of unity, of charity, and of practical co-operation."

Lord Polwarth concluded his address by welcoming in turn the delegates from different lands.

Some additional words of fraternal welcome were addressed to the French and German delegates in their own tongues by Archdeacon SINCLAIR. He prefaced his remarks by a few hearty sentences of greeting to the American brethren. His stately, rolling periods in both languages were much cheered. He well observed, in closing, that there is a unity in which we ought all to share—a common individual union with our Lord Jesus Christ.

BRIEF RESPONSES

came from delegates. The venerable Pasteur HOCART spoke for the sister churches of France. The Christians there often sigh, he said, for more fellowship and co-operation, such as are to be found in more Protestant lands. Germany found a capable representative in Count BERNSTORFF, who said the Alliance was more than international—it was extra-national—it came down from heaven itself. He wished for it another fifty years of happy and useful life. A fervent wish by Count Bernstorff that the great Church of England should preserve her Protestant character received the loudest cheer of the evening. Dr. JOHN HALL, of New York, was very happy in his response on behalf of the United States, and in his references to the outcome of the spirit of the Alliance in the Western land. Sir J. W. DAWSON briefly responded for Canada.

In somewhat broken English, but in terms of warm import, Rev. CAV. PONS, from Italy, spoke of the aims of the Alliance, and the appreciation of them by his Evangelical fellow countrymen. Austro-Hungary was represented by Prof. SZABO, of Budapesth, who enthusiastically echoed the sentiments of previous speakers. Then little Switzerland appeared, in the person of Dr. NAVILLE, of Geneva, who said the general Conferences in that city and in Basle had left good and lasting results. Dean VAHL, from Denmark, recalled the memory of the Copenhagen Conference. Dr. VAN WYK, of Holland, eloquently greeted the British brethren, introduced some of his fellow-delegates, and pointed out some historical links that bind together the two countries. Pastor STORJOHANN had the double duty of responding for Sweden and Norway, which he did in terms of warm gratitude to the Alliance for what it had done in Scandinavia.

A special interest attached to the utterances of the next delegate, Mr. PROKHANOFF, a Stundist, who spoke for Russia, and thanked the Alliance for the noble and continuous efforts made for his fellow-Christians. These trials are uniting the persecuted ones in Russia, and are forming out of them a Russian Evangelical Alliance. He looked forward to the time when a Conference would be held in St. Petersburg or Moscow. Another representative of a down-trodden people was Pastor BEHESNILIAN, an Armenian, who conveyed to the Alliance the salutations of the churches in Cilicia, the land of St. Paul. Greece had sent Dr. KALOPOTHAKES, of Athens; while Rev. M. J. ELLIOTT, of Alexandria, and Rev. R. BAYN, of Sydney, briefly replied for Egypt and Australia respectively.

Then was sung a closing hymn, and the interesting proceedings came to a close with the benediction.

JOINT CONFERENCE, MILD MAY.

The Mildmay Conference is not quite so old as the Alliance, but this year's is the fortieth Conference. The combined meetings opened on Tuesday morning with all the customary tokens of interest. Just on the eve of assembling a gentle rain began to fall, and this may have accounted for the fact that there was no crush for the opening session, though the hall was well filled in every part.

Lord POLWARTH took the chair, and punctually to the clock the proceedings began with the singing of the hymn:—

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty,
Early in the morning our song shall rise to thee.

Prayer in keeping with the occasion followed from Rev. D. B. HANKIN, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay. He very tenderly bore up in his petition those who in different lands are suffering for conscience' sake. He also gave thanks that, owing to the terms of the Pope's encyclical, published in the morning papers, union with Rome now seemed impossible. The chairman read from Eph. iv. as to the unity in diversity that God has ordained in the Christian Church. Then was sung the historic Mildmay hymn:

Jesus, stand among us
In thy risen power;
Let this hour of worship
Be a hallowed hour.

After some notices from Colonel Morton, repeated partly in German by Count Bernstorff, the Chairman welcomed to Mildmay the foreign friends, in the name of the common Master. He then spoke some prefatory words on the theme of the Conference,

THE TRUE UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

The aspect of it to be considered this morning was that unity in its origin—new birth and life.

He traced this origin back to its eternal source in the loving heart of the triune God. It was manifested to the world in the incarnate Son, and was confirmed to the Church by the power of the Divine Spirit. The Church is Christ's, only because He dwells in it.

REV. W. E. BURROUGHS

was the first speaker, taking as the basis of his words Eph. iv. 3: "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." There is, he said, a false and specious unity, which is opposed to the real unity desired by the Apostle Paul. The Pope, in his latest encyclical, claims that St. Peter is the centre of unity in the Church of Christ. Mr. Burroughs thanked God that he belonged to a Church which had a better centre of unity than that. God means his Church to be one. The speaker's remarks were on the general subject of unity, and did not refer specially to the programme division—its origin in birth and life. The greatest hindrances to-day to the progress of Christ's kingdom are the unhappy divisions in the Church. What might she not have done for her Lord these nineteen centuries if she had been truly united!

At this stage, Dr. JOHN HALL, of New York, led the assembly in prayer, making special intercession for kings and rulers, and all in authority; that they might realise their responsibility towards their subjects, in granting freedom of conscience, and liberty to serve and worship God.

DR. OSWALD DYKES

continued the consideration of the subject of the day. All Christians, he said, desire to some extent to realise their unity. It may be done either through the possession of a common life, or through some organic form. We must respect the advocates of this latter method, however mistaken it may be. But it fails to embrace all Christians; there are more true Christians outside of Rome than inside its boundaries. Roman Catholicism simply unchurches all others, so that its unity after all is only the unity of a sect. Such a unity, too, is not truly spiritual, and therefore it is nothing more than a uniformity of framework—a poor sort of unity at the best, if it were attainable, which it is not. Primitive Church history shows that the Church has ever been multiform and not uniform. In our day, certainly, Christendom is split up and heterogeneous in the extreme, so that it more represents a battlefield than a body of Christ. So we must look deeper than the outside to that which is spiritual and vital—the unity of a common life—a living union with the personal Lord. There is nothing else that is common to all Christians and all true churchmen. This life springs out of the new birth, and it has no other origin. All the Apostles unite in testifying to this fundamental fact. This is the root mystery of Christian experience, which we call the birth from above. Whatever be the diverse outward forms, the deepest springs of every Christian meet in Christ and are unified in Him. This unity is the spiritual and eternal brotherhood of the saints. Surface differences cannot rend it; neither can misunderstandings, nor even enmities. It is indestructible, though we may doubt and dread and suspect one another, and even thirst for the other's blood. In heaven we shall see it to be so, but even here we may see something of it. Rome unchurches us, but we do not therefore unchurch them. All saints united to Christ, the Head, have communion in each other's gifts and graces, and we are bound to maintain that communion. There is a threefold aspect of this unity—first, that of a spiritual type of sanctified character, which may show much variety. There is also the unity of an organisation in which all the members contribute to the benefit of the whole. God has bestowed diversity of gifts so that our very differences enable us the better to serve the one Head. We are united by a third bond, that of love. We have far too little of it; so far as we have it, it is a direct result of our secret possession of one common life in the Holy Ghost, as the regenerate children of our common Father in heaven.

A brief contribution to the expansion of the same theme was made by Pastor CORREYON, of Frankfort. He said that flesh and spirit can never coalesce; we must go out of one into the other. This fact of individual regeneration is the link that binds all the members of the Evangelical Alliance together. God has given variety in the natural world, and so He has in the spiritual world. We cannot become one gigantic whole, but we can mutually love and respect each other. Why should we think it necessary that, in order to love one Church, we must calumniate another? In Germany, those parts where the Holy Ghost has worked most largely are the places where the principles of the Evangelical Alliance are allowed to prevail. There are united prayer and Bible study, and such union is often more profitable than the most eloquent sermon.

The meeting closed with a hymn, and the benediction from Bishop Taylor.

The engagements of the week continue at Mildmay till Saturday morning. The Communion service will be held this year on Friday afternoon.

Our report of the proceedings will be continued next week.

Keswick in India.

We have completed our first Coonoor Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, and our mouths are filled with praise because of the great things God hath done for us. Following closely upon the Ootacamund Convention, the gatherings here were blessed to some whose souls had been ploughed deeply by the Word there, leading them into possession of the peace that passeth all understanding.

The subject indicated for the meetings was "Abiding." The plan of the Convention was very similar to the parent one at Keswick. While the numbers were naturally small in comparison, the power of God was felt in a marked degree. On the first day, "I in Christ" was the theme expounded, and the position and obligations of the believer were emphasised. Next day, the "Indwelling Christ" was the glorious privilege offered to our faith. Hearts were bowed in shame and penitence as the barrenness of past experience was contrasted with the fulness of blessing, the height and depth of love, in which we might have revelled. It was a natural step to the consideration of "The Victorious Life" on the following day. Its conditions and possibilities were unfolded from the Word in demonstration of the Spirit and in power. The keynote of this day was "Sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts," and the praise-meeting of Friday morning was alive with heavenly music set to that key.

As was befitting in this land, the Convention was brought to a close with two missionary meetings, where the needs and triumphs of the harvest-field were set forth by many tried workers. The importance and widespread influence of such a gathering are beyond reckoning.

The missionaries present are soon to be scattered over the land, and as the outflow of the water of life pours from the believing soul, its resurrection power shall be manifested in spite of the surrounding death of heathenism, and hope shall penetrate into the homes of despair. D. R. LOGAN.

Coonoor, Nilgiris, So. India.

The British Temperance League held its annual meetings last week in Halifax. A paper on up-to-date temperance advocacy, read by Mr. C. Wakely, of the U.K. Band of Hope Union, said that the cry of to-day must be the same as that in 1836. Total abstinence was the only cure for the drinking evil. Enthusiasm for the cause was essential to success. They must make use of plain and simple language in their addresses. Sometimes the manner of the speaker would prevail more with an audience than the matter. If they were to be faithful and successful advocates, good sense and kindly feeling must characterise the manner, and solid arguments the matter of their addresses. A vigorous discussion followed on clubs and their abuses.

[596]

THE EVANGELIST.

"As a Thick Cloud."

By DR. G. F. PENTECOST.

GOD is pleading with backslidden Jacob and Israel to return to Him from their sins and backslidings, and his great argument is his grace and the fulness and freeness of his forgiveness. "Remember these, O Jacob and Israel, for thou art My servant: I have formed thee; thou art My servant; O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of Me. I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto Me; for I have redeemed thee" (Isa. xlv. 21, 22). The grace of this passage is most wonderful. Note that it is not an offer of forgiveness upon terms, it is an unconditional declaration of God's love and forgiveness, upon which He bases a plea, that his backslidden nation should return unto Him. He does not say, "I am thy Creator and Judge; thou art My servant; if thou wilt return unto Me, I will blot out thy sins and transgressions"; but as a father, heartbroken with sorrow, and yet overflowing with love to an offending son, God pleads, declaring all his heart and the fulness of his forgiveness, and beseeches the transgressor to come back to Him. It is the same beautiful Gospel proposition of which Paul tells us, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them" (2 Cor. v. 19).

But look again at the fulness of this grace. "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." Many years ago I was walking with a companion through the higher Alpine regions between the Rhône glacier and the Wetterhorn. All about us, as far as the eye could reach, the magnificent mountains rose and stretched away, locked in the frigid embrace of the mighty glaciers, and some of them covered with freshly fallen snow; everywhere ice and snow overlaid the mountains, and filled the depressions between them, apparently as much a part of their substance as the earth and rocks of which they were formed. It was the early morning of an August day, the sun not more than two or three hours high, when our attention was attracted by a strange and, to me, novel sight. Before us, round about us in the distance, and above us, from the surface of the ice and snow there arose little thin patches of vapour, some of them seemingly not larger than one's hand; in the distance they looked like birds slowly rising into the sky, which at the time was one vast expanse of azure blue. As these little patches of mist arose they were almost as white as the snow whence they came; but as they rose higher and higher they took on grey and darker hues. At first they rose each separately, but in mid-air many of them united, until the sky was filled with clouds more or less large, constantly reinforced by the still-rising mist-patches, gradually increasing in size and blackness until, in the course of an hour or two, the sun was entirely obscured, and all the fair heavens filled with rolling clouds, driven by various contending cross-currents of air, like armies marshalling for battle.

Blacker and blacker grew the clouds, lowering and ominous with dark threatenings. Now on the far-off horizon there flared across the cloud a luminous glow of sheet lightning, followed by the rumble of distant thunder. This was but the beginning of one of those fierce Alpine storms of which I had read, Presently the artillery of heaven sounded nearer, and the lightning flashed forth in angry flames, followed by terrific peals of thunder; blacker grew the clouds, swirling and rolling under the impulse of rising winds; from every quarter of the sky the lightnings flashed, and peal after peal of thunder rent the air, until at last one vast, angry, ragged flame of light cut across the sky, blinding our eyes and causing us to crouch as if smitten by the bolt; and followed by such a crash of thunder that the very mountains seemed as if they were being rent from their solid bases; then came down rain such as I had never seen. We fled for refuge under the shelter of a great rock, and watched with trembling a storm of such fury as I had never dreamed of.

For an hour the storm raged; but there was another force at work beyond and above the storm-clouds. The rain ceased, the winds grew quiet, the lightning no more flashed, and the thunder ceased its dreadful roar. By-and-bye there came a rift in the darkness above, and a patch of blue sky appeared. Then the clouds were torn into bits and began to roll away—where they went I do not know—and the glorious sun shone forth, triumphant over that awful storm and those terrible clouds which provoked, if they did not breed, the lightning and thunder. In less than an hour there was nowhere a cloud to be seen in the heavens, but everywhere the glorious sunshine filled space. The whole scene, from the first rising of the little mist-patches till the passing away of the storm and the return of the sunshine, was a scene of surpassing wonder, terror, and beauty. Now the clouds were all blotted out, heaven and earth were once more reconciled, and those mighty mountains, but a little ago wrapped in sullen and awful gloom, trembling from base to peak in the riven air, appeared the embodiment of a peace that seemed eternal.

Then I thought of that beautiful passage of Scripture, "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." And God talked to me out of those rising and dissipated clouds: "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies," etc. (Matt. xv. 19). These are the clouds that arise out of our hearts, and are turned into deeds, which rise finally into a cloud-mass of sins, which hides God's face from us and fills all the space between us and God with wrath. Our sins breed the lightning of God's wrath, and the thunders of his holy law roar in our ears and make our soul to fear and quake, as did Moses when he stood upon the "mount that burned with fire," that was smothered in blackness and darkness, rent with tempests, and the sound of a trumpet and the voice of words," as he received the law from the hands of God. The power behind this cloud of wrath is God's forgiving grace, and the reason why we are not smitten with the thunderbolt of God's righteous anger is because He who came forth to deliver to us the message of mercy has Himself received the thunderbolt in his own soul. "For God made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Oh, my soul, take thy stand in Jesus, and look up, and behold thy transgressions as a thick cloud, and thy sins as a cloud, all blotted out, and nothing remains in the blue sky but the sunlight of God's blessed love!—Marylebone Presbyterian Pulpit.

For His Little Ones.

An appeal for seaside and country holidays for the sickly and suffering children of the poor of London and elsewhere.

SWEET in its elysium bower,
Blooms the queen-rose crimson red,
And the royal white lily flower
Lightly lifts its graceful head.
Heaven-kissed bells, dewcups unfolded,
Rainbow blossom, sweet and fair,
By the Great Creator moulded,
Breathe his wondrous love and care.
But the children, his own flowers,
Blossoms of his life Divine,
Through the glorious summer hours
In foul courts and alleys pine.

Happy birds are gaily singing
In the vaulted blue above,
Midst each emerald arch are singing
Paeans to the eternal Love.
But his birds whose song of gladness,
Is of all to Him most dear—
They are dumb with pain and sadness,
Moaning low in garrets drear.

O my sisters, O my brothers,
Wind, and wave, and sunbeam play,
And the young lambs by their mothers
Gamble all the live-long day.

But his own wee lambskins weary
For the green fields and the trees.
Wind, and wave, and sunbeam cheery,
Love the seashore; so do these.

Brothers, sisters, would you listen,
'Tis the Saviour's pleading voice,
"Midst wood, streams, and waves that glisten, Bid My little ones rejoice."

HARRIET JOURN EVANS.

Dr. Barnardo's Festival.

IF such a thing were possible Dr. Barnardo may be said to have excelled himself in his summer festival, held last week in the Albert Hall. The spasm of fashionable slumming that seized on Belgravian Society some years ago seems long since to have passed away; but the slums and their products remain. Drink, vice, poverty and misfortune continue to bring forth their perennial harvest of destitution and wretchedness. There is, as yet, no failure in the supply of London waif life, and Dr. Barnardo's big family year by year grows bigger still. The very large and brilliant company that gathered at Kensington Gore on the afternoon of Midsummer Day proves that this work of child-rescue and child redemption retains all its intensity of interest and attraction.

Of course, Dr. Barnardo's method of presenting his case has much to do with the success of his festivals. The modern world is somewhat tired of speeches, but spectacle never seems to pall upon it. As the Albert Hall is eminently a place for display rather than wordy disquisition, it suits admirably such realistic exhibitions of philanthropy in process as were to be seen in it last week. This year Dr. Barnardo omitted that sadly striking bit of realism—the animated bundles of rags, bones, and dirt that constituted the most recent rescues from boy and girl slumdom. Perhaps Society is getting too squeamish to face the naked truth. Certainly the sight of the children after they have been transformed from walkscarecrows into visions of health and beauty, is less likely to disturb the night slumbers of the comfortable spectator. But the picture seemed to lack something of completeness by the absence of contrast.

Dr. Barnardo was fortunate enough this year to secure the presence among his sympathising auditors of the Prince and Princess of Wales and their two unmarried daughters. These royal folk must long ago have been satiated to the point of repletion with sight-seeing and popularity; at any rate they appeared to show a close and deep interest in the specimen illustrations of Dr. Barnardo's many-sided mission work that were presented to them in the spacious area of the Albert Hall. These illustrations were much of the same pattern, and on the same scale, as bygone festivals have familiarised us with. But they can bear a lot of repetition, and we scarcely think it will be necessary for Dr. Barnardo to vary his programme much for years to come. The presence of the royal visitors doubtless drew a proportion of the audience, but if they had been absent more than enough remained to hold the attention and excite the admiration of every Christian mind and heart.

When the royal party had taken their places at five o'clock, and the Duke of Sutherland had formally filled the chair, the immense juvenile choir that covered the great orchestra sang an opening song of praise. These youthful choristers were rather overshadowed during the evening by the exciting performances of the arena, but of themselves they constituted a splendid and convincing argument for the work—Dr. Barnardo's Homes. A prettier sight could not be seen in a long day's march, than these serried ranks of lasses with their fresh and smiling faces, and their pretty coloured frocks; while behind were groups of equally bonnie boys. To think that in the great majority of cases they had been, a short time before, forlorn and tattered waifs of London streets! Verily great is the transforming power of Christian care and kindness.

The Archbishop of ARMAGH offered prayer, not extempore it is true, but framed in language of wonderful appropriateness and beauty. Then the children sang the stirring strains of "The Empire Flag," with the waving of a forest of tiny Union Jacks as a chorus accompaniment. Letters of apology from many absent friends having been read by Archdeacon Sinclair, to the silver-tongued Canon FLEMING was entrusted the task of greeting the royal party in words of loyal welcome and gratitude for their kindness in being present. The Canon was thoroughly equal to the occasion, and his words rang out clearly through the wide spaces of the hall. Having uttered some courtly words of appreciation, he said:—

£1000 the third year. It must be understood, however, that all gifts to that fund are special and extra, and must not be allowed to interfere in any way with the permanent and general fund for carrying on the work. There are ample reasons why the nation should take care of its children. The country suffers if it neglects its children; the country will pay for it if it neglects its children. The cost of education is far less than the cost of neglect. Every child born has a right to clothing, food, and education. He has a body, a head, and a heart. But he has also a soul; and so this is Christian, saving work. No law can do it. The law can restrain, but it cannot train. No Government can do it. Nothing can do it but practical Christian love. For these children before your Royal Highnesses, and thousands like them, are not outcasts. They are our own children—English, Irish, Scotch. They plead with us all, and the babes will plead without a voice. Above all, they are the children of our Father in heaven. If our Saviour were here to-day He would not call them outcasts. He would take them in his arms. He does take them in his arms, and He says, 'It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.' In his name we say to this vast audience:—

Gather them in from the lanes and streets;
Gather them in from their dark retreats;
Gather them in from the dens of crime;
Gather them in in their early prime;
Gather them in for their country's weal;
Gather them in with a Christian zeal."

Surely a neat, compact, comprehensive, eloquent, and altogether admirable little speech on behalf of a great cause. It was somewhat later in the proceedings before the Prince of WALES made his brief reply, but it may be given here for the sake of continuity. His Royal Highness was warmly cheered as he rose and said:—

"The Princess of Wales and myself experience great gratification in attending the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of these national institutions for waif children. For many years we have both taken a deep interest in unceasing endeavours to solve those problems of poverty which must claim the attention of all thoughtful people. It is clear, beyond all doubt, that thousands yearly begin their early life with very remote prospects that they will be blessed with an education which will assist them in earning an honest livelihood. These Homes are, I believe, carrying out a work dear to all who wish well to their country, inasmuch as they have reclaimed thousands of children from the slums, and are still continuing their benevolent labours. We have seen something to-day of the healthy and homelike surroundings, and the excellent training which the Homes provide for the children they receive. It must be our great wish that continually-increasing success may attend the operations of this beneficent and national work. I am sure we all regret that its progress should be jeopardised by the accumulation of liabilities such as those which have been described to us. The committee and trustees have, I think rightly, decided to make a great effort, this thirtieth year of the foundation of the Homes, to remove this encumbrance. I trust they will be successful. As we all know, Dr. Barnardo has laboured indefatigably, and I am sure he deserves some mark of approval from the public for all he has done in his important philanthropic work."

[597]

H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES
accepting posies from two wee waifs.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes have now for a period of thirty years opened their doors to every sort of destitution. No doors could be opened wider, for no really destitute children are refused. No bar of birth, or creed, or physical health prevents their admission. Cripples are welcomed, and some come even to suffer and to die. During these thirty years something between 30,000 and 40,000 boys and girls, from babyhood to the verge of adult age, have been received, and nearly 5000 inmates are cared for now, day and night, clothed, fed, and educated. Emigration, carefully organised and carried out, has been the key to much of the success of the institutions. More than 8000 young men and young women have gone forth as emigrants to Canada and elsewhere, to start a fresh life; with this amazing result, that ninety-eight per cent. have proved themselves worthy.

"The financial needs of the work are great. It has no endowment whatever; it is dependent upon the benevolent public for support. The council and trustees avail themselves of this thirtieth anniversary to beseech all who are interested in this national work, to assist them in creating

A RESERVE AND FOUNDATION FUND of £150,000, to be spread over three years. If any one of you to-day shall put down your name, on the paper in your programme, for £3000, you will have only to pay £1000 this year, £1000 next year, and may be designated the backbone of the meeting; the report itself was "taken as read." It is a goodly volume of over 150 pages, and will well repay careful reading. Those about to start on a holiday might do worse than put a copy into a corner of their portmanteau for perusal at quiet moments. The short running commentary which Dr. Barnardo gave, as his "illustrations" came on the scene, was lost, we fear, to the great mass of the audience, but the successive pictorial representations that filled up the great area were watched and cheered and immensely enjoyed. We can only refer to them in the briefest terms.

THE FOUNDER'S ILLUSTRATIONS

First of all the floor was converted with surprising celerity into a polyglot workshop, where thirteen distinct handicrafts and callings were seen in full operation—a regular beehive of busy industry. Next came some pretty flag drill by Ilford girls, who were neatly dressed in blue or white or mauve. "Babies' Castle" was perhaps the success of the evening. The arena was constituted as if by magic into a vast nursery and playground, in which young children of different ages were seen at play, at tea, or in the process of being put to bed. Two pretty flaxen-haired little tots were taken from their cots and gently guided by Dr. Barnardo to the platform, where they presented posies to the Princess of Wales, and were graciously received by Her Royal Highness amid the applause of the admiring company. Thereafter followed, in more or less quick succession, battalion drill by a company of smart boys; a very realistic and amusing rehearsal of the old nursery rhyme, "Four-and-twenty blackbirds"; life and work at the girls' village homes—cooking, washing, making and mending clothes, etc.; a procession of trades, each carrying their insignia of office; a cricket match by cripples; the quaint and extremely pretty picture of the Maypole on the village green; a party of young lad colonists arrayed for the voyage to Canada, and a larger but younger contingent of girls "radiant in red caps"; besides other exhibitions of drill and gymnastics. It was a right royal feast of pretty, splendidly arranged spectacle, and surely no one who saw it could withhold their admiration or repress their delight.

The royal party had to leave for other engagements early in the evening, but the proceedings went on for the space of over three hours. Before the close the thanks of the assembly were given to the chairman in short earnest speeches from Canon Wilberforce and Lord Kinnaird. His Grace the Duke of Sutherland briefly responded. His wife, the fair young Duchess, had left with the royal party. Prizes were presented to "old boys and girls" by the Duchess of Somerset, and there was cheerful music galore from Mr. Proudman's youthful choir. At what hour the boys and girls and children reached their respective destinations we should hardly like to guess; but they certainly earned their night's repose, although the excitement of the day probably kept them wakeful enough.

Australian Aborigines.

DEAR SIR,—During the past year our dormitory has been built. It has cost over fifty pounds, and is paid for, but is not finished for want of means. The building requires windows and other items. We have found the dormitory a great boon, as we have the girls more under our control and away from the camps.

There is a large field here. From this centre a great number of camps of different tribes can be reached. My son spent over a week in visiting some of them lately, but as the weather was very wet he could not do as much as he wished. He hopes to visit them regularly, taking medicine to the sick and gradually overcoming their prejudices and winning them over. The children on the Mission all look bright and happy and are making fair progress in school. The poor old people we cannot do much for. The Australian aboriginal is such an inveterate wanderer it is hard to reach him; even when they have been living in civilisation for years, an uncontrollable desire to wander seem to seize them at times, and off they go.

Our hearts have been gladdened by a request for baptism from one of the boys. We were looking for the coming of some of the brighter and more intelligent boys, and did not expect him. How little we can tell where the Holy Spirit is working.—Sincerely yours,

MARY A. GRIEDLE.

Yarruhbah, Bellenden Ker, via Cairns,
North Queensland.

Pan-Presbyterian Council.

AT the morning session of the Council on Monday, last week, it was decided that the next meeting of the Council should take place in 1899 at Washington, U.S.A. A fraternal address from the Ecumenical Methodist Conference was received and read.

The subject of consideration for the morning was "Church Service." Dr. DAVID STEELE, of Philadelphia, gave a paper on "The Reading of the Scriptures." It was the reading of the inspired Word in the family and in the church that had given strength, stability, and glory to Protestantism. Professor DICK, of Belfast, spoke on "Prayer," which he urged must always be made to God in the name of Christ in dependence on the Holy Spirit, and in submission to the Divine will. Professor STEWART, St. Andrew's, dealt with the place of "preaching" in the church service. A succeeding speaker remarked that the power of preaching lay not so much in argument against unbelief, as the direct immediate presentation of the Incarnate Son of God to the hearts of men. "Praise" was the theme of an address from Rev. T. J. WHELDON, Bangor. He advocated simplicity of language in the hymns of the sanctuary, and said the music ought to further the true expression of the words. Dr. BLAIR, in speaking of "the Sacraments," repudiated the doctrine of baptismal regeneration which was being taught in certain Presbyterian churches. "Christian Giving" was the subject of several speeches. At the evening assembly Lord OVERTOUN spoke on "The Dependence of Presbyterianism on Vital Godliness." Next to the Bible, he said the Presbyterian system owed more to the Shorter Catechism than to any other book. In their body ecclesiastical orders were of small moment compared with the life of Christ pervading the whole Church, and they refused to believe that grace could be conferred either by baptism, confirmation, or ordination.

Tuesday was missionary day. Among the aspects of the missions set forth during the day were "The Student Movement" (by Dr. George Smith), Bible Circulation, Industrial Missions, Centenary of Scottish Missions (by Rev. John Smith, D.D.) etc. Reports were given by Dr. Valentine, Agra; Rev. John Roberts, India; Mr. Ward, of Teheran; Mr. Murray, from the Cape; and others. A strong resolution as to the Armenian atrocities, backed up by a powerful speech from Dr. Ross Taylor, was passed in a rising vote of the council.

On Wednesday the Council took up the topic of "Modern Apologists and Criticism." Principal McVICAR, Montreal, read a paper treating on relations between philosophy and theology. He believed theology had nothing to lose, but everything to gain, by the sober exercise of a reverent critical spirit. They must hold themselves free to receive light from all quarters. On the other hand, many philosophical wranglings had obscured, and even buried beneath heaps of learned rubbish, God's message of redemption, love, and mercy to a fallen world. When physicists and materialists had done their utmost, the whole mass of spiritual phenomena was still unaccounted for and untouched. In a paper on "Methods on Biblical Criticism," Dr. KIDD, of Glasgow, said that in all critical study pre-supposition should be laid aside, and the evidence adduced judged on its own merits. Prof. ZENOS, of Chicago, thought the Church, instead of showing indifference or antagonism to criticism, ought to regulate and control it. An interesting discussion followed.

Wednesday afternoon was taken up with a garden party at Lord Overtoun's residence near Dumbar-ton, which was attended by some 600 or 700 delegates, and was a very pleasing function.

In the evening papers were read on Sabbath-school work, and the claims of great cities. In the forenoon of Wednesday a Women's Missionary Conference was held in the Queen's Rooms, when addresses were given by various ladies.

On Thursday forenoon and afternoon interesting reports were presented as to religious life on the European Continent. Despite many difficulties and hindrances, the outlook was considered hopeful, and such as to encourage continued efforts towards the evangelisation of the European countries. The position of the Stundists in Russia received sympathetic consideration. The aggressive work of the American churches was reported on at the evening session. The efforts to evangelise the coloured population were favourably mentioned by one speaker.

The Council meetings were resumed on Friday morning, when the questions of arbitration, temperance, Sabbath observance, and the purity of the press were successively considered. Reports were also presented on church work in Australia, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Canada, and the West Indies. In the afternoon there was a reception at Glasgow University, when some interesting fraternal speeches were delivered. The valedictory meeting was held in the evening at St. Andrew's Hall. A resolution of sympathy with the Stundists was passed. Dr. Marshall Lang was elected president of the next Council, to be held at Washington. Various expressions of thanks were heartily offered to all who had taken a leading part in the proceedings, and the Council was dissolved.

Prophetic Convention.

AS in past years, the Clapham Prophetic Convention was held at the Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road, under the auspices of Mrs. Meredith's Institutions, June 23-25. Mrs. Meredith, owing to ill-health, was unable to be present, but her message to those present was:—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing but He revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos iii. 7).

On the opening day, after Rev. J. G. TANNER had spoken on "The man clothed in fine linen," Pastor FULLER GOOCH dealt with prophecy as a light that shineth in a dark place (2 Peter i. 19-21). Prophecy holds such an important position in Scripture that it cannot well be let alone. Its golden thread runs throughout the Holy Book. All who were saved in the old dispensation were saved by faith in prophecy; faith, then, looked forward to a suffering Saviour, just as faith now looks back.

In the afternoon, Rev. N. S. TAYLOR gave a Bible reading based on John xvii. 20-22. He showed that the unity of the Church and the unity of Christendom are not synonymous; unity with such corrupt churches as the Roman and Greek is not the unity that Jesus prayed for. The unity of the Church, as a body, cannot be manifested till Jesus comes again, because the Head is absent. Rev. R. E. HINGSTON also gave a Bible reading.

At the evening meeting, Rev. H. C. STURDY spoke on Revelation. In Rev. i. 1, "must shortly come to pass," the meaning John wished to convey was, that when these prophecies were commenced to be fulfilled, they would come to pass speedily. This being so, the prophecies contained in Revelation are not in connection with the fall of Jerusalem. Dr. ANDERSON also gave an exposition on Revelation, and Rev. J. URQUHART followed.

On the second day of the Conference Dr. McKILLIAM expounded Matt. x. 5-20. To see the meaning of God in prophecy, we have to be taught the difference between Jew, Gentile, and the Church. Rev. N. S. TAYLOR gave a Bible-reading; as also did Rev. A. WOOD, who showed the personality and office of the Holy Ghost.

In the evening Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH spoke of "the approaching dawn of day." 2 Peter i. 19; Romans xiii. 12. Retrospect—one long dark night. Prospect—an approaching dawn, a bright morn. May we be ready, waiting, watching, and working when the Master comes. Rev. W. FRITH's subject was—"The Worship of the Age to Come."

Rev. R. MIDDLETON, on Thursday morning, spoke on "Present Signs of Christ's Coming." (1) The revival of the same missionary spirit that energised every saved soul in Apostolic times. (2) Jews are fast returning to Palestine; half the total number of Jews now in Palestine have arrived there within the last seven years. (3) Grievous times shall come; there is a recrudescence of devil worship. "On earth distress of nations with perplexity," a tremendous increase in the number of men trained to kill one another.

Pastor FULLER GOOCH spoke on the threefold office of Jesus, that of prophet, priest, and king. As a prophet He came to Nazareth and preached deliverance to the captive. As a priest He was led to Calvary, and offered Himself up. As king He shall return to reign! Rev. N. S. TAYLOR pointed out the necessity of a literal interpretation of Holy Scripture. In very few cases is it purely figurative.

Rev. G. D. HOOPER gave the last address, on the "Testimony of Prophecy, Parable, and History to our Lord's Second Advent." The signs of Christ's coming have never been so focussed up as they are now. There is anarchy, lawlessness, government without God.

The Conference was well attended.

An Epping Forest Convention.

TWO pleasant and profitable days were spent in the Forest at the close of last week in Bible study and friendly conference on the Lord's work. The meetings were held in a marquée, and the delightful weather and informal character of the proceedings combined to render the gathering a quiet, happy time of spiritual rest and refreshment.

Friday morning was devoted to the consideration of "The Holy Spirit." Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided, opened the proceedings with a few helpful and heart-searching words on the great need of the Church—the power and fulness of the Holy Ghost.

Pastor GEORGE TURNER stirred the hearts of many as he spoke of the threefold work of the Spirit of God as set forth in the Gospel according to John. (1) "He shall bring all things to your remembrance," assuring the disciples of full inspiration and authority, in writing the Gospels and Epistles of the New Testament. (2) "He shall guide you into all truth," guaranteeing direction and guidance in the settlement of questions and difficulties in the founding of the early Church. (3) "He shall show you things to come," securing them against surprise in the development of events, and of evil without and within. While these promises were of first application to the little band who surrounded the Lord Jesus Christ, they are of equal force, when claimed by faith, for the believers of these latter days.

Dr. A. SCHOFIELD, Mr. W. R. LANE, and Mr. J. W. JORDAN followed with practical and pointed words on the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and the need that every worker should seek personal filling for service.

The afternoon was devoted to Home and Foreign Missions. Dr. SCHOFIELD, who presided, led the way with some earnest thoughts on true service. Mr. R. C. MORGAN gave an account of his visit to South Africa, and his observations of Christian work amongst colonists and natives. Mr. J. P. DE RAT, of Johannesburg, added brief testimony as to his long experience at the Cape and in the Transvaal. Mr. J. JACKSON spoke of the Mission to Lepers, and Mr. C. STUART THORPE of rescue work among young women and homeless, wayward, endangered girls.

In the evening Mr. J. W. C. FEGAN presided. The subject of the Lord's coming was introduced by Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, who dealt with elementary but essential truths, showing that death is not the Lord's coming, that He has promised to come personally, even as He went, and that his coming involves translation, transformation, and coronation. Pastor FULLER GOOCH dealt with "Past Revivals," such as that in Josiah's day, in Hezekiah's reign, and on the day of Pentecost, drawing many important lessons therefrom. Pastor D. M. CAMERON followed with reminiscences of the 1859-60 revivals in Ireland and Scotland, and indicated various tokens that God is about to arise and visit his people with reviving.

On the second day the morning meeting was again devoted to important doctrinal themes. Mr. ROBERT BURN, who presided, briefly introduced the subjects to be dealt with. Mr. W. R. LANE, starting with Rom. v. 19, "By the obedience of one shall many be made righteous," spoke of Justification under various aspects. Man, by virtue of his relation to the first Adam, is a sinner, independent of personal transgression; and, on the other hand, the believer becomes righteous before God apart from any question of individual merit. In Adam by nature, in Christ by faith: the whole human race is summed up under these two headships. By natural generation we are in the first Adam, by regeneration we are in Christ. To be in Adam is to be an heir of sin and death; to be in Christ is to be an heir of righteousness and life. We are justified as to source, by grace—as to merit, by blood—as to instrumentality, by faith. In the righteousness of Christ we shall stand accepted for ever in the presence of a holy God. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Dr. NEATBY came next, with the correlative doctrine of Sanctification. At a serious crisis in Israel's history the people were called upon by Joshua (vii. 13) to "sanctify yourselves," so now, ere any great work is done, God must have his people sanctify themselves. In the deepest and fullest sense sanctification is by blood, and is complete for ever before God; but in another sense (as exemplified in 2 Cor. vii. 1) we have to "cleanse ourselves," yielding to the mighty operation of the Holy Spirit. "Perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Dr. GRITTON further developed these themes, linking the two truths together in a few weighty sentences.

Mr. T. B. MILLER, who presided in the afternoon, introduced the subject of evangelistic work.

Mr. H. D. BROWN, of the Christian Colportage Association, gave a short account of the work of that society, which now employs 125 colporteurs, who are stationed in various parts of England, and go from house to house selling the Holy Scriptures and Christian publications, about 42,000,000 of which have been circulated in this way by the Society. These have for the most part been sold to people who had no desire for such reading. Excellent opportunities are also afforded for personal dealing with people on whom the colporteurs call. God has greatly blessed the work to the conversion of sinners, as well as the comfort of his people.

Several of the colporteurs followed with brief and deeply interesting incidents in connection with the whole work, showing what wonderful access they got to people by this house-to-house visitation, and how the Lord was blessing the work.

Mr. W. J. LOCKIE described the work of the Paris City Mission on lines similar to those of the L.C.M., and asked prayer for this difficult work in the French capital. Mr. J. W. C. FEGAN spoke of Ragged School work, enlarging on the imperative necessity of adhering to the old principle of teaching the Word, and seeking to win the young to Christ. Mr. BOYER added a brief account of his labours among drift and cripple children; while Mr. HUNTER, of St. Vincent, West Indies, spoke of the Lord's work among the freedmen.

The evening meeting was largely attended. Mr. G. E. MORGAN gave an address on "The Place of External in Open-air Preaching," and Messrs. FRANK COCKREM, J. E. TAYLOR (Aylesbury), BARRY WAKE, and RANSOME WALLIS followed with brief accounts of open-air service and of the work of the Open Air Mission. These words found illustration in an open-air service with which the Conference was brought to a conclusion.

The Armenian Massacres.

DEAR SIR,—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have so generously contributed to the relief of the sufferers for Christ's name in Asia Minor will be interested to hear, through the missionaries who have dispensed their gifts, some of the hopeful results already manifesting themselves amongst the sorrowful people. As it is still inadvisable to give names of persons and places, let it suffice to say that I quote from three veteran labourers in the field, who reside in far apart localities, large centres of mission work and, alas! of massacre also:—

1. "This money which comes to us for relief is of inestimable value. The widows and children of martyred preachers, the preachers, pastors, and many others of our congregations cannot be put upon the general relief list. We have given various sums to twenty-six pastors and preachers, eight families of martyred preachers, to fourteen Bible-readers, and three teachers, aside from what we have given to other members of the household of faith. It is impossible even for us who are in the midst of this destitution to comprehend it in its magnitude."

2. "Yours of May 1 is at hand, and has lifted a very heavy burden from our hearts. There were so many, and such urgent and heartrending needs, and so many of our helpers and faithful workers for whom a fair share of the general relief fund was so painfully and cruelly inadequate. We take it as a special provision of the Good Shepherd for his own sheep, made through your loving hearts and hands that we are able to cheer up our stricken workers and enable them to go on with their good work. The religious opportunities of these days of sorrow and darkness are most encouraging—I believe the Armenian people are receiving impressions and impulses in these days that will very powerfully influence them for good in the future. The outlook is still dark, but I hope there is light ahead."

3. "Our work was never in a more prosperous and hopeful condition than at present. Our chapel congregations are twice and three times larger than formerly, some 120 scholars in our schools against fifty and sixty in former years; the women's meetings were never so full and interesting as now, and on the first Sabbath of this month, at a very solemn communion season, two were received to church fellowship. People have ceased to apply opprobrious epithets to Protestants, formerly so common. All prejudice is broken down, and we are heartily welcomed to all houses. Some, until lately strangers to us, now urge the missionary ladies to bring the women's prayer-meeting to their houses. We may be confident that evangelistic work will take a new spring forward, and this is the very time to strike the hardest blows."

In these communications two points stand out vividly. First, the original need for material relief has not expired. Second, a new need shows itself, and must be met. The stricken people hunger for the Bread of Life. Thank God, all the native pastors and workers are not slain. These escaped ones are ready to use all opportunities for the Gospel as they arise. Aid is needed at once for evangelistic work. We ask the prayers and assistance of God's people.—Yours faithfully,

W. A. ESSERY, Hon. Sec.
Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

The Month & its Lessons.—7.

JULY.—The Summer Month.

JULY is generally one of the hottest months in the year, and brings all kinds of seeds and life to perfection, an emblem of the perfecting grace of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of the faithful. The close of the 65th Psalm describes this month very nicely: "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness, and thy paths drop fatness," etc. Yes, earth proclaims his goodness infinite, and his power Divine.

LESSONS FROM THE SUMMER.

1. Summer Season.—A token of God's covenant (Gen. viii. 22). FAITHFULNESS.
2. Summer Weather.—A sign of God's care (Psa. lxxiv. 16, 17). GOODNESS.
3. Summer Life.—A type of spiritual life (Matt. xxiv. 32; Jer. xvii. 7, 8). POWER.
4. Summer Fruit.—A picture of perfect life (2 Sam. xvi. 1, 2). GRACE.
5. Summer Time.—A reminder of opportunities (Prov. x. 5; Rom. xiii. 11). PATIENCE.
6. Summer Days.—A light to seasons of service (Prov. xxx. 25). DILIGENCE.
7. Summer Ended.—A warning of lost privileges (Jer. viii. 20). DESPAIR.

The seasons are books of God's wisdom (Psa. xix. 1-4); marks of God's love (Jer. xxxi. 3; Rom. xi. 29), and types of God's grace (Psa. lxxxvi. 15; 2 Pet. iii. 9).

The brightness and freshness of summer life is a picture of happy spiritual life—in its force and vigour, its foliage and its blossom, and beauty (John x. 10).

July sunshine thrills the heart,
Bids its cares and pains depart,
Causes hope its lamps to light
In the darkness of life's night,
Whispers of the blissful band,
Safe within God's summer land.

There appeared to a beggar one day, by the way-side, a beautiful being, with her outstretched hands laden with treasures. As he gazed at her in stupid surprise, she glided past him; but she returned with her treasures still held out to him, and once more with beseeching eyes, as if she would compel him to take what she offered, she passed slowly by and disappeared. She had no sooner gone, than, as if waking from a dream, he hurried eagerly in the direction she had taken. He met a traveller, and said, "Have you seen a beautiful stranger, with her hands full of the very things I want, going along the road?" "Yes," replied the traveller, "her name is Opportunity, but once offered and once refused, she never returns."

C. EDWARDS.
[599]

Friendless and Fallen.

THE secretary of these valuable Institutions sends the following facts as to the piteous pleas for help reaching him by well-nigh every post:—

At the end of May a Christian lady in Northampton wrote about a girl, aged sixteen, whose parents are both drunkards, and the mother living an immoral life. The poor girl's home is bad, and she is in great moral danger. She has never had a fair chance in life. So bad indeed are the surroundings of the entire family that a local society is interposing on behalf of the younger children.

The next day a clergyman, interested in the rescue of a young girl, gave the following particulars:—"Her father is a drunkard, has more than once turned the girl out of the house; and she, with an elder sister, have stayed out all night for a week together, getting a bed at neighbours' houses, or sleeping in an outhouse."

Three days afterwards the wife of another clergyman had occasion to write about a girl who was sixteen years of age in December last. When only eleven years of age she had been waylaid in a lonely lane by a lad, who criminally assaulted her, for which offence he was sent to prison for three months. The lady says the home is utterly degraded. The girl's mother has illegitimate children, the house is filthy, and the habits disgusting. The day following the receipt of the above a metropolitan clergyman wrote about two girls, aged seventeen and fourteen, and expressed the fear that both of them were fallen. The whole family—father, mother, and four children—are living in a small back-room, which is in a very insanitary condition. The parents drink, and the elder girl has been in prison for theft.

The next day still another sad case was brought to notice. A girl, aged fifteen, the eldest of a large family, all of whom, with the exception of herself, have been placed in the union workhouse. The mother, a drunken, unprincipled woman, has now deserted her. From her earliest childhood she has been allowed to go in and out of evil houses for the sake of the few pence she got for running errands.

The writers of the letters in the above cases earnestly asked that the unhappy girls on behalf of whom they wrote might be admitted to a Home as the only hope, humanly speaking, of saving them from a life of degradation and shame.

What shall we do? This is indeed a momentous question, when bodies and souls are trembling in the balance, and the reader will at once agree that the only Christian course open is to receive them in Christ's name, and do all that is possible to give these poor helpless, neglected, and almost lost girls, a fair chance in this life, and in the life that is everlasting.

In each of the foregoing cases, a helping hand was offered. But will not the reader of these instances do something also? The Homes are dependent upon voluntary contributions for support, and have no funded property; yet nearly £15 has to be raised every day throughout the year to sustain them.

The appeals of these poor young creatures constitute our plea to the public, who, by furnishing the means necessary for sustaining the Homes, will enable us to save these girls, and hundreds of others similarly placed. Full particulars of the work will sent on application.

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR.

200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Request for Prayer.—That the Lord will raise up workers, who are greatly needed for important spheres of work abroad, in connection with the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East.

Connaught.—A successful field-meeting was held in Newtownmore, co. Leitrim, on the afternoon of Sunday, June 21. Some 300 people attended, many coming from a distance. The meeting was conducted by Mr. S. G. McIntyre (Methodist evangelist). Such a gathering in any part of Connaught gives reason for thankfulness, and for faith that ere long the Gospel may find its way unhindered throughout the whole of Ireland.

A Chinese Conference.—One of the C.I.M. workers, Mr. T. W. Goodall, sends an interesting and detailed account of a native conference held at Tai-yuen-fu. The subjects discussed were, "Foot Binding," "Self Support," "Treaty Rights," "Individual Work," and "Our Lord's Second Coming." Among those who took part were missionaries of the B.M.S., the American Board, the C.I.M., and the Swedish Mission, besides native pastors. The discussions were earnest, and the results of the conference must be beneficial to all.

[600]

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. C. W. COTTON, who has worked for some months in connection with the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A., has accepted the secretaryship of the Finsbury Association.

Glasgow has at last got a seaside home. The directors of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Club have provided for a long felt want in renting a large house at Innellan for a holiday home for the members of the association.

Mr. Alderman Shaver presided over the fifth annual meeting of the Swindon Association on Tuesday evening. The debt has been cleared off, new premises have been taken, and the work now promises well.

The Association at Worthing has been passing through a period of difficulty, which it is hoped may issue in the re-establishment of the work there on more active and vigorous lines. A most successful beginning has been made of the summer services on the beach.

The Missionary Parliament connected with the Leeds Association is doing grand work in stirring interest in missions, circulating intelligence, cheering missionaries in far off lands, and calling for fresh labourers. The mission band of the Association is also doing good service.

Mr. Walter Price is shortly relinquishing the secretaryship of the Y.M.C.A., at Norwich, where he has done excellent service, in order to take up the work at Cardiff. Plans are in consideration for a great development of the Association in this important Welsh centre, and indeed for a Forward movement throughout the entire Principality. Mr. R. D. Thomas, who speaks Welsh and English, is about to commence work as travelling secretary under the direction of a newly-constituted Welsh executive.

The annual conference of Y.M.C.A. general secretaries has been held during this week at the Bellevue Hydro., Matlock Bridge. There has been an unusually large attendance of secretaries from various parts of the country, and the gathering has again proved of very great benefit to those who have been able to attend it. Conference on many phases of the work has taken place morning and evening, and the afternoons have been devoted to recreation. On Sunday, the 21st inst., a number of the pulpits in the neighbourhood were occupied by Association secretaries.

The Bayswater Association has taken for August, at Pakefield, near Lowestoft, a suitable house, where young men can have board and lodging per day, per week, or longer if desired, at 21s. per week. The special object in thus providing a holiday resort is that members may have the advantage of being all together in one house to enjoy Christian fellowship one with another, and, unitedly, to hold services on the sands, or elsewhere, under the leadership of the general secretary. Rambles, drives, yachting, and boating on the Norfolk Broads will be arranged. All who are desirous of joining this ideal holiday any time during August must make an early application to the secretary, 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

Y.W.C.A.

THE opening of a new hall took place at Moretonhamstead, when Rev. J. Draper presided. Addresses were delivered by Revs. W. H. Thornton and J. G. Beauchamp, and Mrs. Foster, district referee for Devon, gave an account of the work of the Association. Mrs. F. J. Crump, president, declared the building opened, and named it the Gordon Hall.

The Convalescent Sick-aid and Holiday Department is busily occupied in arranging summer holidays and Saturday afternoon outings for those who greatly need fresh air and rest. Numbers of poorer members are dependent upon the fund for their holiday, the loss of which means an inevitable breakdown of health. Contributions will be thankfully received by the hon. secretary, Louisa, Lady Anstruther, 28, St. Leonard's-terrace, Chelsea, S.W.

In connection with the Tulse-hill and West Norwood centre, at 191, Tulse-hill, the "Ready Band" is doing a good work by bringing in strangers on Sunday evenings. One or two members go out every Sunday after church hours, and strange young women are invited to the institute. Usually about twenty-five attend, but recently fifty-four were present. The addresses are given by the members. Mrs. King takes a warm interest in the work as president, and Miss Cooper is the superintendent.

The annual meetings of the Ipswich Institute and Home last week were full of interest. Miss Eva Garratt stated in the annual report that it had been determined to raise about £2000 to purchase Gainsborough House and erect a new hall. £1280 had been realised towards the required amount. After an address by Miss Morley, the foundation stone of the new hall was laid by Canon Garratt, President of the Institute, who stated that he laid the stone in the confidence that whatever was done there would have God's approval and be an honour and a glory to his holy name. A large and successful meeting was held in the evening at the Town Hall under the presidency of Rev. Hay M. H. Aitken.

Christian Endeavour.

THE Christian Citizenship Union of Newark, N.J., which is led by Christian Endeavourers, and composed largely of members of the C.E. Society, has been making a magnificent fight for purer city government.

In St. Paul, Minn., there is a fifteen-year-old junior who a few months ago united with the church. One week later this motherless child of her own accord organised a Bible-class amongst the smaller children of her immediate neighbourhood.

The committee workers of the Washington Convention meet every evening at ten o'clock for special service of prayer. Spirituality is the key-note of the Washington Convention. The committee's significant motto is, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Treasurer Shaw, of the United Society of Christian Endeavour, has just returned from a forty-days' Christian Endeavour tour through the West. Large meetings and enthusiastic interest were the rule at all points. He reports that the cause in the West is speeding on with increasing enthusiasm, interest, and effectiveness.

The latest enlargement in Christian Endeavour is the Senior Society, composed of older Christians and graduates from the Young People's Society. The pledge of the Senior Society is made applicable to the mid-week prayer meeting. The Society holds no meetings of its own, and its purpose is wholly to strengthen the mid-week church services, and to retain the interest of the older Christians in active church work.

Irish Notes.

MR. HODGINS, of Dublin, who recently died, aged eighty years, has left to various Methodist charities in Ireland sums amounting in the aggregate to about £2000.

Rev. Samuel M'Comb, minister of Elmwood Presbyterian Church, Belfast, has intimated his intention of resigning his pastoral charge, with the view of proceeding to Germany, where he intends to pursue a thorough course of theological study.

The magnificent pile of buildings now in process of erection in Wellington-place, Belfast, for the Y.M.C.A., is rapidly approaching completion. When finished, they will not only be an ornament to the city, but a great boon to the young men in the various business houses in the neighbourhood. It is also very satisfactory that out of the £16,000 required for the undertaking, £13,000 has already been subscribed.

Open-Air Mission, Ireland.

WRITING as to the Sligo case, referred to in our Irish notes last week, Captain Wade Thompson, of Clonskeagh Castle, co. Dublin, hon. sec. of the Mission, describes the course of the proceedings that led up to the appeal to the Higher Court. "This appeal was heard before the full Court of the Queen's Bench on June 19, and the Bench, after the case had been argued, decided unanimously for the preachers. It quashed the conviction by the magistrates on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to try the cases, being interested parties. This decision, however, cannot now undo the fact that the defendants underwent in prison the full penalty inflicted by a court which had no power to convict. There are three similar cases against the preachers pending in Sligo. Doubtless Mr. P. McHugh, the Mayor, and the other members of the Corporation must find the position of affairs rather awkward for them; but both he and his friends are most active, and still show their determination to oppose to the uttermost the preaching of the Gospel in Sligo.

"The victory has been won in all the other towns in Ireland where the attempt has been made, although in several of them it was in the face of great opposition and hostility. We thank God that now in all those towns the love of God to sinners is preached in perfect quietness to many listeners, and we believe that God will yet command a victory in Sligo. Meanwhile we have to meet the heavy law expenses thus forced upon us, and we think it right to let Christian friends know that help is needed."

Laziness is the nursery-cradle of sin, and the devil is the rocker.—Vavasor Powell.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE,

SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum.
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THROUGH the pressure of our Mildmay Conference report, we are obliged to hold over the "Letter from South Africa" and much other matter.

Recent proceedings in the High Court having confirmed the validity of local bye-laws prohibiting betting or wagering in the streets and other public places, it is most desirable that local authorities everywhere should frame such bye-laws for the protection of their community. Some half a dozen places in different parts of England have put in force these restrictions, but unless this is generally done the evils of public betting cannot be stamped out. Any friends who desire to further such wholesome prohibitions should put themselves in communication with Mr. John Hawke, Hon. Secretary of the Anti-Gambling League, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

The Pope's new Encyclical clears the air. If it is to be considered in the light of a response to Mr. Gladstone's olive branch, it must be regarded as a rebuff. The proud neck of Rome cannot bend—that is its purport; her claims are absolute; reunion can come only by absolute submission to her authority. This unquestionably puts the case in the only logical way. Protestants can now breathe more freely; for those weak-kneed and well-meaning individuals, who had hoped to arrange a modus vivendi between the Anglican and Romish communities on the basis of mutual concessions, will have in future to choose on which side they will take their stand. There is no danger that those who really love the Church of England will so far forget their allegiance to the truth as to pander any longer to the arrogant invitation of Rome to come over. We could wish for nothing better than this frank statement of his case by the Pope. The vagueness which has recently filled the air will now be cleared away, and the hard logic of facts will assert itself.

The following ominous and suggestive paragraph is from The Saturday Review of last week:—

Englishmen dislike both the theology and the politics of the Vatican, and for very good reasons. The existing coquetry between certain Anglicans and the "Scarlet Woman," under the cloak of a "Reunion of Christendom," would not be important if it were confined to doctrinal philanderings, and the airing of venerable, not to say senile, egoism. But there are disquieting signs of something more definite and practical underneath. We note the reappearance in The Times, after a long intermission, of despatches from "Our Vatican Correspondent." When these were last in evidence, Lord Granville and Sir George Errington were conducting a back-stair intrigue at Rome, the former with a view to secure the aid of the Holy See in crushing the Land League, the latter with a notion that he could obtain as a reward for this aid the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Courts of St. James and the Vatican. Some such conspiracy seems to be on foot again.

While a strong party in our country is making great efforts to fasten Church creeds upon our elementary schools, enlightened men on the Continent, who see the evil effects of the system there, are moving in the opposite direction. One of them says that if you want a religion which shall be for the people you must take away from the children the crude catechism, "in which one speaks of substance, hypostasis, and transubstantiation," and we must put into their hands the simple Gospels, which have been written for the little ones and the poor, and are more comprehensible than dogmas and sermons. He would replace the imaginary perfection of the cloisters by the sublime precepts to love God with all our hearts and our neighbours as ourselves. The present Education discussion has done immense good in unmasking the true intentions of the essentially Romanistic methods of the Anglican party, and very particularly in this respect—it has shown that that party distrusts the Bible. No child or man should read it, forsooth, without them at their elbow to interpret.

Canon Eyton, the successor of Dean Farrar at St. Margaret's, is of opinion that ritualism has lost its early mystical form, in which it was beautiful, and also its self-sacrificing form, and that it has become nothing less than a symptomatic form of unbelief. Faith in the machinery of formalism is, he thinks, from the Church's point of view, the besetting sin of the age. Men make religion their god, instead of God their religion. This witness will, we believe, be admitted to be true by anyone who will take the trouble to read ritualistic newspapers week by week. There is a sad absence of faith in spiritual forces, and as sad a belief in the machinery of forms and ceremonies, in days and months and seasons. Religion is reduced to a performance.

The death of Harriet Beecher Stowe removes from earthly scenes another of the personalities who had a profound influence on the national and religious life of America. The real birth of that great nation took place during, and owing to, the throes of the civil war. It was a war of moral forces, and Mrs. Stowe by her one immortal book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," had probably more to do with rousing the conscience of the North to tension-point than any other individual. From being the middle-aged wife of a quiet Congregational minister, "already with children in their teens," she suddenly sprang into world-wide influence and fame. Half-a-million copies of her book were circulated in the States in five years; and it was translated into twenty European languages. Its power arose from the fact that it put the case of the slave into such a concrete and sympathetic form that the average man could not help feeling the sense of violated humanity; the terrible crime of slavery showed up black and heinous against a background of sweet and touching family relations; and it is not too much to say that it at once sang the death-knell of that iniquitous practice. Mrs. Stowe maintained the poise and modesty of her nature in spite of all her celebrity, and lived quietly among her own people to the end of a beautiful and saintly life.

The speech of Mr. Bayard, the American Ambassador, at the laying of the foundation stone of the Robinson Memorial Church, Gainsborough, was thoroughly worthy of the occasion, and carried home the truth that "great events from little causes spring." John Robinson was a simple and devout man, with no thought of greatness or fame, who did his duty in quiet faithfulness; and because he was so entirely true to his earnest conviction of the supremacy of the Word of God, preferring exile and banishment to a divided homage, his spirit passed into the blood of those whom he inspired with his faith, and they, in turn, founded a nation by their heroic lives and influence. Mr. Bayard said:—

Consider the absolute and unquestioned religious liberty of the time in which we live, and in those countries governed by the English-speaking races, and then go back 300 years, and endeavour to realise here in England the condition of John Robinson and his little flock of religionists asking only to be allowed to worship God as their needs of conscience and the hunger of heart instructed them to pray; for conscience and reason were the underlying moral factors then, as now, and from them is slowly evolving all social and political progress, at the root of which lies the recognition of individual freedom and the "equal right of every man to be unhindered by men in the fulfilment of his duty to God."

The effect of the traffic in liquors on native races is well illustrated in an interview between a correspondent of The Echo and Rev. J. Grant Mills, Hospitaller of St. Thomas's Hospital, and hon. secretary of the United Committee for Preventing the Demoralisation of Native Races. Such authorities as the Niger Company, Mr. Cecil Rhodes, and other traders, steadily set their faces against the traffic, not indeed on religious and moral, but on purely prudential grounds, because "it kills the goose that lays the golden eggs." In Sierra Leone the liquor trade has so debased the nations that they are incapable of work, and everywhere neglect their own interests. In Basutoland, where prohibition obtains, a lady traveller found the people using iron bedsteads, cretonne curtains, and all sorts of civilised articles, but the case was very different where drink had once been introduced. When the chiefs take to drinking everything goes to rack and ruin, and the people become quite demoralised.

In spite of these evil results, the traffic in liquor is enormous in newly-settled countries. In one State—the Niger Coast Protectorate—seventy-seven per cent. of the revenue was obtained in one year from the spirits duty, small as that is. At Leckie, according to Bishop Tugwell, when the natives were invited to bring rubbish to make a foundation for their church, which was built on sand, they brought gin bottles collected from beneath the bushes in the town—a mighty pile. "I have protested," he writes in a letter, "that the house of God should not be erected on such a foundation." Dr. Allan found the church at Afarijupa entirely seated with gin-boxes. These facts—a sample of many others—show what need there is for a strenuous and earnest crusade against this monstrous evil. We are glad to hear that the chief European Governments interested seem earnest in their desire to stop it, France being the most lukewarm. The Duke of Westminster is the most prominent advocate of the Society for its suppression, and Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Salisbury are entirely sympathetic. The Christian public should keep a watchful eye on this matter, and not suffer the Government to satisfy itself with an expression of pious sentiment in lieu of firm and determined action.

When will Englishmen object to the fashion of barmaids, of whom we have, it is said, not less than 90,000 in this country? There are practically none in Ireland; very few Scotch girls will take the position, and in the United States they are unknown. One great firm asks for a girl's character from her minister before it will engage her, and therefore there must be plenty of ministers ready to do a girl the very doubtful service of recommending her. Would not ministers do well to reconsider the subject? Could they not strike the first and the heaviest blow at the objectionable and dangerous custom of placing girls in the midst of temptation? An appeal is being made to Englishwomen to band together in a crusade to rescue these 90,000 girls from the thralldom of the bar. Let us advise them to begin with clergymen and ministers of religion, and get them to cease sending their own Sunday-school girls to the work. We know the case of a minister who refused "a character," but the girl went to another who knew next to nothing of her, and he gave her the required document. Here is work of a practical kind for Women's Temperance Societies all over the country.

A lurid light is being thrown on the attitude of white settlers towards natives in Rhodesia that helps to explain the present rising, which threatens to become universal. From scattered communications, which do not find their way much into the daily press, it is growing clear that some of the unprincipled whites have shocked native feeling by their treatment of Matabele and Mashona women. It is well known that both these races are—for savages—exceptionally chaste in their habits, and their anger has been greatly excited by the shameful insults which certain settlers have shown their wives and daughters. A lady correspondent has written an account of this evil to Fraternity, and accuses those who "represent themselves as being gentlemen in England" of becoming "worse than beasts when they get to Africa." The subject is a distasteful and delicate one, but a thorough exposure of such practices should be made, and those who are guilty should be rigorously punished.

Sir J. W. Dawson, in his address on Natural Science as the Handmaid of Revealed Religion, at the joint meeting of the Alliance and the Mildmay Conference, touched on the current idea that students of nature had very little faith; and he doubted very much if that statement were true. He had met with three generations of science-students in his long life, and he thought he had found as many truly pious men among them as in any other vocation. This is probably true. But the fact remains that the writings of many of these Christian scientists contain no hint of their faith. Acting on a mistaken idea that it is their duty to leave the religious aspect of scientific truth to theologians and preachers, they suffer the case to go by default, and their silence is not unnaturally widely misconstrued. It is only now and then that men of immense scientific authority like Lord Kelvin and the late Clerk Maxwell boldly announce their belief in a spiritual view of the creation from important presidential chairs, and when they do so a profound impression is always created. As it is, most average readers imagine such men as Tyndall and Huxley and W. K. Clifford to be speaking representatively in the name of science, when they denounced a religious conception of the universe. A little more outspokenness on the part of believing scientists is surely greatly to be desired, especially in the interests of the weaker brethren.

The Bishop of Peterborough, speaking at the annual conference of the members of the National Home Reading Union last week at Chester, uttered some strong words on the influence of Carlyle in warping the moral sense in its judgment of historical issues. He characterised Carlyle's view as an interesting but a profoundly immoral view. According to him, the hero was not so much the man who was real in his denunciation of shams, as the man who had succeeded. The Carlylean system simply meant the worship of success. There can be no more immoral view of life than that which assumes one man to be good and right, because the thing he did attained its end, and looks at another man as an incompetent and an imbecile because he failed. Carlyle's denial of the fundamental laws of morality, and substitution of might for right, has had a deplorable influence on many minds, and has led not a few of his admirers to lose sight of the fact that a man who tries, but fails, to attain a great and holy end, is the true hero, while the man who succeeds in reaching a poor object of ambition is a coward, and, maybe, a villain. "Not failure, but low aim, is crime," as Russell Lowell finely puts it.

Few words are so popular in our day as the word real, applied to the religious life and profession, and yet it never once occurs in the Scriptures. But if they never use the term real, they have more than any book or books fostered the love of the thing. They have other words which are quite as strong—truth, light, sincerity, uprightness, perfection. They require truth in the inward parts, and they are as unsparing of any mere appearances of goodness as any moral critic could desire. With what solemnity do they denounce such as have the form of godliness, but deny the power; with what a firm hand do they lay hold upon mere professors of the faith; how commanding is the call to a sincere repentance of sin and a belief in the Lord Jesus Christ on the part of everyone; how unerringly are the deceits and the self-delusions of the wicked heart tracked out from one hiding place to another. There is no refuge given in the Scriptures to anything that loveth or maketh a lie. No words in the writings of moralists approach those of our Lord in St. Matthew xxiii. for awful and overwhelming exposure and denunciation of hypocrisy.

The Quiver describes Ocean Grove, a seaside resort since 1870, where no liquor or tobacco is sold, where dancing and card-playing are prohibited, where on Sundays bicycles and trams and trains are at rest, and bathing ceases. Such a place must be a delightful change from the noise of the City. We wish every city resembled it a little more.

The Gospel in the Open Air.—2.

IN considering external aids to open-air work let it be promised that no mechanical accessories or excellence of human speech can for a moment take the place of a Spirit-given message and a self-effacing love for souls. Yet the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ are not only to be "fishers" of men, but must use every legitimate means to "catch" them; and if the heart be right, the Spirit of God can lead as much in regard to external arrangements as in the matter of the Gospel message to be delivered.

A gentleman active in many forms of practical Christianity, being recently asked to speak at an open-air service, replied, "Open-air work as a rule is not well enough done, and often does more harm than good on that account, by bringing religion into contempt instead of respect." He then gave some examples, in which his friend recognised some painfully familiar features, and was bound to admit that there was a strong case for improvement in more than one direction.

I.—AS TO SPEAKERS.

"Anyone can speak in the open air!" is a too common fallacy, and many a man whom no one would ask to address an indoor meeting (where, by the way, everything is conducive to quiet and attention), essays to hold a thoughtless, passing throng of persons, whose very presence on the highway often indicate their indifference or antipathy to the things of God.

We do not now refer to the earnest zeal born of a newly-found joy, which prompts a man to declare what the Lord has done for his soul. Such a testimony is a happy and profitable item in any open-air programme, if it be bright, short, and to the point. We fear rather the "old hand" whose experience is ever in the past, who speaks only of what the Lord did for him ten, fifteen, twenty years ago. Christian experience, if it is to influence the ungodly, must be in the best sense "up to date," and tell the present power of a living Saviour. Allowance is made for the inexperience of a young convert; but besides such spontaneous testimonies, arrangement should be made for at least one really qualified speaker, by whom the invitation of the Gospel should be intelligently and intelligibly set forth.

The leader, too, should be a man of bright and happy mien. Some give out a hymn as if they were reading a death-warrant. Good men and true they may be, but they are not suited to lead an average open-air meeting.

Some workers, again, are very careless in regard to personal appearance (and this is not so trifling a matter as may at first appear). A young man, even in humble life, will take care that his appearance shall, so far as means and reason allow, be calculated to create a favourable impression upon his sweetheart and her friends. Should he offer less to his Master? It is a reproach that any lover of Christ should do so, if by a little more care he might draw others to Him.

II.—AS TO METHODS.

Though no hard and fast rules can be laid down, there are certain broad principles which usually apply. We do not here deal with special circumstances in which even a single worker may sometimes find himself faced with an altogether exceptional opportunity for preaching the Word, to an audience already before him. "Given your hearers, go ahead!" we should unhesitatingly say. But what when they are not there? It is a sorry sight at times to witness the futile endeavours of a noble but feeble few to attract a crowd by inadequate means; so that by the time an audience has gathered—if, indeed, it comes at all—the vocal energies of the workers are already well-nigh spent. Would it not be wiser, when the forces are but small, to start, in the first instance, by buttonholing a few loungers strolling by, inviting them to gather and sing a few hymns; or even to talk quietly to the group standing near, with the almost certain result that by degrees others will draw near to see “what’s up”? By this means a dozen or twenty interested listeners may often be collected without any vocal exertion. Men will often stand to be talked to, when they will not be preached to—or, as they may more forcibly express it, to be “hollered at!” We have often found that more definite result is achieved from such direct and quiet personal talk than from louder-voiced oration! though frequently the former leads on to a very valuable opportunity for the latter as well. We commend the suggestion for consideration.

III.—CHOICE OF A SITE.

Let the speaker stand as near as possible to a fence or wall, or even a cottage door (which will often be granted for the asking) rather than in the road. The police regulations are generally met by his keeping the audience off the pavement; and anything which will act as a sounding-board behind him will afford him great benefit, and his hearers will listen with more comfort to their nerves.

IV.—GENERAL ACCESSORIES.

Very frequently the speaker has to stand on the level of his hearers, which, unless he is of Saul-like proportions, necessitates a perfectly wanton strain upon his vocal and physical powers in order to reach those who stand a few rows back. To this and similar causes may be attributed the loss to open-air work of many earnest men, who hesitate to expose themselves to these disadvantages, but who, under more favourable conditions, would render excellent service. Many who are just below the quality of a good speaker when standing on a level with the audience are very fair preachers when raised up a foot or two.

Life is too short, and there is too much to be done in it, to warrant a man in expending unnecessary energy at a single meeting, when by a little forethought, and perhaps subscription, on the part of the leaders, better work could be done with half the wear and tear. A portable platform, such as may be purchased from the Open-Air Mission at a small price, is easily carried, and lends an importance to the cause which is represented.

There is also that too-often-forgotten convenience—a glass of water, whose merits need no eulogy. A neighbouring householder will, as a rule, gladly supply this.

The value of good singing is too widely recognised to need more than passing reference; but it may be noted that a solo, even if rendered by a voice not of the highest quality, will often hold a larger crowd than a spoken address. Well-rendered part-singing, too, is particularly melodious on the still air of a summer night. In fact, every reasonable method, new or old, must be laid under tribute.

To all would-be workers interested in this subject we commend the very excellent “OPEN-AIR PREACHER’S HANDBOOK,” by the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham, published by the Open-Air Mission (11, Adam-street, Strand), the secretary of which, Mr. Frank Cockrem, would also be glad at any time to furnish information concerning hymn sheets, lamps, portable harmoniums, platforms, etc.

The United Conference.

THE coincidence of the fiftieth year of the Evangelical Alliance with the fortieth year of the Barnet-Mildmay Conference seemed to suggest the commemoration of both events in a series of united meetings. This was all the more suitable seeing that the Alliance and the Conference both originated in the desire for Christian union, and both testify that the instinct which underlies the present agitation for union and reunion, was as operative in the hearts of our fathers as it is in ours. And yet the separating instinct of self-assertion was as strong then as now, for after ten years of endeavour to propagate the principles of the Evangelical Alliance, it was a grave and anxious question whether Churchmen and Nonconformists could harmoniously meet together to manifest that they were one in Christ. To convene such an assembly on the sole basis of birth from above, of common participation in the Divine nature, of fellowship in the new creation, was a surprising act of faith, a startling step in advance, on the part of a country clergyman whose sphere of influence was chiefly limited to that which is within the veil.

The Evangelical Alliance and the Barnet-Mildmay Conference have been to some extent overshadowed of recent years by the numerous Conventions which originated at Oxford and Brighton, and which have become permanent institutions at Keswick, Glasgow, Guildford, and are extending to all parts of the world. But these are an outcome of the older Alliance and Conference, which prepared the way for them, and which have now so appropriately allied their forces and conferred together.

It may have seemed that this union was a doubtful success. In some instances usual Mildmay attendants remained away, fearing the crush of a double crowd—a groundless fear. To some of those who came it seemed that the tone and spirit of the two organisations did not altogether coalesce. Such variety must necessarily exist at first, as when two rivers meet whose waters differ in colour; but this diminishes with every yard of their united flow, until it is completely lost, as in the union of the Rhone and Arve in the deep, dark, beautiful blue of the Lake of Geneva.

True, much yet remains to be desired. Union still exists more in word than work. Established Churchism on the one hand and Free Churchism on the other, with their almost endless subdivisions, occupy more attention in speech and print than does the Church which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all; though to this was applied the reductio ad absurdum when Count von Bernstorff showed that the expression the Lutheran Church, the Presbyterian Church, etc., was as false as would be the Lutheran body of our Lord, the Presbyterian body of our Lord; an expression which he truly said we would not dare to use.

Members of the Bible and Prayer Union read on Monday in 1 Chron. xii. of those who “were expressed by name to come and make David king.” The twelve tribes were never so united in heart and effort as at this time, for nothing but love and loyalty to God’s chosen king could so knit their diverse interests together. Many qualifications are particularised, but their purpose was one with that of God—to make David king; and the qualification emphasised beyond others by repetition is, that they could keep rank, and were not of double heart.

All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

To keep rank was the first lesson the nation learned when they went up out of Egypt (Exod. xiii. 18, mar.), and to keep rank is still a paramount necessity for the Church of God. Imagine the confusion in an army unable to keep rank.

Let no one however be discouraged by the result of last week’s experiment. It has enabled French and German, American and English Christian brethren, to meet together in love; and if it leads, as we believe it will, to increased co-operation, its beneficent results will more than justify the experiment. Both the Alliance and the Conference will be the stronger for the union on this occasion.

School for Christian Workers.

This school, located at Springfield, Mass., recently completed its eleventh year; a class of eleven, six men and five women, graduated. One of the most important features of the exercises was an address by the Vice-president of the School, the well-known Sunday-school leader, Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D.D. His subject, “The kind of lay workers demanded at the present day,” was forcefully and interestingly presented.

Aside from the interest in the graduating class, this commencement has been distinguished above all that has preceded it by the suggestive report of Secretary, and the broad plans for the future which were discussed. During the year, many of the most prominent pastors and Christian workers in the country have been consulted, and have heartily approved of the work which is being done. Their plans, looking toward greater breadth and thoroughness, were talked over, and enthusiastically endorsed by the large number of corporators and trustees present. Lay work, as provided for by this scheme, becomes dignified and important, and has naturally appealed very strongly to college men and women, to many of whom it has been recently presented.

In view of the large opportunity opening before the school, and the strong commendation by men like Pres. Gates, of Amherst, and Professors Brastow and Graham Taylor, of the work which is proposed, the trustees have decided to secure as strong a man as can be had to become president of the institution, to more fully organise and develop the work already begun, and to bring the “New Profession” before the churches and colleges. HARRIAN P. BEACH.

Sailors’ Orphan Girls.—The sixty-seventh annual report of the Sailors’ Orphan Girls’ School and Home, Hampstead, shows that the work goes on steadily and well. The number on the school books is twenty-seven, and the inspector’s report is most satisfactory. The home is greatly in need of additional help. The president is Admiral Willes, 50, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

Rev. Dr. Leon Checkemian, formerly priest of the Roman Catholic Church in Armenia, but for the past fifteen years Protestant Evangelical pastor in Asia Minor, will address the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, to-day (Thursday) from 12 to 1 o’clock. Sir George Williams will preside. Dr. Checkemian has suffered much persecution, and was recently released from prison in Constantinople by action of Her Majesty’s consul, through the intervention of Archbishop Plunket.

Revival of Church Life.—Sir Charles Dalrymple, M.P., writing to the Church of Scotland Record, holds that the chief note of the last General Assembly was the need of revival. Towards this end he advocates the holding of parish missions for the deepening of spiritual life and the earnest setting forth of the Gospel. The time calls for special zeal and service, the awakening of both ministers and people to new intensity and devotion, and the bringing in of many who now are outside.

THE MILD MAY CONFERENCE

AND

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE JUBILEE.

JUNE 30—JULY 4.

TUESDAY EVENING.

ON the evening of the first day the Conference Hall was again crowded. After a season of silent waiting on God, a hymn was sung and prayer presented.

Count A. VON BERNSTORFF, who presided, read 1 John i. 1—7, and said:—"It is a very great pleasure to me to be able to be present at these meetings. I have had the pleasure of assisting at the Mildmay Conference once before, but on this occasion there is additional interest to me in the fact that the meetings are held in combination with the Evangelical Alliance. Now we have to consider this evening the true unity of life in the Church, and these verses we have just read show us the great hindrance. What is it? Not simply difference of opinion, or of creed, but walking in darkness. If we want closer fellowship one with another, we must walk in the light, walk in closer fellowship with the Lord. Let us remember that the Church is the body of Christ. How curiously we use the expression the Lutheran Church, the Presbyterian Church, and so on, forgetting that this is to say—the Lutheran body of our Lord, the Presbyterian body of our Lord—an expression we would not dare to use.

Our particular subject this evening is the new birth and life—the new birth, which is the entry to the life. We want in this conference to unite those who are really born again, who have experienced what Mr. Spurgeon was wont to call "an old-fashioned conversion." I said last night in Exeter Hall that the Evangelical Alliance originated in a time of revival, for true revival leads to true fellowship among Christians. So in Germany I have been despondent at times about the slow progress of Christian unity, but recently God has been reviving his people, and many have been converted; consequently barriers have fallen, and believers have been knit together in love and unity. We are grateful for the progress made. It is not our doing but the doing of the Lord, who is preparing his Bride for his return; for the work of the Evangelical Alliance will not be completed till He come again. May He use this conference to prepare his Church, that we may more and more walk in the light, and in fellowship one with another.

LIVE CHURCHES.

REV. DR. JOHN HALL, OF NEW YORK.

The subject assigned me is "Live Churches." The noun is put in the plural, for, while there is much in church life over which to be sad and ashamed, there are, thank God, many zealous, earnest gatherings of believers; in and through whose numbers God the Holy Ghost is working and maintaining true life.

The word "church" is, moreover, used, not in the sense of "denomination," but rather of a local church, a congregation; such, for example, as was, no doubt, at Philippi, and at Ephesus, when Paul wrote his letters "to the saints" in those cities. If we wish to form a judgment concerning an organisation that claims our attention, there are certain questions we must needs ask and get answered. Who are these members? Why are they thus organised? What is the object for which they come together? What officers have they? The answers will shape our opinion. So it is with a church—such as that at Philippi or Ephesus.

Who were its members? Men and women who, whatever their antecedents, had believed in Jesus and confessed Him, so that they and their households came to be called Christians. They were "converted," they were called "faithful," the "saints," the "brethren." They professed to have come out from the world, and to have taken Christ for their Leader, Saviour, and Master. For adequate reasons they assembled at least once a week—every seventh day. The Greek word for "assembly" being ecclesia, it came to be applied to them, and the word came to mean "the church"—hence our "ecclesiastical."

Their meeting on this day had apostolic sanction. "The first day of the week" was sacred to them for such assembling of themselves. For what did they assemble? They read the Scriptures, or had them read, and heard them expounded. They sang praises, and were led in prayer, and they administered and partook of the sacraments. What officers had the organisation? For, plainly, a group of men and women, old and young—the women not encouraged to take the place of speakers—needed officers, just as the simplest organisation needs a president, a committee, a secretary, and so forth. Well, we take the inspired account of their officers, without any controversy. As many as thirty references will be found in the New Testament to "ministers," "elders," or "bishops," "deacons," preaching the Word, ruling the church, caring for the poor. These were their officers. The apostles had, directly or indirectly, organised them, put them in the way of getting needed officers, and given them encouragement to look and arrange for continued organic life. They were to meet together regularly, for the society that has not regular meetings is feeble; and their society was not voluntary, but Divinely established. Nor were they to run it according to their ideas of utility or of impressiveness, but according to the known will of Him in whose name they met, whom they called Saviour and Lord, and whose name they carried.

It will seem to some needless to go into these familiar details, but it is right to seek a definite idea of a church, if we are to recognise the signs of life in it. I might get a building, hold regular and crowded meetings, set forth the weightiest truths with good results. But this assembly is not a church, is not organised, has no officers, no fellowship of saints as such, no sacraments. Why emphasize this? In many places, as over Europe before the Reformation, the Church's machinery was so perverted and so over-estimated, its officers were clothed with so much power, and its rites so unduly represented, that some Protestants, in violent and natural reaction against all this error, think too little of the organisation, officers, sacraments, and distinct, Divinely-ordered life of the churches of Christ. This, incidentally, becomes a great evil.

Now we pass on a step further. What was the object to be sought by such a church? It may be looked at from three sides: (a) It was meant to deepen and develop spiritual life. The members, let it not be forgotten, had "given their own selves to the Lord." They had been dead in sin; they claimed to be now alive unto God. But that new life, like the natural, needed to be nourished. It required spiritual food and a healthy atmosphere. The individual, alone, without teaching and fellowship in praise and prayer, would get weaker, not stronger. It is so still. With a thousand unspiritual, earthly forces at work on mind, body, and estate, the human soul would, apart from the means of grace, lose its hold of truth, its sympathy with Divine things, its fervour, gratitude, and consecration. The ecclesia, regular, solemn, tender, according to God's will, and with God's appointed agencies to bear on the soul—this is the ordinary channel of grace the soul requires, and the church is meant on these lines to deepen and develop spiritual life.

(b) It is meant, moreover, to take God's message to the unsaved. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" The Word of the Lord is to sound forth from the church. Apostles were to preach the Gospel. The men whom they gave to the churches were to "preach the Word." They were to pray men in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God. And the members of the ecclesia, though not in office, not preachers, were to be fellow-workers with the officers, by their unworldliness, purity, holiness, being "living epistles of Christ." So the church was meant to be aggressive in its own boundaries.

But (c) thirdly, it was to be a living, visible witness for God. This high function is discharged by its public worship, its praise, its prayer, its sacraments, its Sabbath-keeping, and its evangelists, for what are our missionaries but bearers of the glad tidings—the evangel—as the messengers of the churches, sent and sustained by them, to the Christless in heathen and other lands?

Imagine yourself a listener to a dialogue like this: "How is the — society doing?" "Oh, not much, I think; in fact, doing nothing." "Why, has it not members enough?" "Oh, yes, it has plenty of names; it is thought the right thing to be in it." "But it keeps up its agencies, doesn't it?" "Oh, yes; it has its office and secretary, and so forth, but, in fact, for the objects for which it was started, it is doing nothing—it might as well be dead." Suppose an assembly of professing Christians, with an edifice, a minister, and other officers, and sentiment of a certain sort in its favour, but of which it could be truly said, "It has no deepening spiritual life; in fact, you could not distinguish its people from common worldlings; it is not bringing souls to the Saviour; it is not magnifying truth, witnessing for God by the tone and character of its services; nor is it sending its messengers out with the Gospel"—would not the sad impression be made on your judgment that it was not alive, but dead? Suppose, on the other hand, the credible testimony to be that a church's members are growing in grace and in practical goodness; that the Lord is adding to it believers, and that from its services people go away, saying "the Lord was there," and that its means sustain labourers for Christ in other places: would not the natural word on your tongue be, Thank God, it is a living church?

Let us go into details a little more. The members, by the plan of the Church's Head, are to edify one another, not by formal teaching, but by their bearing, their sympathy when it is needed, their congratulations when God gives blessing. "Oh, I was so thankful when I heard your son's name read out as uniting with the church"; and a grasp of the hand and a look of Christian love go to the heart of a fellow-worshipper. Suppose they do not; suppose a stranger has come in, brought a letter, procured a seat, and some trusted friend says, "Well, I hope you are being helped in the church and at home in the worship," and the answer is with reluctance and hesitation on this wise: "No; perhaps it's my fault, but as I meet them, somehow, there's little religion. It's all about parties and receptions and matinées and what not; hardly anything about religion. I'm sorry to have to say it to you, but you ask me and I must tell the truth." Is there not something lacking in the members?

Are they not hindering the minister, however faithful he may be? Are they not grieving the Holy Spirit? Are they not suggesting to infidelity a plea: "Christianity is the established thing here, but, as for influence, it amounts to nothing. They profess it, that's all."

Or, again, take the officers of the church. Reading the inspired directions to Timothy and to Titus regarding the manner of men to be elders and deacons, you can see what officers are to be and to do. Paul sent from Miletus to the elders of Ephesus to come down and meet him there, as he could not go to Ephesus, and he says, after the most touching statements of his affection and regard, "Take heed unto yourselves and to all the flock, in which the Holy Ghost hath made you bishops, to feed the Church of God, which He purchased with his own blood." Now suppose the people of the congregation in Ephesus could have said: "Yes, they are overseers, but I do not know what they do. I'm sure none of them ever noticed me. I suppose they go to Presbytery and they take up the collections, and so on; but I think that is all the people know of them"—suppose this, and say: Are they doing their part to make theirs a live church?

It is not needful to follow out this line of illustration, yet one is bound to notice all the office-bearers. In many quarters an inchoate socialism is commended to the poor. Men are taught that the rich are selfish, greedy and heedless of the rights or wants of others. What a power for good there can be worked up when deacons in the church are known to have put into their hands, by the members, the means needed to help the poor fellow-worshippers, and when with pains and care and prayer, their work is done personally and effectively! This is a line on which a live church must move.

Now we come to the minister. The occupant of a pulpit does not get the benefit, or the pain, of the criticisms on himself or his brethren. I shall not therefore attempt to reproduce what may be said, but it is beyond question that a minister, if he is to do his share in making a live church, has to lift up Him who is the life, to proclaim the truth of God as such, and as it is in the Word; and he is by all available roads to try to come close to the souls of the people with the messages of the King of kings as to doctrine and as to duty. Why as to duty? Because it is based on the doctrine, which, therefore, the people should know if they are to do it from the right motive. If members are visiting, giving, attending meetings and the like, because "the minister would like them to," because all the rest seem to go in for that sort of thing, or from any such sordid motive as the desire to climb socially by the ladder of the church societies—if they are working for other reasons than love to Christ in his supreme place, and pity for sinners down in the mire of ignorance, vice, or respectable worldliness, then they are not living, and they are not promoting, the life of a church.

Nor must the minister who would have his people alive unto God, forget for himself, or let the worshippers forget, the dependence on the Holy Ghost. How the little feeble church at Jerusalem developed when the day of Pentecost came! He makes the message effectual, but it is the message that He inspired in the Scriptures. He brings to remembrance, but it is the things that Jesus has spoken. Through Him souls are born into the Kingdom, but the incorruptible seed of the Word is the instrument. To do his part in making and perpetuating a live church, a minister must preach the Word, in the house of God, in the houses of the people, in his own tone, temper, and life, and withal in entire dependence on the grace of the Holy Spirit working in and with him. No minister can write this down deliberately without self-reproach and humiliation over his own forgetfulness and failure. I cannot; but it is the truth; and one must not try to bury it.

There are ways of getting up an appearance of life. Students sometimes see the legs of frogs put on the table when some branch of natural science is being illustrated by experiments. The subtle electric force is made to play through the dead muscles and joints, and the frogs' legs move as if they had life in them. So eloquence, originality, interesting peculiarities, personal magnetism, may galvanise dead assemblages into demonstrations that look like life. But nothing but God's Word, ordinances, and prayer, used reverently for the feeding of living souls, and for the quickening of the dead, for honouring Christ and for extending his Kingdom, and all these blessed by an acknowledged Divine Comforter, so that He is felt to build the temple and bear the glory—nothing but these will develop a live church. Give us these, and the life in it will be deep, spiritual, heavenly; and the possessors of it will in glory and beauty live for ever and ever.

Prayer followed in French and German.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

BY REV. JOHN SMITH, D.D., EDINBURGH.

After conveying to the Evangelical Alliance the Christian greetings of one of its founders, Dr. Andrew Thomson, of Edinburgh, now in the fifty-ninth year of his ministry, and in the eighty-second year of his age, Dr. Smith proceeded to speak on "The Church Divinely One as a World Influence." Gathered from many lands, bearing many party names, holding numerous minor diversities of creed, we gather to-day to realise our oneness in Christ, United to a common Saviour, indwelt by a common Spirit, we have rejoiced to recognise a kinship which for closeness, community of experience and feeling, and identity of interest and aim, leaves all human kindred far behind. There is an aspect of the subject of profound practical import, and which has a bearing on the peculiar circumstances of our gathering. If the Church be the Divine unity we declare it to be; if God be present, not only in individual souls through the grace of Christ and by the power of the Holy Ghost, but as a great unifying and directing Spirit, then—and remember this is the supreme test by which the Church stands or falls: its power and influence on the world for God—that presence must be signalised by certain influences and effects, giving the society thus originated a unique place and influence in the life of humanity.

Look at the Church Divinely one in this light. The existence of the Church is a witness to the fact not only that God is, and that He has spoken to men, but that He has bound men in living relations to Himself, in virtue of which they are united into a fellowship or society. Most impressive at times is the witness of the individual soul, but as a permanent, durable witness, from generation to generation, to the unseen, nothing is so unanswerable as a society. A great mass of steel filings clinging to an iron bar witnesses at once to the presence of magnetism; so millions of men clinging to a common faith, and living a common life, despite endless diversities of mind and the changes of succeeding generations, witness to an unseen force, mighty to resist disintegration and continuously potent to inspire. There have been days in history when, living in the power of this unseen force, the Church of God has made the unseen more real than the seen, so that Pagan conceptions vanished, and the thoughts issuing from Divine revelation undergirt every sphere of the world's life. Wherever the Church is living she is the central force of the national life, inspiring personal, family, and social ideas, creating new bonds of sympathy and help, setting up for private and public conduct a finer, larger, and completer standard of right.

For the life of mankind, then, in the present, nothing is of greater importance than that the Church of God through her whole extent should realise her unity in the living Spirit and in her Divine Head. It might be worth while to individualise the factors that enter through the one Church into the life of the world. First, notice that what thus enters into the life of the world is not mere theory, opinion, belief, but a Divine revelation actually worked out into human life and human relations, in a Divinely originated and a Divinely maintained society. "There is one body." What religion amounts to is written in millions of characters, animated in a larger or lesser measure by love to a common Lord, in submission to a common will. And so society is touched at every point, in each generation, by a tide of Christian forces which pass into every sphere of the world's life.

What is the one incommensurable force of all time? It is the force of Christian character, and what impresses is not merely variety of individual character, but the community and relationship of the Christian life. The Divine Fatherhood, realised within the Church, has created the modern sense of human brotherhood. In that bond of fellowship we have risen to far higher ideals of relative right, and the true principles of society and government. We have risen to far higher ideals of education, of social life, and national responsibility. There is one body, and, living and working in the power of Christ, it is refining and reforming the life of England, and through it, of the world. Benjamin Kidd, in his "Social Evolution," proves that religion is a social necessity for the life of man. And in the very stuff of human society men are beginning to find a higher Presence, and from the outer regions of the world they say in their own language, "There is one Body, and one Spirit."

The moment this truth begins to force itself on the thoughts of men—and we are in that moment to-day—multitudes of unbelievers are compelled to recognise the fact of the spiritual, and are face to face with that fact; the moment this truth forces itself upon thoughtful minds, the mere material good in which men have been seeking human happiness ceases to charm. They begin to realise that they have been made in the image of God, and can find no rest till they find rest in Him. Many of us have forgotten that the Holy Ghost, witnessing through the Word, will convince men of sin and of righteousness and of judgment. Because we have seen for more than a century the nations of Europe, and America too, fastening with ever augmenting greed on material good, we think this must always continue. But God can shatter material idols. He can bring all men to see what, in the manifest insufficiency of Agnosticism, is dawning on many minds—that the most pressing needs of men are spiritual. This thirst for God in the heart of men will give what is needed, a resurrection of conscience; men will awake to nobler ideals; they will ask, "How can I be just with God?" as they never asked "How can I be rich and increased with goods?"

When men awake from their base dreams to realise that the one need of their soul is in God, what God would have them do becomes the great object of their concern. There can be no peace until they come into a relation of right with the living God, and when they do that, right, through the illumination of the Holy Ghost, becomes the law of their lives, and enters into every relationship of human existence; life becomes again serious, sustained by a lofty purpose, heroic, instinct with sacrifice. Humanity will have found what is its great need to-day—a Master, a Lord. Then opinions will give place to faith, life will no longer be based on uncertain foundations of changing human speculation, but on the rock foundation of Divine Truth. Instead of what sickens us in the literature of this age, the riot and extravagance of individual speculation and doubt, there will be a generation committed to one God-given service, to one hope. What will be the effect of a Church, living in the power of the Holy Ghost, upon the world? When the Church, one in her Divine Lord, and in the fulness of the Divine Spirit, puts forth her full power, God will come again into the lives of men, and will accomplish in us his ends by our conformity to his image.

As we think of what the Church might become, when operating in the power of the Spirit, our first thought is one of profoundest humiliation and contrition. Have we made God living and mighty to this generation? I remember a great minister, from whose ministry a humble servant went home one day to her master, an unbeliever. "Oh, we have got such a sermon," she said. "What was the text?" he asked. She could not tell, she could not remember a word of it, and her master laughed her to scorn. But she turned round and with intensest earnestness, she said, "Oh, sir, he made God so great!" With all our activities, with all our machinery, with all our evangelism, are we making God great in the eyes of this generation? Have we secured that the Christian sense of right is the supreme standard of the world's public judgments? Why this reversion to Pagan licence in the life of our great cities, and in the tone of educated opinion?

Let us face the fact that the Church of God was never under a profounder responsibility than at this present moment to surrender herself into the hands of the living God, that He may prove in and through her all his power. Conscious that we have not yet realised what the Church of God in its Divine idea is fitted to be, that it has not the mighty witnessing force which long ere now it might have had, we ask, "How have we failed?" First, there is the consciousness of the need of union. But we may carry that too far. We may attach far too much importance to mere historic continuity and outward formal union. In Ephesians iv. we find, after a sublime description of the unity of the Church, the apostle goes on to enunciate the principle of individuality; in everyone this unity must be realised, though men differ in their natural characters, and in the measure they possess the power of the Divine Spirit, and though they are marked by a variety of gifts. In the very nature of things there must be diversity of view, individuality of aspect. It comes to this: that very finite creatures are grasping an infinite Divine fact, and, of course, they can only see it in parts. The pity is that men take their own respective part for the whole, and thus involve themselves in controversies which carry them past the simple truth of things into extreme positions and polemic attitudes. This is only an excess of tendency that is necessary and of Divine intention. Human beings must individualise to know. We realise the glory of the Creator because that glory has been broken down into the millionfold splendours of creation; and we have a richer consciousness of the glory and many-sidedness and activity of the Church of Christ, one in her Divine Head, through the number and variety of organisations, methods and types of character, and even forms of thought within the Church. Deeply considered, those diversities are in no sense destructive of the Divine unity, if we keep in view that the true principle of this unity is life, and that Christ is leading us along various roads to practically the same goal—to the perfecting of the saints and the completing of the body of Christ.

If one might presume to interpret the leadings of Christ in his government, He seems to be moving on that assumption. For after ages of theological definition have passed away—and let us never forget the heritage we have got from these in confessions of faith, and catechisms, and so forth, which beat out the great Evangelical thoughts so that they shall never pass away from the conscience of the Church of Christ—what do we find? Christ summoning our fathers to earnest evangelisation of the world, to foreign missionary enterprise. In a realisation of this responsibility our fathers fell back from words to the Divine facts which those words enshrined. Christians of different names began to see that really they were standing on common ground, and that they had been parted only by names. The Evangelical Alliance has been one of the means for focussing that sentiment. As the forces of opposition strengthen, we all feel, and increasingly so, that we are in the hands of the living Christ, being gathered round the great facts of redemption, realising our oneness in the Divine indwelling Spirit and under a Divine Head.

If that be so, what is our duty to-day? What we want for the exigencies of the present hour is a fuller baptism of the Holy Ghost, an unction from the Holy One, that we may enter into the Divine mind and understand what we ought to do. Never did grander problems lie before England than at the present hour, and these can only be solved by the living Christ working in a sanctified Church. In that service we shall be drawn closer still, and when that has been realised the Master will bring us into still fuller approximation to the oneness that is to be.

There are certain dangers against which we ought to be on our guard: First, indifference to the wider horizons of our time. The age of sectarian warfare is past, but we are all staggering under denominational burdens that limit the interest of innumerable Christians' souls. The practical emergencies of our time demand a growing sense of unity that we should act as one against the common foe. But there is a second danger. Men are taking short cuts to unity by specious methods. We are being asked to-day to fall back on the common ground of a simple, undogmatical ethical creed, and to adopt a social programme, dropping the positive doctrines of the faith. Such appeals are vain. The conscience of redeemed man has grown up into a realisation of these dogmas as a living experience from which he cannot recede. Salvation through Christ alone, sonship thereby with God, sanctification through the Spirit, God's sovereign gift of eternal life—these are central realities, authenticating to us the whole revelation of God, and we cannot renounce them. But we should vie with those with whom we differ in religious opinion, in living the one true life, though separate from them, and along that road the Lord will bring us all to see eye to eye in his own time.

There is another danger, and from a different quarter, a danger more real than either of those I have mentioned. We have spoken of the inner unity of the Church, consistent with a large measure of diversity in outward form. But it is far easier for most men to grasp the idea of outward uniformity, than to pierce to this inner oneness, and so there is nowadays an attempt to degrade and materialise the idea of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The apostle uses a wonderfully significant phrase. He speaks of the "sleight of men"; it means playing with loaded dice. And so men come to us to-day with wonderful art and catholicity, yea, with the fascinating assumption, as if the name Christian belonged only to them, that they would give us the true ideal of the Church of Christ. We soon find however, they are playing with loaded dice, that they are hirelings of an unscriptural system, deceiving us, carrying us away from New Testament ground; grace is confined to priestly channels, in an assumed succession, and God is mediated with through priestly acts such as the sacraments. Again, there is that phrase "cunning craftiness." It means multiplied human devices that are put in the place of Christ—the ceremonials of religion. By those things many have been so led away as to lose personal contact with Christ. Paul had one name for that: he called it a deliberate plan of craft.

What we need to-day, as Protestants, is the courage of our convictions. The doctrine of the Church which has been preached here to-day is the doctrine of the New Testament undeniably; and behind it there is the power of the Triune God. Let us not quail, as some men whom we mourn to see are quailing, before the shocking and lying pretensions of Rome. Let us not feel tempted to deny the benefit which Rome does not enjoy exclusively. I rejoice, as a Scotch Presbyterian, in an historical continuity, in being connected with generations of witnesses and confessors that have gone before. In Glasgow the other day at our great Presbyterian Council, we were glorying in our descent from Calvin and Knox; and I wish to say that there are no Churches in the world that study the great monuments of the whole Christian past more earnestly than the Evangelical Protestant Churches do. Here Protestantism is catholic, and Roman Catholicism is sectarian. But what enables us pre-eminently to realise our oneness in the central verities of the faith with Justin Martyr, Athanasius, and others, is the consciousness of a continuity which reduces all other continuities to nothing—the continuity of the presence of Christ, the continuity of the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. We hold to the Head, and stand in living fellowship with all the members.

SOURCE OF TRUE UNITY.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

It is not enough to admit that the Church is one, we must also know that we are one in it. When we speak of the Church, let us remember there are three great unities involved: (1) The unity of its inception in the mind of God; (2) the unity of identification with the living Christ; (3) the unity of its law and service of mankind. The last has been fully treated, let us glance at the others.

First, the unity of the Church's inception in the mind of God. When the Lord Jesus Christ passed from the room in which He had spoken of the many mansions, He seems to have noticed a trellised vine shimmering in the moonlight, and He spoke of it as a parable of Himself. He presented Himself as the great antitype of the vine. That is, the vine contained the outward form of a thought which lay in the mind of the Father, before any vine sprouted, or brought forth fruit. I suppose that all things in this universe set forth thoughts of the Eternal—thoughts which were in his mind before anything was made. So the stars, the ocean, the trees, the flowers, are the essence—the essential conceptions of the mind of God; they are parables of his thoughts.

Now, in regard to the vine there are three distinct things to be observed. It has variety in unity. Its root, stem, branches, leaves, blossoms, and fruit vary in every possible way, yet in all this variety there is exquisite unity. How different from grass or corn, each blade of which is separate and distinct. Here there is unity, neither the root nor the branches can be the vine by themselves. But again, this plant suffers as no other plant suffers. In the early spring there is the keen pruning knife; in autumn the branches are torn by ruthless hands, and the fruit is trodden till the blood-red juice stains the feet and legs of the treader. And, thirdly, the vine has a unique purpose—to make glad the heart of man. Through suffering it yields its life-blood for this purpose. Then it is used at the communion-table. Is there not a deep thought in that? We use at the communion-table the juice of the much-suffering vine.

Thus it fills a unique place, and I believe that when God in the beginning formed the vine, He did it to set forth a thought which was in his heart from all ages. He conceived the unity between his Son and redeemed souls, and He gave to the vine the variety and unity necessary to the shadowing forth of that thought. And as the Son was to give his blood as the life to flow in his members, so he made the vine to yield by suffering that which should nourish and cheer the heart of man with

(For continuation of this report see p. 18.) —

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

How Ritchie "Saw It."

A TRUE STORY.

FRED and Ritchie were schoolfellows of about the same age, and regular chums. Yet you never saw boys so unlike in appearance. Fred was very tall and stout for ten years old, with rosy cheeks, and was always merry and full of fun. Ritchie was what the boys called "undersized"; his face was very white, and he looked as if he had gone through more trouble than many grown-up men.

One reason why they were such constant companions was that neither of them had any boy playmates at home. Fred had sisters, who petted him, and bought things for him; but they could not play at cricket, nor football, nor swim boats. When he had a boat given to him, he could not do without Ritchie to help him to sail it. Ritchie was the youngest of his family. He had big brothers, but they did not treat him kindly, and would not let him go out with them. They had "no patience with kids knocking about their heels," they said. So Ritchie was glad to be with merry, kind Fred, and Fred's mother always made him welcome. "Come in, dearie," she would say; "come when you can, and do not wait for an invitation." So they used to have fine times. If it rained, they might make as much noise as they liked in the breakfast-room; and when fine, there was a pond to sail their boats in. The only thing the matter with the pond was that there were so many weeds in the middle; but ragged boys were always waiting about, and should a boat be caught in these weeds, they would take off their boots and wade in to free it.

Fred lived in a pretty small house. Ritchie's was very large, and in the fashionable part of the town. In Freddie's home Jesus was loved and honoured, but Ritchie's father did not love Jesus, and he used to teach his children not to believe in that dear Saviour who had loved them, and died for them. He was very harsh to them, and what made his temper worse was, he had lost so much money in his trouble he could not go to Jesus to be comforted and helped to bear his loss. After a time he went to South Africa, leaving wife and children, so can you wonder that Ritchie was not merry like Fred?

The boys had a governess who loved Jesus, and the school was always opened with a Scripture lesson and prayer. They loved that lesson, and would gather round her as she spoke of the kind things the Lord Jesus used to do to people in sickness and sorrow, and how He died on the cross for them. Ritchie would listen with his white face quivering, and would say, "It was a shame!" Then she would point out that Jesus gave Himself a sacrifice for sin, and say:

"Ritchie, you know you have sinned, and God must punish sin, and Jesus was willing to be punished instead of you."

"I do not call it fair," he replied doggedly stamping his foot on the floor.

"Ritchie, dear," said his governess, "Jesus was punished instead of you; on Him was laid the iniquity of us all."

"I can't see it," replied Ritchie. "I wish I could, but it does not seem fair; what good could another being punished for me do?"

Fred had one fault which brought him into trouble. It was his chattering tongue in school-time. At 10.30 "silence time" commenced, and any boy speaking, except about lessons, must be kept in fifteen minutes for each offence. One morning Ritchie and Fred planned a journey along the shore.

"Now, Fred," said Ritchie, "don't get kept in this morning." "All right," replied Fred, "I will look out." When "Silence!" was called, Ritchie looked meaningfully at Fred, who nodded in reply and nearly made the slip of saying, "All right!" Suddenly Fred remembered something very droll, and whispered it to his neighbour. The monitor saw him, and called, "Fifteen minutes, Fred, for speaking." Ritchie looked at him reproachfully, but it was not ten minutes after when the monitor again called, "Fred, another fifteen minutes for speaking in silence hour." Ritchie could hardly conceal his vexation; it was such a lovely day, and half-holiday too.

School was dismissed, and away went the boys, leaving poor miserable Fred; but Ritchie lingered. At last he begged of the governess, "Do let me have half of Fred's punishment; please do."

"But," she replied, "that would not be fair; you have been good and Fred has not." "I know," said Ritchie, "but please let me." She could not resist his pleading. So the punishment time began. Fred looked one way and Ritchie the other. The governess sat writing; not a sound could be heard but the scratching of her pen. At last the minute hand of the clock came to the quarter. "Time is up," she said; but Ritchie came to her, his face bright with joy. "Oh! he cried, I see it all. It is all right." "What do you mean, Ritchie, dear," she asked. His face was aglow with joy as he replied, "About the Lord Jesus. He chose to be punished instead of me."

"Yes, Ritchie, but Jesus bore all the penalty, not the half, and He did it for you even when you did not love Him."

"Yes," said Ritchie, "I can see it all now. He died for me." And away went the boys, Ritchie's heart filled with happiness he never knew before.

AN OLD GOVERNESS.

"The Seeing Eye."

"The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them."—Prov. xx. 12.

HAVE you ever thought what a very wonderful piece of machinery the eye is? Each part acts in perfect obedience to the messages which come to it by the nerves from the brain, so that when we wish to open or close our eyes, it is done instantly and almost unconsciously.

Now in Matt. vi. 22, we find the eye called "the light of the body," and I do not think there could be a better name. In front of the eyeball there is a round, transparent window, always kept beautifully clean, through which the rays of light pass into the eye, and after being collected by a lens, they strike on a delicate membrane at the back of the eye, known as the retina. Here, an image of the object at which we look is formed, and here the sensation of sight is felt. We do not value this precious gift of sight so much as we ought. Too often we strain our eyes by small print and reading in dim lights. Let us take more care in future of our sight.

But what about the eye of our souls? Has the soul got an eye? Yes; that eye is faith. How many are blind with this eye! They have never asked God to open "the eyes of their understanding" (Eph. i. 18), and so they cannot see the loveliness of Jesus, and his willingness to save.

Will you pray that little prayer that I expect some of you know well, "Open Thou mine eyes?" (Ps. cxix. 18). We want to "see the King in his beauty" (Is. xxxiii. 17), and in looking to Him we shall be saved.

But there is one other beautiful arrangement in the eye that will teach us a lesson; I mean the way in which the eye is constantly bathed by a gentle, yet steady, flow of what we call "tears." This fluid, called the lachrymal fluid, has two duties to perform, that of cleansing the front of the eye and protecting it from specks of dust, which would irritate the sensitive coat of the eyeball. Now, is not this just what Jesus Christ does for the soul? His precious blood cleanses us from all sin (1 John i. 7), and will keep us clean. He will protect and guard us from all evil; He will preserve our souls (Ps. cxxi. 7). Have you asked Him to cleanse and preserve you?

G. N. MEACHEN.

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

No. 21. Charlotte Cane, South Africa. Nos. 21, 22, 23. Jessie Ben-Oliel, Jerusalem. No. 24. W. Arnold Braack and Jean Scott, Canada. Vera Sjöström. No. 25. Gerhard Meuter. No. 22. Queenie Dale.

No. 27 (first list).—Correct answers received from:—

Marian and James Freegard, Minnie Elsole, Arabella Onslow, Clara Barnes, Maggie A. Buchanan, Thomas Harris, Rose Anton, Nellie Willie, and Victor Bellerby, William Aston, William F. and R. H. Williams, Theodora Spencer, Harold Stevenson, Edith Hayward, Annie Tawse, Elizabeth Hull, William Gavin, Dorothy Sharp, Edwin Peters, Winifred and Elsie Cookrem, Margaret Davison, Wallace Bentley, Grace and Kathleen Donderton, Alice Mary Palmer, Herbert Draddon, Daisy Phillips, Ethel Williamson, J. A. Chamberlain, Owen Morice, Emily Bridgewater, Katie Welch, Rosa Hays, May Bligh, Maggie Mabel, and Bessie Fletcher, Constance Schaeffer, Dorothy Vickers, Arthur Cordell, Raymond Harbottle, Connie Wood, May Watson, Susie Cumbers, Leslie Frank, Margaret, Jessie, and Lillian Pook, Gertrude, Nellie Brookfield, Hugh Tufnell, Grace, Elsie, and Ida Wright, Annie Harker.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 27).

1. A little coat (1 Sam. ii. 19).
A little cake (1 Kings xvii. 13).
A little cloud (1 Kings xvii. 44).
A little coney (Prov. xxx. 26).
A little child (2 Kings v. 2).
2. St. Matt. xviii. 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 14.
3. (a) "For God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (St. John iii. 16).
(b) "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another" (1 John iv. 11).
4. "My God shall supply all your need" (Philip. iv. 19).
5. (a) "Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering" (James i. 6).
(b) "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months" (James v. 17).
6. The house built upon the rock stood firm when the floods came and the winds blew.
The house built upon the sand fell down when the floods came and the winds blew (St. Matt. vii. 24-27).

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 28).

After reading the article on "The Seeing Eye"—

1. Give the verses in which the word "eye" or "eyes" occurs in the following chapters.
 2. Without writing out the verses, say whose eyes are referred to, and for what purpose.
 3. What mention does St. Paul make of "eyes" in Galatians, and to what does he refer? Job. xlii., Ps. xxv., Ps. xxxii., Ps. xxxiv., Ps. cxxiii., Prov. iii., Prov. xv., Jeremiah xxiv., Habakkuk i., Luke x., Heb. iv.
- Children under ten years to do 1 only, under fourteen 1 and 2, over fourteen 1, 2, and 3.

Bible Enigma.

My first is in bars, but not in cage,
My second's in passion, but not in rage;
My third is in little, and also in small,
My fourth is in some, but not in all;
My fifth is in many, but not in few,
My sixth is in crimson, but not in blue;
My seventh's in stone and also in sling,
My whole is a well-known Scripture king.

M. T. C.

Personal Pars.

I must again thank my little friends for the flowers. E. D. BLACK.—Thank you for your nice letter. I am sorry you could not do the questions this time. BELL DANCE.—I am very glad you are better. ALICE PALMER.—I am glad you have started answering the Bible Searcher. "GERTRUDE."—Please sign your name in full. WINFRED AND ELSIE.—You must each write out the answers.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Keswick, July 21 to Aug. 5. Mr. B. Herklots, Greystones, Ireland, to July 28. Mr. Rankinson, Cwadrige, Botley, Hants, July 10; Troubridge, July 11-17. Mr. Arrowsmith, Weston-super-Mare, to July 12. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Herne Bay, July 8-24. Mr. Hewlett, with caravan, Steeple Morden, to July 13. Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush, during July. Mr. E. Hughes, Leyton, July 10. Mr. Josiah Spiers, North Berwick, in July. Mr. A. E. W. Gwyn, Guildford Convention, July 11-12. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, South Creake, to July 15; Burnham Market, July 16-24; caravan No. 2, Feltham, to July 14; Rushall, July 15-22; Mr. Jewell, North Tadworth, near Epsom, July 19.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending July 18, 1896.—Sun., July 12, Acts xxiv. 17-27; Mon., July 13, xxv. 1-12; Tues., July 14, xxv. 13-27; Wed., July 15, xxvi. 1-18; Thurs., July 16, xxvi. 19-32; Fri., July 17, xxvii. 1-17; Sat., July 18, xxvii. 18-29.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 12.

"THEM ALSO KING DAVID DEDICATED UNTO THE LORD WITH THE SILVER AND THE GOLD WHICH HE HAD BROUGHT FROM ALL THOSE NATIONS."—1 Chron. xviii. 11.

THESE materials, the results of David's wars and victories, laid the foundation of that great store out of which Solomon built the Temple. How remarkable that the Temple, which is the type of the Church, was constructed from the contributions of surrounding heathen nations! Did it not foreshadow the ultimate incorporation of the Gentiles in the Church? And does it not anticipate the time when they shall bring the wealth of the nations into the City of God?

But, for us, as individuals, there is a deeper lesson. It is not enough to conquer our foes; we should derive from every temptation the victor's spoils. We should gain for the temple of the heart and for that of the Church.

For the Heart.—When you have fallen beneath the attack of Satan, be sure to notice the cause of your failure, that you may guard against it in the future; and learn from the temptation where the weak place of your character lies, so as to derive from Jesus more of the grace of which you have been shown to be deficient.

For the Church.—Every temptation overcome may be a means of grace. We gain strength of experience which helps us the better to understand and minister to others. We learn secrets of victory which we can pass to the tempted and weary; out of temptation win what will make the whole Church your debtor, as Samson took honey from the lion's carcase.

MONDAY, July 13.

"LET US BEHAVE OURSELVES VALIANTLY FOR OUR PEOPLE, AND THE CITIES OF OUR GOD; AND LET THE LORD DO THAT WHICH IS GOOD IN HIS SIGHT."—1 Chron. xix. 13.

Those were days in which rough soldiers, like Joab, did not hesitate to speak freely of God to their companions in arms. It is a sorry thing that it is considered a breach of etiquette to mention God's name in polite society. It is not good form!

We are reminded in these words of Joab of Cromwell's memorable advice to trust in God and keep the powder dry. David's general felt that the ultimate issue of the battle must be left to God, but that nothing could absolve him and his soldiers from doing their best. They, at least, must make careful dispositions for the fight, and show themselves valiant.

This balance of statement and thought between God's work and ours is an evidence of fine Christian sanity. We must believe that God is the ultimate arbiter, but we must ever speak and act as though the responsibility were entirely on ourselves. To believe that God will do all, and therefore to do nothing, is as bad as to believe that God leaves us to our unaided endeavours. We believe in the strength and sufficiency of God's purpose, but we know that there is a link in the chain of causation which we must supply.

Amongst Bunyan's immortal characters, none is more engaging than Mr. Valiant-for-Truth. Let us never flinch from bravery in word and act, daring to stand alone in the breach, faithful among the faithless found. O Saviour, in thy strength make us strong.

TUESDAY, July 14.

"BUT DAVID TARRIED AT JERUSALEM."—1 Chron. xx. 1.

Ah! fatal tarrance! In these hours of luxurious idleness, when his brave soldiers were in the field, David was advancing, though all unconsciously, towards the greatest peril of his life. Had he conformed to the habit of earlier days, he had been at the forefront of this terrible conflict with Ammon; but his loins were already ungirded, his self-watch was relaxed, his soul was lulled into a false security, from which Nathan's voice would awaken it, when the dark deed of murder had been perpetrated.

Beware of moments and hours of ease. It is in these that we most easily fall into the power of Satan. The sultriest summer days are most laden with blight. There is no such guard against temptation, next to the keeping power of Jesus, which is all-sufficient, as business to the full measure of time and capacity. If we cannot fill our days with our own matters, there is always plenty to be done for others. Let us look, not at our own things only, but at the things of others, and go about doing good. You think that no one has hired you, but it is not so, the Master has sent you into his vineyard. If you cannot do one thing, you can another. There is the ministry of intercession for those who are in the field. There is the exercise of worship, in which you take your place amongst the priests. There is the ministry of comfort to some of the sad hearts within your own circle. Redeem the time, because the days are evil. Watch and pray in days of vacation and ease even more than at other times.

WEDNESDAY, July 15.

"AND DAVID SAID UNTO GOD, I HAVE SINNED GREATLY IN THAT I HAVE DONE THIS THING."—1 Chron. xxi. 8.

His sin lay in the spirit of pride and display. He vaunted in the growing numbers of Israel, and credited them to himself, as the result of his own prowess and prudence. All such boasting is very abhorrent to the all-holy God, who will not give his glory to another. It was the sin of Nebuchadnezzar, when he said, "Is not this great Babylon which I have built?" It was the sin of Herod Agrippa when the people shouted, saying, "The voice of a god, and not of a man," and immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, "because he gave not God the glory."

We are all tempted to it when we count up the number of our adherents and converts, when we unroll our securities and vouchers, when we count up our assets, when we display our jewels. All these are gifts entrusted to our care by our Father and Saviour, to be held in trust as a matter for gratitude rather than for pride. A proud look "goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

How greatly David had fallen from the level of his own sweet sonnet! "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor my eyes lofty." Oh, let us ask Jesus to teach us how to be meek and lowly in heart, that we may find rest unto our souls; let us endeavour to be as little children, devoid of self-consciousness; and let us be careful, as we survey the growing treasures and power of our lives, to remember the Apostle's words: "Who maketh thee to differ? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? But if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?"

THURSDAY, July 16.

"A MAN OF REST...HE SHALL BUILD."—1 Chron. xxii. 9, 10.

The men of rest are the builders of the most lasting structures. Solomon builds the Temple, not David. Mary's deed of anointing, learnt in much sitting at the Lord's feet, fills the world with its aroma. What is needed to make us men and women of rest?

First, a profound conviction that God is working. Never despair of the world, said the late Mrs. Beecher Stowe, when you remember what God did with slavery: the best possible must happen. This serene faith, that all things are working out for the best—the best to God, the best to man; and that God is at the heart of all—will calm and still us, in the most feverish days.

Next, an entire surrender to his will. That will is certain to mean the destruction of the flesh, in whatever form God finds it; but it is our part to yield to God; to will his will even to the cross; to follow our leader Christ in this, that He yielded Himself without reserve to the almighty love of his Father. Take his love, you will find rest to your soul.

Thirdly, a certain knowledge that He is working within to will and do of his good pleasure. What a blessed peace possesses us when once we realise that we are not called on to originate or initiate, not to make great far-reaching plans and try to execute them, but just to believe that God is prepared to work through our hands, speak by our life, dwell in our bodies, and fulfil in us the good purposes of his will. Be full of God's rest. Let there be no hurry, precipitation, or fret; but the peace that passeth understanding ever acting as a sentry, so shalt thou do lasting work on earth.

FRIDAY, July 17.

"AARON WAS SEPARATED, HE AND HIS SONS FOR EVER, TO BURN INCENSE BEFORE THE LORD, TO MINISTER UNTO HIM, AND TO BLESS IN HIS NAME, FOR EVER."—1 Chron. xxiii. 13.

The threefold office of Aaron suggests our own, for when we are prepared to follow Jesus, through the rent veil of his flesh, and to live in the inner shrine, we also, as chosen priests, may exercise these blessed functions of intercession, ministry, and blessing.

Intercession.—The fragrant incense stealing heavenwards is a beautiful emblem of prayer. Let us pray more, not for ourselves so much as for others. This is the sign of growth in grace, when our prayers revolve around the lives of others. This is one of the best gifts: oh to exercise it more persistently!

Ministry.—We have many things to engage our attention, but they may be unified and elevated by the one threading purpose of doing all for the King. Whether we eat, or drink, or whatsoever else we do, we may do all to his glory. Go up and down in the Temple, O priests; engage in song, or sacrifice, or whatever ministry you will, but be sure that all is of Him, and through Him, and to Him for ever.

Blessing.—Israel was to be as the dew that blesses the parched herbage; so we should bless that little portion of the world in which our lot is cast. Let us be as the outstretched hands of Jesus that rained blessing on his disciples. Let our smile, our touch, our words, our life, be the greatest blessing possible to those who know us best. Blessed Spirit, realise through each of us this threefold ideal, and separate us from sin and the world, that we may be prepared for it.

SATURDAY, July 18.

"PRINCES OF THE SANCTUARY."—1 Ch. xxiv. 5 (R.V.).

It is not enough for us to be in the sanctuary, we must be princes there. There must be the regal mien, which is a meek humility; and the regal largesse, which is peace and blessing; and the regal might, which is self-restraint and self-control. None can be princes of the sanctuary without two things: they must be priests, come of the priestly line; and they are kings, royal not because of deeds of war, but because they are related to the King Himself, and are regal in their holy and blameless character.

There is only one power that can make us princes of the sanctuary, the hand of the exalted Lamb, who is Himself a Priest-King, after the order of Melchizedek. He it is who makes us kings and priests unto God his Father.

He makes us priests. This is your position, not now to offer propitiatory sacrifices, but to have compassion on the ignorant, and on those who are out of the way, to swing the censor of prayer between the living and the dead, so that plagues may be stayed, and to plead for the dark sad world, with its load of wretchedness, need, and sin. See that your garments are ever white and stainless.

He makes us kings. They that receive the abundance of his grace reign. They reign with Him. Sin and Satan, the world and the flesh, are beneath their feet. Theirs the life of overcoming power, of unbroken victory, of identification with Jesus in the glory that the Father has given Him.

Mr. Donald Matheson.

IT seems fitting that in this issue, which contains a report of the Evangelical Alliance Jubilee Conference, we should give the portrait of a Christian brother who has long been an active, though unobtrusive, worker on its behalf. Mr. DONALD MATHESON is not only a vice-president and Treasurer of the British branch of the Alliance, but Chairman of its working Council. While active in that department of the work of the one Church of Christ, he has also devoted much time, thought, and substance to other good movements, especially those which bear on national and international righteousness.

As his name indicates, Mr. Matheson is a Scotchman by birth, and is one of the great company of northerners who have transferred their sphere of energy to the wider area of English life. He is a native of Edinburgh, and is descended from a Sutherlandshire branch of the clan Matheson. On his mother's side we believe he is a descendant of the Farquharson family, so that Celtic blood flows freely in his veins. On both sides the families were earnest and devout believers; this inheritance has had its due effect in the moulding of character, and in giving a serious bent and purpose to life.

His educational curriculum was passed at the High School of Edinburgh, and being devoted to a business life, young Mr. Matheson served his apprenticeship to commercial pursuits in London and Manchester. He proceeded to China in 1837 as an assistant in the great Lombard-street trading firm of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co. One result of his China experience was an intimate acquaintance with the various aspects of the opium trade; indeed, it is a well-known fact that the impressions and convictions formed by Mr. Matheson in China, as to the unrighteous character, nationally, of our opium dealings with the Chinese people, led him afterwards to sever his personal connection with China trading, and made him the intensely earnest anti-opiumist which he is to this day.

It was in China, too, that the eyes of his understanding were fully opened to the importance of the spiritual life; and while there he took his stand on the side of the Christian faith, and realised the claims of Christ on his heart and life. In the earlier days of his Christian experience he was privileged to attend the ministry of that ardent pioneer missionary, Rev. William C. Burns, who was at that time qualifying himself for active service in the Gospel among the Chinese. A year or two later Mr. Matheson left China and returned to his native city, where he was married to the lady who is still the sympathetic partner of his domestic joys, and the helper in his public life. In Edinburgh he attached himself to the practical ministry of the famous and eloquent Free Church divine, Dr. Candlish, in whose church he served as an elder. He actively helped in mission work undertaken by the congregation in the district of Fountain-bridge; at the same time showing much warm interest in foreign missions, more especially with reference to China, with the needs of which he possessed a personal knowledge that was very serviceable.

After some nine years' residence in the Scottish capital, Mr. Matheson again moved southwards, and for a time resided near the lovely Surrey town of Dorking. Here his zeal in good works of different kinds found ample scope, particularly in carrying on mission effort among the navvies then at work in the neighbourhood. In a hall attached to his residence he carried on weekly Gospel services for the benefit of that somewhat neglected class of the industrial community.

In 1870 Mr. Matheson and his household removed to London, where he has since had his residence. As a Presbyterian born and bred he became actively interested in the church work of that growing denomination. At Regent-square Church, and later in the Kensington and Belgrave districts, he has been a pillar in the London Presbytery, and a zealous helper in all good causes connected with it. For a lengthened period he has acted as hon. sec. of the Presbyterian Mission in India, and has continued to further the general work of foreign missions carried on by that body.

Mr. Matheson's sympathies and activities, however, have overflowed all sectional boundaries. We have already referred to his official connection with the Evangelical Alliance. His valued services in the cause of Christian unity and combined Christian movements are only known to those more intimately associated with the working of the Alliance. Another wide field of Christian effort that has demanded and received much of Mr. Matheson's attention is that of European evangelisation. Of the Evangelical Continental Society he has been and still is a deeply interested and generous co-worker; contributing both by pen and by substance to efforts for carrying the pure Gospel to those who dwell under the baleful shade of Popish error and superstition. He has also given practical proof of his desire to see the furtherance of reformed faith in connection with the Protestant Alliance.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Lombardi & Co., 13, Pall-mall East, S.W.)

Of late years much of Mr. Donald Matheson's zeal has found an outlet in connection with the anti-opium crusade, which is directed to the prohibition of our national complicity with a trade that works such moral havoc among the millions of China. Having had ample experience at first hand in this matter, he was one of the British witnesses who appeared at Westminster before the late Royal Commission, and testified to the evil nature and results of the opium traffic sustained between India and China, under the direct ægis and patronage of the Indian Government authorities. If all our practical men of business were only endued with the same spirit of righteousness and Christian integrity in our international relations, surely the paltry excuses of revenue would not have been permitted so long to tie our hands on this question, and to heap up for ourselves a shameful responsibility for which we must inevitably have to pay in some form; for which, indeed, we are having to pay in the loss of national prestige and in the thickening of international complications.

It will be of interest to add that one of Mr. Matheson's sons is the able and esteemed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Putney, in the south-western district of Greater London.

Lancing Homes of Rest.

It was with no small gratification and interest that recently I accepted an invitation to visit the seaside Homes of the North-East London Gospel Mission at Lancing. The Homes comprise a group of houses at the end of a country lane, and close to the sea.

After a kind reception by Mr. Chorley, the director of the Mission, and his wife, who were both very busy in arranging for the opening of a new Home for mothers with their babies, I had a chat with some of the East-end visitors, and found them, one and all, enjoying the rest and change. Many and touching were the stories of sorrow and suffering I listened to on the quiet beach.

How shall I tell you in a few lines of the different Homes? In the first place they are not limited to the reception of one particular class, but provide accommodation in the separate houses for the varied demands of the different visitors. The Home for Women provides accommodation for forty-two, and the Home for Children can receive forty-six. To these have been recently added a Cottage Home for the reception of ten or twelve men.

Next door to "Lorne Cottage," where the men are received, is "Hope Lodge," which is now being prepared for the accommodation of twelve mothers with young babies. In sight of the five houses, and provided for the use of their inmates if they wish to avail themselves of its services, is the Gospel Hall. The day begins and closes here with a simple service, in which the Word of God is faithfully and lovingly set forth. A visit to the Homes would well repay the time and trouble expended. M. T.

FOR MOTHERS AND BABIES.

On Friday last many friends of the Mission shared the joy of dedicating to the use of the poor a new Home for mothers with babies at Lancing. Testimony from several veteran workers among the poor told of the uplifting power of the Gospel, and how, in conjunction with the bodily care taken of the poor ones sent to Lancing, many had gone home new creatures in Christ Jesus. A City missionary told how he had met only the day before, in his visiting, two young women who owed their conversion to going to Lancing last year. The friends inspected the new home and the older institutions, returning to London after tea, deeply gratified, and with happy memories not soon to be forgotten. There was about £70 needed to clear expenses to date, towards which two friends present gave £30.

Box, Wilts.—For about sixty years a useful work has been carried on in this village by the United Methodists, and within the last year or two the old worn-out chapel has been completely crowded out. The necessity for a new building—if the whole work was not to stop—became so evident that a lady—a Churchwoman—started a fund for the building needed. Stone was donated by the neighbouring Bath-stone firms, and the people set to work to build the place themselves. The memorial-stones were laid on Saturday week with great thankfulness. About £350 has been raised locally, besides free labour and material given, but there is still need of help to complete the work. All who are interested in village evangelisation will be glad to aid these self-helping workers. The secretary is Mr. Edwin Bow, 2, Fairview, Box, Wilts.

The Mildmay Conference.

(Continued from page 14.)

refreshing and blessing. All this was in the mind and council chamber of God. And, moreover, let us remember that as the branches are necessary to the vine, so we who believe are necessary, in union with Christ, to make up the complete conception of the mind of the Eternal. Thus we have the unity of the Church in its conception and inception by the Creator who created all things in Jesus Christ. When we know Christ and live in Him, we take up in time the position which should be ours in Him before all worlds.

In the second place, there is the union which springs from identification with Christ. When a man first of all realises his need of salvation, he lays hold with both hands on the substitutionary work of Christ, and we may never forget how He, who knew no sin, was made sin for us. But further, you miss much of the power of this death of Christ, if you do not pass on from substitution to identification. Understand, young believer, it is the purpose of God, that we should be identified with his Son; and remember also that the Lord Jesus Christ incorporated you in each act of his redeeming work. And remember, yet further, that you will come to a point in your life when the great truth of your identification with Christ will break upon your souls as the sea breaks on the view of a traveller who has long been toiling up the steep towards it. Then shall you realise that you not only died with Christ and lay with Him in the grave, but also rose with Him on Easter day, and with Him ascended into the heavens and passed into the glory, daring to stand in the very holy of holies. I would that you saw all this, that you saw the cross of Christ blocking your way back into the world as Israel saw the Jordan rolling between it and Egypt. There are times when we do not feel in heavenly places, but these are the very times to insist on the fact that we are there, and looking around to claim as brothers and sisters all who are similarly identified with our Lord and Head. And as we grow in the Christian life we drop out the selfish supplications in our prayers, which take increasingly two shapes—intercession and adoration.

Once more. Look at the vine again. Far beneath is hidden the root, and waving before you are the branches; but the fairest and finest branches only live out the life of the root and stem, which life is passing into the furthest cluster and blossom. In the same way, is it not wonderful to realise that the very life which throbbed in Augustine, in Luther, in General Gordon, in Madame Guyon, and all souls in glory, is throbbing and beating in us to-day? "Christ in you the hope of glory." But, alas! your life and mine falls far beneath the ideal. Why is it? Because we have erected barriers against the inflow of this life. I read in this parable of branches which do not bear fruit. Does not the tide of life throb at the junction between branchlet and stem? There is some hindrance, the free flow is checked, and if the branch continues closed, it is barren and is taken away.

What is this? That any soul once linked to the living Christ can perish? Never, never. Once a soul is linked to Christ neither man nor devil can destroy it. You may scratch out my name from the Church militant, you cannot blot me out from the Church invisible. But there is a sense in which ministers are taken from their work, teachers from their classes, evangelists from their service. I have known many removed in this way from usefulness and fruit-bearing. Are there any such here? Has your life been waning? Is it long since you won a soul to Christ? Does the Master come looking for refreshment, and find only acid fruit, or none at all? I hear the tide of life beating and throbbing against the barrier. Let us put away the hindrance, and let it flow in that we may bear fruit. Abide in Christ, and let Him abide in you. Get home to your quiet room; let the gas burn late; get down before Him, tell Him all, confess all, open your whole being to Him. Let Him teach you how to do it. Let Him enter, and abide, and rule. Let that wondrous life pulsate through your soul, and speak and work and energise through you. You must seek to be ready and open to the inflow of this life. You must be prepared for the discipline of cutting off the green shoots. Remember, the Father is the Husbandman, and if He cuts and wounds it is because He loves you. And as you decrease Jesus Christ will increase. As you are dead in Him, He will live in you. Thus the tide of his life will flow in; and as you are filled with his life you will love all who have it. For love is perfect life, and the man who lives, loves.

Mr. Meyer then closed the proceedings of the day with prayer.

WEDNESDAY MORNING. GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT.

In consequence of slight indisposition on the part of Lord Polwarth, the chair was occupied by Lord RADSTOCK, who in the course of an opening address gloried in the spiritual oneness of Christ's Church, and was grateful that in the providence of God this great fact has become widely recognised. He dwelt upon the mysterious relation of the Body to the Head; not only does the Church need Christ, but Christ needs the Church, and He came from heaven to unite it to Himself.

A LIFE OF GROWTH.

BY PASTOR THEODORE MONOD.

Of the general subject for to-day I will only take one word, GROWTH—the unity of the Church in growth. The Church of Christ is united in this, that when we have found the new birth, we must go on to the new life, until we reach the new earth and the new heaven.

The new life is a growing life. Of course, we know this. And I confess that every time I think of such meetings as this I have asked myself, What is the use of gathering together so many Christians, to tell them things that almost every one of them, certainly the great majority of them, could tell you just as well as you can tell them? I made this remark to a friend, and asked him what should be said on such an occasion, and the reply was: "Tell them to do what they know." Well, let us do what we know. We know that we should grow constantly. A healthy child is a growing child. A healthy plant is a growing plant. So a healthy soul is a growing soul. Is your soul growing? If not, it is not in a healthy condition.

In what should we grow? I would sum it all up in the words of the Apostle Paul, in Col. i. 10: "Increasing in the knowledge of God." It seems to me that what the Church most lacks—I do not say the world, but the Church—is the knowledge of God—the personal knowledge of that Person who is God. How much do we know of God? Of course we can know but little of Him, in a sense. We walk by the shore of the ocean and we say, "This is the ocean," but what we see is only a few drops of it, as far as our eyes can reach. So we speak about God; and we say, "This is God." But after all it is only a feeble beginning of knowledge about God.

And yet God has given Himself to us to be known by us. Therefore let us not be discouraged. Even in the Old Testament we read, "Acquaint thyself with Him and be at peace." Know Him—not only what He gives, and what He does, but what He is. Remember that He has created us in his own image. Remember that no man can tell how near God has made us to Himself. Man has said in his folly, and in his blasphemous pride, "No God! I sit on the throne!" God has said: "Him that overcometh I will make to sit with Me on my throne." Is that enough for you? We shall judge angels (whatever that may mean); we shall judge nations. There are great, wonderful, amazing things in store for us. But why should we not begin now to rise to a knowledge of God, as far as He is willing to communicate Himself to us? How can you set any limit to that? He says to everyone who will accept Him for his Father and Saviour: "My son, my daughter, thou art ever with Me, and all that I have is thine."

So, if we know the Father, the next thing is to increase in the knowledge of Him. How can we increase in that knowledge? By keeping in fellowship with Him. And how shall we keep in fellowship with Him? Ask the Lord Jesus Christ, and He will tell you. He says: "The Father doth not leave Me alone, because I always do those things that please Him." Be one with Him in purpose. Let the intention of your life—your life of every day and all the day long; of your business life; of your family life; of all your life—be that God shall have his way with you; shall do his will through you, whatever it may be. To one it may be He entrusts some weighty charge. We should not envy that one, but he should accept the charge as an obedient child. God may confide to another what seems to be a very small sphere. But if God is well served in that sphere He is quite as well pleased with the one as with the other. You remember what we read in the life of Lord Shaftesbury; how he attributes his coming to a living knowledge of God to the influence of a Christian nurse. She little knew what she was doing. The question is not whether you are here or there; whether you are doing this or that; but whether you are doing the one thing that God will have you do at this time.

Of course, with that unity of purpose with God will come the habit of prayerfulness. Not only of saying your prayers, though it is good and useful to have set times of prayer. But the habit of turning your thoughts to God. In Psalm xxiii. we have first "The Lord is my shepherd," and by-and-by it is "Thou preparest a table before me." You begin by talking to Him, and you go on to supping with Him. Turn your thoughts, your purposes, your plans into prayers. Do not lose time by choosing for yourself, and then asking God to ratify your choice. Go to Him first, and ask Him to choose for you. Of course He will make use of your judgment, and will show you in various ways why you should not take this path or that. And, finally, He will walk before you in the right path. He that leadeth forth his own sheep goeth before them. It is by being led of God, by constantly speaking to God, by listening to Him and humbly following Him, that we will increase in the knowledge of God.

And then we will increase in the knowledge of the things of God. I think that we who are called Evangelical Christians need to bestir ourselves to know the things of God and the things that belong to the kingdom of God far better than we do. Many are satisfied with a sense of their own salvation, and with abstaining from this or that—surely a great blessing, but still what we may call negative holiness: they are not ready to be filled with life, and power, and love, and to increase in life, in power and in love day by day.

In the age in which we are living there is plenty of progress in all kinds of knowledge. There is also plenty of progress in the knowledge of the things that belong, externally if you please, to the kingdom of God; and they are and ought to be very helpful to us. There are those whom God has specially called to the function of leading his people in the paths of knowledge. I saw in the paper yesterday that you had been celebrating the memory of John Robinson. He was a great and good man, a great Puritan, and a humble Christian. I remember reading near Plymouth Rock an inscription to his memory, where some words of his are quoted after this fashion—I could not find the exact text, but they run something like this, "There is yet more light to break forth from God's Holy Word." Let us be ready then for more light to break forth from God's Word. We have spoken a great deal about the Pope and against the Pope. That is all right enough; but we must love him for all that and pray for him as a brother after all, if he has, as we may hope, a personal faith in the Saviour. But we will have none of him to lord it over us; that is understood. We are also strongly against the traditions of men, and we are often impatient in being spoken to about the fathers of the Church, ancient and venerable as they may be. But has it ever struck you that there are no people in the world who are more attached to the traditions of their religious fathers, or who are more immediately and habitually opposed to anyone who speaks in words to which they are not accustomed, than we evangelical Christians? Therefore, we had better become a little wiser after our jubilee; and as we strengthen our stakes we had better also lengthen our cords.

Let us be ready for any light that God may be pleased to cause to come out of his Word; or any light He may be pleased to give us about his Word; or any light He may be pleased to give us about Christ our Lord. We are not, of course, without question, to accept anything, or any man's word—any living man or any dead man. We must test all things by the Word of God. But we should be willing to be taught and willing to let every man do the special work that God has given him to do. As Paul tells us, some are teachers and some are not teachers. Let those who are teachers do their business as teachers. There are nowadays growing objections to many Christian doctrines, and to the statement of doctrines such as we have been accustomed to. It is not the business of every one of us to get up and speak in a meeting and contradict, unless he understands the question. All I plead for is a division of labour. I am quite as much as anyone against "science, falsely so-called"; but I am also against ignorance, truly so-called. I do not see that it belongs to every man, or even woman, to get up, and, ex cathedra, to cast all sorts of excommunications against brethren who do not think exactly as they do. If there is to be growth in knowledge we have to be attentive to this.

I will tell you what the danger seems to me to be. It is not that we should be called narrow. There will always be someone to call us narrow. But take our young men, for instance, who are growing up, not only into all the knowledge of the day, but into the ways of thinking of the day; which are certainly not the ways of thinking that were common fifty years ago. Questions do not present themselves in the same aspect. And I am afraid (for I have seen it), that these young men may just be driven off, because we are not willing to reconsider anything, or to see anything in a larger wider, clearer, and to that extent in a truer light.

Then, we must not only grow in knowledge, but in power. We often say we are a feeble folk. We are, but we are not to remain a feeble folk. We should be as an army with banners. There is some progress being made, I have no doubt, chiefly spiritual progress. We make less allowance than we used to for our own shortcomings. Why should we make allowance? Why should we not confess them and forsake them? Then we should progress in the methods of carrying the Gospel to others. If the old means are insufficient, let others be used. If the people will not come to the churches of course we do not reach the point at which we should aim. I have sometimes thought of Christ's word to the disciples, "I will make you fishers of men." Some of us have gone no further than this—we stick up bills on the trees by the side of the river, which say, "If you will come here once or twice a week we will try and catch you." That is a singular way of fishing. Others may go to the water with lanterns, and make a noise, and in that way draw the fish. The fish do not know what is wanted, but they come to see, and very often they are caught. I do not say we ought to imitate this or that way, but we ought to be up and doing, and stirring ourselves. We ought to be ingenious in our endeavours to reach souls; not giving up the old methods, that are very good as far as they go, but do not go far enough. Do not let us be afraid of new methods, and especially let us be full of power.

Finally let us be full of love. That is the great thing. God is love. I question whether anything can be more grievous to God than our doubting his love; than the very feeble and poor conceptions we have of his love. Do you remember a passage in Isaiah that is often quoted as if it related to the providence of God? But it does not relate to that or its mystery; it relates to the goodness of God. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." It is of his mercy that God is there speaking. If there is anything in this world in the heart of man or woman that is called love, it is because God is love. As we grow into love we grow into God.

This is the last thing I wanted to say. We must not only grow towards God, but into God: further and further into intimacy with Him, and therefore into likeness to Him, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

GROWTH: INDIVIDUAL AND COLLECTIVE.

Principal DOUGLAS, in the course of an address, said: Growth is the law of Christ's kingdom, as it is the law of the natural world. With all reverence, let us remember that it was said of our Lord Himself, while on earth, that He "grew in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and men." If we are members of the Church which is his Body, we must seek to grow up unto Him. Where there is no growth there are decay, corruption, and death. There are some periods of our lives that are specially periods of growth; but the Church of Christ is always young—young in the immortal youth of the Saviour Himself. This is not only true of the Church as a whole, but also of its individual members. In Christ we have the secret of life, and go on growing continually.

We may have "growing pains." We must not be too narrow; my principle is to be as broad as the Bible, and no broader. In one of the briefest New Testament Epistles we are urged to contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints (Jude 3. R.V.). In another place it is written, "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you" (Phil. iii. 15). Again, in the Old Testament there is a text for which I am very thankful, "He that believeth shall not make haste"—shall not make haste to embrace every novelty, shall not make haste to shut the mouths of those who believe they have something from God to say to us.

How wonderful is the growth of the Church of Christ! Planted in the little land of Palestine, it spread through the countries of the Roman Empire, and then among the barbarian peoples. The discovery of the New World was followed by the spread of the Gospel there, and during the past hundred years by revived missionary interest. The truth has been sent to India, China, and other lands. But with outward growth there must also be inward. Multitudes are slipping from the name and profession of Christ; and as we have laboured for the poor, so now we have before us the problem of a mission to the upper classes. The Church of Christ must be continually bearing witness to the Saviour, gathering in new converts. The faith once delivered to the saints never varies in its essentials. But it is impossible that the minds of men should be unoccupied. At first the mind of the Church was engaged with the knowledge of God, and that fell especially to subtle Greek thought. Then the practical Latin mind took up the question of man and sin, man's fall and need, also God's purpose regarding him. Then again, after ages of comparative standstill, at the Reformation, the strong Teutonic people brought these two truths together. I know not whether any new developments await us; I am quite prepared to welcome what may be said, but we must hold fast the substance of what we have while we seek to go on to perfection.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR pointed out that we cannot make ourselves grow, nor can we see ourselves grow. But if we are healthy and are suitably nourished, we shall grow, and that without any effort of our own. Having read the first three verses of the first Psalm, Mr. Taylor urged the continuous study of God's Word. The truly blessed man has his delight in the law of the Lord. Our purpose must go with God's purpose, if we would grow. We must not neglect to feed our souls. A great many Christian people are weak because they are only half-fed, or, if you like it, they are half-starved. We must have "the pure milk of the Word." If we make the law of God our delight, what follows? "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." There will be no lack of living water in the soul that lives on the Word, that lives by the Holy Spirit. I was once called to see a little child that was in a very bad way, getting thinner and thinner. I found out that it was not being fed by the nurse who had charge of it. Nourishment was procured, and the little one soon recovered. But for a long time it suffered, because of the period in which it had not been properly fed. Let us see to it that we are well fed; then God will see to the growth and development.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Herr VISCHER-SARASIN, of Basel, who presided on the second evening, read Psa. cxxxiii., and briefly introduced the subject.

Rev. Dr. GERTH VAN WYK, of Holland, began by recalling how, shortly after the Reformation, the Protestant Church divided into four branches—the Lutheran, the Reformed, the Baptist, and the Anglican—while these again were speedily subdivided into a host of denominations, all, however, setting forth the same evangelical doctrines and serving the same Lord and Master. In view of these divisions, the unbroken unity of the Church of Rome seems to many very attractive; but it may be asked—Is this unity in reality something to be sought after? Close examination proves that it is a mechanical unity as opposed to the fraternal unity aimed at by the Evangelical Alliance. It does not, the speaker maintained, rest on a Biblical basis; it is enforced by an unjustifiable compulsion; and it is more seeming than real. While we, as Protestants, accept nothing that is not based on the Bible, the unity of the Roman Catholic Church has no basis in the Bible, but springs solely from its hierarchical system—a system which is wholly opposed to New Testament teaching. Moreover, this apparent unity is brought about by compulsion and ruthless coercion. Of this many examples, mediæval and modern, were mentioned by Dr. Gerth van Wyk. In Mr. Purcell's biography of Cardinal Manning, it is admitted that the unity of the Roman Catholic Church is poisoned by defects and divisions unparalleled in Protestantism. The lesson of all this is that the unity to be sought after is not the mechanical uniformity of Rome, but the truer and deeper unity of heart to heart: unity with the great Head and with one another. We desire not union with Rome, nor any such mechanical unity as that which exists in the Roman Catholic system; but we pray that all members of the Church of Christ may prove themselves one in faith, one in holiness, one in charity, one in devotion. Thus shall we rejoice in fellowship with the one God and the one Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. JOHN HALL, D.D., recalled, as an example of the growth and development of the Church, the history of the "Scotch-Irish," a colony of Ulstermen who settled some centuries ago in America, carrying with them their love of education and religion, and helping largely to mould and shape the future of the United States, while founding the great transatlantic Presbyterian churches. The lesson of this history he declared to be that it is a great blessing to be well instructed in the truth, and to be controlled by definite religious conviction, carried into each department of life for the good of men and the glory of God.

Pastor JELLINGHAUS, of Potsdam, spoke of the origin of the Evangelical Alliance fifty years ago, and its results in quickened life and manifested unity in the churches of the continent of Europe. True believers have been brought together as never before, and thus the prayer of our Lord is being fulfilled, "That they all may be one." This is not a mechanical unity, but a deep, true, vital union in Him, which enables us to forget differences of denomination and creed. The closer we cling to Christ, the more faithful we are to God; the more firmly grounded in the Word, the nearer shall we be drawn to one another in love and fellowship and good works.

Pastor ARNSTROM, of Stockholm, began by delivering a loving greeting from a conference of Swedish Christians to the friends assembled at Mildmay, and proceeded to say that no unity has greater permanence than unity in Christ, because no unity has such a foundation. That foundation is Jesus Christ Himself. The kingdoms of this world shall be dissolved and pass away; the body ecclesiastic shall disappear; the woman now reigning in purple and scarlet shall be destroyed in one day by the Lord God; but while all these shall vanish, the Church which is the body of the Lord Jesus Christ, shall endure, and its true unity shall remain for ever and ever.

Dr. HENRY SOLTAV spoke of the blessing of Joseph (Gen. xlix. 22) as illustrative of growth and development in the believer. There is growth because the roots run down to the cool water in the well beneath; there is development in the branches running over the wall for the refreshment of passers-by. The well is Christ, and the believer whose roots run deep down will find his branches running over and bearing fruit, whereby thirsty ones round about may be refreshed. The speaker closed with an earnest Gospel appeal to the unsaved.

[The leading addresses of Thursday and Friday will appear in subsequent issues.]

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

TUESDAY.

WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

Under the shade of the historic Mulberry Tree, on Tuesday afternoon, a large company assembled [618] to hear accounts of various speakers anent Christian work on the Continent. The proceedings, which were presided over by General Sir John Field, opened with hearty singing, following which Rev. Dr. GARRTON pleaded for the Divine blessing on the gathering. The chairman, in the course of a few appropriate remarks, referred to the fact that they had met to enjoy holy fellowship with each other, and with dear brethren who had come from many countries. He added an earnest expression of hope that the result of the meetings would be to stimulate all present to more active efforts in furthering the spread of the glorious Gospel of God's grace everywhere, and in the promotion of brotherly love and union the world over.

Mr. W. SOLTAV, of Paris, enlarged, with interest and profit to his audience, on the work and claims of the McAll Mission. He referred to the special fitness there was in the mission being represented there, it having been founded on the basis of the Evangelical Alliance. In Paris those who work in connection with the McAll Mission are themselves a kind of alliance labouring together in the cause of Christ with Christians of all denominations and of all nations. Mr. Soltav went on to speak of three departments of the work in France that had now been pursued since January 17, 1872. Six years ago the mission boat work was begun on the river Seine and various neighbouring canals. The vessel was fitted with a large hall, capable of accommodating nearly 200 people, in which religious services are held night after night. The boat touches at numerous villages, where there are no evangelists or pastors of any kind, and the Gospel is preached to the peasantry, who attend in large numbers; tracts and copies of the Word of God are freely distributed amongst them.

Another department of effort is that of temperance work carried on in Paris and outskirts, and in thirty or forty other towns throughout France. They had learned that France is becoming a very drunken nation. In fact, last year there was a greater quantity of alcoholic liquors drunk per head of the population in France than in any other country in Europe. Great Britain stands seventh on the list. Their temperance work had been very encouraging, many drunkards having been reclaimed and converted. It is a sad fact, however, that habits of intemperance were fast increasing amongst the young, so much so, that outside Paris prisons had been pulled down, and larger ones erected for the incarceration of boys and girls addicted to drunkenness. Christian Association and Christian Endeavour work have been commenced in France, under the auspices of the Mission, and the young people themselves are being trained up in many cases to carry on the work which is now a most promising feature.

MISS DE BROEN, speaking of the Belleville Mission work, alluded at length to the way in which she had been providentially led to enter upon it. In this connection she sought to emphasise the fact that Christian workers ought to exercise a patient, prayerful trust in God until He sees fit to make the path plain and unmistakable. The Belleville Mission has now been in operation twenty-five years. It comprises Gospel meetings, Sunday schools, singing classes, the sale of Scriptures, temperance effort, etc. A training home for girls is also carried on in connection with the organisation. Miss de Broen pleaded, in conclusion, for increased financial aid.

Pastor ANET gave an account of the progress of Christian work in Belgium. He spoke of the earnestness shown by the poor miners in building churches at their own expense. One woman, whose husband was ill, managed to keep her house going by the few pence she could earn in selling refuse coal, which people were allowed to gather at the pits, and she contributed, over and above her household expenses, £1 in English money towards the work of Christ carried on in her district. The miners loved the pastors, and were in the habit of speaking about Christ to their comrades in the mines. There were three great needs in the work amongst the Belgians, namely, pastors, lay-workers, and lastly "plenty more money."

Mission work in Spain was the subject spoken to by Pastor FLEEDNER, who referred particularly to various difficulties due to a spirit of suspicion and superstition on the part of the local authorities, experienced during the erection of a training institute for the young, soon to be completed, and which will afford accommodation for about fifty children. Their want was not so much that of money as workers.

Rev. EDWARD CLARKE, of the Spezia Mission (Italy), spoke especially of the work amongst the young people. It had been very encouraging, and the Mission had received help from all denominations of Christians, so that it was a living embodiment of an evangelical alliance. He and his fellow-workers had experienced great opposition. Heaps of Bibles had been burned by the priests, and he himself had been burned in effigy. On another occasion he was only saved from being stoned by Government interference. He had received from the King of Italy a very kindly communication, in which His Majesty showed himself to be in sympathy with the objects of the Mission. An orphanage was one of the departments of the work. Mr. Clarke spoke specially of the blessing which had resulted from the prayer-meetings which were frequently and regularly held, and said he never heard young people pray with more wonderful faith and simplicity than the Italians who attended those meetings. The work, he added, has now extended to the confines of Austria.

AFRICAN SLAVERY.

A gathering, which was only sparsely attended, took place simultaneously in the tent, under the presidency of Count MOLTEKE (Copenhagen). The subject for consideration was announced as "Christian work in the United States and Canada." Rev. G. U. VENNER (New York) and Rev. G. M. MILLIGAN, D.D. (Toronto), were the advertised speakers, but neither of them appeared in that capacity, and the time was given up to a startling address on "The African Slave-trade and the Evangelical Alliance," by Mr. HELI CHATELAIN. The speaker declared that the institution of slavery, and the slave trade which kept it up, are constituent elements of the native social order of Africa. In varying degree slavery exists, and is practised at the present time, over the whole face of the Dark Continent, which is in round numbers 5000 miles long and 5000 miles wide. The evil prevails not only throughout all the European spheres of influence but in all the African colonies and protectorates of Great Britain, France, and Germany. The sources which supply the African slave-trade are—the sale of children by parents, self-sale by gamblers, cowards in war, or people threatened with death by famine, sale of criminals by legal action, kidnapping, capture in war, etc. In the concluding portion of his address Mr. Chatelain stated that Evangelical Alliance men in America, as well as in Switzerland and Germany, had been among the first to define a practical plan, in the establishment of refuges and settlements for liberated slaves in Africa.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRISTIAN CO-OPERATION.

The important subject of "The Evangelical Alliance and Christian Co-operation" occupied the attention of friends assembled in the Large Hall, on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. A. H. BRANDT presided, and expressed the fraternal feelings of the Dutch people towards the English nation and the Evangelical Alliance in particular.

Rev. Dr. STRONG, general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, delivered an address on "The Churches and the Signs of the Times." The duty of the Churches to be open-eyed to the great world-movements of our day, is, he said, implied in the Master's rebuke to the Pharisees and Sadducees. The great sign in the industrial world is the tendency towards organizing capital and labour for an unreasonable and unnatural war upon each other. In the literary world, our Press and fiction are distinctly coloured by the creation of the science of sociology; while men devoted to the political sphere are seeking to substitute democratic rule for representative government. In America, for example, it is found that Press and citizen discuss measures, and the legislative body simply puts into legal form what is believed to be the will of the people. Another sign is the new Philanthropy, which refuses to believe that poverty and suffering are to be for ever the lot of the wretched. In the ecclesiastical world the most significant movement is that of the Churches towards each other; while in the distinctly religious sphere the prominent sign of our times is a return to Christ—a distinct religious renaissance destined to have great influence on the future.

These movements in so many directions mark a new era in the progress of the race, and profoundly concern the Church of Christ. Society is becoming self-conscious; and in seeking to discover the laws of its own development, is coming to new views of social obligation. Herein it is hoped that the Church of Christ will see and seize her opportunity to proclaim the laws of God's kingdom as applicable to every sphere of life, and as binding on every conscience. Dr. Strong dwelt at length with the application of this principle to the industrial, intellectual, philanthropic, ecclesiastical, and religious movements which he had described, and gave some details of united activities on the part of churches in the United States, for putting a Christian stamp on the new civilization of the new century.

Some particulars about "The Evangelical Faith and Christian Union in Germany" were given by Pastor CORREYON (Frankfort). He regarded Heinrich Wichern, founder of the Rauhe Haus in Hamburg, as the father of the reformation of religious life in Germany in our own time; for the impulse given to Christian Germany in 1849 continues to-day. Amid the labyrinth of Christian work in the towns and villages of the Fatherland, must be named the Colony of Mercy, founded by Baron Pastor von Bodelschwingh, near Bielefeld. More is to be learned from a visit to that place than from many theologians. Kaiserswerth again, is the mother station of deaconesses' houses throughout the world. At Wurtemberg lived Blumhardt, the pious pastor who, through faith and prayer, healed great numbers of the sick. As to Berlin, thirty years ago it was practically heathen, but through the influence of the City Mission the religious physiognomy of the place has been gradually but surely changed. The "Christian Fellowships" are remarkable features of the Reformed Church and are grouped under a central society, the "Philadelphia," which meets every two years in the pleasant Moravian colony called Gnadau, near Magdeburg, where 500 workers were gathered last Whit-Sunday. Many of the principal cities have these "Philadelphia" meetings, where princes, barons, and peasants all kneel together before the Lamb of God.

Rev. CAVALIER PONS (Torre Pellice) traced, amid the history of persecutions inflicted upon the ancient Continental Church, the Waldensian, a thousand proofs of sympathy and fellowship on the part of English Christians. There can be no victory against the assaults of Popery without some self-denial in the direction of union between the various denominations which have so much in common. If this be needed in England, how much more so on the Continent. The greatness of the Pope depends largely upon the curiosity of the people. While extending a warm welcome to any Christian people who might journey to Italy for the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of Waldenses, Cavalier Pons hinted that it would be more profitable and safe for friends to see the work of the Evangelical Churches than to spend time in visiting the Vatican.

Before offering the closing prayer, Rev. Dr. JOHN HALL, of New York, prefaced the exercise with a few words conveying two suggestions. He thought there was need for ministers of Evangelical Churches to afford their people more instruction in Protestant principles. It was necessary to point out that whatever may be the pomp and ceremony associated with so-called Christian worship, if the Gospel of Jesus Christ is not preached we can have no sympathy with such agencies. He was persuaded that such teaching would save many from making the mistakes which tell disastrously upon their own lives and upon the community of which they are members. Further, he believed it would be a good thing if all the Evangelical churches in Great Britain and in the United States could have some regular, systematic method of raising and contributing funds for the work of evangelisation on the Continent, and more particularly in Italy. Hard worked ministers have to come away from their people abroad in order to plead the cause and get material aid, their own countries and charges in the meantime losing the benefit of their services. The plan suggested would save the time and strength of workers abroad, and would do much to rescue multitudes from spiritual darkness and superstition.

HELPS AND HINDRANCES.

Dr. E. COMBA, of Florence, presided over a meeting, on Wednesday afternoon, to consider the helps and hindrances to the Evangelical faith. In some opening words he called attention to the Positivist principle that nothing can be well known except by experience. That is precisely the rule of Jesus Christ, who said: "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." Francis of Assisi said: "A man knows in proportion to what he does." That is not all the truth, but it is true. The Gospel does not so much appeal to the intelligence or the heart, as to the will and the conscience.

SIR J. WILLIAM DAWSON

read a paper on "Natural Science as the Hand-maid of Revealed Religion." The business of the natural sciences is to observe and record natural facts or phenomena, to classify them, and to refer them to their causes, and to the natural laws which govern them. Such pursuits, often most valuable as parts of mental culture and for the practical well-being of mankind, have, in themselves, little connection with our religious beliefs and hopes. They lead, however, to the recognition of a First Cause, who regulates both the natural and the spiritual worlds, and thus questions are raised which connect the phenomena of nature with our religious sentiments. The Bible also recognises nature as a manifestation of God; and thus science may be elevated from the merely physical to the spiritual world, and religious belief may be broadened, so as, in some sense, to include all nature.

Reference was then made to the misconceptions which are connected with the current use of the term "supernatural," in a sense which implies that there are parts of nature not under the influence of secondary causes or natural laws; and that as knowledge of causes and laws expands, the domain of the supernatural must contract. This is a view wholly subjective and unreasonable—a relic of ancient superstition, and it is also unscriptural. The Bible knows nothing of the supernatural in this sense. To it God is not only over, but in all his works and laws; and secondary causes are merely expressions of his will and of his methods. The term, indeed, should be banished from scientific and theological discussion, and we should, like the Bible, distinguish only between the natural and the spiritual, each under Divine law. We should also recognise the fact that in man himself the material organism is associated with and dominated by a spiritual nature. It is from this point of view that nature is appealed to in the Bible in illustration of spiritual truth; and it is from this point of view that St. Paul argues that, even without revelation, men may learn the power and divinity of the Creator from the things that He has made.

There is much misconception as to the relations of science and faith. Physical science requires proof of its facts and laws, and declines to receive anything on trust. Yet it must believe in first principles, and must, for many of its facts, depend on testimony. In the higher domain of the spiritual, the scope for faith becomes much greater, for here we can have no material tests, yet must trust as firmly as if we had mathematical demonstration. The child trusts its mother, and we all trust to the character and integrity of other men, though we cannot apply any physical tests to these. So in religion: while God declines to give us any physical sign from heaven, He presents to us a Divine Person, holy, loving, and self-sacrificing, and asks us to place our trust in Him as our Saviour. Such faith is our own willing, free, and reasonable act: yet it is also the gift of God—for He has given us the evidence of it, and the capacity to entertain it and to live by it. Such faith is as different from mere credulity or superstition as is the trust of a child in its parent, or of one friend in the integrity of another. It raises man from a merely material sphere, and allies him with the spiritual world and with his Maker, and becomes the evidence of things not seen.

Sir William took exception to the suspicion with which scientific pursuits are often regarded, as if they tended to unbelief; and also to the intolerant fulminations against science sometimes indulged in. On the other hand, weak concessions to uncertain hypotheses sometimes advanced in the name of science are equally to be deprecated, as well as inaccurate statements as to natural facts and principles when used as illustrations of spiritual truth. Much injury has been done in these ways to men of earnest minds and keen sensibilities. He had had experience with something like three generations of scientific men, and he thought he had found as many truly pious men among them as in any other walk in this world. The worst stumbling-block in the way of scientific men is the admixture of unscriptural corruptions with the Christian religion; hence these men in many cases hold themselves aloof from the churches. In conclusion, an appeal was made on behalf of the study of Nature as an elevating and ennobling pursuit, and one which brings us near to the mind of the Creator, and enables us better to appreciate the teaching of his revealed Word.

Dr. SYLVESTER F. SCOVEL, president of Wooster University, Ohio, dealt with Christianity's opportunity and duty in the Press, especially with reference to newspapers and magazines. Many people read nothing but periodical publications, many more read very little besides. The press is one of the greatest moral and social forces; it is the true Argus with a hundred eyes, the true Briareus with a hundred hands. Of public opinion it is at once cause and effect. We have not yet seen the greatest development of the press. Having spoken of the prevalent disregard of moral issues, and (especially in America) the secularisation of the Sabbath, Dr. Scovel maintained that the Church of Christ must resist the salacious press and aim at sustaining an ideal Christian press. He was convinced that religious people would support newspapers conducted on higher lines, for they now dread the placing of ordinary papers before their children. "All power" has been given to Christ; the "power of the Press" is his also.

Rev. A. F. BUSCARLET, of Lausanne, read a paper on "The Dangers of Romanism and Ritualism." He spoke what he had seen in Italy and Switzerland. Romish superstitions and Ritualistic follies, as he describes them, presented many saddening features. It is impossible, he said, to exaggerate the dangers into which England is being dragged by the sacerdotal party.

MORE CONTINENTAL REPORTS.

Shortly before three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, after a large audience of expectant listeners had comfortably seated themselves in front of the mulberry tree, now in full bloom, a dark cloud overhead gave warning of what would speedily have thrown a damper on the proceedings, had the company not taken the timely hint and quickly adjourned en masse to room No. 6. The meeting here was presided over by Colonel Von KNOBELSDORF, and the subject which occupied attention was "Evangelical Religion on the Continent of Europe."

Pastor HOCART's address had a special bearing on evangelisation in the suburbs of Paris. He mentioned that a great barrier to the spread of the Gospel there is the gross immorality that abounds on all hands, and this state of things has its source in unbelief. The motto of the young is "pleasure," and religion is regarded as a gloomy thing and the destroyer of enjoyment. In the case of the fallen, Christian workers in England have a great advantage over those in France, because, unlike our own country, they could not there invoke the memories of the Sunday-school or the Bible-class, or, perhaps, a mother's prayers. But they did not despair of furthering the work, though they had great and numerous difficulties to meet. Their great object is to gain the masses for Christ, and with that end in view they call to their aid temperance societies, Young Men's Christian Associations, children's Christian associations. "And," remarked the speaker, "if it did not look presumptuous in a man of my age, I should say, that I am the children's friend, and I have no greater joy than to be surrounded by scores of young people who call me grandfather." Having further stated that evening ragged schools form another branch of the work in Paris, the speaker said he made a special point of preaching the Gospel and distributing tracts at funerals that he attended, and much good had resulted therefrom.

Belgium was represented by Pastor ROCHEDIEU, whose address was interpreted to the audience by Mr. W. Soltau. The pastor stated that in Belgium they held a Week of Prayer in January, corresponding to that held by the Evangelical Alliance in this country. Furthermore, earnest prayer meetings have been held on behalf of the sufferers in Armenia. The Belgian Christians work heartily together in promotion of the cause of temperance and morality. The influence of Protestantism on the people is very considerable, and Protestants themselves are looked upon generally as "people who always speak the truth." It is disappointing, nevertheless, that the members of the Belgian Government, and other people in high authority, are not on the side of Evangelical religion.

Rev. B. LA TROBE described the work of Moravian Missions. He conveyed hearty greetings from the directing board of the United Brethren to the Evangelical Alliance on the attainment of its jubilee.

The two succeeding addresses by Pastor Storjohann, of Norway, and Mr. Mäkinen, of Finland, will be reported in a future issue.

YOUNG MEN AND YOUNG WOMEN.

The contemporaneous meeting, which took place in the tent, was conducted by Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, and there was a crowded attendance. The special subject brought before the meeting was "Christian Work amongst the Young." The chairman, referring to Y.M.C.A. effort, explained that in London there are now seventy-two associations, thirteen of which own the property in which the members are accustomed to meet. The total membership in London now stands at 13,383. In the United Kingdom the associations number 1093, representing a membership of 98,911. Throughout the world there are 6229 associations, with 511,620 members.

Miss MORLEY testified to the useful work which is being carried on in connection with the 5000 branches of the Y.W.C.A. scattered throughout the world.

Count A. von BERNSTORFF gave a brief sketch of Y.M.C.A. work in Germany. He particularly emphasised the fact that a great part of the religious effort connected with the Associations there is put forth by the members themselves. The members are made to work because there is no spiritual growth without work for the Master. A number of the young men have gone out to labour in the foreign mission field.

Mr. W. E. DODGE, of New York, spoke of the numerous institutions of the kind scattered throughout America as being a great boon to Christian young men on their first arrival at what was to them a strange land. He mentioned that in many of the leading American cities the most prominent and handsome buildings are the buildings of the Y.M.C.A.

Miss HABERSHON referred to the work of the Y.W.C.A. in London, which she said is reaching out to all classes. She stated that a training home has been started for workers among young women in Finsbury Square.

Mr. JAMES HUGHES (Lyons) stated that there are now 1000 members of the Y.M.C.A. in Paris alone. In Lyons the Christian Endeavour movement has made great strides, and its membership has been doubled since last November. He directed attention to the vast field there is for Christian effort in France, where only 5,000,000, he said, of a total population of 40,000,000 really acknowledge the sway of the Roman Catholic Church. Pastor SZABO spoke encouragingly of the work of the Y.M.C.A. during the last ten years in Hungary.

The Children's Special Service Mission found an able advocate in the person of Mr. H. HUTCHINSON. Having explained that the mission had now extended to all parts of the earth with blessed results, he mentioned that a branch of the work, the Children's Scripture Union, was established some seventeen years since, with the object of teaching and encouraging young people to read God's Word regularly, intelligently, and with spiritual profit. The Union has now 700,000 members throughout the world. Mr. Hutchinson emphasised the importance of getting the children converted, and of supplying them with healthy literature.

[Further reports of the afternoon gatherings must be deferred.]

CLOSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

On Friday evening, after a missionary meeting, presided over by Mr. W. E. Dodge (New York), and addressed by Dr. E. E. Jenkins, M. le Pasteur Coillard, and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor (reports of whose utterances we reserve for a future issue), the Conference was brought to a close. Dr. J. MURRAY MITCHELL delivered a brief farewell address, first to delegates from America and the British Colonies, and then, in their own tongues, to those from French-speaking countries, and from Italy and Germany. Subsequently, he spoke a few words to all assembled, emphasising the Divine oneness of the Church of Christ. Brief responses having been made by Pastor J. Storjohann (Christiania) and Dr. Prochet (Rome), the one representing northern Europe and the other southern, the meeting was brought to a close by Canon Taylor Smith, who led in the Lord's Prayer, and pronounced the benediction. In the course of the evening rain fell copiously, suggestive of coming "showers of blessing"; but the last hand-shakings outside the Hall were made in moonlight calm, recalling the assurance, "The Lord will bless his people with peace."

"Give the Girl a Chance."

THE unobtrusive, and for the most part silent, work carried on in Poplar, by Mrs. Wilkes, among "those who have erred and strayed from the right path," is in danger of being quite overlooked by our readers. A reminder may perhaps lead sympathisers to cheer our sister in her difficult but much-blissed enterprise, by some timely practical help.

In a recent letter to us Mrs. Wilkes says:—

"It may not be ill-timed to say that the helping of mother and child together in a natural way is the real key by which Christian women may unlock the door and stay the flood of evil that rolls through our streets. The greater portion of women who walk them in such utter disgrace have been unmarried mothers. Many of them have tried to do their best for the child they had no means to keep with them, and the end of the struggle has been open shame. Personal experience of no ordinary kind has shown me that the girl about to become a mother is, to speak humanly, in a truly salvable state, and easy to lead and teach, for 'the little child' will 'lead her'—it does. Seldom does it fail if the girl has a chance. Help her with her baby; do not take it from her. Let her nurse it in peace on her own breast. As the mother-love wells up in her heart, tell her about the Saviour, and, like a well-prepared instrument, she will be sure to answer to the sound, and she will arise and go to his dear feet. Day by day my old eyes are gladdened by the sight, and I am sure if many Christian women knew what joy I get they would not rest till they tasted the same joy."

Romanism in India.

COLONEL ALFRED PORCELLI, R.E., writing from Ootacamund, gives some account of the Roman propaganda in India. The errors, corruptions, and superstitions well known in the West are fully represented. In conclusion, Colonel Porcelli says:—

"Just below the house where I am writing there is to be seen by the roadside a grave with a black cross over it. Here was buried a Romish native named Antony; his relatives used to put leaves, oil, and ghee on the stone over his grave, just like the Hindoos do to their little idol-houses by the roadside. Long prayers to Miriamah (Mary's Hindoo name) used to be murmured over this poor grave, until it became a regular praying place, where 'pooja' was performed. Suddenly it was discovered that the grave had sunk, and left the black cross sticking up in the air. At once the cry of miracle was raised, and it was declared that the black cross was rising out of the ground. This produced such excitement that a priest had to intervene. His action was characteristic. He simply cursed the cross, and forbade it to rise any more.

"Not far from this house there is at present great noise and excitement. The cause is a paper temple, surmounted by five crosses. This paper arrangement is a Romish erection, quite in the native style, where theatricals are held, in order to attract the heathen into the fold. Oddly enough, at the other end of the bazaar is a heathen erection, inside which is the statue and shrine of the Hindoo Mary (or Miriamah), the goddess of small-pox, cholera, plague, etc. A veritable saturnalia has been going on for days past, but it is questionable whether the prayers offered to this latter goddess are as insulting to God as are those offered to the 'Queen of Heaven.' Can we wonder that in God's Holy Word Rome is thus spoken of: 'Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her (Rev. xviii. 20).'"

The Duxhurst Farm Colony.—At a meeting in St. Martin's Town Hall, last week, Lady Henry Somerset explained the working of the farm colony for inebriate women at Duxhurst, Surrey. An appeal was made for the support of the work, and it was stated that Lady Henry had contributed £2000 towards the amount needed. The Colony was formally opened on Monday last by the Duchess of Teck.

Mr. A. Smith, Lagos.—This earnest young C.M.S. missionary passed away at the end of May. He had only been in the Mission a few months, and in his latest letter he spoke of the wonderful immunity he had experienced from malarial fever, and of the good health he had enjoyed. We are sorry also to announce that Mr. and Mrs. Toase have been invalided home on account of the health of the former. They have arrived safely in England.

"Morituri vos Salutamus."

[See the farewell letter of the Arch-priest Stephen, of Urfa, who, with 12,000 Armenian Christians, perished in the massacre of last December.]

A VOICE from the desolate land,
A voice from the trampled sod,
Where thousands passed thro' blood and fire
To see the face of God.

The hands that wrote are nerveless now,
The lips that spoke are dumb;
But with the soul's own life live on
Words from the soul that come.

Amazed, in that far Eastern town,
By old Euphrates' wave,
They saw the tempest gather round,
With none to help or save.
And yet, one word had magic power
To stay the murderous sword,—
But how could men of Christian faith
Deny the Christian's Lord?

So, steadfast in their anguish dire,
They set their face to death;
Yet sent a farewell message forth,
Winged with a parting breath,
And "Dying we salute you" comes
Their voice o'er land and sea;—
Hear it, ye men of Christian birth,
In homes of Liberty!

"Sovereign! who hast decreed our death,
We bow before thy will;
Yet know that, mighty as thou art,
There is One mightier still.
Against thee we have never sinn'd,
He knows, who knoweth all;
Dying, to Him we leave our cause,
Into his hand we fall.

Moslems! who hate us and oppress,
As ye were taught to do;
We know that kind and pitying hearts
Are found amongst you, too.
And these we thank and bless—the rest
We pity and forgive;

Turning from you, by whom we die,
To God, in whom we live.

Christians of other race and creed,
We think you meant us well;
Nor boots it now to search and seek
How all this woe befel.

Armenians! free in happier lands,
To live, and hope, and love;
We pray God keep you in his grace,
And give you tryst above!

Pray for us, that we follow Christ,
And his dear martyred saints,
Confessing Him with steadfast heart,
Tho' tortured body faints.
And thus our farewell blessing take,
As from beside the grave;
Now glory be to Jesus Christ,
Who died our souls to save!"

And thus, when Christmas stars shone out,
Another Stephen died,
Like him who erst at God's right Hand
Beheld the Crucified.
Oh, did the silent heavens divide
Before his closing eye,
And give one glimpse of the beyond,
To martyr ecstasy?

Aye, thousands died, by steel and flame,
Their very names unknown,
Tho' well to be remembered yet,
Before the great White Throne
O Christ, whose Name, all names above,
Swelled their last parting breath,
Wast Thou not with them in that hour
To take the sting from death?

O Christ, Thou see'st the anguish keen,
By which our hearts are riven!
Whose heart with human sympathy,
Throbs on in highest heaven!
Our love to thine is ice to fire,
Yet still Thy thunders sleep,
O Saviour, crucified afresh,
In these Thy helpless sheep!

Does light beyond the darkness gleam?
Can eyes like ours below,
Discern the mystery of love
That glorifies thro' woe?
Thou hast the path of suffering trod,
All tender and all wise!
What do we know, except that these Are precious in Thine eye?

Then, for the remnant that is left,
Should founts of prayer ascend,
That God in his own time and way
Their agony would end.
And for ourselves—need we no prayer,
Lest one day we should be
Of those to whom his lips shall say,
"Ye did it not to Me?"

D. ALCOCK.

Among India's Children.

A six months' mission tour was lately made by Mr. J. H. Greene, of the Children's Special Service Mission, among the young people of Ceylon and India. Commencing in Ceylon, he held missions at most of the C.M.S. stations in the island, and addressed some schools of other denominations in Colombo. Crossing over to South India, he spent a month at Palamecottah and outlying stations of the Tinnevely District, the American Mission at Madura, and some S.P.G. stations near, after which he spent a few days at Madras, and then proceeded to Calcutta.

After addressing a number of the C.M.S. and other schools and colleges at Calcutta, he visited the Nuddea and Santhal districts, and thence, via the North-West Provinces, Punjab, and Friends' Mission, Hoshangabad, to Bombay. Most of the addresses had to be by interpretation, but at many of the most important colleges, and at schools for Europeans at Simla, addresses were given in English; and at Bombay and Calcutta short missions for European children were held. Wherever several days were able to be given to the same school or congregation, very encouraging results of the work were apparent.

Central Hall, Manchester.—The anniversary of the Free trade Hall Sunday evening services, under the direction of the Central Hall Mission Committee, was celebrated on Sunday by special services at the Central Hall and Free-trade Hall. Gipsy Smith and Rev. S. F. Collier took part in all the services. There was a congregation of about 1000 in the morning, the Central Hall was crowded in the afternoon, and at night hundreds had to be turned away from the doors at the Free-trade Hall.

The M.D.S.F. in Labrador.—Dr. Grenfell writes:—"Manifest tokens of God's favour have not been wanting from the inception of the work in Labrador, and they have culminated in the efforts of Dr. Robinson this past winter. It is with the deepest regret that I find it is impossible for him to remain this summer. His place is to be taken by a doctor from a London hospital, many years engaged in Evangelical work. Young, strong, and enthusiastic, he will be a right hand to us when Dr. Robinson leaves. Dr. Robinson, who came to us invalided home from the Universities Mission on Lake Nyassa, leaves to assist the Bishop of Natal in medical mission work in South Africa, where his qualities and worth and his powers of organisation will find ample scope in that populous and much-neglected region. Sister Williams, who has spent part of the winter in Canada, will, with Dr. Willway, hold Indian Harbour for the summer, and will remain next winter in the place of Sister Carwardine, who will return home next November."

London Free Church Council.—In view of the continued growth of the District Free Church Councils, plans have been adopted which will extend their network of associations throughout Greater London. Important work on the Education question has been carried on in all the districts; but the Council is resolved to utilise the new forces that have been created by the union of the churches for a still higher purpose, viz., the evangelisation of the un-reached majority of London. To cast a search-light on the heathenism of London by house-to-house visitation, and to stir up the Free Churches to renewed and united activity for the uplifting of the people, is the immediate policy of the Council. By arranging united meetings to bring home to the churches the claims of the millions outside the churches, and united missions in every district, it is believed that multitudes will be brought under the sound of the Gospel, and the separate churches secure a blessing hitherto unknown. It is hoped that by March next, when the National Free Church Council meets in London, the whole metropolis will be covered with vigorous councils, and valuable reports of the work done will be presented.

Young Men in the Levant.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

THAT portion of the Mediterranean coast which, from its position towards the rising sun, has been called the Levant, though its needs are as urgent as any, offers but slight encouragement in the direction of Y.M.C.A. work. "Of the various associations, or remnants of associations, scattered thereabout, I have recently visited those of Beyrout, Jerusalem, Cairo, Alexandria, Athens, and Constantinople.

The difficulties in these parts are even greater than in the Orient, where there is, as a rule, a proportionately larger number of young men drawn from Christian homes and circles in England or America. Here the bulk of the clerkships and other subordinate offices, which would there be held by Englishmen or Americans, are occupied by polyglot Levantines, either natives of the various countries in which they are found or of race indeterminate. These being chiefly members of Oriental non-evangelical churches, or of no particular religious belief, are not easily attracted by Evangelical associations. It is only those of their number who have either received the Christian faith in its simplicity, or who are thoughtful pupils in Evangelical mission schools, who are to any extent approached by the existing organisations.

In organising associations of any sort out here, there is another serious difficulty to be dealt with: that is, the general lack of backbone in these latitudes. Added to this is the lack of cohesion and perseverance which too often causes the disintegration of societies of all sorts. It seems that almost every, if not every, class of organisation set on foot among these peoples, which is not directed and perennially refreshed by Western energy, must share the fate of the crumbling East, and fail. All this needs to be borne in mind in judging of success and failure in all branches of religious work as well.

The most important centres for this class of work in the Levant lie in Egypt, notably at Alexandria and Cairo, and along the Suez Canal. Attempts have been made within the past few years, notably by Mr. George Holmes, to set associations on foot at these points, and for some time after his visits they appeared to flourish. But for want of someone who would undertake the responsibility of their direction, all have since come to grief, in spite of the willingness of many to assist. Only in Cairo does the nucleus of one remain in the Christian Endeavour Society at the American Mission. The secretary, Mr. Ellis J. Humphreys, himself a business young man, will be glad to welcome those introduced by other Associations. What is needed for the whole circle of untouched centres is a thoroughly earnest and capable man to reside where most convenient, to undertake the administration of all with the help of local committees and secretaries. Such a man would need some foreign experience, and some acquaintance with the conditions of life in the Levant before he would be able adequately to direct operations.

In Athens there is a flourishing little band among the members of the Evangelical Church of Greece. At their Sunday afternoon meetings practical subjects of the day, and the relations which should or should not exist between them and Christian men, are ably dealt with and discussed alternately with studies of the history of Christianity. This association is also opening a room for reading and discussion with outsiders as a centre for evangelistic effort.

In Beyrout and Constantinople there are interesting associations in the American colleges, which, in common with many others, have received much blessing and a new impetus from the recent visit of Mr. J. R. Mott, of America. Constantinople has also a small English Association in Pera, which, however, only meets during the winter, and another for native Christians gathering at the Bible House in Stamboul. Here the scattered nature of the city and suburbs renders any central association extremely difficult. Here, again, the need for extended work among our fellow-countrymen is great and growing.

Constantinople.

International S.S. Lessons.

July 19.

THE ARK BROUGHT TO JERUSALEM.—2 Sam. vi. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Psalm lxxxiv. 12.

THE importance of this event may be inferred from the number of psalms which relate to it. One written for the occasion (1 Chron. xvi. 8-36) reappears in Psalms xcvi., cv., and cvi. Psa. xxiv. is supposed to have been sung as the procession was entering Jerusalem.

For a description of the ark see Exod. xxv. 10-22. Its proper place was in the Holy of Holies. The lid of it was the Mercy Seat, and on this stood the two cherubim. Between the wings of the cherubim, God dwelt in Shekinah glory. For the contents of the ark, see Deut. x. 2, Heb. ix. 4. The ark was therefore the symbol of the very centre of the people's religion.

It is a sad testimony to the decline of religion in Israel, that for seventy years this symbol of the people's worship should have been neglected. Recall the story of its removal from the tabernacle at Shiloh; its capture by the Philistines; the judgments with which the Philistines were visited; and the return of the ark into Israel (1 Sam. iv.-vii.). During all these years it had remained in the house of Abinadab (3, with 1 Sam. vii. 1) in Kirjath-jearim, here called Baale (2, with 1 Chron. xiii. 6). This was in the valley of Sorek, about eleven miles west of Jerusalem. The story divides itself into three parts:

I. A GOOD WORK ATTEMPTED (1-5).—The work originated with David. He was the religious leader as well as the civil ruler of the people. Yet he made the movement a national one. The number of people assembled was 30,000 (1); and these were gathered from all parts of the country (1 Chron. xiii. 5). It was an attempt on the part of David to bring the whole people back to God. Tell the story of the ark placed upon the new cart; of the vast procession setting out for Jerusalem; and of the enthusiasm and joy of the people (5). The harp was David's favourite instrument. The psaltery was formed of strings stretched over parchment. Timbrels were probably tambourines. Cornets were made of rams' horns, or sometimes of silver.

II. THIS GOOD WORK STRANGELY INTERRUPTED (5-11).—How far the procession had journeyed we cannot say; for it is not possible to tell where the threshing-floor of Nachon was (6). The name Nachon means smiting; Chidon, the name as given in 1 Chron. xiii. 9, means the dart. Both seem to have reference to this event. Relate what took place here. How trivial at first sight the sin of Uzzah appears! and how severe the judgment with which it was visited! Sudden death for putting forth the hand to prevent the ark of God from falling—does not that seem too terrible? But there was a reason. What was Uzzah's sin? It was that of touching the ark, which none were allowed to look at (see Numbers iv. 20). The summary judgment upon the people of Beth-shemesh should have warned Uzzah (1 Sam. vi. 19). But Uzzah's sin was the consequence of a previous act of disobedience. The method adopted for the removal of the ark was copied from the example of the Philistines, who did not know the law (1 Sam. vi. 7); and was directly contrary to the directions God had given (Numbers iv. 15; vii. 9). To ignore, or disobey God's commands was too serious a sin to go unpunished. Besides this, Uzzah occupied no ordinary position. He had long had charge of the ark, and ought therefore to have known the law concerning it. His act was public, and was committed in connection with a revival of religious life. To tolerate an act of disobedience in him, at such a time, would have made it easy for others to disobey. Such an act of judgment seemed necessary if the people were to learn that God was to be feared and obeyed. Superstition would conclude from such an event that the ark was a terrible object. Religion would recognise that it was disobedience which was the terrible thing. And the lesson was enforced by the blessing given through the ark to the house of Obed-edom (10, 11).

Apply the lesson to the two ways of treating the Word of God. Disobeyed, it brings death; to obey is to have the blessing of life.

III. THE GOOD WORK SUCCESSFULLY ACCOMPLISHED (12).—The contrast between the judgment of Uzzah and the blessing on the household of Obed-edom taught David the lesson he needed. In his second attempt to remove the ark he observed the law (see 1 Chron. xv. and xvi.). Levites bore it on their shoulders; sacrificial offerings were presented in connection with it; and the gladness of David and the people expressed itself in song and dancing.

The important lesson the incident teaches is that God's work must be done in God's way; that all his commandments are to be obeyed—the least as well as the greatest (Matt. v. 19); and that obedience is the path to blessing.

[822]

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Ipswich Association is now out of debt, the recent Y.M.C.A. Festival having produced £740. The whole premises, including gymnasium, cost £3300, and all branches of the work are prospering.

The enlargement of the premises at Totnes is now very near completion. The premises, in their remodelled and improved condition, will be opened at an early date by Mr. H. H. Bemrose, M.P., president of the Derby Association.

The secretary of the Plymouth Y.M.C.A. reports that cases of conversion, associates applying for full membership, and men volunteering for active Christian work, form some of the encouraging features of the past month's service.

For the tenth consecutive year the Wells Fargo Express Company have made each of their clerks members of the San Francisco Y.M.C.A. at a total cost of 1360 dols. "The American Year-Book," which has just been published, contains the information that during the past year situations for upwards of 10,000 young men were found.

Dr. Drury, principal of the Church Missionary College, writes:—"I have many opportunities in my interviews with young men from every part of the kingdom of noting the good work and the definite results produced by the Y.M.C.A. Not a few of those I have met were led to give themselves to Christ through Y.M.C.A. workers; and many found in this Association the field they needed for Christian work." This testimony is of great value, coming so soon after that of Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, who says he has been immensely impressed by the fact that in examining the many male candidates who come before that Society, he finds that, almost without exception, the Y.M.C.A. comes in at some part of the candidate's history—either having been instrumental in his conversion, in training him for Christian work, or in stimulating his zeal for Gospel and missionary activity.

A most encouraging account is given of the work in France during the past year. "There has been a substantial increase in the number of branches, and, generally speaking, an all-round increase of membership and activity on behalf of young men. The Lyons Association has made the most marked forward movement during the year, having acquired since November last a handsome suite of rooms centrally situated, in which a good fourfold work is being done under the direction of M. Hughes, the late general secretary of the National Committee. New district organisations have been formed, and others are in formation. A special form of gathering for young people, known as "Fêtes de la Jeunesse," has taken quite a hold upon the Protestant churches. On Whit-Sunday and Monday this year a remarkable gathering of this kind took place at Lyons. A large and enthusiastic meeting of from 1400 to 1600 people was held in the largest church, followed by a dinner to 180 delegates given in the new hall of the Y.M.C.A.; a Gospel meeting of from 600 to 700 people was held in the Free Church; district conferences of the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. were held; a splendid missionary gathering of from 500 to 600 people was held in the grounds of M. de Cazenove, and a good social gathering of about 400 people was given in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. We are thankful to add that the forward movement in the Y.M.C.A. is equally, if not more, marked in the Y.W.C.A.

Y.W.C.A.

Good news reaches us of the homes recently opened in Bombay and Madras.

The Brixton branch have removed to new premises at Aberdeen House, 34, Gresham-road, Brixton.

The amount at present raised by the Ipswich Y.W.C.A. towards the purchase of Gainsborough House, and the erection of the new hall, is £1371.

The first Scandinavian National Conference was held in Stockholm last month. Thirty Swedish Associations and some Norwegian and Finland branches were represented.

On June 25 special services were held in the new hall recently acquired by the members of the Boscombe Y.W.C.A. At the afternoon meeting Miss Adams gave an account of the work at Daisy House.

Sister Lucy urges the need of Y.W.C.A. work in Ceylon. Some missionaries at home are inquiring as to the possibility of extending the work. Miss Gelson Gregson has been continuing her work in Colombo.

A weekly Bible class for young ladies, held every Sunday afternoon in Simla, by Misses Daw and Bishop, is well attended. An effort is being made to extend the benefits of the Y.W.C.A. to the Bengali Indian Christians.

Miss Lambert, with the help of another Y.W.C.A. worker recently sent out from England, has reopened the Institute library in Darjeeling. At the weekly Sunday evening services many have decided for the Lord.

The opening of the new holiday home at Felixstowe (Seaholme, Constable-road) took place on June 25. Miss Morley gave an address on the work at Felixstowe, drawing special attention to the convalescent and holiday department.

A drawing-room meeting on behalf of the work of the World's Y.W.C.A. in India and other countries was held on the 23rd ult. at Mr. and Mrs. J. Cory's, with a view to raising funds for the passage of workers ready to go if the way is made plain.

The Y.W.C.A. in Coventry has arranged to extend the sphere of its usefulness. Mrs. Copeland, assisted by a committee of ladies, will commence the work this month, and will hold special meetings for the many young women who do not attend any place of worship, and endeavour to befriended them in a variety of ways.

Obituary.

MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

ONE of the means used to aid in bringing about the abolition of slavery was, undoubtedly, the publication of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a book which caught the public ear, and speedily became famous. The gifted authoress passed away on Wednesday last week, after a brief illness, and at the ripe age of eighty-five. The daughter of Dr. Lyman Beecher, she married a professor, and settled apparently into a quiet life; but the cry of the slave broke upon her, and a message came which she must tell out, as she did in her inimitable story. In four years 313,000 were printed in the States alone, while translations were made in many languages. In "The Life-work of the author of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,'" by Florine Thayer McCray, the following account is given of the circumstances in which the story of "Uncle Tom" was written:—"In perusing 'The National Era,' Mrs. Stowe noticed the incident of a slave woman escaping with her child across the floating ice of the river, from Kentucky into Ohio, and it became the first salient point of her great work, and is seen in the history of Eliza. She began to meditate and dream over a possible story that should graphically set forth the bare ugliness and repulsive features of the system of negro slavery. The black husband who remained in Kentucky, going back and forth on parole, and remaining in bondage rather than forfeit his word of honour to his master, suggested the character of Uncle Tom. Once suggested, the scenes of the story began rapidly to form in her mind, and, as they are prone to do in the practical forces of energetic character, emotions and impressions instantly crystallised into ideas and opinions. The whole wonderful scheme was defined before the author of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' put her pen to paper. She has related that the closing scene, the death of Uncle Tom came to her as a material vision while sitting at the Communion one Sunday in the little church at Brunswick. She was perfectly overcome by it, and could scarcely restrain the violent emotion that sprang into tears and shook her frame. She was carried out of herself. It was the fire of outraged feeling which inspired this memorable work. She hastened home and wrote, and, her husband being away, she read it aloud to her older children. Her burning sentences so touched their young hearts that they wept with her, and cried out that slavery was the most accursed thing in the world. Some days afterwards Professor Stowe, having returned, was passing through her room, and noticing many sheets of closely-written paper upon his wife's table, he took them up and began to read. His casual curiosity soon merged into interest and deepened into astonishment. He sought his wife with words of enthusiastic praise, and said 'You can make something out of this.' 'I mean to,' was the quiet reply of his wife. From this time on, Harriet Beecher Stowe was possessed by the theme; it dominated all other concerns, and held her a willing captive until it was done. She said to the writer a year or two before her death, 'I did not think of doing a great thing, I did not want to be famous. It came upon me, and I did as I must, perforce, wrote it out; but I was only as a pen in the hands of God. What there is good and powerful in it came from Him. I was merely the instrument. It is strange that He should have chosen me, hampered and bound down as I was with feeble health and family cares. But I had to do it.'"

"Hints to Open-Air Workers" is the title of a leaflet which deserves the attention of all who preach "under the blue sky." The "hints" are very good, and will, we trust, be inwardly digested by many outdoor evangelists. Copies may be had free from C. D. Holly Point, Heaton Mersey.

"The Life and Letters of John Anthony Hort, D.D.," just published by Messrs. Macmillan, tells the story of one of the noblest and humblest-minded of the great Biblical scholars of the last generation. Dr. Hort's name will always be associated with the Standard Greek Testament which he and Bishop Westcott brought out many years ago. As Hulsean Lecturer he did memorable work in Divinity at Cambridge. He was an earnest and painstaking member of the Revision Committee of the New Testament, whose meetings (and they were many) he attended with scarcely a break for ten years. His life was self-forgotten and devout, and illustrated the great amount of good influence which a scholarly student and expositor of the Divine Word can exercise in our centres of learning. The motto prefixed to this biography by his son, the editor, well illustrates the quality of such a man. "A life devoted to truth is a life of vanities abased, and ambitions forsown."

The current number of The London Quarterly Review has an article on "The Early Ages of the Human Race," which, at any rate, shows that a good deal of modern speculation as to the origin of man is only speculation, and that it is wise to be careful in making changes in our belief. The discoveries of scientists and of archæologists are going in the direction of proving the historic accuracy of the Bible. The attacks on the New Testament placed it in an invincible position, and the attacks on the Old Testament are promising to do as much for it. One sentence from the article will show its trend:—

We believe that most investigators, after weighing all the evidence, will decide that, as the earliest men were as human as the North American Indian, or Zulu Kaffir; and that, as no human bones whatever are found which are undoubtedly earlier than these splendid Post-Glacial (or Palæolithic) men, it is therefore certain that geological and archæological resources give a verdict strongly opposed to the idea that Man has been developed from an ape, or from any ape-like creature whatever.

Dr. Berry has called the attention of the Western College students to the fact that while the Church of Rome did not object to put up her novices to preach, because they could speak in general terms, she took care to put her best men into the confessional, "where men had to deal with men." He believed that ninety out of every hundred men in the Congregational pulpits would actually be afraid to meet, at his own invitation, a man with some peculiar spiritual history or difficulty. The sum of which is that a more careful training to deal with men is necessary. Books are good, but the world of men is the great world in which the minister has to live and labour. We have understood, however, that in the confessional priests had chiefly to deal with women.

Deficits are always cropping up in the finances of our great missionary institutions, both for home and foreign work, and they will continue to do so so long as these institutions are successful. Let them fail to multiply converts and to cover fresh ground, let them stand still in inefficiency, and then there will be no more deficits or special appeals. But what is to be done when the news comes from a district of China that whereas, not long ago, a small vestry was large enough for the little band of believers, presently the chapel was too small, and a larger structure had to be built? "But don't they help themselves?" Yes, they do, but still they require additional help from home also. We read in a letter of Dr. Griffith John that in a district which he and a companion visited they were received with open arms, the people flocked to hear them preach, and the converts made over to the mission in two towns houses suitable for mission premises, and worth at least 300 dollars. Dr. John baptized during that visit 121 persons, the pick of the candidates, and might have baptized twice or three times as many. The people have chopped up their idols for firewood. The cry comes for increased help; it must come when there is such abundant blessing.

The doctrine of Divine Providence needs emphatic restatement. The way many people talk about "fate" and "chance," as the ruling forces of life, betrays an utter oblivion of the fact that all things are ordered by a wise and strong Hand. We are not sure but that this is partly a revulsion against the unreal and arrogant method of other pious people, who consider themselves the favoured of Providence because they have escaped dangers which have overwhelmed others. Some find the hand of Providence only in a calamity. The teaching of Scripture is that Providence embraces all the events and "provisions" of life. It is not a thing of gaps and exceptions. "Thy loving-kindness is over all thy works." Jesus pointed to natural law, not to its violation or suspension, as the proof and symbol of God's care and superintending love. The lilies and the birds pointed the moral of the Father's thought for his children. We must cherish a more devout and steadfast acknowledgment of the Divine leading in daily life. This is the only thing that can meet our need in the day of trouble and sorrow. "The memory" of God's "goodness" is the branch that when thrown into the Marah of tribulation sweetens its bitter draught.

There is nothing so precious and nothing has been so costly as spiritual truth. The promised land always lies beyond the wilderness; the world could reach Calvary and a free Gospel only by way of Sinai and the Law. More precious than science, culture, and all the treasures of human wisdom are the science of God, the art of holy living; but what a price has been paid for the revelation which made these possible. The long process of discipline for the chosen people which lasted for so many centuries; the "self-emptying" of the Eternal Son, who became poor for our sakes, that through his poverty we might become rich; his bitter agony and death of woe—all these were needful ere the very foundations of the historic faith were laid. And the truth has cost almost as much to maintain. Persecutions, martyrdoms, revolutions, inquisition-tortures—these have been the fiery ring which has guarded the precious truth, the mighty forces that have saved it from corruption, or emancipated it when corrupted.

There is no age of which such a tale of religious liberty and privilege can be told as our own. We come of a noble race. The history of our country teems with heroes; men who had an instinct for great causes, and a spirit of indomitable valour to fight for them. But liberty may be abused, may degenerate into license, may lose its value for those who possess it. The descendants of warriors may degenerate into cowards; the children of those who counted their lives not dear to them for Christ's sake, may become mere butterflies of fashion, or traitors who betray their Master with a polite kiss. It should be the care of those who have the oversight of the young to fill their minds with the story of the heroic past, and fire them with the spirit of emulation with those who have shown a great spirit, and fought the good fight faithfully. There is too much reason to believe that this duty is often neglected; and the kind of literature popular among the young suggests that they are more interested in the story of imaginary than of real heroes. This reflects more discredit on their teachers than on themselves.

"Learn to do little things as though they were great." For little things are often the beginning of great things, and even when they are not, they may be made great by the spirit in which they are wrought. There is a tendency to imagine that true nobility can only be attained on great occasions; and many continue to live mean lives only because they overlook the small abundant opportunities of every day. Jesus Christ has shown for all time how the Divinest fabric of beauty and goodness can be woven out of the warp and woof of daily experience; how humblest circumstances and facts may become channels of redemption grace; how the instrument of torture and shame may be transformed into the symbol of holiest love. What He did as Saviour of the world we cannot repeat, for He stands apart from us; but in this matter we may hope to follow afar off.

Stepney Temple Reopened.

STEPNEY TEMPLE is one of the several centres of work directed by Rev. Peter Thompson, of the Wesleyan East-end Mission. The Temple has a grand and long record as a sanctuary; but the outward flux of population left it a few years ago without such a membership and congregation as it was intended to accommodate. Taken under the wing of the Mission, the Temple has since renewed its youth. It is vigorously maintained as a Gospel Hall, with temperance and other social adjuncts, many in number, and at various points touching the people and promoting their highest welfare.

The spacious Temple has recently been repaired and renovated, and made more suitable and comfortable for the important work for which it is set apart. About £1400 has been expended, and well expended; the place looks a model of cleanliness outside, and is the pink of freshness and brightness inside. About £200 has been raised towards meeting the debt incurred by the work, and it is hoped that, with the help of Christian friends, the entire liability will soon be paid off. Towards this something has been done by gifts taken at the opening services and meetings on the past two Sundays, and at a tea and public meeting held on Monday evening last.

Several addresses, high in tone and full of animation, were delivered at the last-named meeting; none more striking than that by Rev. S. Chadwick, whose esteem as a minister and fame as a mission worker is by no means confined to Methodism. He spoke words of solemn warning against pandering to popular taste at the expense of religious reverence and fidelity to Gospel truth. He also deplored the "shelving" of the sterner aspects of the Gospel, and attributed thereto much of the indifference prevalent among those that are without.

The people outside (he said) take their views of religion from the religious people, and they have got the impression that, somehow, whether they do right or wrong, it will all come out right in the end, and that there will be no punishment worth mentioning in the world to come. The remedy for this indifference is a revival of the preaching of the full Gospel, the sterner aspects to be put forward as well as the milder and more sentimental. In some other remarks Mr. Chadwick called for cheerfulness in work for God. I have an idea (he said) that God does not use sad, or discouraged, or disappointed men. You must get the vinegar taken out of you, and be hopeful and bright, if you would be used by God.

The Royal Commission on Licensing continues its sessions. Mr. Hannay, the London magistrate, agreed with Sir John Bridge that the police should have the power to arrest people for drunkenness alone. The head of the City Police stated that large numbers of drunken people were merely detained by the police until sober and then liberated, drunkenness not being considered an offence in the eye of the law.

Family Training.

THE religious condition of our children in this present age calls for serious and earnest thought on the part of those who are concerned and anxious for the future religious welfare of this nation. There never was a time when young people were more favoured in the way of educational privileges, and with such religious helps as may be obtained from Sunday-schools, and religious books, and special meetings of various kinds.

But amidst all this, we lament the absence of that thoughtful habit, that intelligent and robust faith, and that strong and contagious enthusiasm, which were seen in the families of Christian parents in former days.

The cause of this lack of these vital Christian elements of character in the rising generation may be found in that decline of family discipline and instruction which has been so marked and so rapid during the past half-century.

For a long time it has been customary to sneer at the Puritanism of the Reformation age; yet much may be said to justify the feelings expressed in that peculiar way; and it should be carefully remembered that the blame should be directed to the puritan ism and not to the puritan spirit. The ism belonged to that age, but the puritan spirit belongs to all the ages, and it is so because it represents that inner connection and communion of soul by which the best qualities of the family life and history are transmitted from father to son, and which, as a sacred trust, cannot be betrayed, neglected, or lost without danger to the Family, the Church, the State, and the Nation.

It is not possible to suppose that the puritanism of the 17th century could be acceptable in the present day. But the puritan spirit, which made the father to be a ruler in his own house, and which caused him to look upon the religious education of his children as being next to the salvation of his own soul, the great and responsible work of his life—the spirit which impelled him to teach them all he knew, and to breathe into them all he felt, and to send them out into the world as so many reproductions of himself, and with all the strength and enthusiasm of the family character burning and shining in their lives, is as much needed to-day as it ever was. It is most necessary that Christian parents, who have their families growing up around them, should ask themselves how they have discharged the obligations of this sacred trust, and why it is that these noble sons are going out into life with every equipment that money can buy, but without that “one thing needful” which money cannot buy.

In these days parents may plead pressure of business, multiplied engagements for the social and political benefit of the people, and also the fact that the children have always diligently attended the Sunday-school. But these pleas are, when tried in the balances, sadly wanting in true weight. The best and most enduring gift a man can give his children is not money but character.

The best service a man can render to society does not consist in teaching other people their duty at public meetings, but in doing his own duty at home, in carefully training his children in the development of a holy character and a fruitful life.

The attendance of the family at the Sunday-school may be a good thing, but it may also be a great evil. What right has a parent to put this delicate and important work into the hands of another person; and how can another person, who is a stranger, deal with a child in the secret things pertaining to the soul? No; that province can rarely be entered, and that work can rarely be done, except by the parents, of whom the child has received its being, and who by virtue of that fact has, or ought to have, the key to the chamber of the child's inward and vital experiences. Some responsibilities can be discharged by deputy, but this one cannot.

In multitudes of apparently Christian homes, the children sorrowfully confess that their parents are the last persons to whom they could venture to speak on spiritual things. Let all such parents know that there is a worm at the root of their family tree that will destroy it; and with the ruin of the home will come the downfall of the state and of the nation.

A. W. S.

A Young Men's City.

THE capital of Brazil, Rio Janeiro, with its population of 600,000, is one of the most lovely, and at the same time one of the most wicked, places on earth. It is peculiarly a “Young Men's City.” Not only its public offices, its military and naval schools, its warehouses and places of business, but its very shops are full of young men; a shop-girl is almost an unknown personage. Most of these young men are, of course, Brazilians and Portuguese, but there are a considerable number of English, German, and other nationalities. Thousands of them are far from their homes and friends, “live on the premises” (often sleeping on the counters), or crowd together in “bachelors' quarters.”

Besides the theatres, races, lotteries, etc., which abound on every hand, and the vice, brazen-faced, which assails them day and night, the city is full of young men's clubs, the character of which may be judged by the fact that one of the largest boasts the name of “Tenentes do Diabo,” i.e., “Lieutenants of the Devil,” whose members are not deterred, even by an epidemic of yellow fever, from “glorying in their shame.” Without cricket, tennis, boating, or any sort of healthy out-of-door exercise, which exists only among the comparatively few English and American young men, the power of the temptations around them is redoubled.

To afford a refuge for those seeking better things, a Y.M.C.A. was organised in 1893. It has already some 120 members, of whom half are communicants, who seek to carry on active Christian work among their fellows. Hitherto their efforts have been greatly crippled for want of space. Through the generosity of a Brazilian friend, a suitable but unfinished building has now been secured in the heart of this Young Men's City, and offered to the Association on very easy terms. A sum of £4000 is, however, needed to complete and furnish it. The Brazilian Christians are giving largely towards this work, but their number is small, and they are mostly poor, so this statement is sent forth in the assurance that some of the Lord's people in this country will be glad to help these young men in their efforts to rescue others.

Communications may be sent to Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas, 23, Rood-lane, London, E.C.

H. MAXWELL WRIGHT.

(Those who know Mr. Maxwell Wright will be glad to learn that his health is much improved. We heartily commend his letter to the attention of our readers.—ED.)

City Missionaries at Trent Park.

On Tuesday week, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Bevan entertained the missionaries of the London City Mission at Trent Park. The host and hostess devoted the entire day to ministering to the comfort and enjoyment of all. There were about 450 missionaries present, fourteen of whom were among those who came to Trent Park forty-one years ago, that being the first visit of the London City Mission there. These faithful servants were photographed in a group, which contained Mr. Millman, the “father” of the London City Mission, who is now completing his fiftieth year of active service. Boating, bathing, fishing, cricket, bowls, and croquet were the sports of the day. After tea, Mr. Bevan (chairman and treasurer of the L.C.M.) presided over a short meeting, at which Rev. Edward A. Stuart, Messrs. W. T. Paton, H. W. Maynard, and W. H. Seagram spoke.

International Missionary Union.

THE thirteenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union was held at Clifton Springs, New York, June 10-17, with no diminution of interest among the foreign missionaries at home on furlough or permanently. There were 127 of them in attendance, from twenty-three countries (counting all India as one), and seventeen Christian denominations or missionary organisations. Fellowships widely dissimilar were seen recognising with intense regard the tale of Christian work done in Korea, Malaysia, West Indies, South America, as well as all the greater fields of the world. Without friction or unpleasantness of any kind in the slightest degree, these 127 missionaries introduced themselves to one another in formal opening session, and prayed, discussed, and resolved, concerning the whole work of the great Ascension-command of our Lord Jesus, as though there were no sects and no dissensions in the body of Christ. It was a grand exhibition of the real unity of the Church, and it is shown with the same harmony year after year.

The meeting, as this conference is modestly styled, has for the open secret of its harmonious interest a simple constitution which restricts its membership, with all privileges of its floor, to foreign missionaries only, and to all of them, who, by reason of either present or past connection with the foreign work, can claim the name of missionary. They are received simply upon their own recognition, the admirable sense of the executive committee being held fully able quietly to debar unsuitable persons from participation.

The meeting consists of twenty sessions, three each day, except the two Wednesdays, when there is one each. Platform addresses on fields occupy four afternoons and evenings, including one evening addressed by lady missionaries only. The others have regular orders of a special nature, as a stereopticon of all lands represented, a farewell to missionaries returning to fields within the year, a session for home culture of the foreign work in the churches, etc. The mornings are given, with the exception of a sermon and public worship on Sunday, to discussions of missionary policy and to prayer.

The notable persons who may be specially mentioned of this year's meeting, were: Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, of the Arcot India Mission of the Reformed [Dutch] Church; President W. A. P. Martin, Presbyterian, of the Imperial University at Peking, who gave a striking review of the many years of missions and diplomacy with which he is so familiar; Dr. J. C. Hepburn, of Japan, Presbyterian, and his wife; Rev. F. A. Steven, secretary in America for the China Inland Mission, and his wife; Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, founder of Robert College, Constantinople, and secretary J. L. Barton, of Harpoot, and ex-secretary George W. Wood, of Constantinople, and before of India, all three of the American Board; Mrs. Dr. M. B. Kirkpatrick, Miss Carrie E. Putnam, and others of the Baptist Missions in Burmah; Rev. C. C. Penick and wife, of Africa, now of the Episcopalian Freedmen's work; and Rev. J. Thompson Cole, of Japan, now secretary of the American Church Missions Society at New York. Also Rev. William de Rouden-Pos, North Africa, now rector of the Reformed Episcopal Church of St. Bartholomew, Montreal; Mrs. A. D'Ouseley, widow of Rev. Andrew D'Ouseley, of the Missions in India and China of the Established Church of Scotland; Miss Eliza Talcott, the Florence Nightingale of Japan, etc.

Much sympathy was manifested throughout the meeting for the suffering Christians in Turkey. Although the conditions of place and personnel forbid gathering of money at the meeting, the spirited endeavours throughout the country by Miss Margaret W. Leitch of Ceylon, were exploited on the platform, and perhaps might be styled the leading theme of the whole meeting.

W. H. BELDEN.

Peckham.—The report of the Orchard Mission, Blue Anchor-lane, S.E., shows a quiet, earnest work among young and old. The Sunday-schools, mission services, mothers' meetings, and other agencies are reported as going on well. The secretary is Mr. J. T. Binstead, 95, High street, Peckham, S.E.

"Thou Art . . . Thou shalt be Called."

John i. 42.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THIS was thy first meeting with the Master! What brought thee and Him together? Was it the voice of the great preacher, in thunderous tones demanding repentance, or the tender persuasives of thy brother, or the strong current of thy companions' unanimous assertion of their discovery? Nay, there was something more and deeper. It was the love of God, which had been seeking thee through all worlds and ages, that came on thee, and overshadowed thee. It was the Shepherd who had followed thy fitful, impetuous career from thy birth and, having found thee, laid thee on his shoulders rejoicing, brought thee to his fold, and gave thee a new name. We love, because we first were loved. We seek, because we were sought. We find, because we have been found.

But long before the Master met thee in thy mature life He had known thy down-sitting and uprising, and had been acquainted with thy habits and modes of thought. Nothing was hid from Him, even when thou wast made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. His eyes did see thine imperfect substance, and in his book were all thy members written. The headstrong vitality of the growing boy; the arduous toils of the young fisherman; the tender love that won thy wife, and brought her mother, for her sake, to thy home; the close companionships which bound thy heart to James and John, to Philip and Nathanael; the lofty enthusiasm of patriotic hope, fed by the stories of the heroic past, that lingered in the air, and inspired high resolves; the yearnings after a deeper religious life, that led thee to the rock-hewn pulpit, and held thee spellbound and fascinated whilst the desert preacher demanded first of all Repentance and Reality—all this had been watched as an unfolding day, by those tender searching eyes, and He needed none to tell Him that thou wast Simon the son of Jonas.

There is no need for the soul to confess to Him who and what it is, to tell its sin and misery, to detail the story of bright hopes overcast, and high ideals smitten to the ground. He knows all. The weary story of failure and disappointment is only too familiar to His ear. That thou hast been the son of a timid dove when thou wouldst have been a rock in which doves made their nests; that thou hast been the lissom rush or sedge instead of the stalwart oak, that thou hast failed where thou wouldst have succeeded, been dumb where thou wouldst have spoken, and fled when thou wouldst have stood thy ground—does not surprise Him. He made and girded thee, though thou hast not known Him.

But now, amid the murky gloom of failure and heart-break, the Master holds aloft the torch of hope. Hitherto thou hast been fitly called the son of a timid dove, for such thou hast been; but this shall not be thy lasting designation—thou shalt be called a Rock. There are possibilities in thy soul which thou hast not dreamt of, and beneath his ministering touch they shall burst forth to light and life; coming to Him, as a living stone, thou also shalt become a living stone, and thy name shall be written on a foundation in his Holy City.

The sculptor sees a statue in the block of marble; the teacher, a genius in the quick-witted scholar. But far more surely does the Master detect saints in sinners, apostles in publicans, leaders of his Church in its desolators and persecutors. And He arrests us for the realisation of his ideal, placing it before us that we may apprehend that for which we have been apprehended, and become enamoured by it, and prepared to suffer anything in the process of its realisation.

[532]

In giving a new name the Master presents possibilities which He perceives lying within reach; and the idea thus suggested is his justification for the severity of the discipline which his love can do no other than inflict. He called Abram Abraham, that he might excite his expectation, and maintain his long-tried faith, and justify the careful discipline which prepared him to be the ancestor of a nation. He called Jacob Israel, to stir within his sordid scheming breast a holy yearning for friendliness of character, and lead him to forsake the chicanery which had become a second nature, for the rare pilgrim-spirit to receive whose benediction the proud Pharaoh would bow. He called Simon Peter, because he perceived beneath the exterior of the fisherman a nobler, stronger man than his nearest or himself had dreamt of, "a likeness to the great of old," a strength beneath the vehemence, a stability beneath the impulsiveness; and the conception became his inspiration. Confess this to us, O fisherman of Galilee, whether the thought that thy Master had spoken of thee as a Rock did not often check thy waywardness, and calm thee into quiet resolution and steadfastness of soul? Thou hadst not thought either of these possible till He discovered them, and told thee that they were constituent parts of thy largely-gifted soul.

How often has the Master dealt thus with us! We were disconsolate and discouraged. We had failed so often; others had so obviously surpassed us; all beside had come to treat us as undeserving of notice; no one gave us credit for qualities which would strengthen our brethren; and we had sunk to the level to which failures and superficial judgments had assigned us. Men and women are apt to become what they are expected to be. And society is so quick to misjudge us. One slip or flaw in some aspect of our life, where we were nervous and unprepared, was enough, and men showed no mercy, nor ever stopped to see if there were any other qualities worth its notice. The shores of time are strewn with the wrecks of lives that might have been useful and blessed if some kindly hand had but flung out a gleam of hope to guide them to harbour! Then He passed by, whose eyes are quicker to detect good than evil, and who is swift to see the gleam of the jewel in the dust-heap, the single star-ray gleaming through the drifting cloud-wrack. And He discovered us, saw something good amid the evil, and dwelt lovingly on it, and brought it forth to light, and embodied it in a new name, and encouraged us to work along this seam of precious endowment, assuring us that it would repay all our sorrow and his.

Sometimes this revelation is made to us in the appreciation of a stranger, not knowing our past; or in the growing consciousness of power along a new avenue of influence; or in the sudden flashing forth of unexpected resource in a great emergency when no one knew how to act, but we knew, because it had been the one lesson acquired during months of failure and disappointment. It matters little how it comes. But it is very sweet when the Master draws near to our low dungeon, and says, Fear not, I know thee by thy name, thou art mine, I have surnamed thee, thou shalt be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt be called Cephas.

There are myriads who catch a glimpse of the Heavenly Ideal, but are faithless and disobedient to it. They hear the Divine voice speaking, but they pray that they may hear it no more. Others, on the contrary, yield themselves to the Divine Master, saying, Work in me, to will as well as to do; fulfil the possibilities of my character; stay not thy hand, whatever suffering it may entail, till I know, do, and am, all that is possible to me on this side of the gates of pearl. This must have been thine attitude, Simon Bar-Jonas, or thou hadst never become Peter the Rock!

Rocks are made of fire, by the long process of the ages, and by pressure. Souls become strong through suffering, patience, and responsibility.

Suffering.—There are igneous rocks, in whose very colour the fire has left its mark. They have been dyed in the flame. There is not one particle in them that has not been subjected to heat, before which they became mere wreaths of gas and vapour. It took them long to cool, but they have become the strong crust that restrains the molten lava, and affords a stable basis for the cities and homes of men.

Think it not strange then, concerning the fiery trial which is to try thee, as though some strange thing had happened to thee. As gold is tried in the fire, so the heart must be tried by pain. As the alloy that would weaken the metal is purged away in the furnace, so must the selfishness and sin of the heart be expelled before the fiery ordeal of trial. Thou shalt pass through hours of Gethsemane-travail, of bitter soul anguish, of crucifixion, of hopeless bereavement and heart-break; but through all, the process shall proceed apace, of making Peter the Rock.

Patience.—There is much in that First Epistle about patience; but the pen was dipped in the ink of long experience. To wait was not natural to thee, but very needful, for only thus could his vehemence cool down, his character solidify, the limestone rocks be precipitated by the deposit of flakes of daily strength. Each cross nobly borne, each temptation resisted, mastered, each delay borne with patience, each loss suffered with resignation, each secret sorrow accepted, each bitter cup drained slowly to its dregs, will leave the soul stronger, more able to breast life's storms, and to shelter weaker souls. In quietness and confidence is strength, in returning and rest, salvation.

Responsibility.—It was by the intense pressure of superincumbent masses that rocks were formed, and it is by heaped-up responsibility that souls are made strong. When the Master says of any, "I will make thee a pillar in the temple of my God," when the weight of arch or dome impinges, the materials beneath become, if possible, closer set, and their texture more compressed and welded together. Without doubt, this reacted on thee also, who wast as yielding marl, but became the rock! Called to catch men, put forward as the leader of the apostles by the Master Himself; appealed to in every crisis; consulted at every turn; under such conditions thou couldst not do otherwise than wax strong, if thou hadst any capacity for strength whatever.

But, these conditions in themselves would not suffice. Thou must live in daily contact with the Rock of Ages, the strong Son of God. Thou must be strengthened with all might by his Spirit in the inner man. Thou must be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Thou must be endowed with his strength, freely offered thee. Thou shalt date new strength from Pentecost, for thou shalt receive power. After that the Holy Ghost is come upon thee, thou shalt be Christ's witness in Jerusalem, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost ends of the earth, standing unbent before persecution and death. Wherefore be strong, O man greatly beloved, yea, be strong.

Preaching at the Crystal Palace.—Mr. William Forbes, 71, Tollington-road, N., who twenty-six years ago held the first open-air service in the grounds of the Crystal Palace, writes:—"The next temperance fête will be on Tuesday, 21st, and I shall be pleased to meet speakers and singers at 3 o'clock at the Bible stand in the Palace."

The Zambesi Industrial Mission is in urgent need of a fully qualified medical practitioner, to proceed at once to British Central America. Sir Brampton Gurdon, who is one of the missionaries out there, has offered £100 per annum for three years towards the support of a doctor, and he has also given £200 to help to build a hospital in connection with the Mission. The London office of the Mission is St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, E.C., Mr. R. Caldwell, Secretary.

Letters from S. Africa.—25.

LOVEDALE TO HANKEY.

LEAVING Lovedale at 6 a.m. for Grahamstown I saw a troop of baboons on their way to water. They went in single file from the wood above, crossing the road about fifty yards before us. A day or two later I was driving through another wood where monkeys of all sorts abound. A young Boer, riding through the pass in early morning, saw a baby baboon on the road, and, stooping from his horse, he picked it up and rode off. But the parents did not consent; they jumped on the horse, and the young man was only too glad to drop his prey on the road and free himself from the attentions of the father and mother.

I arrived at Grahamstown after a twelve hours' ride by cart, and left three hours later by train for Port Elizabeth, arriving at seven a.m. At eleven I started by cart for Hankey—fifty miles—which I reached the following day at eleven. I had only a day to spare, but was glad to use it in renewing my acquaintance with Rev. John Mackenzie. He preceded Mr. Cecil Rhodes as British Commissioner in Bechuanaland. Had he been allowed to continue his course the politics of that portion of South Africa might not have been so rapid or so sensational as they have become, but they would have been more peaceful, and not less creditable to the English name. Possibly the real and permanent advantage of the mother country and her South African colonies might have been more certainly secured.

The latter half of the journey from Port Elizabeth was over mountains, and for many miles there seemed to be nothing else; the road appeared to lead to nowhere. But by-and-by we began to descend, and came at last to a beautiful well-watered valley, laid out in gardens, like Genadendal.

It seemed strange to find a man who had been so prominently before the public as Mr. Mackenzie living in this secluded place, administering the spiritual and secular affairs of a far-away mission. But the King of men lived much of his life in lonely places, scattering the good seed on small congregations, and sowing the Word of the Kingdom, now in the heart of a teacher seeking instruction by night, and then of a woman shunning observation at noon.

In a striking article, last December, entitled—

KHAMA'S MISSION AND ITS MEANING, in The Christian Express, edited by Dr. Stewart and printed at Lovedale, Mr. Mackenzie and the mission station at Hankey are referred to in the following passage:—

"What is that which has made the vast difference between the rule and character of these two African Chie's, Khama and Lobengula, and between the history and fate of two tribes and two territories lying adjacent to each other? That history during the last three years has been to the one misery, disaster, and hopeless defeat, and to the other success, peace, and a hopeful future. What made this wide difference? Nothing but this—that the one ruler and people accepted the help and healing touch of the Gospel, and the other rejected it. Khama, like Lobengula, was born a heathen. Both countries had the same advantages. In both, missionaries of the same society, the London Missionary Society, were at work. The little civilisation or no civilisation which touched each was the trader's shop—the one country had no advantage over the other. But in the one the missionary school was begun and the mission church was filled, without any man being afraid that becoming a Christian meant his being quietly put out of the way. In the one there were toleration and numerous converts sufficient to fill these churches—one of which, built by the natives themselves, is said to have cost nearly £3000. Poor Lobengula resisted all the efforts of the missionaries; at the end of thirty years' work the converts could be counted on one's fingers. He died crushed and broken-hearted, after seeing his power gone, his tribe entirely broken up, and his territory passing into other hands.

"Who are the men who have done the work—the really important part of which has been the salvation of many human souls, the missionary's true work—the indirect result of which has been the political salvation of Khama, his people, and his country? One of them, the Rev. John Mackenzie—after doing splendid service in many ways, to South Africa, and to the Empire to which it belongs, and specially by his work, 'Austral Africa'—has returned to inconspicuous but important labour at the small station of Hankey, better known in days of old than now, under the Rev. T. Durant Philip and his brother. Another was the Rev. J. D. Hepburn, who laboured long and patiently among Khama's people. Those who want to know the kind of man he was, and the kind of work this missionary did, may read 'Twenty Years in Khama's Country'—recently published. Other names might also be mentioned. We are not far wrong when we say that the favourable termination of Khama's visit to England is a tribute to the reality of missionary work, and chiefly to the labours of the men whose names we have given above.

"There can be but one Khama, chief of the Bama-ngwato, who can receive such conspicuous notice—but there are tens of thousands of natives on whom education and the Gospel have made relatively as great a change—despite of all that is said against educated and Christian natives."

The Christian Express can be obtained from the office at Lovedale for 7s. a year. It is a valuable and interesting monthly.

Mr. Mackenzie's house overlooks the valley, and on the opposite side is a natural hole through the cliff, called "the fenster," the window, through which daylight can be seen; and below it is a tunnel cut many years ago by Kaffirs, under the direction of William Philip, to bring the water of the river through the cliff to irrigate the valley on the Hankey side. It is six feet high, and of considerable length, and is a bold and notable engineering feat.

There are several stations connected with Hankey extending over many miles and containing 1500 to 2000 persons. Opposite to the principal station is one under the charge of a Fingo minister, who is supported by the people. Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie have three daughters at home, two of whom superintend the schools at Hankey.

The history of Genadendal and Hankey illustrates the difference between the Moravian and the English conception of missionary work. The former is paternal, and maintains a fatherly oversight, while the latter seeks to make the people feel their own feet, and render them independent of tutelage. Each system has something to recommend it; but in the present instance, I think Genadendal has the advantage. The people at Hankey were scarcely prepared to become independent possessors of their own allotments, and the attempt to make them freeholders was not a success. Mr. Mackenzie is restoring the compactness of the property. The Genadendal Mission has always retained possession of the freehold, while some years ago plots of land at Hankey were sold, partly to white people, partly to natives, but the latter never completed the purchase, and the central plots are being, or have been, recovered to the Mission.

I have very pleasant recollections of the kindness and hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie and their family during my less than thirty hours' visit.

R. CORE MORGAN.

Sunday Tram Service.—An informal poll of the burgesses of Huddersfield has been taken on the question of running trams on the Lord's Day or not. The satisfactory result has been:—Against Sunday trams, 4,154; for, 2,725; majority against, 1,429.

Billingsgate
Christian Mission.

THE eighteenth annual meeting of the Billingsgate Christian Mission was held on Thursday last. Those who assembled must have been encouraged by what they heard. The "day of small things" has gone by, and in the beautiful building facing the Market in Lower Thames-street, a truly blessed work is carried on. The direction of the Mission is largely in the hands of gentlemen who have business in Billingsgate. A fierce light beats on their profession, and hostile eyes scrutinise their daily life, yet their testimony is a joy and is borne to the glory of God. A mission to those who labour among fish is in direct succession to the early ministry of the Lord Jesus, and it is cheering to know that the Divine seal of spiritual blessing has evidently rested upon the work.

There were two meetings, one in the afternoon, another in the evening. The former was presided over by Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who takes a deep and practical interest in the Mission. Mr. W. H. WILLIAMSON, C.C., presented the treasurer's report, which showed an adverse balance of £116 on the general fund, with total expenditure amounting to £1068. The building debt now stands at £3500, this fund having been reduced by £500 during the past year. The secretary, Mr. A. WALTERS, rejoiced to report that the Mission was never in a more favourable condition financially. When the debt is removed, it will be possible for time and energy to be concentrated on the definitely spiritual effort.

Rev. W. PETTMAN followed with a hearty address on the importance of the work, and Mr. FINLAY GIBSON acknowledged the goodness in God in using the agency. The various speakers referred to the unremitting labours of the hon. sec., who has now organised a weekly prayer meeting, as well as the other regular meetings. At the meeting in the evening, God was still further praised for the blessing which has been showered upon the efforts put forth.

Hyde Park Services.

THE semi-jubilee of the Gospel services carried on by Mr. Cook and his helpers in Hyde Park, was held on Tuesday week in Stafford Rooms.

Mr. T. A. DENNY presided, and urged the importance of maintaining in the parks, and especially in our great national park, a vigorous testimony to the Gospel. The new rules about to come into force will be a comfort to these workers, by putting an end to the taking of collections and money-making by infidels, reciters, comedians, and others who have become quite a nuisance in Hyde Park and elsewhere.

Mr. CHARLES COOK made a statement as to the experiences of the past quarter of a century. Twenty-five years ago it was with the utmost difficulty a hearing could be gained, now it is no uncommon thing to have two thousand people standing round, listening to the Gospel, and ready to resent any rude interruption. These audiences are cosmopolitan in character, no less than twenty different nationalities being represented among the converts. Everyone who shows real interest and seeks help in coming to a decision is afterwards written to, and encouraged in following Christ; and this has involved the writing of 15,000 letters. During a recent visit to the United States, Mr. Cook found in every city and town, save one, some person who professed to have been converted in Hyde Park. At present, and for some weeks in the summer, these services are held nightly, and God has been giving great blessing. On an average five or six anxious inquirers are found each evening.

Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH spoke warmly of the needs, aims, and results of this Park Mission. Mr. W. R. LANE gave some account of two Sundays' experiences, with the preachers in Hyde Park; speaking of these gatherings as the largest open-air meetings, held regularly, in any part of the world.

The Chairman stated that the present need for the support of this work is about £350, towards which Messrs. Berry and Peters each promised £50, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard sent £25, Mr. F. A. Bevan £10, while many other friends promised or gave smaller amounts. Amongst those who spoke briefly were Messrs. Richard Cory and Joseph Peters. Emphasis was laid on the fact that all the office-bearers, choir, and workers have themselves been converted in the Park, as the result of these services.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 19.

"GOD GAVE TO HEMAN FOURTEEN SONS AND THREE DAUGHTERS. ALL THESE WERE UNDER THE HANDS OF THEIR FATHER FOR SONG."—1 Chron. xxv. 5, 6.

WHAT a glorious family was here. The household was a band of choristers! From morning to night their home must have been full of holy song and psalm, or talk about the order of the Temple service, in which they were all so deeply interested. Surely no jarring note, no unholy discord, would live in such an atmosphere! The common occupation and worship must have welded the brothers and sisters into the tenderest union.

How one would have liked to see Heman coming into the Temple with his children. It was largely owing to him and their mother that they were what they were. We shall read the Psalms ascribed to him with more interest, now we know of the holy family life out of which they emanated. What interest there would be when the father had produced a new psalm to know what music would suit it best!

Parents! Be sure that you look on your children, as these Hebrews did on theirs, as the gifts of God; and remember that if He gives you many mouths to feed, He will send the wherewithal to feed them. Be careful also that your own hearts and lives are full of praise and prayer; what you are the children will become. Would that mothers especially realised how they transmit their characters. And remember that you must be obeyed in the home. Heman's children were "under the hands of their father." Young people must not get the upper hand. But you yourself, as Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, must be under the king (6).

MONDAY, July 20.

"FOR THE COURSES OF THE DOORKEEPERS."

—1 Chron. xxvi. 1 (R.V.).

Mighty men of valour were needed for this, just as sweet singers were for the service of song. There might not enter into the house of God a variety of people who were strictly defined (as in Lev. xxi. 16, etc.). Gentiles were excluded from certain courts, and women from another. It was incumbent also to look out for those who might hardly dare to intrude, and encourage them to enter. Doorkeepers had to combine many qualities, which would be of the greatest service if they could be repeated in each church and chapel of our great cities, for welcoming old and young.

But chiefly we are concerned with the temple of the heart. We surely need the doorkeeper there, for in the history of the inner life there is so much going and coming; such troops of thoughts pour into the shrine of the soul, and pour out. And often, in the crowd, disloyal and evil thoughts intrude, which, before we know it, introduce a sense of distance and alienation from God, as though a cloud had veiled the shining of the Shekinah. Whenever the sky is overcast within, we should question whether some traitor, some excommunicate, has entered. Our native wit is not quick enough to detect, and our strength not mighty enough to withstand, the entrance of all these evil things. Hence the necessity not only to live in the Spirit, but to walk in the Spirit, i.e., to take every tiny step in the Spirit, to submit everything to the Spirit's scrutiny. Oh that all believers would entrust the custody of their souls, the keeping of the door, to that Holy Spirit who waits to undertake the sacred office!

TUESDAY, July 21.

"ALL THESE WERE THE RULERS OF THE SUBSTANCE WHICH WAS KING DAVID'S."—1 Chron. xxvii. 31.

There was great variety in office and gift. He who cared for the work of the field would not have known how to care for the flocks. The overseer of olive yards and vineyard would have been a poor hand with the camels and asses. One sort of talent was needed for the herds, and another for the wine cellars; and yet there was unity in the common service of the king. We are reminded of the words of the Apostle, describing the variety in unity which must obtain in every healthy church: "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; diversities of ministrations, and the same Lord; diversities of operations, but the same God."

Each of these different men had his distinct sphere, for which he was doubtless specially qualified, and it was his duty—not to be jealous of others, or eager to imitate them, but to be faithful in his own province. How much happier we should all be if we recognised our specific work in God's house, and kept to it, being content to serve the King as He has seen fit to determine, rendering Him the produce in due season.

How great an error it would have been had any of these begun to account the produce of cattle or ground as his own. He had nothing that he had not received, and whatever he had, had been entrusted for the emolument and advantage of his sovereign. Yet, how few of us realise that we are put in business with God's capital, for God's use. We take all and give Him a percentage, instead of using all for Him and keeping a percentage for ourselves.

WEDNESDAY, July 22.

"BE STRONG AND OF GOOD COURAGE, AND DO IT FEAR NOT, NOR BE DISMAYED; FOR THE LORD GOD, EVEN MY GOD, IS WITH THEE; HE WILL NOT FAIL THEE, NOR FORSAKE THEE, UNTIL ALL THE WORK IS FINISHED."—1 Chron. xxviii. 19, 20.

It is very comforting to take these words into our hearts, especially when we connect them with the foregoing ones about the pattern, and apply them all to the pattern of our own lives. For each of us, too, there is a pattern, an ideal, a design, based on the possibilities which God sees to be within our reach.

Sometimes our heart and flesh fail us in the mid-passage of life. Once the energy and vigour of youth promised to sustain and carry us to the end of life, without fear or failure; but these die down, and we wonder how the remainder of the life-plan can be fulfilled. And the one sufficient answer is God. He who helped our fathers to the very end will help us: He who did not fail or forsake them, will never leave nor forsake us, until all the work of life, which He has planned, is finished.

It is probable that you will do better and more enduring work henceforth than you have ever done in the heyday and plenitude of youthful power, if you let God do all through you to his own glory. You have no need for despondency, God is sufficient. Oh to write this down on the tablets of the heart—God is, God is here, God is all-sufficient, God has begun and will finish! God has promised that He will never leave or forsake us, therefore we may boldly say, God is my helper, I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

THURSDAY, July 23.

"WE ARE STRANGERS BEFORE THEE AND SOJOURNERS, AS ALL OUR FATHERS WERE: OUR DAYS ON THE EARTH ARE AS A SHADOW, AND THERE IS NO ABIDING."—1 Chron. xxix. 15.

All life has been compared to the shadow of a smoke-wreath, a gesture in the empty air, a hieroglyph traced for an instant on the sand, and effaced a moment after by a breath of wind, an air-bubble vanishing on the river. Pilgrims and sojourners, as were all our fathers; such is the universal confession. But even such may do a work that will last for ages that are yet to be. David and the men of his time, though transitory their stay on our planet, left behind them a standing evidence that they had been here.

Our life is nothing, but it may be divine: our days are as a breath, but they may affect unborn generations: the tent of the body is laid aside, but the soul, which had dwelt in it, is immortal in its make: it leaves traces of its own immortality behind in its works, and it lives in them. Live so that the results of your life may be enduring as gold, silver, and precious stones.

But, for this, God must live mightily within you. Abide in me, said our Lord...I have appointed you that ye may bring forth fruit, and that your fruit may abide. It is only in proportion as our works are done in God, and God permeates our works, that they partake of his immutability and eternity. Pilgrims though we be, we may build temples which will outlast the wreck of matter.

FRIDAY, July 24.

"BECAUSE THIS WAS IN THINE HEART, AND THOU HAST NOT ASKED RICHES. . . . I WILL GIVE THEE RICHES."—2 Chron. i. 11, 12.

This reminds one of the constant teaching of Jesus. He who seeks his life loses it, but to lose it is to save it in the best and deepest sense. Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added.

The conception of life given in the Bible differs by a whole heaven from the maxims and practices of some good and earnest people. Their notion is that they must work for their living, keep the wolf from the door, educate their children for successfully meeting the demands of life. These objects are legitimate, but they were never meant by God to be the supreme aim of his servants.

His object in our creation, redemption, and regeneration, was that we might serve his redemptive purposes in the world, manifest his character, do his will, win souls for his kingdom, administer the gifts with which He had entrusted us. He asks us to rise to this high calling, and give our whole life to its realisation. He will be responsible for all else. It is surely his will that we should give ourselves to useful trades, and fill our days with honest toil; but the main purpose should ever be his glory, and the exemplification in word and act of his holy character. If we ask for wisdom to do this well, we shall get all else into the bargain.

SATURDAY, July 25.

"BECAUSE THE LORD LOVETH HIS PEOPLE, HE HATH MADE THEE KING OVER THEM."—2 Chron. ii. 11.

How truly might these words be addressed to our blessed Lord. Because God loved the world, He gave his only-begotten Son, his well-beloved, to be both Prince and Saviour. And it is in knowing, loving, and serving Him that we can realise our supreme blessedness.

God's loving appointment in making Jesus King will be apparent when we remember how lovely is his personal character, how closely He is identified with our nature, the might of his arm to shield, the patience wherewith He bears, the redemption which He has wrought out and brought in for all who believe. What could God's love have done better to approve itself?

Is He your King? Never till He is so, will you know the fullness of God's love. Those who question or refuse his authority are always in doubt about the love of God to themselves and to the world. Those, on the other hand, who admit his claims, and crown Him as King, suddenly find themselves admitted to a standpoint of vision in which doubts and disputations vanish, and the secret love of God is unfolded. Then they experience the wise and gentle tendance of the Divine love in its most entrancing characteristics. All is love where Jesus reigns.

The Band of Hope Union has issued its report stating that the number of societies increased by 848, and the number of members by over 76,000. Bands of Hope number 19,180 with 2,611,057 members, and other juvenile temperance organisations return 3,122 branches with 202,743 members. The total numerical force of the movement may, therefore, be very fairly placed at 270 local Bands of Hope Unions, with 22,302 societies, containing 2,813,800 members. A separate report of the School Scheme affords cheering evidence of the good results of the special endeavours to promote systematic temperance teaching in the elementary schools.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

The Children's Bible-Class.—2. SHUT DOORS.

I WONDER if you children have ever been shut up in a room when you wanted to get out? A little girl whom I once knew locked herself in the nursery one day in a fit of temper. When she had done it she was frightened, for she could not unlock it again. She tried and tried, but the key would not turn. Then she pushed at the door, and thumped on it, and cried, and screamed to be let out.

Her father and mother heard the noise, and came running to see what was the matter. But they could not open the door. They could but speak comfortingly to the frightened child inside, and explain to her how to turn the key. But she was too terrified to do it. Poor little Annie! She thought no doubt that she would never get out of that room again. At last an expedient was thought of. The window of the nursery happened to be in an angle of the wall, and there was another window on the other side of the angle. A plank was laid across from one window-sill to the other, and a young man who was staying in the house crept across, entered the nursery window, unlocked the door, and set the little prisoner free.

There are many very interesting stories in the Bible about men who were shut up in prison and who wanted to get out. Will you come with me into one of these prisons? It is night. Here are three men lying on the floor of the prison, fast asleep. Two of these are soldiers, but the man in the middle, chained by the wrist to both the soldiers, who is he? It is Peter, one of the friends of Jesus. He is so chained that he cannot move without clanking the chain and rousing the soldiers. There are many doors with strong bolts and bars between him and the sweet fresh night air. It is impossible for him to escape, is it not? Ah! wait and see. He is sleeping very peacefully—perhaps he is dreaming of the days when he was free, or of his friends at home, or of the Master who is his dearest friend. Look! the prison which was so dark a moment ago is filled with light. A beautiful angel is standing besides the prisoner. He touches him. Peter awakes, and the chains fall off his wrists, while the soldiers sleep on. "Take up your cloak, Peter," says the angel, "and put on your shoes!" Peter obeys, still half asleep, and fancying that it is all a dream. Again the angel speaks; "Put your cloak around you and follow me." And now the angel, with Peter following close behind him, walks unhindered through the doors until he comes to the big iron gate which leads into the street. The angel does not speak or touch the gate, but it opens wide of its own accord, and they pass safely through. Then the angel departs, and Peter, dazed and wondering, is left to go home to his friends. At another time the apostles were put in prison for preaching about Jesus. But the angel of the Lord came by night and opened the prison doors. So you see shut doors become open doors when the Lord wills it.

One night, after the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord, his disciples met together to talk over their troubles, and to decide what was best to do next. They had closed and fastened the doors very carefully, lest some of the Jews, who did not believe in Jesus, should come in and molest them, or perhaps carry them off to prison. Shut the doors were and barred, nevertheless Jesus came in to them through the shut doors, and spoke to them saying, "Peace be unto you." No shut doors can keep our Lord or his angels out. That is a comforting thought—is it not? You may be shut away from your friends, but you can never be shut away from Jesus. Sometimes we get into difficulties, and cannot see our way out. The difficulties are all around us; we seem to be chained, and locked, and bolted in. But the angel of the Lord can come to us as He came to Peter, and when He comes the difficulties will vanish and we shall be free.

When obstacles and trials seem Like prison doors to be,
I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to Thee!

GRACE WINTER.

Second Prize Competition.

It is with pleasure that I place before my young friends the results of the second prize competition. The questions have been assiduously studied, and a vast amount of work put into the answers. The prizes are not so numerous as in the First Competition. They represent, however, the best work, and the highest marks, and those who have gained them need no further compliment. Those who have not come within the charmed circle will accept the kindly counsel, "Try again." I hope they will be successful next time. Five of my little friends were correct every week last quarter. I hope they and many more will attain to the same high degree of accuracy this quarter. Their names are Sinclair and Moffat Jackson, Margery Matthews, James Roy, and Braby Norman.

FIRST PRIZES.

DIVISION 1.—Christina Jane Simpson, Evelyn Everard Hewer, Margaret H. Hassé, Christine Irene Parker, Charles Henry Bewley.

DIVISION 2.—Eva E. Gray, Isabel W. Phipps, Roberta M. Melkile, Bell Dance, Mary E. Plumb, Elizabeth Hull.

DIVISION 3.—Ellen Mary Willoughby, Nellie Couch, Marjorie Fergusson, John Gray, Emily M. Palmer.

DIVISION 4.—Elsie Johnson, May V. Hunter, Jessie B. Bone.

SECOND PRIZES.

DIVISION 1.—Dorothy G. Hever, Grace E. Wright, Kathleen A. Pasley, Willie S. Palmer, Lilian Blackie, Edith Mary Clarke.

DIVISION 2.—Lucy Jacob, Stuart Ellacott, Douglas Parkes, Bella Mack, Elsie Hancock.

DIVISION 3.—Nellie Lovegrove, Cecil Bradford, Eva C. Monti, Florrie Dance, Frederica Hunton.

DIVISION 4.—Margery Matthews, Thomas Hunter, George Pasley.

FIRST CERTIFICATES.

DIVISION 1.—William Charles, Aimée T. La Brooy, Isabel T. Salt, James Sinclair Jackson, Ada Heap, Grace Dawson-Scott, James Samuel Roy.

DIVISION 2.—Ruth Coupe, Evelyn Mary Shaw, Margaret Jane Macphoe, Minnie Eisele, Horace Digby Roberts, Katherine E. Arrol, Ruth E. Braithwaite, Enid Campbell, Arthur B. Llewellyn, Kathleen M. Foweraker, Theodore M. Oldham, Ada E. Palmer, Thomas Mack, Daisy Groves, Maggie A. Buchanan, Norman Braby, Bertha Kelsey, Susie Keen.

DIVISION 3.—Raymond H. Theobald, May Dring, Grace Rettie, Trevor Matthews, Marcus King, Helen M. Jordan, Kate Ruby Allen.

DIVISION 4.—K. E. Violet Ashworth, Annie M. Cole, Marion E. Wilson, Katherine Blair, Angus McQuilkan, John Menzies, Ethel Hutchings.

SECOND CERTIFICATES.

DIVISION 1.—Daisy and Norman Petrides, Thomas M. Stanier, Leonard S. Browne, Edgar Yerbury, Janet C. Black, Elmina E. Deane Roe, Hilda Schaeffer, Dorothy E. Harris, Alice Rouse, A. Couch, Elma Ishmail, Phillis and Noel Wright.

DIVISION 2.—Arthur Cordell, Percy L. Leigh, Mary Charles, May Pell, Moffat Jackson, Florence E. Palmer, Mary Hull, Ruth E. Harrison, Lottie Orr, Arabella V. G. Onslow, Annie Cooper, Ethel M. Pasley, Violet Broxholm, Norah Lowe, Edward Rainey, Bertha Fowler, Albert Bellerby, Harold Stevenson, Lucy Soltan, Wm. Edward Bellerby, Edith Emily Quick, Duncan Payne, Charlie Milledge, Willie Weinstein.

DIVISION 3.—Ada K. Blackie, Muriel G. Joscelyne, Rosetta M. Sherwin, Thomas De Courcy Rayner.

DIVISION 4.—Winifred Nash, Hilda M. Medill, May Daniels, Gwendoline M. Hill, Walter E. Stainer, Mary Louisa Tibbitts.

The following were not eligible for the competition, but the papers were well done.

Helen Beckett, Eva Hutchings, Clara Barnes, Machfeld Waller, Stanley Boxer, Lily Boxer, Harold Classey.

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

No. 16.—T. A. and W. Field, Sedbury, N.Y. 13.—Bessie and Una Whithead, Amherst, N.Y. 13.—No. 17.—Valerie Henderson, Amherst, N.Y. 13.—No. 18.—A. T. Henderson, Jamaica. No. 19.—Ruth Cane (S. Africa). No. 20.—Jessie and Willie Ben Olle (Jerusalem). Winnie and Helen Gartshore (Canada). Llewellyn and Queenie Dale (India). Jean Scott (Canada). No. 21.—W. Arrol Craik (Canada). Vera Sjöström Mary Johnson (New York).

No. 27 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

Alfred, Arthur and Irene Llewellyn, John and Eva A. Gray, Alice and Robert Cooper, Deane Roe, Ernest Howard, and Violet Ashworth, Edwin and Robert Poole, Angus McQuilkan, Willie Wheeler, Kathleen and Bretonette Cole, Charles and Tom Hunter, Maude and Amy Notage, Madge Morris, John W. Thomson, Jessie West, Cecilia F. Anklin, Eva Monti, Rosetta Sherwin, Christina Murray, Olive Tritton, Dorothy Cooper, Annie Wilson, Marcus King, Alice Havelock, R. A. and Leonard Bentall, Sinclair Jackson, Harcourt and May Hunter, Gwendoline Shaw, Maggie, Walter, and Jessie Carter, Leonard Brown, Helen Willoughby, Edwin Sharpe, Harry Segar, Stanley Wright, Maude Temlett, Maggie Buelth, Alice Short, Barbara Macnechey, M. T. Colville, Nellie Perkins, Florrie and Edith Mackenzie, Winnie Shakespear, Bertha Fowler, Enid and Gladys Fraser, Christine Chalmers, Nettie, Colin, E. B. Black, Muriel Harrison, Ada Heap, A. E. Marets, Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, Annie Oliver, Hetty and Harold Wadson, W. C. Clarke, H. Brookhouse, Lucy Soltan, Dorothy Grove, Edith Corrie, Muriel Joscelyne, William, Mary, and Maggie Charles, Evelyn Moir, Kathleen Cole, Annie Gear, Maude Clarke, Gertrude Edwards, Arthur Sanders, Eliza Laidlaw, Kate Leach, Melbourne and Myrtle Keny, George and Fred Brand, Elsie Goodere, Cecil E. and Hilda Gouldsmith, Isabel Phipps, Edward Rayner, Malcolm Thomson, Phillis and Noel Wright, Maggie Faithfull, J. B. Horlock, D. J., E. May, and G. H. Greenbrook, Mildred Haig, Lionel Calvert, Marion and Robert Richards, Jessie Boston, T. Belle, and Abraham Mack, Francis, Florence and Stanley Hoyte, Dorothy Patten, Louie Hooper, Flora King, Christine Arnold, Eileen and Theodora Roberts, Francis Stalker, Ruth Milligen, Millie Pasley, Minnie and Eva Giddings, Archibald Bearsby, Esther Enderby, John and Maggie Menzies, H. Robinson, Margaret Morris, Kathie Arrol, Maggie Smith, Irene Gill, Winnie Shaw, May and Vera Petrides, Marjorie and Muriel Hodge, Kate Fletcher, Tiny Cox, Kate Green, Selma Smith, Eliza Herdridge, Charley Williams, Martha Harding, Hilda Schaeffer, Mabel Binney, Margaret Hasse, Theodora Hill, Frank Morris, Edith Quick, Maggie Goodland, Mary E. Plumb, Elsie H. Broomfield, Nellie Buny, Lizzie Hill, Wm. Henry Squire, Hilda Medill, T. Murrey Oldham, Arthur Couch, Ashley Bowker, Frederick Roddy Freeman, Nellie and Louie Tibbitts, Constance Dwyer-Meares, Florence Judd, Duncan Payne, Arthur B. and Evelyn H. Jones, James S. Roy, Florrie Smith, Emma Goodier, Amy Posten, Ethel Fielder, Dollie and Bob Salt, Roberta Melkile, Douglas Parkes, Bessie Cheale, Kathleen Foweraker, Richard Lewis, Edith Dadham, Marion Connell, Kenneth Dunbar, J. W.ingle, Jessie Ware, Willie Palmer, Theo. Gilmour, Hannah and Christine Parker, Lillian and Dorothy Bevan, Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Henry and Annie Couch, Elsie Simpson, Mary and Willie White, Bessie Scottiburgh, Louis Berthe, Ethel Pettican, Katerina Blair.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE

SEARCHER (No. 28).

1. ver. 5. Job's eyes to see God.
2. ver. 15. David's eye looking towards God for help.
3. ver. 8. God's eye to guide his people.
4. ver. 15. The eyes of the Lord to look upon the righteous.
5. ver. 1, 2. The eyes of the godly waiting for God to have mercy upon them.
6. ver. 7. Our own eyes. Not to trust to them, but to fear the Lord.
- ver. 21. Our eyes. To be wise and discreet.
7. ver. 3. The Lord's eyes to behold everything.
- ver. 30. Our eyes. To make us rejoice.
8. ver. 6. God's eyes to do good to his people.
9. ver. 13. The eyes of the Lord, which will not look on iniquity.
10. ver. 23. The eyes of the disciples. To see the works of Christ.
11. ver. 13. God's eyes. To see everything.

No. 28 (first list).—Correct answers received from:—

Dora Colebrook, Kathleen and Gracie Dodington, Dollie and Bob Salt, May Pell, Nellie Walker, Arabella Onslow, Theodora Spencer, Edwin Peters, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Herbert Braddon, J. A. Chamberlain, Violet Ashworth, Raymond Harbottle, Annie Tawse, M. F., Willie Guthbert, Myrtle and Melbourne Perry, Millicent and Wallace Bentley, Rosalind Phillimore, May Gordon, and Daisy Bligh, Vernon and Jack Clarke, Muriel Harrison, T. Stainer, Alfred and Mary Greenacre, Rosa Grace, Emily Bridgewater, Edith Hayward, Arthur Daw, Mary Plumb, Clara Barnes, W. E. Clarke, H. R. Compton, Stuart Ellacott, Nellie Perkins, Margaret Davidson, Flora King, James Matthews, Constance Schaeffer, Rose Anton, Arthur Sanders, Rosa Hayes, Elsie Williamson, Cecil Bradford, Minnie Eisele, Daisy Phillips, Jack and Tom Harris, Daisy Groves, Annie Cooper, Owen Morice, Dorothy Patten, Victor, Florrie, and Willie Bellerby, Connie Wood, Betty Stocks, Elsie Goodere, R. H. and William Williams, Josie, Percy, and Elma Cheal, Elizabeth Hull.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 29).

After reading the article on "Shut Doors."

1. What imprisonments are mentioned in Acts? Say who were imprisoned, who imprisoned them, and, if they were delivered, how? Children under 12, give three instances.

Personal.

"ANDRISHAIG."—Thank you very much for the flowers. I sent them to the Flower Mission, who write:—"Please convey my best thanks to the readers of 'Uncle Tom.' The flowers are most acceptable." HELEN GARTSHORE.—I am pleased to receive your answers. Please write on thin paper. RUBY ALLEN.—I am glad you are able to help your little brothers, and hope they will continue. RILL LA BROOY.—Cannot you do the "Searcher" at the seaside? It is a pity to give it up; you are doing so well. MAUD AND AMY NOTAGE.—Please each write out your answers separately. MURIEL HARRISON.—Many thanks for your letter. It would be better to spend all the time on the answers required of you. DAISY BURCK.—As you are over twelve you must do all the questions. AMY FOSTON.—I hope you will soon be better.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Kewick, July 21 to Aug. 5. Mr. Hankinson, Troubridge, to July 17. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, Burnham Market, July 16-24; caravan No. 2, Buxhall, to July 22; Mr. Jewell, North Tawdworth, near Epsom, July 19.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Herne Bay, to July 24. Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Portsmouth, to July 27; Mr. Josiah Spiers, North Berwick, July; Mr. B. Herklots, Greystones, co. Wicklow, to July 27. August: Mr. A. J. Barff, B.A., Bezhul; Mr. G. Askwith and Mr. A. T. Frampton, Bournemouth; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, August 6 to September 6; Mr. H. Wellesley C. Bailey and Mr. H. Duncan, Carmouth, N.B.; Mr. W. H. Wilson, Colwyn Bay; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Cromer and Shearwater; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Eastbourne, from August 6; Mr. Phillips Welch, Exmouth; Dr. Barnes, Folkestone; Mr. Ernest Shaw, B.A., Freshwater; Messrs. G. Goodman and C. H. Collier, Herne Bay; Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ilfracombe; Mr. Arthur Mercer and Mr. T. Craig, Langland Bay (Swansea); Mr. J. S. Tyler and Mr. G. A. King, Littlehampton; Mr. J. Russell Hill, Llanfairfechan, August 9 to 27; Rev. W. Senior and Rev. E. E. Nickisson, Margate; Mr. Livesey Carrott, Mablethorpe; Mr. L. M. Miller, Paignton; Mr. H. Steward, Port Erin, Isle of Man; Mr. A. C. Jewell, Rhyl; Mr. E. Collier, St. Anne's-on-Sea; Rev. W. V. Martin, B.A., St. Leonard's, August 10 to Sept. 9; Mr. G. Hanson, Sandown and Shanklin; Mr. Bernard Herklots, B.A., Scarborough; Mr. J. Waters Coldicott, Southend; Rev. S. M. Warner, Southsea; Messrs. S. J. Hewlett and J. Bird, Swanage; Messrs. E. Hughes and H. T. Sayer, Towyn, August 4 to September 4; Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho!; Mr. H. Hankinson and Mr. E. J. Hopkins, B.A., Whitby; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Weymouth; Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing, from August 6.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending July 25, 1896.—Sun., July 19, Acts xxvii. 30-44; Mon., July 20, xxviii. 1-16; Tues., July 21, xxviii. 17-31; Wed., July 22, Leviticus i. 1-13; Thurs., July 23, ii. 1-13; Fri., July 24, iv. 27-35; Sat., July 25, viii. 1-16.

City Workwomen.—Last Saturday Mr. Evan Spicer entertained at his residence at Dulwich about 150 of the City workwomen among whom Mrs. Fisher and her helpers labour in the Gospel. From 2 to 8 o'clock these humble toiling sisters were entertained in various ways, and enjoyed altogether a delightful time through the kindness of their host. At the close there was a little service held in the open-air. This is a form of doing good which many suburban residents of spacious premises might well imitate.

Guildford Convention.

FAVOURED with charming weather, this annual assembly took place last week. The principal gatherings were held in a large tent erected on the north side of the town, in what is known as the Foxenden field. They comprised meetings for prayer in the early morning, a Bible reading from ten to eleven o'clock, followed after a short interval by a general meeting. In the afternoon gatherings of men were addressed in the new Church Institute, adjoining the tent, while meetings for ladies were contemporaneously held in the tent. The engagements of the day were closed by another general meeting under canvas in the evening.

At the opening meeting on Monday night, Rev. Francis Paynter, general chairman of the Convention, presided over a large audience in the tent. Rev. A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE spoke on what it is to see Christ (John xvi. 15). So long as we see Jesus only as Teacher and Friend, our lives, like the lives of the disciples, will fail. Our sight of Jesus is full and complete when he comes, by his Holy Spirit, to dwell in our hearts as Lord. Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR pressed home the truth that the blessing received at the Convention would be in proportion to the intensity of personal individual dealing with God Himself.

Tuesday morning's Bible reading was taken by Mr. BARNES-LAWRENCE, who based it upon the conflict between David and Goliath. In an address at noonday Mr. MACGREGOR expressed his belief that the perfectionist view, held by some people, was due to an entire absence of a sense of the sins of omission that they committed. Preb. WEBB-PERFLOE enlarged on the words: "The heavens were opened and I saw visions of God" (Ezekiel i.). Such conventions, he said, are an absolute danger to the Church of God, if they do not lead to brighter service for Him—if they do not announce, reflect, and hasten on, the glory of the Lord.

At the general meeting in the evening Rev. A. G. WHALEY spoke on "separation," "consecration," and "possession" as a threefold view of the holy life. Rev. CHARLES G. MOORE said that when God takes a good thing away from his children, He always means to give something equally good in its place. The giving of the Holy Ghost followed on Christ's withdrawal to glory.

On Wednesday morning Mr. GEORGE CLARKE gave a Bible reading from the words, "The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha."

Rev. E. W. MOORE, at noon on Wednesday, referred to three characteristics which should distinguish Christian service—simplicity, transparency, and unity. Speaking of the last-mentioned characteristic, he said that affection and will and understanding and conscience must all unite in aiming at service for Christ in the power of the Holy Ghost. Rev. DARLOW SARJEANT dealt with the subject of purity of heart. Such a condition did not mean perfection in the flesh, infallibility of judgment, or being placed in a position where they would be above temptation and the possibility of a fall. In the evening Rev. C. G. MOORE dwelt on character, and pointed out that it is only under difficulties that it can grow to be strong and noble. Rev. E. W. MOORE laid stress on the truth that Christ can adapt Himself to all the divers multiplied needs of human souls.

Mr. BARNES-LAWRENCE took the Bible reading on Thursday morning, selecting for his theme 2 Kings xiii., which relates the story of Joash at the deathbed of Elisha. The prophet taught Joash that the place of victory is in the hand of God; so God can take the place of our weakness and turn it into the place of his might. Mr. DARLOW SARJEANT spoke at midday on Christ's passion in the garden. The only way to Calvary and the resurrection life, is spiritual conflict. Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS dealt with the "nevertheless" of service, founding his remarks on the words of Peter, "Nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net." He drew from Peter's action a lesson of obedience. Before we can become fruitful workers for God, we have to get out of the shallows of the world into the depths of God's faithfulness and love.

On Thursday evening Rev. E. HOPKINS spoke from Gen. xvii. 1, "I am the Almighty God. Walk thou before Me, and be thou perfect"—margin, "upright" or "sincere." God spoke to Abram in successive and progressive revelations of Himself, and these marked distinct crises in the patriarch's life. So it may be with us. In this walk before the Almighty God we find the secret of a consistent life. It is not a walk simply before men, but before God; therefore we shall not care what others think of us. With the command comes the promise, "I will make my covenant between Me and thee." Let us step out on God's Word, and draw continually on his infinite resources. An address followed by Mr. GEORGE CLARKE on the story of Jacob's failure and victory, the lessons of which were applied to the sanctified life. In the after-meeting, conducted by Mr. Clarke, a deep impression was evident among those present, of whom not a few indicated their resolve to trust God for future keeping and for the conquering life.

The Bible-reading on Friday morning was by Mr. BARNES-LAWRENCE from Gen. xxii., the offering-up of Isaac. The blessing that came to Abraham, through his obedience, and to the world, was described; stress was also laid on the Divine satisfaction arising from the implicit faith of the patriarch. Mr. LAWRENCE was also the first speaker at the noonday meeting, when he expounded very freshly and practically 1 Peter iii. 15, "Sanctify in your hearts Jesus Christ as Lord." The second address was by Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, who chose as his text Ps. cvi. 45, "Visit me with thy salvation, that I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that I may glory in thine inheritance." He expounded the three titles in this passage applied to believers—God's "chosen," his "nation," and his "inheritance." The prayer of the Psalmist, that he might see and rejoice, and glory, was also a fruitful theme for many practical exhortations as to the successive steps in the life of holiness and service.

CONSECRATION MEETING.

On Friday afternoon there was a meeting for consecration to the Lord's service, whether at home or abroad. Rev. W. HOUGHTON presided, and called first of all for several utterances of confession, thanksgiving and desire for reconsecration, from friends in the tent. These were heartfelt and to the point; one of the pleading voices heard being that of a sister.

Thereafter followed some words of exhortation and counsel from Rev. F. B. MEYER. Many, he said, will doubtless look back on the Convention as a crisis in their spiritual history. Much will depend on the course of the immediate future. As to the secret of retaining what blessing has been received, it is important not to rely on any shifting emotion, but on our standing in Christ. We may not enjoy a continuance of Convention rapture or enthusiasm, but the will may remain fully true to Jesus Christ. God works in us to will as well as to do. As to helps in the fruitful Christian life, we must lay much stress on continued study of the Word of God. Read every passage, long or short, intensely, comparing Scripture with Scripture. Readiness, day by day, hour by hour, to work for others is one of the most potent forces in keeping fresh our spiritual life. Our fervour in communicating blessing to others is the pulse of our spiritual health. Mr. Meyer referred to Christ's conversation with the woman of Samaria, and the distinction drawn in John iv. between the well or pit, and the spring within the soul that keeps bubbling up into everlasting life. In the great and last day of the feast it is recorded that Christ stood and cried—as if He could no longer contain Himself—"He that believeth, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Who can generate a river? But we can be the channel, not only of a river, but as Christ said, rivers of blessing. The next point in the speaker's exhortation was with reference to fruit-bearing, as a branch in the living Vine. Christ speaks in John xv. of a man being "cast forth as a branch," because of failure in service. Would God that all workers were delivered from this terrible disavowal in the day of rewards! Paul feared lest at last he might be a castaway, though he had entreated others to aspire to the crown of rejoicing. If Paul were apprehensive on this score, how much more is it needful for us to walk in fear before God about it! We are all good at laying down the rules of the game for others, but so many of us are poor hands in individual service. Let us not be envious of the work of others, but recognise that there is variety in the kinds of service we can render to our Lord and to those about us. If we take advantage of all the opportunities God gives we need not be jealous because our success is not exactly the same in kind or degree as that of another. Let us be very sensitive to the movements and suggestions of the Spirit with regard to service. It is ours to be on the alert and in constant touch with Him. We must also believe in the co-operation—it may be mysterious—of the Spirit in affecting the souls of our fellow-men. This conviction takes away the fear of man, and we are strengthened to do our part in the work, since we know that God is doing his. Let it also be a distinct and daily act of devotion to receive the fulness of the Spirit for service. One transaction of this kind is not enough; it must be repeated and renewed, morning by morning, as we go forth to the day's work. In closing, Mr. Meyer gave a wholesome warning against allowing frivolous small talk at the close of a consecration meeting to dissipate the blessing that God might have given. In a concluding prayer-service, opportunity was given to anyone who desired to express, by standing, their wish to devote their lives to foreign service if God should so will it; and also to a more whole-hearted home service. Those who responded were commended to God in earnest petition for his keeping and guidance in the days of waiting till the time of full decision might come.

On Friday evening Rev. C. G. MOORE spoke of the need of exercising strong faith and enduring patience, in the matter of prayer. Rev. HUBERT BROOKE followed with an address on "They shall go from strength to strength" (Psa. lxxxiv. 7). He asked if after that convention closed they were going to grow stronger in God daily till they appeared before Him in Zion; or were they going to turn their back upon God's grace and leave God's promises unpossessed? Let them seek a continual endowment of God's Holy Spirit and they would be enabled to grow in his strength and grace day by day.

MISSIONS.

On Saturday morning the missionary meeting took place in the tent, and there was a numerous attendance. Mr. EUGENE STOCK presided. Rev. J. STONE (C.M.S.) spoke of the Telugu Mission (South India), in connection with which he said there are now fifteen hundred young natives being educated for Christian work. Mr. CHARLES MURRAY (South Africa), brother of Mr. Andrew Murray, pointed out that the cause of missions had been pleaded on Calvary; if they understood that plea aright it would not be necessary to plead any more on behalf of the cause. Rev. H. S. PHILLIPS and Mrs. PHILLIPS (China) spoke; from their remarks it appeared that in all China there is only one missionary to every 250,000 people. Besides general missionary work there is a splendid effort going on in the spiritual interests of lepers. There is a spirit of deep earnestness in China to hear the Gospel. Mr. LILEY (North Africa) referred to the Mohammedan darkness and superstition existing in that part of the world. He pleaded that they who could not go to the foreign field would assist in supporting a missionary there. Mrs. BAILEY, a Baptist missionary-elect of India, spoke of the way she had been led to decide to enter on mission work abroad. Miss TULLOCH (India) stated that amongst the two million people in her district, there are only two European missionaries, and twenty united Christians.

The Chairman remarked at this juncture in the proceedings that some person had volunteered that "If nine others will join me I shall be glad to unite with them in keeping a missionary in North Africa three years." Mr. Stock added that any communications on the subject should be forwarded to the honorary secretary, Colonel Browne, Aluberna, Guildford. Pastor COLLARD described the gross superstitions and evils that exist on the banks of the Zambesi, where he has been at work.

Rev. Peter Jones,
AN INDIAN NATIVE MINISTER.

THE devoted native minister who has come before Christendom as Peter Jones, bore the Indian name of Kah-ke-wa-quo-nā-by. He was the first Indian convert in connection with the Methodist Church of Canada, and became a useful preacher of the Gospel among his own people. Some of our aged readers may remember his visit to Great Britain, where he told before thousands the story of his own conversion, and of the work of God among his people.

Peter was born in 1802, in surroundings entirely pagan. The tribe to which he belonged worshipped the sun, and moon, and stars, and many earthly things. Their religion was one of fear: thunder and lightning kept them in awe, and every mysterious sound or sight was attributed to evil and vindictive divinities. They believed in a great Supreme Spirit, loving and powerful; but the general impression was that He was too exalted to concern himself with the wants and follies of poor earthly beings. Hence their desire rather to appease the anger of the great evil spirit whom they called Mahje-Munedoo. Various monsters, half demoniacal and half human, haunted the dark forests, and were ever on the trail of the tribesman.

Accompanied by his mother, Peter wandered through the woods, and while still young was familiar with the superstitions and customs of his people. In after days he used to tell how it was his early habit to blacken his face with charcoal, and to fast until almost exhausted, in order that he might hold communication with familiar spirits and obtain their aid in his hunting and other daily enterprises. Years were spent in this way; the vast forests were traversed, and the lakes were crossed and re-crossed by canoe. And not only was the Indian life a familiar one to Peter, but he became acquainted with the miseries and sorrows of his people, consequent upon their being exploited by unprincipled traders, who had introduced among them "firewater" and other hurtful agents. At length, with a firm but kindly hand, Government intervened and rescued the red man from his white enemies, and thus saved the race from speedy extermination.

When about fourteen years of age, Peter had the advantage of elementary English education; he was taught to read the New Testament and the Church Catechism, but no definite impression was made upon him by these exercises. As time passed, the temporal condition of the tribe was vastly improved by the Government settling them upon a reservation, and encouraging them to till the soil. Yet drunkenness and fighting abounded, and contact with nominal Christians did not illumine the pagan mind. Having passed the age of eighteen, Peter resolved to embrace every opportunity for mental improvement. He had to meet many obstacles and face many discouragements, but he struggled on, and success crowned his efforts. Working in the summer for a brickmaker, he saved money wherewith to secure schooling in the winter months. Culture of the mind seems to have helped in the enlightenment of the heart.

The first deep religious impression upon this interesting person was made through the instrumentality of a young man from the United States, named Seth Crawford, who, feeling the Divine call to labour for the spiritual good of the Indians, left home and took up residence among the Mohawks. His simple piety and deep compassion appealed strongly to the young Indian, who was struck by their reality and disinterestedness. Later on, he listened to a Methodist local preacher's "warm talk," as he called it, on the words, "Ye must be born again." Meantime the Mohawk chief had professed Christianity, and was praying that the Gospel might have free course on the reservation. In 1823 Peter attended a camp meeting, one of those large gatherings which were at one time so popular in the New World, and were so signally blessed as evangelistic agencies. Along with his sister Mary, he moved in and out among the hosts, who for seven days "kept a feast unto the Lord" under the giant forest trees. Describing the proceedings in after years, he said:—

After the sermons there were prayer-meetings, in which all who felt disposed took part in exhorting and praying with penitents. On the second day I began to feel very sick at heart, but did not make this known. On Sabbath many discourses were delivered, and I thought the "black coats" knew all that was in my heart and spoke to me. The more I understood the plan of salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, the more I was convinced of the truth of the Christian religion, and of my need of salvation. On Monday I wept much, but I tried to conceal my grief; at length I felt as if I should sink down to hell because of my sins. Towards evening I retired into the wilderness to pray to the Great Spirit, and was helped in my resolve to go back to the camp and get the people of God to pray for me.

Arrived at the camp, a good old man named Reynolds came to me, and said, "Do you wish to serve the Lord?" I replied, "Yes." He then said, "Do you desire the people of God to pray for you?" I told him I did. He then led me to the prayer meeting, and, falling on my knees, I began to call on the name of the Lord Jesus. The old man prayed for me; but I felt that I could not believe or pray. I returned to my tent and fell asleep. I do not know how long I slept, but I was at length awakened by a friend, who told me to arise, as my sister had "obtained the spirit of adoption," and I was urged to seek the same blessing. I got up, resolved that if there was mercy for me I would seek until I found it.

My sister met me at the prayer-meeting, which was still continued, although now long after midnight, and she told me how happy she was. I earnestly prayed for pardon, and Christian friends explained to me the plan of salvation. At the dawning of the day I was enabled to cast myself wholly upon the Lord, and to claim an interest in the atoning blood of my Saviour. The love of God being now shed abroad in my heart, I loved Him intensely, and praised Him in the midst of his people.

At the close of the camp meeting, where hundreds of conversions took place, Peter and his sister returned to their distant homes, and told their friends what great things the Lord had done for them. Some who heard were very much affected by their words, and instead of persecuting them urged them to persevere in the good way. One of the missionaries to the Indian tribes, Rev. Wm. Case, witnessed Peter's conversion with great joy, and said, "Now is the door open for work among his nation." The Holy Spirit used the new convert in a remarkable manner from the first; and before long Peter saw it to be his duty to devote his life to the proclamation of the Gospel among his benighted brethren. For more than thirty years, with unwearied diligence, often amidst many discouragements, he toiled on. His great sorrow was that unscrupulous whites, with their "firewater," were such a curse to the poor Indians. He saw fruit of his labours: hundreds of his countrymen being converted through his instrumentality. He was a speaker of great gifts, and in the latter years of his life churches were always crowded when he was expected to preach. "His sun went down while it was yet day."

Through his incessant labours he finished his work a score of years too soon, but his memory is still blessed by many Canadian Christians.

Famine in Swaziland.

MAY we call the attention of Christian friends to the sad condition of the natives in certain parts of Swaziland, where, owing to the destruction of the crops by locusts, a serious famine has commenced? Mr. and Mrs. John Baillie, of Sunderland, who have been patiently labouring in Swaziland ever since the South Africa General Mission was planted there in 1890, are now at home on a much-needed furlough, but Mr. and Mrs. Michael Coates, Miss Harris, Miss Gabb, and Mr. and Mrs. Wehmeyer are still hard at work, and are much encouraged by the evident work of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of some of the Swazies. The following touching extract from a letter from Miss Harris, dated Bethany Mission Station, June 3, will speak for itself:—

"We still get splendid audiences at our Sunday meetings; last Sunday many turned away for want of space, though bedrooms and kitchen were all occupied. In a few weeks, if not sooner, the majority of the people of the country will be in a starving condition; it was more sad than I can tell to see on my way down to Bethany the other day fields and fields all deserted and dead, eaten up and destroyed by locusts; in fact, except up here, there is no harvest anywhere, and what the people will do I cannot tell."

Mr. Coates writes to the same effect. It will be seen, therefore, that immediate help is needed. The secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, will receive help, and at once forward it to South Africa for distribution.

THOS. B. MILLER, Chairman,
South Africa General Mission.
H. W. MAYNARD, Hon. Treasurer.
ALBERT A. HEAD.

Wimbledon.

The Connemara Orphans' Nursery was established to rescue the orphans of Galway and Mayo rendered destitute by the famine of 1847. It is now open to the whole of Ireland. There are two Homes, one for boys at Ballyconree, and the other, for girls, at Glenowen, both in Clifden, co. Galway. Hundreds of boys and girls have been sent out from them into the world, and have become useful members of society, some as domestic servants, others as teachers, shop-assistants, etc.; while many boys sent to Canada have risen to posts of respectability and influence. Better than this, there has been the firm assurance that most of them are citizens of the heavenly kingdom. The funds are at a very low ebb, new friends not having taken the places of the many old ones who have died in recent years. Communications may be addressed to Miss Butcher, Glenowen, Clifden, co. Galway.

THE MILD MAY CONFERENCE

AND EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE JUBILEE.

JUNE 30—JULY 4.

(Continued from last week.)

THURSDAY MORNING.

THERE was a strong muster of friends in the large hall on Thursday morning, when the special subject for consideration was "The True Unity of the Church as Perfected in Glory." After praise and prayer, Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, who presided, made a few appropriate remarks.

Pastor OTTO FUNCKE (Bremen) represented, he said, thousands and tens of thousands of German Christians who had found in Jesus their only comfort, living or dying. Notwithstanding the various systems of theology in the Church of Christ, all its members had but one article of faith, the only true one, and that was Jesus Christ. The speaker went on to show that departure from that article of faith resulted more or less in religious strife, fanaticism, persecution, and even bloodshed. Exhibitions of this spirit on the part of professed followers of Christ had brought him more than once to the verge of unbelief, "but," he feelingly added, "the Saviour kept a strong hold of me and prevented me falling over the brink." The pastor proceeded to point out that Christian unity did not mean dogmatic conformity. They were proud of their variety, as followers of the Saviour, for that variety was the necessary offspring of liberty in their humanity. He urged that a spirit of generosity should be shown between all Christians who differed from each other by reason of individual, racial, or national peculiarities. Let them truly love each other, and, acting under the impulse of love, endeavour to supply one another's needs.

Mr. JAMES BARTON (Dundalk) was the next speaker. He remarked that, in view of the subject which was occupying their attention, they should seek by faith that morning to rise above the scene in which they lived, to take a step beyond the things of time, and look, as far as the Scripture allowed, into the wonders of the future which God had prepared for them that love Him. In studying the subject of union between Christ and his Church, he saw it illustrated by three different figures in the Epistle to the Ephesians. Each one of those figures clearly indicated the position of the believer in union with his Lord in glory. In Ephesians ii., they had the representation of a temple which is being constructed at the present time, stone by stone. Now and then they gathered at Mildmay and elsewhere, and rejoiced that they were stones of that spiritual temple, stones not seen, perhaps, but none the less resting on the one grand foundation, and waiting for the bringing forth of the top-stone with shoutings of joy. That temple, indwelt by the Holy Spirit, was to be manifested by-and-by when the scaffolding of time and circumstances was taken down, and then God would display before the assembled creation what He had done of grace and what those stones were which had been by his chiselling hand and his loving heart prepared. With regard to the stones of that temple, when completed, there would be no question of denomination, but all would be one in Christ Jesus, seeing eye to eye in the fulness of the light, and rejoicing before the Lord in glorious union.

The second figure was found in the third chapter, at the fifteenth verse, where Paul spoke of the whole family in heaven and in earth. This pointed to what the position of the Church would be in the glory—a family, not a separated number of saved souls individually alone. They would then learn to understand the Father's heart as never before, and see the elder Brother face to face. The third figure was given in the fourth chapter, thirteenth verse: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Had they ever noticed that in the Epistles to the Ephesians and Corinthians, Christ was spoken of not only as Christ the Head, but as Christ including the Head and the members? The fulness of Christ was spoken of in the words he had quoted, and the image presented was clearly that of the perfect and glorious Man, the members of this Man being the people of the Lord, the Church. It would be when, standing before creation in union with his people, in union with that manhood which He had taken unto Himself, and which He would not part with—it would be then that his people would be seen in their position as members of his body. As he (the speaker) had sometimes looked at the Milky Way on a starry night, it seemed to him to be like the partial figure of a man, the limbs not yet perfect, and the head away in the heavens. Astronomers had told him that the Milky Way was composed of myriads of suns. This might illustrate what he wanted to say. Each believer had got a spark of heaven's life, as united to the living Head, and each was yet to shine in wondrous glory. Christ's people were all part of Him—a little gland, it might be, that brought oil into a joint, a little bit of nerve, or something else, but part of Him, part of the filling up of the body of their glorious Lord and Master. What sort of persons, then, ought they to be in the prospect of that wondrous future?

THE NEEDS OF MILD MAY.

The CHAIRMAN made a few remarks as to the general condition of the work and finances in connection with "Mildmay." They were very thankful that during the past year all their needs had been met. It was, nevertheless, true that many of their old friends had gone home, and others were wanted to fill their places, so as to keep up the funds of the institution and the work associated with it. As he had formerly occupied the position now filled by Colonel Morton, he knew something of the necessities of the work. They did not so much depend upon legacies which now and then came in, but upon help from living persons. One urgent material need was that the hall should be painted; this had not been done for eighteen years past. In that event the texts on the wall, so prayerfully chosen by the late Mr. Pennefather, and which had been a blessing to many, would be preserved. Having mentioned the Deaconess Home and the Children's Hospital as departments of the work specially needing support, the Chairman added that the contributions at that Conference had not come up by a long way to what they were last year, or to what they were generally.

UNION, VISIBLE AND MYSTICAL.

REV. PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE.

He read John xvii. 20 and 21: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word; that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us." Thus did the blessed Master at a comprehensive glance take in the Church of every age and of every country; for it is impossible for us to think that Christ was confining his remarks to the small body of believers gathered round Him while He prayed. And so the Lord Jesus Christ means, by those that should believe on Him, all who are sanctified in Him and called to be saints, and all that in every place call upon his name. It is futile to imagine that men of differently constituted minds can ever exist together in this world without holding different opinions and different thoughts upon minor subjects. There is no authoritative declaration from the Lord, or his apostles, that we should all act exactly as one in matters of church government, or of discipline, or even of ritual. We hold, I trust, without one shadow of a doubt, that the Papacy is essentially anti-Christian. We hold, I suppose, that for men to set up the principle of prelacy is to endanger their own souls and the souls of the people among whom they minister. We do not hold, I presume, that the Episcopacy is absolutely essential to salvation, however much some of us may feel that it is the best order of arrangement for the Church upon earth. But we hold that they who belong to the Lord Jesus Christ, and love Him in sincerity—no matter what their denomination, nationality, or class may be—make up the Church of the living God. When we speak of the Church of the living God, we mean a church that is essentially one, because it is the body of Christ. When we think of what that involves, we are brought face to face with some remarkable truths. I wish to enlarge upon a few of these.

In Ephesians we are told by St. Paul what is the starting-point with all souls when they are brought to know the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. Previously they were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenant of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. But they are taken from that position, and no longer are strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens of the household of God. By "fellow citizens" the apostle would seem to imply a community, or a unity, or a race, a condition in which, did they fully realise their privileges and possibilities, men would feel that they owe all their allegiance to one King. St. Paul goes further, and tells us that we are "of the household of God." Therein we are brought into the closest union one with the other, being bound not only by community of interest, but by the habitation of one particular spot. We exist under one direct personal government, and owe allegiance to Him who rules over the house.

But again. We are not absolutely one, and so Paul carries us one step further into that temple, the stones of which are not only built close to each other, but are vitalized by the Spirit of the Lord. Those stones might not be absolutely unified, though closely connected the one with the other. The apostle therefore carries the idea one step further, and says they are to become the bride of the Lord Jesus Christ. Herein the tie is indeed close and remarkable. On earth the bride and bridegroom cannot be vitally, organically one. But Christ and his Church must be one in their actual vitality, and therefore Paul carries us a step further still, and says that the Church of the living God is one Body. Here there is direct, absolute, organic unity, coupled with diversity in the most wonderful way. If there is a living body, it is not only that all the members are closely united and joined together so as to be directly interested in each other's welfare, and affected by each other's workings and touched by anything that touches any one member of the body; but they are instinct with one peculiar life. The fact that the life that permeates one part of the body exists in every other part of the body, constitutes organic union.

We are told, moreover, that that wonderful life which permeates all the body or Church of Christ is the life of Christ Himself; not simply his life on earth as our representative, but the life that He received from the Father when He rose from the grave, and when He took his place in the heavens at the Father's right hand. And so the Holy Ghost enters each member of the Church of Christ, each particular soul, and makes it instinct with the very principle and power of Divinity. Each soul is lifted up and taken to its own normal place, the right hand of the throne of God in the heavens, and is thus made partaker of the glory that Christ possesses.

If we are carried back by this figure to the original creation of man placed in the Garden of Eden, we see God giving to man some peculiar gifts that separated him entirely from the other part of the creation. Not only did God breathe into him the breath of life; but even in the first man we suppose there was placed something of that principle of life which proceeded directly from and constituted God's existence. Of that we do not know much, but we know that as soon as man could not rest without a helpmeet God caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, and from him God took a rib. We are told that from that rib God formed, or, as the margin more properly puts it, "built" a woman and brought her unto the man, so that Adam said, "This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called woman because she was taken out of man."

For 1860 years the Lord God Almighty has been doing that very thing with regard to the second Adam. The second or last Adam was taken into the deep sleep of death, and from his side the living God took something that, as it were, touched upon his very heart, namely, the Church, and this woman has for nearly 1900 years been gradually built up, in order that when she is complete, according to God's great purpose, she may be brought unto the Christ as his bride, and they both may be one for ever by reason of the very principle of the life that pervades them both. What has happened to every soul that is now joined to the Lord Jesus Christ by faith? The Holy Spirit from God has entered into the spirit department of the man, and from the spirit department He seeks to project himself into every other department of the human life.

When we admit the Holy Spirit and willingly yield to Him, He passes into the whole life, and we are literally instinct with the life of the Spirit, according to the measure of our faith, with one exception. The body can never be touched now by the Spirit of God to produce any better state of existence in regard thereto. It simply can be forced into this condition: that it becomes an instrument bowing to the will of the man under the teaching and guidance of the Holy Ghost. No human body can be perfected to-day, because God has made the body subject to corruption; but the Holy Ghost can take a man and in spirit and soul make that man replete with the Spirit of God, the body remaining subservient to the will. And so "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." What does that mean? It means that the particular body of our very humanity will be taken and made complete in the glory of God.

But far away beyond that, there lies in this majestic subject the grand doctrine that every saint of God in every age and clime will be combined in that day to make up one body. What body? We long for the day when there will be a spiritual body. "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," and I humbly believe that while we shall preserve our individuality throughout eternity, yet every soul that belongs to Christ will in that day be combined into one mysteriously-perfected spiritual body, "That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee." There will then be no longer this man and that man, this soul and that soul, but we shall all be one in Christ Jesus. One will exist as one's self, exactly as the finger exists separately from the thumb, and yet be absolutely ignorant of one's own separate existence, all working together for one great end, the glory of God. And if we believe that now we are, as the Church, constituted as one body, the several members working out the great purpose for which the whole is constituted, we may begin now in an earthly manner to carry out the heavenly model. In this mortal frame we may forget completely our individuality, in one sense, that we may use it for the benefit of the whole body, that we may be one in spirit.

If there is anything meant by this holy convention it is that the barriers of denominationalism should be wholly broken down, and that the unity of the brotherhood in Christ, the unity of his body, should be realised above all. For God's sake, for God desires to be glorified in this matter; for Christ's sake, for Christ wishes to see of the travail of his soul that He may be satisfied; for the sake of the Holy Ghost who has been so patient and tender with us, yearning over us and longing to take possession of every part of our being—let us give ourselves altogether unto God, as men and women that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto Him. But let us remember above all things, as we teach one another, as we speak to one another, as we work in connection with one another, that we are all one in Christ Jesus, and that God will never be satisfied about us until the prayer of Christ is wholly accomplished: "That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one us" for ever.

[The addresses of Thursday evening will be reported next week.]

FRIDAY MORNING.

The morning meeting on Friday was devoted to praise. The chair was occupied by Count W. DE SR. GEORGE (Geneva) who, after reading Psalm xvi., enumerated some of the many reasons for praise to God. He noted the personal intercourse of believers, so joyous and bright, with new friendships made and old acquaintances renewed; and, in the name of the foreign delegates, he thanked British Christians for the kind reception accorded and the many tokens of their love. He also made mention of the goodness of God in helping those who had unfolded Bible truth and led the thoughts of the assemblage. Moreover, he praised God for advancement in sympathy with those who are persecuted; also for the degree in which hearts had been stirred to a deeper sense of responsibility to witness for Christ before the world.

THE SECRET OF UNITY.

BY DR. G. S. BARRETT.

However, apparently, Christians may be divided, yet beneath all external separations there is a deep, true unity in Christ; and that is a reason for praise to God. All the divisions of Christendom cannot destroy the oneness of all who are in Christ. There may be a quarrel between members of a family—sometimes brethren may not speak to each other when they meet in the streets, but brothers are brothers, even though not recognising one another. Let us thank God that the unity of the Church is independent of the Church's recognition of it. Wherever the life of God is found in a human heart there is the true spiritual kinship, and nothing can destroy the reality of that oneness in Christ.

We thank God for many signs that the Churches are drawing nearer to each other in our land. There was a time when the Churches seemed to care very little about what was passing in other communities, and sympathy and co-operation was for the most part confined to the denominational circle. The Free Evangelical Churches are to-day drawing nearer; conferences and conventions bring together Christians of various denominations, and there are subsisting between brethren in Christ.

MANY EVIDENCES OF A DEEPER UNION

The only foundation of the union or reunion of Christendom is the possession of the life of God through Christ Jesus our Lord. Christ's disciples are one; Christ dwells in them. As we grasp hands we feel the community of saints, community of life—there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: "Ye are all one man in Christ Jesus." Let us steadily bear in mind the great secret of Christian union, Theologians write eirenicons to heal the schisms of the Church, and overtures pass between various bodies, but it is forgotten that all plans will be sure to fail, because they are artificial and mechanical. You cannot make all men one by dressing them all alike, and compelling them to live in the same house; nor can this be done by conformity to a common ritual and the recital of a common creed. Brothers are born and not made; and it is only when the spiritual life of God comes into the heart, and the new birth in Christ takes place, that the wandering and sinful are brought to God, and the union of the true Church begins.

Let us not forget that this true union of hearts in Christ will be sure to show itself in very different forms. The lowest forms of life are uniform; the highest multiform. The fuller the Christian life the larger the divergence of manifestation. If you want uniformity, you must not go to the church;

YOU MUST GO TO THE CHURCHYARD.

It is only in death that distinctions of life disappear. Life creates them, so let us rejoice as we look around for the divers manifestations of this oneness in Christ. Some will worship God best in the stately words of the Prayer Book of the Church of England; some will express their devotion best in the simple words of free prayer. Some will love beauty and richness of ritual; others will find the spirit hindered, and not helped, by external forms. Some like one form of government, some another; some bear one name, some another. Do not our children bear different names, and yet they are brothers and sisters? Underneath all these differences there is something deeper and more divine—the one common life, the life of God in Jesus Christ our Lord by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Finally, let us praise God in another way. The unity of the Church, I have said, is quite independent of the manifestation of that unity; brethren are brethren whether they show it or not. But do not forget how much the Church loses and how much the world loses by our not manifesting our oneness in the Lord. If you ask me "How shall Christians manifest this oneness?" I answer, for myself alone, "I do not think we shall manifest it best by talking about it, but by living it. I do not find that brothers and sisters go about the streets talking about their oneness; in every true family there is union of heart. So it should be in the [1893]

Church of Christ. The Early Christian Church conquered the Roman world by the power of the love of Christ. "See how these Christians love one another!" was the astonished exclamation of the Pagan world. The wonderful supernatural love, of which St. Paul says "they were taught of God to love one another," won glorious triumphs for the Gospel of Christ; and it will do so again. Let us then, in the spirit of that love, seek to show our gratitude by manifesting our oneness in Christ.

Also, let us seek to avoid all words that wound and all bitterness of feeling; let us in the bond of peace; remembering that there is one body, and that we are called in one hope of our calling. Let us seek, amid all our differences and separations, so to reveal to the world the oneness that we have in Christ, to show to the world that more than all our distinctions we prize our common faith, and our common love, and our common hope; and then the world will acknowledge that the Father sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world (John, xvii. 21). May our meetings thus end in praise that translates itself into life.

KEEP THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT

THE URGENCY OF PRAISE.

PASTOR THOMAS SPURGEON.

I am glad you have asked me to speak at a praise meeting; for of all meetings such ought to be the most joyful and enthusiastic. I am only a poor little London sparrow, and you have had birds of finest plumage and sweetest song from all parts of the earth. Yet a sparrow's message may not be inappropriate. "Chirrup," says the sparrow; "Cheer-up" say I this morning! There may be little need for this, for you are all good people, the gladdest and the gayest after the spiritual fashion; and yet I find that some of those who are the gladdest often have their seasons of depression and discouragement. Last week, while spending a time of service in Wales, a friend inquired regarding my future engagements; and when going through the list I came to to-day's praise meeting, he quoted the hymn line, "It is the children's jubilee; let all the children sing." Within myself, I said, "It is the E.A. jubilee; let all the members sing." It is the jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance, let us all rejoice.

I deeply love to hear a good hearty burst of Christian praise. I fancy there is less of it in our homes than there used to be; and I am sure that in some quarters there is less of it in the congregations of the faithful. Do you not think we ought

TO LIVE A SINGING LIFE?

It was my lot one day in fair Tasmania to be ushered into a parlour to await a friend's arrival. Investigating the pictures on the walls and the articles on the table, I looked at a canary-bird in a cage at the window, and tried to make it sing. If you want people to be kind just be kind to them; so I sang, but the canary made no response. When, at length, the friend arrived, I said: "You have a dumb canary here; with all my efforts I cannot make it sing." My friend informed me that it was stuffed, and not a live bird! I must confess that I have been in churches and homes where I have found Christians of the stuffed-canary sort. What are we called to be, if not happy Christians, "singing all the time"? It is a great help in one's service for Christ, and also in ordinary duty, to cultivate a glad and hopeful spirit.

Most of us are pressed with many anxieties, and in many instances the flesh is frail; and do I not know that the spirit often corresponds with the flesh? But above all this we may rise if the grace of God has full scope within our soul, and the indwelling Spirit, one of whose fruits is joy, is allowed to have free play in our hearts. Those of you who have "sailed the wide seas o'er" know how, in sailing ships, the men accustomed themselves to sing while they toil. It is a happy memory to me that while on a voyage the mainyard of the vessel came to some sort of grief and had to be lowered and repaired. Then came the task of hoisting it to its former position. Crew and passengers set to work; and they sang "Glory, glory, hallelujah," from the familiar "John's Brown's Body," as I have never heard it before or since; and up went the mainyard twice as quickly as otherwise would have been the case. We should by the cultivation of the most cheerful disposition that is possible. I remember a Christian worker returning from a religious service on the evening of a sultry summer day. He was riding in a hansom cab, and had been working hard, spending and being spent. It happened to be Derby Day, and as he drove along the road, some young fellows looked in, and, observing his unhappy appearance, said, "Cheer up, old man, you'll have better luck next time." If we wear a long face there is no knowing what we may be mistaken for, nor from whence we may be thought to be coming.

(640)

RECOMMEND OUR RELIGION

Let us have a cheerful light shining from our eyes; if we are morose, and miserable, and melancholy, people will not want to be religious. And even in our sufferings and sorrows, since all things are possible to him that believeth, may we not have an undercurrent, which sometimes will rise to the surface, of delight in God and serenity of spirit? God make us all spiritual skylarks, soaring heavenward all the day (and in the night, too, unlike the skylarks), and singing while we soar. We shall triumph if we trust; we shall sing if we simply rest on God's dear Son, and his great sacrifice for our salvation, and on the immutable promises for all the time to come.

Harriet Beecher Stowe, of whose death we have just heard, thinking of the untried and untrodden future, said, "Everything that ought to happen is going to happen." Get that into your soul. God's decrees shall none of them fail, nor shall his purposes or promises fall to the ground. There is something to sing about! "It is the E.A. jubilee; let all the members sing!"

FRIDAY.

COMMUNION ADDRESS.

BY REV. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.—Gal. iii. 28.

That they may all be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us.—John xvii. 21).

I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one.—John xvii. 23.

There seems a threefold aspect of union between us and Christ. First, union to Christ; second, union in Christ; and third, union with Christ, in the Father. Union to Christ is salvation, union in Christ is brotherhood, union with Christ in the Father is glory. Union to Christ is the mark of the present age, meaning acceptance through the blood of Christ and the life of faith. Union in Christ—alas! alas! that one sometimes feels almost inclined to say that it is to be the mark of the next dispensation, looking at the state of things around, and is only feebly adumbrated and set forth now. Union with Christ in the Father, after the next dispensation is over, when the thousand years have passed away, is to be the condition of the blessedness of the eternal glory.

Union to Christ—it is of the individual soul, between the individual soul and the Lord. No third voice mingles in that colloquy where the soul says, "I accept Thee, Lord, as my perfect substitute and sacrifice to the Father"; where the Master says in reply, "And I have taken thy sins upon Me, O beloved"—the solitary union, done in secret, according to the eternal purpose of God, which is carried out and made complete with the consent of the man, and which consent is expressed by faith; what the old writers called the faith of adhesion, by which the soul comes nearer and nearer to Christ, until at length it comes into contact with Him, the contact of faith that is—the union completed and absolutely begun in faith, the union of the soul to the Redeemer, which is salvation. And there the word on which we rest, is the Cross—the other word on which we rest is the Blood; the other word on which we rest is the Love; the fourth word on which we rest is the Power; and the last word on which we rest, which comprehends all the rest, is Himself. Christ is mine, I am Christ's. I need no more, I seek no more, He is all sufficient for me. I have what He has asked for and prays for salvation, and the life of faith that goes on; for, just as the beginning of that union is by the touch of faith, so the continuance of that union is by the touch of faith from day to day, from hour to hour, and from moment to moment. So, rendering everything to Christ, taking Christ for everything, union to Christ—it is salvation.

Then, the second aspect of that wonderful trilogy is union in Christ, which means brotherhood, the universal brotherhood of all believers; no longer a solitary thing, but a binding together of every believer in every place, in every time, because each is in Christ. Each is also, in a sense, in each other. There we have communion as well as union. Oh! what a blessed thing is this brotherhood in Jesus Christ. How it annihilates distance and time. It annihilates time, for we go back age after age, and there we find that all the best, all the purest, all the greatest in the past have been believers in the Lord. We are believers with them. We go back to the time of martyrs and apostles, and then to prophets, and then on beyond to patriarchs themselves—all one in Christ Jesus; for is it not written, "Ye shall sit down with Abraham, and with Isaac, and with Jacob in the kingdom of God"?

It annihilates distance, because, in all nations there are those who know the Lord; and, as the Apostle says in this precious verse, "There is neither Jew nor Greek." There is the national bond, as it were, broken, and we are all one in Christ. Then he goes on to say: "There is neither bond nor free." Social distinctions are made small, in a sense made nothing, to those that are one in Christ. "There is neither male nor female"; by which, I suppose, the Apostle meant nothing official, nothing of official position that can exclude any one of the children of God in Christ. Woman as well as man standing on this one level—in Christ, near to Him, dear to Him, altogether his. What a wondrous brotherhood! How precious that tie! It is the tie of that which we feel to be infinitely the most important thing belonging to us. The sinner on the throne, saved by grace, what is his or her most precious possession? It is Christ. The beggar on the highway, who has been brought to the cross, what is his most precious thing? It is Christ. That sinner on the throne, that sinner on the highway, have each their most precious thing the same.

That brotherhood is one of faith. We recognise—do we not?—the bond of a common faith. Notwithstanding all these minor differences that have, generation after generation, severed selfish sections of the Church of Christ from each other, there is a great body of precious Christian doctrine, doctrine of the essentials, that is common to us all, and from century to century it has come down. The Evangelical Church of to-day is practically, in doctrine, the same as the Church of the early apostolic days. There is not one of those great precious truths on which we rest as fundamental that is not the possession of the whole Evangelical Church of Christ at the present day; so that, men of every colour, men of every clime, men who are savage, men who are civilised, men who are poor, men who are rich, men who are weak in intellect as children, men who are giants in intellect and learning—all are one and all brothers, all are true to the Lord, and all are true to each other.

It is the only thing which will last. That which binds us together is the immortal in us. How few of our possessions there are that we shall keep, how few things that death will not lay hold of and strip us of them; but there is one thing death cannot touch, and that is the link that binds us to Christ, and the link that binds to brethren in Christ. The bond of our brotherhood is the undying possession that we never shall relinquish and which shall be ours for ever.

The third of these aspects I must say just one word upon—one with Christ in the Father. Here I should like to notice, in passing, that the Lord, in one of the verses which I have read, seems to contemplate this part of the blessed union as constituted, to a large extent, not so much by our being in Him as by his being in us. "I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one." I presume it means that before we are prepared for this final aspect of the blessed union, the Lord must Himself take possession of and dwell within the souls of his redeemed, ripening them for the great harvest. One was Christ in the Father—a mark of union, the union which is the glory. No one here, I know, can ever forget that most remarkable declaration of St. Paul where he says that the time is coming when the mediatorial kingdom of the Lord shall be rendered up by Him into the hands of the Father, delivered unto the Father that the Son may be subject unto Him that made all subject unto Him; so that the triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (so I read the passage)—may be all in all. So that the thought about ourselves and about all the people of Christ is, that in Christ we should be made one with God, not so much the thought of the communion of the believer with the humanity of Christ, even the glorified humanity, as the thought of the union of the believer with and in God Himself.

What does this refer to? and what does it mean? After the reign of the Lord for a thousand years, when the dawn of the eternal day and the eternal glory has taken place, it is then that this last, fullest, most wondrous union of believers and Christ and the Father all in one, is to take place. We naturally ask, For what purpose is this union? It is to last for eternity. It is to be fully developed when the kingdom is handed over to the Father. And what then? How are those eternal years passed? Of one thing I think we may be sure—it cannot be an idle eternity. Speaking reverently, as we must—oh! most reverently—on such mysteries, which, I suppose every one of God's people, in his or her inmost heart, has sometimes dwelt and mused upon in secret, we may ask, In what does that eternal work consist? Our answer generally, cannot be more than this—to carry out the purposes of God. We are to be fellow-workers with God—God working henceforth, as hitherto, in Divine work worthy of his glory; and we, in that blessed and mysterious union, fellow-workers with God therein.

There is coming a day when God's purposes with the Christian, and the glory that God is to bestow upon the Christian—the very glory of God Himself—will break upon us with a surprise and a wonder of which, in the meantime, we have no possible conception. I suppose that it has not entered the heart of man, what God is to make of his own children in the eternal days that are yet to come. But we know everything is founded upon, everything lies in this—the blood of Jesus Christ. The glory that God is about to give Jesus and which Jesus is about to give his people, is the glory which shall still further exalt and make perfect the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is that cross which gathers us to-day. Did He not Himself say, "This is my body which is broken for you; this is my blood of the new Testament shed for the remission of the sins of many—drink ye all of it"? "The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? The wine which we drink, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?" And are we not called once more to-day, to have communion with Christ in his death?

MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

Mr. W. E. Dodge, of New York, presided over a great missionary meeting on Friday evening, July 3, and opened the proceedings with some remarks on the glorious opportunities which the present day offers for the evangelisation of the world. The cause of missions has of late had a great impulse. An element of danger is found in the perverted sentiment that, after all, missions are an impertinence and an embarrassment; that we have no right to go to foreign lands and press our views upon the people, and that our governments have no reason to care for us if we do. God has placed Christian missionaries in the Turkish Empire, and we must make a firm stand in their favour, that they shall be protected equally with men engaged in commercial pursuits.

Speaking not only as a delegate of the Evangelical Alliance in the United States, but as chairman of the committee formed in Washington to further arbitration between Great Britain and the United States, Mr. Dodge remarked that nothing could be more terrible than a serious difference between the two great English-speaking countries—nothing more disastrous to the cause of foreign missions. How Satan would laugh if war should take place between the nations which have done most to preach "peace on earth"! Governments should be made to understand that everything must give way to arrangements and kind understanding between the two countries.

DR. E. E. JENKINS,

for many years a missionary in India, and an ex-president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, spoke on the origin and influence of the Alliance. He said: Fifty years ago Christians in England and America had been fairly schooled in the principles of religious liberty, but there were nations in Europe which had not mastered even the rudiments of freedom; and we missionaries in India watched afar off the protest of the Alliance and its efforts on behalf of the persecuted and oppressed. If it be objected that the visible results have not been considerable—witness the state of the Armenians in Turkey and the Stundists in Russia—it may be replied that revolutions, not only those that are consummated in national convulsion, but also those that are peaceably conducted by the advancement of public opinion, if apparently sudden when they reach the last stage, take a long while maturing into ripeness.

The Alliance has been a bold and effective witness against the tyranny of Church or State which would trample upon the freedom of men's consciences, and has been a stout defender of which is not dead yet, which is not likely to die so long as the Pope continues to favour us with encyclicals, like the one recently issued. The fellowship of the churches, which the Pope and Cardinal Vaughan affect to desire, and which has awakened the growing longings of thoughtful Christian men, is a problem which was in the very inception of the Alliance. If the churches are drawing nearer together, if the doctrines and usages that divide us are being reduced to the proportion they bear to the supreme verities that unite us, we owe it to the presence of the Alliance, which has persistently exhibited from decade to decade during these fifty years, the New Testament doctrine of unity—"We are one body in Christ."

THE PROTESTANTISM OF ENGLAND,

Whether missionary societies acknowledge it or not, this testimony in many lands, and in many languages, has helped the missionaries in laying the foundations of new churches, has enabled them to answer the question by which Hindus and Mohammedans so frequently challenge us: "If your religion is one, and the Christ you proclaim is the supreme name, why do Christians bear various names? Where is the guarantee that any of you are right?" I rejoice to testify that the missionaries themselves are delivering an unanswerable reply to the argument against the Christian faith on the divisions of the Church, by working together in conferences, in the preparation of Bible translations, providing vernacular literature, combining in the prayer meeting, by standing on the same platform when topics of general application are discussed. The distinctions that separate missionaries in the midst of millions of non-Christian populations, except for the unhappy necessity of differences of administration, would seem to be contemptible. Learning is not the monopoly of any one church, nor are talents or zeal; and where all are wanted, the one is miserably inadequate, and so the Evangelical Alliance becomes a necessity and a support to missionary life.

PASTOR COILLARD

outlined the interesting story of his mission work in Zambezia: It is now fourteen years since I was last among you, and looking back upon my wanderings, I am impressed with the fact that mission work is the concentration of love to God and man, and the fact that if anything can unite the churches of God surely it is missionary interest and work. Yet, although we may be united in preaching the Gospel to perishing heathen, there is a danger that we may waste our forces and tread on each other's toes. The world is large enough to afford elbow room for all.

We must not forget that the use of God's pruning knife is necessary for the growth and spiritual development of the Church. I am grieved when I see those in deep water, and labouring under affliction, who do not see the pruning knife in the hand of God. A man for whom I had great esteem visited me in a time of much sorrow and weakness, and went so far as to say, "I have nothing much to say to you, for I have never known such affliction." I said, "I pity you," for God chastises whom He loves, and educates in affliction those whom He regards as his own.

The pruning knife has been used in the Church of God; it has passed into a proverb that the blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church. Where God uses the pruning knife there is affliction upon affliction; this is for the good of the Church, and bears fruit to the glory of God. This has been the case in the little mission entrusted to our care. When we look back upon all the dispensations of God, which, though they seemed so hard and were so sad at the time, were yet fraught with blessing, we are constrained to say, "Our God doeth all things well; He never makes a mistake."

The great difficulty in making our way among the people, to whom we were sent with the glad tidings, arose in our

ENDEAVOUR TO WIN THEIR CONFIDENCE.

When we arrived among them, we felt that they regarded us with great distrust. They said, "Here are men who are not traders. What do they come among us for?" A chief took me on one side, and said, "You must be frank, sir. Why have you come, and what do you bring us?" I told them I brought the glad tidings of the Gospel. He said, "I am your friend. Do you not come to teach us how to make powder, and how to fight?" "No," I replied; "I have been sent to you by the Prince of Peace." When we went to meet the king at the capital we found that the very presents we sent forward to "pave our way" were intercepted, in fact, never reached the king! The chiefs did not think we were good enough to penetrate their country, yet they dared not hinder our going forward.

On one occasion the Prime Minister put it to the people whether we should stay or go. One of the native orators said, "We do not want him. Is it not he that caused the sun to rock?" There had just been an eclipse of the sun! Pioneering work, especially in that part of the country, is difficult, and sometimes painful. We preached the Gospel for years without seeing any fruit of our labour; but at length the Spirit of God worked among the people, and

MANY CONFESSED CHRIST.

There is much to be desired in some of the converts; their conception of sin is very shallow, and there is a good deal of dross with the gold; but we know there is the gold, and that is precious in the sight of God. We have been cheered by the conversion of very many, who are rejoicing in salvation. One of my greatest desires has been granted by God in the foundation of an Evangelistic School, for if Africa is to be evangelised it must be by her own children, and if the country of the Barotsi, which is so difficult, is to be brought to Christ, it must be by the Barotsi themselves. When I went forth we were two workers; now twenty-nine men and women, European missionaries and native teachers, are employed. We ought to have double the number; and I ask your sympathy and prayers and your interest and help in the work. We are on the threshold of Central Africa, and there are countless tribes to whom the Gospel has not yet been preached. What we need most is medical men. Though ours is one of the most unhealthy missions in Africa, we have not as yet one medical man. Maybe someone will now hear the call of God to go and labour with us.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

God has been working in China, and I will tell you a few of the encouraging facts. In 1842 there were six converts known in all China; in 1853, when it was my privilege to sail for that country, there were 300 church members in the Empire, including a few in the Straits. In 1890, at the conference in Shanghai, statistics were quoted showing that there were 37,000 communicants in connection with the Protestant churches of Europe and America. In the April number of The Shanghai Recorder of this year it is stated that there are 70,000 communicants; 37,000 in 1890, 70,000 in 1896. This does not include adherents, who may be three or four times as many, and it does not include a great number who have departed this life in the fear of God.

There is another fact of an encouraging character. In 1890, when our missionary conference assembled we had 1296 workers, including missionaries and their wives—and sometimes in actual work the wife well deserves the name of "better half." There is nothing more remarkable than the way in which in China. They get into the families; they get the hearts of people in a wonderful manner. We had a station in which we had been labouring for ten or twelve years, and twelve or thirteen converts had been won for Christ, but none of them women. The poor men had a hard time of it, and in order that they might have opportunity for the study of God's Word they bought a house and presented it to the mission.

GOD HAS HONoured OUR SISTERS

This state of things continued for a number of years, the women declining to have anything to do with the Gospel. At length a Scotch missionary sister, being run down in health, visited the station, and was so cordially received that she could with difficulty retire to rest at night. Early in the morning the women were at the house again, and all day long she was engaged with callers. The poor women, at first struck with curiosity, were in due course interested in the Gospel, and attended Sunday meeting with their husbands and brothers, and asked that they might have a resident lady missionary. They would take no refusal, but undertook to fit up a house for her. A lady volunteered, and the Gospel has spread from the city into the surrounding villages. We want more ladies in China. I ask for prayers for all work in that land. There never was such spiritual blessing as now.

ROMANISM AND MISSIONS.

At another missionary meeting, presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock, a paper was read by Dean VAILL, of Denmark, who lamented the havoc wrought in the mission-field by Roman Catholic priests. He said:—Their principle is, as they openly avow, not so much to preach Christ where He was not known before, or to fortify their existing missions, but to creep in where Evangelical missions already exist, and try to create confusion and destroy those missions. On that principle they are everywhere; we hear that from missions in all countries, where the Romanists have liberty to do it, and where they can afford the necessary staff of labourers. Even among what we may call Evangelicals, intolerance is to be found in the mission field. Ever and anon there are held great missionary conferences in India, China, and other countries, wherunto all Evangelical missionaries are invited; the aim is not to make resolutions, but to learn of one another's work, to have friendly intercourse, and to discuss questions on missions. But there are some few societies whose missionaries always shine by their absence.

That it is difficult for the heathen world to see the truth when different societies rival one another, and to think that they are one nevertheless, is easy to conceive. Happily, the common sense of the missionaries and the Spirit of Christ who animates many of them, gains very often the victory over denominational feelings. Unity among believing Christians of all churches and denominations is, at present at least, a Utopian thing. It can best be seen in the efforts of the Pope to promote unity. It is very curious to read the utterances of men who otherwise show that they can think clearly, and who speak about the charitable and noble thinking of the Pope in his efforts for the unity of the Church. For what shall be the condition of unity? Complete surrender to the infallible Pope! That would only be a monstrosity. But he cannot put any other condition; otherwise the foundation of Popery would be given up. Therefore no unity can be hoped with Christians who stick to Popery, nor, I fear, with the Russian Church with her Pope-Tsar, unless she alters her principles. But I think it should not be impossible to hope for a unity among Evangelical Christians: not a unity of churches, but a unity of believers.

We should cultivate the spirit of the Evangelical Alliance. We should make it clearer and clearer to ourselves that we can cling to our special church, its doctrines and discipline, and yet not look upon her as the possessor of the whole truth, nor look upon those who cannot look upon all things as ourselves, as upon men who will not give the truth room in their hearts.

How can the principles of the Evangelical Alliance be realised in the mission field? First of all by respecting one another, by loving one another; by not longing to win over the converts of another society, but by rejoicing over the progress of another society than its own. The aim of the Evangelical Alliance is not to unite churches, but to unite believers. In Japan, the converts of the Presbyterian, Reformed, and Congregational Societies have been united into one church; the converts of the English and the American Protestant Episcopal into another. And it is said that the like shall be done with the Methodist converts of the different societies. That is a step in the right direction. For it is impossible for us to understand why converts of the societies from the different countries, but of the same denominations, should be held apart from one another merely on the ground of some small technical differences. It is to be hoped that measures of union will be practised on a larger scale, and then, when the different societies work more as a unity, the world will get its eyes the more opened to the fact that Jesus is the only Saviour sent by his Father.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

Amongst the meetings on Tuesday afternoon was one in the interest of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

The chair was occupied by General Sir Wm. STIRLING, K.C.B., who, in some opening words, said that in old time the Kingdom of God was confined to the Jews, but now the Gentiles were allowed to have a share in its privileges, and it was possible to look forward to a time when God will gather them again, and make them his great missionaries upon the earth.

Addresses were given by Rev. John Wilkinson and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, the latter introducing Mr. J. Rabinowitch, who is not unknown at Mildmay. Mr. RABINOWITCH showed that there is now going forward in the Jews' camp in Russia a movement of a most important character. This, he said, was an incontrovertible fact, and it was awakening the interest of every student of prophecy. It should be the aim of every child of God to foster, nourish, and rightly direct this movement amongst God's ancient people.

THURSDAY

Thursday afternoon's meeting in the Large Hall was devoted to the theme of "The Evangelical Alliance and Religious Liberty." The chair was occupied by M. EDOUARD NAVILLE (Geneva).

The Chairman observed that the matter under consideration was one which had occupied the minds of the founders of the Evangelical Alliance from the first day of their organisation, and they had much cause for praise to God in the measure of success which had attended their world-wide efforts in this direction. Still, the contrast was appalling between the present condition of some persecuted brethren abroad; and the happy lot of those composing the large assembly of Christians from many lands who attended this Conference, to enjoy the cheer and refreshment which come from the sweet spirit of brotherhood in the bond of peace. Doubtless, as far as the Alliance had grieved over unsuccessful efforts and baffled hopes, they might learn increased reliance upon God rather than man. Certainly, the lamentable persecutions of our day called for individual as well as united prayer. To the representatives among them of the oppressed he offered hearty Christian sympathy, exhorting them to patient waiting upon God to hasten the time when they might serve Him without fear.

The bearing of religious liberty upon Christian missions found an earnest exponent in Rev. Dr. STODDARD (New York). He pointed out that less than three centuries ago freedom of conscience, as now understood, was unknown even in the British Isles, a fact which, in view of present blessings so dearly purchased for us, is well calculated to strengthen faith and stimulate effort on behalf of those now downtrodden and oppressed. We are plainly taught liberty of conscience in connection with obedience to human law; but, remembering our Lord's familiar distinction, it must be admitted that Cæsar has trespassed upon God's preserves, and is unwilling to be turned out. The Evangelical Alliance, while contending for religious liberty, has always done this without prejudice to the rights of nations and the duties of citizens. Such action, however, comes into sharp contrast with that of Turkish authorities and officials in civil matters where professed Christians are concerned, and this constitutes a reactionary policy, admitted to be the elevation of Mohammedanism by the oppression and depression of Christianity. Missionaries and Christian converts in Turkey are not seeking political enfranchisement, or anything not guaranteed by treaty; but they do ask to be protected in rendering unto God the things which are God's. In such appeals, which must commend themselves even to worldly men, they find steady response in the wise zeal, fervent prayers, and active advocacy of the Evangelical Alliance.

The address of Rev. M. BOWEN (Constantinople) was admirably temperate in tone. Long experience as a Christian missionary in the East gave peculiar value to his evident desire to hold the balance of testimony evenly between extreme statements regarding the action of the Sultan's Government, on the one hand, and that of his Christian subjects, on the other. The difficulty of maintaining public worship, the rigours of the Press censorship in its effects upon Christian literature, and the prevalence of arbitrary arrest, were points of oppression beyond dispute; but full allowance was made for the inability of the Porte to control narrow-minded officials in the interior. Then, business jealousy under trade depression and political agitation were other elements of extenuation; but the fullest inventory of such circumstances could not adequately account for the awful events of the autumn and winter of 1895, and the subsequent wholesale forced conversions of native Christians to Islam. The Divine will must ultimately triumph over these difficulties, but this end will be best furthered, not by hatred and denunciation of the Turk, but by peaceable and conciliatory methods, backed by prayer and the expression of Christian opinion throughout the world.

Rev. KRIKOR BEHESNIAN (Armenian) recited his story of interruption to evangelistic labours in Cilicia, through recent troubles in that part of the world. Gratefully premising that he personally owed much to the earnest, wise, and steady bygone action of the Alliance in favour of religious liberty in Armenia, he expressed the hope of yet finding means, through English Christian fellowship, to renew his Gospel ministrations among his brethren, while also affording them some succour in their grievous afflictions.

There was much real warmth in the reception of the venerable Dr. BAEDER, by the meeting, as he rose to say something about the present condition of the Stundists, among whom he has so extensively travelled. In a very touching manner, he detailed some of the sorrows of God's persecuted people in Russia, whose only crime is dissent from the Greek Church, through reading the Word of God. By their quiet and simple influence, the Gospel had, under the blessing of God, spread into the most remote parts of Russia, in a marvellous manner. Finally, Dr. Baedeker counselled prayer that God might embolden the present Emperor, a man of liberal views, to relax the ancient iron traditions of his realm, in favour of religious liberty for his humble but loyal subjects the godly Stundists.

Mr. PROKHANOFF, himself once numbered among the oppressed people of the Czar's domains, was also sympathetically received. He thought much encouragement might be derived for further effort on behalf of his suffering compatriots from the undoubted impression produced upon the late Czar by a previous Swiss address in their favour. There was much consolation in remembering that the persecutions were to the praise of Jesus Christ in the trial of faith, that they were eloquent for God before the whole world, and that they were for the increase of Christ's Church in the earth. He trusted that both persecuted and persecutors would be widely remembered in the prayers of all Christian people.

HOME MISSIONS AND CHRISTIAN PHILANTHROPY.

Under the Mulberry Tree, Friday afternoon was devoted to home missions. Lord KINNARD, who presided, introduced the speakers.

Miss LLOYD gave some account of Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission work in various lands, recalling the origin of the mission at Nine Elms, and the blessing which has rested on its labours in the reclamation of sinful women. Great interest has recently been manifested in the writing of letters to prisoners in Russia, Sweden, Greece, North Africa, the Colonies, and the United States. These have by many been gratefully received, and, it is believed, productive of good.

Dr. BARNARDO followed with an address on child-rescue work, giving touching incidents of his children, and the life from which many of these have been saved. They are not all bad—far from it. In illustration of this, he told of one motherless boy, who endured hunger and cold, but would not steal, because his mother, as she was dying, charged him never to be a thief. Was it not worth while saving such a boy, and giving him a real chance in life?

Rev. V. J. CHARLESWORTH came next with somewhat similar details of Spurgeon's Orphanage, which he regarded as the great memorial of the famous metropolitan pastor. Possibly they did not go down so far into the depths of misery as their friend Dr. Barnardo, for their children; but it must be remembered that the blow when the bread-winner is taken away, in a fairly respectable home, is very heavy, and the condition in which many widows, with a large family of young children, are left, is very terrible.

Miss MACPHERSON'S work was next represented by Mr. Edward Merry, who, speaking on her behalf, touched on the emigration work and the goodness God in preserving and prospering the seventy parties already sent across the ocean. The vast majority of the 6,230 boys and girls sent out are now doing well on the other side, and not a few are actively serving God in Canada in the foreign mission field. Some mention was also made of varied operations at the Home of Industry, and of its great value as a training college for young workers for the home and foreign mission service.

Mr. BLAAUW, in a letter read on behalf of Miss Child, recalled the origin and early history of the Welcome Home. The aim is to bring before merchant seamen, of all nationalities, visiting the port of London, the claims of the Gospel, and in this direction God has greatly blessed the work—numbers having been brought to Christ. In these efforts the Christian Life Boat crew has lent effective aid, both at the Welcome Home and at many missions in and around London. Several cases were referred to, showing how men converted in Ratcliff Highway are now winning souls in their own and other lands.

EVANGELISATION ON THE CONTINENT.

Accounts of Christian progress in some European countries were given in the Tent, by various foreign brethren, whose speech was sometimes hard to catch, but whose spirit and tone were unmistakably real and animated.

First came a description of evangelism in Germany, given by Pastor STIEGLITZ, who maintained that the work of the Lord is reviving in many parts of the German Empire. Cold formalism is slowly giving way to a brighter and fuller life. The Berlin City Mission and similar missions have been largely used of God in the awakening of the churches.

Italy was represented by Rev. Cav. SAVERIO FERA (secretary of the Chiesa d'Italia Evangelica) and Prof. Dr. E. COMPA, of Florence, both of whom brought glad tidings of Evangelistic effort in various parts, of the eagerness of many of the people to hear the simple Gospel, and of the remarkable degree in which numbers have lost faith in Rome and her priests. Instances were given of conversion, as well as of whole districts moved by the Gospel.

From Holland came cheering accounts, given by Rev. Dr. VAN GHEEL GULDENFESTER, of revival and refreshing in various ranks of society, but chiefly amongst miners and the working classes. Even among the Socialists a hearing has been gained for the Gospel, and many who were ready to denounce everything have been conquered by the power of the Word of God. The position of affairs in Holland is full of promise, but prayer is needed for the few faithful labourers.

Rev. M. D. KALOPOTHAKES, D.D., of the Greek Evangelical Church, explained that there are two branches of the Church—one in Asia Minor, with Constantinople as its centre; the other in the kingdom of Greece, including the Turkish European provinces of Southern Macedonia, with Salonica as its capital, and that of the ancient Epirus, with Jannina as its centre. The former branch is under the patronage of the American Board for Foreign Missions; the latter is carried on by voluntary contributions on the part of the natives, independently of any missionary society. In prosecuting evangelistic work among their fellow countrymen the Greek evangelicals have had to encounter great obstacles. They are seeking to effect their purpose by various instrumentalities—by the circulation of the Bible both in the original and in the translation. Another powerful agency is the press. The result in which they most rejoice is that of individuals led to a saving knowledge of the truth. Not finding in the old Church the spiritual food they need, and no longer able to conform with practices they see to be unscriptural, these came out and have organised themselves into Presbyterian Churches at Athens, Piræus, Volo, Salonica, and Jannina, and an effort was now made to have four more places opened to Divine worship in other parts of the field. The political problem connected with the Eastern question may sooner or later be solved by the cannon and the sword, but the possession of these Eastern countries by Christ must be effected through the Gospel.

MEETING AT EXETER.

A select and representative company of the foreign delegates to the Evangelical Alliance, with Mr. Arnold, the Secretary, spent several delightful days last week at the cathedral city of Exeter, as guests of the much-esteemed and liberal-minded Bishop Bickersteth. His lordship extended to them a generous welcome and hospitality, and the party greatly enjoyed their stay. On Tuesday there was a gathering at the bishop's palace of some sixty clergymen of the diocese and over one hundred of the Nonconformist ministers throughout Devon, when fraternal speeches, breathing the spirit of the Alliance, were made by host and guests. The bishop's kind and most Christian words of greeting were as heartily responded to.

Countess Schimmelmänn.

MANY readers will welcome some news respecting the movements of this devoted Christian lady since she left London at the beginning of last month. After being delayed in the Thames by contrary winds, the yacht Duen was sailed across the North Sea in very rough weather. The Countess suffered severely, and was most grateful when at length the Danish port of Frederikshavn was reached. Here she hoped to secure some greatly needed rest, but her arrival speedily became known. Much interest was roused, and pressing calls came to her to address public gatherings. She spoke at a great meeting in the Methodist church. Among those present were some circus performers, who left their play and sat in the meeting in costume, listening attentively. Next day the authorities of the town granted the use of the public gardens, and there the Countess addressed a concourse that seemed to embrace nearly all the people in the town.

The people followed their visitor to the quay in crowds, singing all the way, and many visited the yacht in boats. In order to escape their attentions and secure some absolute rest, the Countess quietly took a steamer across to Sweden and there enjoyed two real holidays in seclusion, though she was not able to remain quite incognito. Arrangements had meantime been made for meetings at Aalborg, in Denmark, and thither the Countess repaired to join her vessel and commence active Gospel service among her people. We hope in due course to have further details of the work of our Danish sister.

Home of Industry.

EMIGRATION brings continually the blessed privilege of dealing with precious souls. The past history, the present circumstances, and the future hopes of each of the party during the weeks of preparation, on the voyage, and whilst waiting in the Distributing Home, Stratford, Ont., before the final start, give us workers many a chance of endeavouring to teach and persuade these young souls concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. We ask prayer for the outgoing lads specially, almost all the sixty being orphans. They are under the care of Mr. Merry, sen.

This band is the seventy-first from the Home of Industry, and will sail by Parisian on July 16. We praise God that there has been no lack. Supplies have come in for the outfits, and we take this opportunity of thanking the kind friends who have contributed material and garments to fill the boxes.

A letter from Canada tells of a young girl owning her decision for Jesus. She writes:—"I know you will be pleased to hear that I have taken your Saviour for my Saviour too. Well do I remember our first talk about Him." She is under sheltering care in a clergyman's family, and is being taught all useful womanly ways, ANNIE MACPHERSON.

On Monday the party of boys referred to by Miss Macpherson were present at the Central Noon Meeting, Aldersgate-street. The entire band, comprising ninety boys and girls, sail this week for Canada. Mr. Joseph Merry, who is going out in charge of this company, spoke briefly, calling for prayer and sympathy for the work and its leader. He regretted Miss Macpherson's absence through indisposition, but trusted she would be borne up before God. The party leaving on Wednesday night will bring up the total number sent out since 1870, to 6,230, the vast majority of whom are doing well, and many serving the Lord. Moreover, from the first God has met every need, in response to faith and prayer. At the close of Mr. Merry's address, the boys were commended to God by Mr. J. W. C. Fegan and Rev. D. Baron.

"The Barrel of Meal Wasted Not."

1 Kings xvii. 16.

SHARE thy handful with the stranger;

Bid the prophet to thy board;

No resources are in danger

Whose exchequer is the Lord.

Daily new demands await thee;

Daily new support is sent;

He alone who doth create thee

Can secure thy nourishment.

Trust! the Lord will not deny thee;

Every longing shall be stilled:

Trust! the cruse will yet supply thee,

Never empty, never filled.

Should the lilies lack apparel,

Should the ravens cry in vain,

Even then the widow's barrel

Shall its handful still retain.

Why shouldst thou forecast the morrow?

Take with gladness while ye may;

Why dismayed forebodings borrow?

See! Thou hast enough to-day.

'Tis by loving that thou livest,

Spending doth not waste thy store;

Tho' it seems the last thou givest,

There is aye one handful more.

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Gason Memorial Fund.—Some friends of the late Dr. Gason, so long and so well known in Rome and at the Baths of Lucca as a staunch upholder of Evangelical truth, and as a devoted labourer among the poor, thinking it desirable that there should be some memorial of him in connection with the church whose interests he had so much at heart, propose to raise a fund for that purpose. Besides the erection of a memorial tablet in the church, there could be no more fitting commemoration of the man than the completion of the endowment fund, an object which he earnestly desired to see accomplished. A sum of £600 will be required for this purpose. Communications may be sent to Miss Simpson, Hotel Victoria, Bagni di Lucca, Italy.

[644]

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

BY the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. John Cory, a drawing-room meeting was held, on Friday, at 4, Park-crescent. Sir George Williams, who presided, referred to the late Mr. Radcliffe as the originator of the Strangers' Rests which have now been established in so many parts of the world, and added that the "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe," by his wife, was one of the most stirring lives he had ever read. It showed what a fountain of blessing he was wherever he went.

The character and position of the work at Zanzibar was explained by Mr. and Mrs. Isaac. Miss Everett, who had spent some months there, gave some interesting facts from her own experience. Dr. Baedeker spoke of the Strangers' Rests at Constantinople and Smyrna. In earlier years at Düsseldorf he had met Mr. Radcliffe, who took him to Hamburg, whither he was going to found a Rest in that important German port.

Dr. Soltan Eccles was sorry to hear that there were only two workers at Zanzibar, Mr. and Mrs. Knapman; there ought to be six. These stations ought to be adequately supplied. He urged systematic giving. The poor were magnificent givers; he knew some who gave 100 per cent.; some he thought must give 500 per cent. from the sums they had put into his hand. Mr. R. C. Morgan said that on an average probably every church in the country could support a missionary; and one person—a minister, or even a child—might arouse the enthusiasm that would impel a church to do so.

We hope the result of the meeting will be to support the six missionaries needed for Zanzibar—a most important station, considering the rapid development of Africa.

Our Holidays.

DEAR SIR,—Your remarks are timely and worthy of deep consideration, particularly in relation to the claims upon us of others to whom the summer brings no brief rest, and, even if it did, no means to avail themselves of it.

A few years ago, when chatting with one of the managers in a large firm (the heads of whom are leading Christian men), he told me that everyone in their employment, down even to the porters, got their holiday, and none went to spend it empty-handed. It taught me a lesson in dealing with my own small staff. It is needless to say that the firm I refer to is prosperous. The employés, treated in this way, will look upon the business as their own, and they will say (as my clerks do) "we" when talking of it.

Few of us but have some relations in straitened circumstances, who cannot afford to take a brief rest or much-needed change. Have they no claim upon us? When some of us go away, we will expend on ourselves £1, or much more, per day. If we shorten our holiday by two or three days, what we save will be ample to send the ailing and tired one away for a week; and what sweet memories we will store up for ourselves in the days to come!—Yours, etc.,

INASMUCH.

Princess Christian's Holiday Home.

H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN opened, on Saturday week, a new Holiday Home at Bishopsgate, on the borders of the Great Park, Windsor. This was no formal function on the part of Her Royal Highness, for the new building is the outcome of a Holiday Home for poor boys from London Ragged Schools, which she founded six years ago, and in which she and her daughters have all along taken the closest personal interest. The lease of the original home having run out, this new and larger cottage has been erected and furnished with the help of Her Majesty the Queen, various members of the Royal Family, and other friends. "Princess Christian's Holiday Home," as it is called, has been designed expressly for its purpose. It stands in two acres of ground, in which the happy young guests may play at will. Everything necessary for comfort, health, and convenience has been seen to under the Princess's personal oversight.

The opening proved an interesting occasion. The Dean of Windsor having spoken in warm terms of the work, Princess Christian gave an outline of the origin, progress, and present position of the Holiday Home, and of the co-operation of the Ragged School Union in selecting and sending down boys most in need of such a health-giving change. Hon. Evelyn Ashley also took part in the proceedings. Mrs. Grant Gordon, Royal Lodge, Windsor Park, acts as hon. sec. of this Holiday Home.

Open-Air Preachers at Easneye.

OVER two hundred members of the Open-air Mission spent, on Wednesday week, at the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Fowell Buxton, a delightful day at Easneye, Ware, Herts, the beautiful grounds affording ample opportunity for cricket, boating, swimming, and quiet rambles in the gardens and woods. Mr. Fowell Buxton welcomed his guests with a few kindly words, and devoted the day to their comfort and pleasure.

After dinner a short meeting was held, addressed by Dr. Gritton, who spoke in a helpful way on abiding in Christ and fruit-bearing; and Admiral Brenton, whose sea-stories caught hold, and who is evidently in warm sympathy with open-air work. Mr. Cockrem having also expressed the indebtedness of the Open-air Mission to the host, Mr. Buxton spoke of his warm interest in evangelistic work in the great city, and particularly in the declaration of the Gospel at the street corner, as likely to reach the ear of the careless passer-by who otherwise might never hear the message of mercy. Doubtless many, encouraged by these earnest words, and stimulated by the pleasant change, returned with fresh vigour to their loved service amongst the masses in the streets and lanes of the metropolis.

The London Medical Mission.

THIS Mission has issued an Occasional Paper on the work generally, and on the Convalescent Home, where the poor visitors seem well content to exchange the smoky atmosphere of St. Giles' for the pure sea-breezes of Folkestone and the comforts of the Home. The aged seem to grow young again, and the younger appear to go back to their earliest days, and frolic like children just out of school. They seem, too, to have the habit of "leaving all their troubles at home," and just making the most of the rest and freedom from the daily round of often uncongenial service. Many of these poor people, even though having some sense of the importance of Divine things, are in a very unhealthy condition spiritually, owing largely to the vitiated atmosphere in which they dwell. The eye and the ear grow accustomed to the evil of every description which surrounds them; the conscience becomes deadened, and the appetite for spiritual food anything but keen. To these, the atmosphere of a house where the Divine presence is ever sought, and the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit often felt, is to the soul just what the purer air of the country is to the body.

Full details of this interesting work may be had of Dr. H. Soltan, 34, Short's-gardens, Endell-street, St. Giles, W.C.

Prize Day on the "Arethusa."

ONE of the branches of the useful work done in connection with the Refuges for Homeless and Destitute is that of training lads for marine service, on the Arethusa and Chichester, at Greenhithe. Prize day was on Wednesday last week, and a goodly company of friends gathered on the Arethusa, which was adorned with flags in gala-day style. The drill of the healthy-looking boys excited much interest among the visitors.

The long roll of prizes given to "old boys," and to the lads now in training, for excellence in various branches of study or work, were given by the Countess of Jersey, and was a very pleasing function. Her ladyship at the close of the distribution addressed the boys in a splendid little speech, full of encouraging words and wholesome Christian advice. The Earl of Jersey, chairman of the Institutions, was also present, and Mr. A. Scott, chairman of the Ship Committee, presided. The visitors spent a most enjoyable time.

Village Children.

MR. GOODMAN gave, at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, on Monday, an account of the caravan work which Mr. Hewlett and he are now carrying on in country villages. Some five years ago their attention was called to the needs of the children in many small villages, and they started holding services, with great encouragement. The following year they had a caravan, the next year two vans, and now there are three fully employed in the service. Everywhere they find the young people swarming round the van, and ready to listen to the Gospel when simply and clearly put. Those who profess conviction or conversion are afterwards written to, and helped in the Christian life by friends in London. Details may be had of Mr. H. Morris, 4, E'iot Hall, Blackheath, S.E.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries ..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY ..	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly ..	2s. per annum.
8 " " ..	4s. " "
12 " " ..	6s. " "
24 " " ..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE publication of the despatches dealing with the English-American negotiations, regarding the establishment of a permanent court of arbitration between the two countries, show that solid progress has been made towards an understanding; but there is still a good deal to be done ere the matter is fully settled. Perhaps the more careful both sides are in the preliminaries, the less danger will there be of a lack of understanding later on. At the same time there is some peril in undue delay. Just now the public feeling of both communities is strongly in favour of the movement, but the longer the matter hangs in the air the greater the possibilities of some untoward event bringing all the negotiations to a standstill. It is an object to be greatly desired and prayed for by all the lovers of peace and goodwill, that our diplomats on both sides of the water should lose no time in coming to a final understanding, and thus initiate the first International Treaty of Arbitration, which would fittingly come between nations so vitally related as the two English-speaking races of the East and West.

"A Well-Known Missionary," writing to The Independent last week, gives a dismal picture of the present dangers and difficulties attending religious work in Madagascar. Since the French invasion and annexation, there have been almost constant rebellion and outrage, and missionaries seem to be for some reason the favourite objects of attack. In many districts their buildings have been pulled down or burnt, their property destroyed, and their work for the present put an end to. Antananarivo is full of refugees who have had to flee for their lives. Many native Christians have been put to death after bearing faithful witness to their faith. The churches of all Christian bodies have shared in the destruction and loss; the Roman Catholic Mission is said to have lost more than thirty churches, and one of their priests has been killed.

The causes of the outbreak are stated to be chiefly these: the marauding element, which has always been more or less chronic in the west, has broken out with renewed force owing to the general state of unsettlement, aggravated by the presence of Hova runaway soldiers who have retained their arms; the revival of the old heathen liking for charms and superstitions, as well as dislike for the restraints of Christianity, helped by the unwise efforts of some government officials to force the new religion on the people; and thirdly, a blind kind of patriotism and dislike of foreign control, which has naturally been fomented by the breaking up of the old order. It is clear that there is a hard and trying time for Christianity in the island. The native Christians will need all the help and encouragement they can get; and the foreign workers ask for the renewed prayers and sympathy of their fellow-Christians at home. The bright spot on the shadow is the memory of the fact that when fifty or sixty years ago, a bitter persecution reigned in Madagascar, the truth prospered even more than during times of prosperity. The prayers of Christian in all parts of the earth should therefore again rise for the persecuted church in Madagascar.

Rev. J. E. Flower, of the Congregational Church Aid Society, furnishes the latest illustration of the heathen darkness of some of our villages. The village he speaks of is within 100 miles of London, and has 300 inhabitants. There is a fine church, but the vicar is away, and the service, which is attended by only about twenty persons, is conducted once a week by a stranger. The only other place of worship is a Congregational chapel, which has been closed for three years. One woman to whom Mr. Flower spoke said, "We're like a lot o' heathens here." If a boy goes to church he gets a cuff on the head, and is sent away. There is no Sunday school, no evangelist, no colporteur, no Christian visitor. It would evidently be a good place for some one to spend his summer vacation at, and try to evangelise it. Mr. Flower does not give its name, but letters will find him at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Cardinal Vaughan has given another illustration of the truth that in politics Roman Catholics are expected to be Roman Catholics first and Englishmen next. He sent a letter to the Romish peers anent the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, saying:—

The Holy Father himself directs me to use every influence to induce Catholic members of both Houses of Parliament to take up the defence of the common law of the Church, and to vote against this Bill which attempts to violate it.

We believe that, notwithstanding this "whip" from the Vatican, several Roman Catholic peers voted for the Bill; but that does not touch the point that Rome meddles with governments. A correspondent of The Saturday Review affirms that he has seen in India two Irish regiments composed entirely of Roman Catholics, and in these regiments the priest wields a greater authority than the colonel himself. The priest in the army, the priest in the school, and the priest in Parliament, will give us enough to do.

Dr. Gordon Stables writes to The Echo that his connection with boys' literature brings him every month tales of sorrow and wretchedness that would make angels weep. If fathers and mothers only knew what he knows of "public seminaries, they would rather see their lads dead than expose them to such temptation." Then comes a time of terrible repentance, during which "the poor boys tell their friend the editor things they would not reveal to the kindest parent or doctor." Then the quick steps in, with worse results to health and morals. We shrink from referring specifically to the evils of which Dr. Stables writes with so much feeling, but when we know that his testimony can be only too abundantly confirmed, it is guilty to be silent. We entirely agree with him when he says that it requires united action on the part of teachers, parents, and the Church to carry on war against the things he has mentioned, but, above all, of Parliament and the police. The cry which ought to ring through England is, "Save the boys."

A certain Persian statesman has been informing Rev. H. R. Haweis of a vast underground agitation going on throughout Persian Mussulman populations, of which Europeans can gather but the faintest and vaguest idea. He speaks of it as resting on a new conception of universal religion and morality, incorporating the results of modern progress, but culled severely and built up from the scattered precepts of Islamic tradition. He thinks it probable that "this regenerating movement will spread throughout all Mohammedan lands." To us it seems an expression of dissatisfaction with the traditional faith, and a sign of preparation for the finer teaching of the Gospel. Certainly Mohammedanism will never regenerate itself; and if it receives the thoughts and influences of the new life moving all around it, the new wine will burst the old bottles.

The President of the Royal Academy thinks that the great defect of to-day is the want of reverence. "Until a young man can admire, nay, until he can give homage, there is no hope for him." In America a movement is being initiated for teaching by means of biographies, which must inevitably kindle reverence and respect, two qualities said to be also sadly wanting in American youths and maidens. Something of the same kind might be done in England. Shall we some day see ministers and teachers taking their young people to look upon the places where good men were born or died, and telling them the stories of their lives? Might they not in London form companies to visit the monuments of such men as Tyndale, or take them to see the grave of John Bunyan and Livingstone? Reverence can be cultivated, and reverence founded on intelligence can alone stand the test of these days; it would be an excellent antidote to superstition.

The old superstition that it was possible to transmute worthless substances into gold is after all a true parable of the spiritual life. The story of religion is that of evil transformed into good, of useless power turned into a consecrated channel of service, of faculties and dispositions once working nothing but mischief become a source of holy and beneficent influence. Jesus is the true Alchemist, and the wand whereby He works his miracles on those who give themselves to his hand is grace. "By the grace of God I am what I am," was the humble testimony of Paul, who was once Saul the persecutor, and who used the great powers he had before prostituted to the service of superstition, henceforth in the service of the Saviour. "By the grace of God I am what I am," every true man must say, who has conquered evil habits and smitten the demon of temptation till he has fled from before him, and risen more than conqueror through Him that strengthened him. No man dare say, "This victory is impossible for me," till he has tried what the grace of God can do for him; and when he has tried it, he is in no more danger of saying so, for no man has really tried it in vain.

This discovery of the transmutation of forces, whereby a destructive or mischievous form of energy may be changed into a form that is useful and beneficial, has its analogue in the spiritual world. The aim of the Gospel is not to utterly destroy those qualities that go to the making of a successful man of the world, or the faculties that lie at the foundation of secular progress, but to transform them. Its call to us is, "Be not conformed (fashioned) according to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," and in this transformation scene everything is used for God's glory, which was once used for his dishonour. It is just those things that make a man a great sinner by misuse and misdirection which become the greatest means of grace and usefulness in the kingdom of God. Covetousness becomes glorified when we "covet earnestly the best gifts"; the instinct to hoard grows beautiful when we direct it to the "laying up for ourselves treasures in heaven"; even ambition is a thing of loveliness, if our desire be to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. God can use us all, and use every part of us, in his service; our very individualities and peculiarities may become luminous with a heavenly light.

It is reported in one of our religious papers that at a recent annual meeting of a theological college an eminent preacher, addressing the students, included amongst some excellent advice a recommendation to read/dramatical tragedy in order to study human nature in connection with evil-doing and its penal consequences. Young men are generally sufficiently disposed to indulge in such literature, and to supplement the reading by witnessing the representation. Does not the Bible supply the lessons? One of the evidences of the truthfulness of Scripture is its honesty in exposing the faults of its chief characters. Valuable as other illustrations in general literature may be, none can rival in faithful record of various sins and their penalty, the narratives, threatenings, and judgments of Holy Scripture.

If believers of the most humble kind are to be found among scientists, as Sir J. W. Dawson has been reminding us, they are also to be found among writers of the greatest ability. Mrs. Barrett Browning wrote, in some letters which have recently come to light, "There is only one work which brings salvation, and that is Christ's upon the cross." She believed that "no human being can be saved except the Father draw him, except the Saviour redeem him, except the Holy Spirit list to breathe upon him." Her experience is a corroboration of the experience of thousands of souls who never had the ability to write a line of poetry or prose. She was in the communion of saints, which is infinitely higher than the fellowship of genius.

One of the most pathetic sights in life is the change which takes place in the natural disposition of men under the influence of worldly trial. The cheerful too often become morose; the careless and light-hearted, anxious and fretful; the gentle and kindly, hard and selfish; the humorous, cynical and savage. Something more than natural goodness is needed to resist the action of sin—it is Christ in the heart. Then sweetness remains sweet after it has been tried with ingratitude and baseness; then tenderness is still tender after hard, coarse feet have trampled upon it; then generosity continues to be generous and open after it has been abused and preyed upon; then devoutness burns as bright as ever after the ungodliness and cynicism of the world have sought to quench it. For Jesus never changes. In his own life his disposition was the exemplification of the Sermon on the Mount. We can see no change in it after He has passed through the bitter experiences of a stormy and trying life. It is his love, his life, his Spirit in us which alone can make us like Him.

Paul felt impelled to emphasise his sense of the spiritual relation of Christ to his people even in the first generation of believers, in the words, "Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now know we Him so no more" (2 Cor. v. 16). In this generation the tendency seems to be growing more and more emphatic to elevate the external signs and symbols of religion to an undue prominence, on the plea that they are a help to grasp unseen and spiritual realities; forgetting that they often take the place of these realities, and so degenerate into idolatry of a refined and subtle type. As a matter of fact, history shows conclusively that the highest spirituality has ever been attained by reducing the externalities of religion to their simplest form, and relying on the self-evidencing power of the Holy Spirit. The way to the Presence lies not along the path of ritualism, but of free spontaneous worship and aspiration.

"A proud man is always hard to please, because he hath too great expectations from others," wrote good Richard Baxter. This is one of the most disastrous effects of having an overweening estimate of ourselves; it kills the sentiment of gratitude when favours are done to us, because we take them as a mere instalment of our rights. And it is one of the rewards of humility that it breeds a ready and constant sense of benefit at the kindness and thoughtfulness of others. The humble man is a thankful man, for he expects little, and when much is done for him it comes in the form of a glad surprise. Let us reduce our expectations to their "lowest common denominator," and we have the secret of a happy social life. What we do not get we shall not then miss; and when honour and favour are shown to us, it will be so much beyond our desires, that it will count for many times as much to our feelings, than if we had been looking for them as something due to us.

There may be a corporate as well as an individual selfishness—a family, or civic, or national, or racial selfishness. Many parents will so concentrate their love and regard on their children that they will justify themselves in utter oblivion of all other claims, and treat their servants and their employés with the most thoughtless and cruel rigidity on the false plea that their "first" (but surely not their only) duty is towards their "own." Churches will sometimes refuse to do their duty by outside causes that are perishing for lack of help, on the ground of "home claims," forgetting that the "field is the world," and that there is no line of boundary that can be drawn round the circle of Christian love and benevolence except the line of sheer inability. And it is not too much to say that nearly all the wars and rumours of wars that we hear of are due to a false sense of patriotism clouding over the fact that "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth"; and that the Hottentot and the Matabele, no less than the German, and the Frenchman, and the American, are our brothers. "First things first," certainly; but we are not to forget the ever-widening circle of relationships that bind us to all mankind; and we cannot do our duty to our nearest, unless we also do our duty towards our farthest kin as well.

Work in Villages.

THE manager of Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms at Finsbury-pavement, Mr. Thomas Pettifer, spends every other Sunday in the villages, going from door to door with Gospel tracts and books, seeking to get into conversation with people about Jesus, finding out and visiting sick, infirm, and aged ones. Wherever there is a group of houses he sings a Gospel hymn and addresses the people about the love of Christ.

On one occasion lately when I was with him at this kind of work, we entered a village about one o'clock. Going into the public-house, I found sixteen men and a boy there smoking and drinking. I spoke to the proprietor, and obtained permission to give my tracts and books to his customers. We then stood outside and sang and preached the Gospel.

There was quite a string of boys and girls, and also women, coming and going, with all sorts and sizes of jugs and cups of beer for the afternoon's consumption. A few of them go to church and chapel in the evening, then they meet again in the public-house, and there they stop till a late hour. The wife of one of these drinking men said they were like fish out of water at chapel and church; but when they reached the public-house, they were like fish back into the water. They did their real worship in the public-house.

It is very sad to think that these habits apply every Sunday more or less to the villages of England.

Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, lately invited me to accompany him on two tours amongst the villages situated in three counties. We visited thirty-two villages in all. We carried our tracts and books to every door, and had many conversations with the people. I should think we preached to quite two-thirds of the inhabitants of the thirty-two villages. We met with many cases of blessing as the result of labours in bygone days. I met with several souls recently converted through Mr. Heley's visits. We fell in with the navvies engaged in making the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway. A roughish lot of men they are, but God's Gospel is able to alter the shape of them, and to fit them for the King's Palace.

We finished one of our tours by preaching in front of two notorious public-houses on the Sunday evening, where hundreds of people resort. We were pushed about a bit at first, but I feel sure some were greatly moved and blessed. J. J.

Woolwich Tabernacle.

THIS structure, erected in connection with the earnest Gospel ministry of Rev. John Wilson, has recently been opened by a series of special sermons and services. Many well-known ministerial brethren have shown their sympathy by preaching in the new hall; among them were Pastors Thomas Spurgeon, A. G. Brown, J. G. Greenbough, W. Cuff, and H. D. Brown, of Dublin, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. J. G. Rogers, Rev. A. Connell, etc.

The interest in the opening services has never flagged. Up to Sunday last they had brought in about £1400 towards the outstanding debt, and it is hoped to collect another £100 this week. On Sunday last the pastor preached; the Tabernacle was well filled in the morning, and in the evening it was crowded before 6.30. There is a spirit of inquiry and a widespread feeling of sympathy in the district. Numbers of working men in the Arsenal and Siemens' factory have contributed to the building fund. All the local papers have written and reported most favourably on the work.

Unity Perfected in Glory.*

By PRINCIPAL H. C. G. MOULE.

I HAVE been led to the Epistle to the Ephesians almost of necessity, for it is an epistle full of the Church and full of the glory of God, present and to come. The apostle was guided, when writing to the Ephesians, to views of the Church at once profound, simple and eternal. He speaks of the Church in its most transcendent aspects, while he brings down to the details of daily life the meaning which those aspects bear to the Christian here. In the opening chapters he speaks of the Church as representing the glory of God to the principalities and powers in the heavens. In another passage the apostle speaks of the Church as destined to fulfil this function for ever and ever; in the ages to come God is going to show what his grace is, in its glorious manifestations, in his kindness toward us in Jesus Christ. The Epistle to the Ephesians regards the Church in this glorious ideal. It does not forget the outward, the visible, and the organised, but it also soars on eagle's wings into the highest heavens, in the glory of eternity. Keeping in view this general character of the Epistle, let us look briefly at two passages kindred and connected, and yet quite distinct. The connecting point is the thought of a dwelling prepared for a Divine indweller; the thought of a house and its inhabitant; the thought, not of a lodging, but a home for continuous residence, prepared for one infinitely worthy to occupy and to fill it. The divergent aspects of the two passages, if I read them aright, are these—that one specially looks to the Christian in his personal and individual life now, and the other to the Church of living members in glorious union hereafter.

The first passage is chapter iii. 17: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." The Greek word used here distinctly emphasises the thought of a permanent residence—that Christ may be a permanent dweller in our hearts; not a wayfarer, turning aside for a night; not a pilgrim, passing on with the morning, but a Master at home, and welcome to be always there. That is evidently meant to be our personal experience—Christ in us now; not merely largely or generally, but in our hearts, in the centre of our being, at the spring of thought and will. That is meant to be of the Christian man. Never let our ideal sink below that in our efforts towards its realisation.

THE PERMANENT CONDITION

In the other passage, at the close of chap. ii. the apostle leads us onward, as I take it, to the eternal future of that developed glory. Rendering it as literally as I can, I would put it thus, "Getting fitted together, as growing into an holy sanctuary in the Lord, in whom ye also are being builded together to form a permanent abode of God in the Spirit." Here, again, we have the same idea of a permanent abode. The verb used at the end of the third chapter is responded to by the noun in chap. ii.—Christ a permanent dweller in the miniature temple of the believer's heart now; God a permanent dweller in the completed, harmonised, and fully inaugurated sanctuary then.

Here is set before us a magnificent aspect of the prospect of the perfection of the unity of the true Church in glory. There will no longer be the need—as I dare to say, in spite of many recent denials, there is an absolute need now—to distinguish the visible from the invisible. Visible then to all the universe will be the reality of the ideal Church, of the Body of the Lord. It will be completed as a Church, and its unity will be completed and perfected. In the matter of unity we have here continually to define and to explain, to apologise, and to reserve. There are senses in which, without any reserve, or any apology, we are all heart and soul in the thought of union. But we have to remember that, as regards organization and mutual relation, union is not yet brought to its glorious completeness. There this completeness will have been accomplished. There will be one flock as well as one Shepherd. There will be then on the part of every one of the innumerable members of the one Body, manifest, energetic, and perfect co-operation to one eternal end, the glory of God.

The message which this specially brings to us seems to me to be this—the recollection of why the Church in its highest sense is being builded together; why there needs to enter into the thought of the growth of Christianity in the world, this thought of

THE CONTINUAL GROWTH AND COHESION

of the Christian body, for a purpose. It is not being fortuitously collected; it is not being constructed as a curiosity or a mosaic. It is being raised and builded into a sanctuary; and that sanctuary is being constructed against the great and wonderful inauguration time when into it shall come the manifested Shekinah of the Eternal Presence, who shall make it his ultimate abode, and irradiate it with his final glory, and shine out from it to all the universe that needs his light.

The Church is being constructed for glory, in order that it may for ever serve the purposes of God. It will be, not only to rest, to rejoice, to tune the eternal anthem; it will be still and always to work for Him, as a body works for a mind. It will be for ever and only at his disposal as the abode of his glory, the fountain from which it shall flow forth, the vehicle which shall dispense its blessings, the body whose limbs shall be eternally ready to move at the slightest impulse of the Head. We do not know what these uses will be. We had much better wait till the day comes before we speculate much about them. But let us fix deep in our hearts the blessed thought and expectation that as a completed Church of God, in its unity, its perfect order, its absolute centralisation, its faultless harmony, we have before us no otiose eternity. We shall be for ever resting that we may for ever serve day and night in his temple.

What is the practical application of all this? There is nothing told us in the Bible about the future life of the blessed, merely to satisfy curiosity, or to please the imagination. It is all for holiness and for life. So I turn back for a moment and ask how we may best prepare, each in our place, for this great perfection of the unity of the Church in glory. We may do it in a hundred secondary ways; but, above all, by studying with anxious, loving, daily care to live a life of holy love towards all who name the name of Christ, with whom, in the remotest way, we may be brought in contact; by avoiding, even toward those from whom we most differ, the word, the accent, the tone, the manner, that is not in harmony with the life of God. We need to strive, according to Eph. iii. 17, with a great and constant eagerness that Christ shall be a permanent resident in our hearts by faith—not vaguely, but in our hearts; remembering that the multitude is made of units, that the temple is built of stones, and that not one can be admitted into the structure of the great Sanctuary that has not been first a miniature and microcosm of the Sanctuary itself. Let us covet the Lord's indwelling, as a Master always at home in our hearts, by faith. So we shall be in our lives all converging to that wonderful centre—a habitation of God in the Spirit.

I repeat it, there are numberless secondary means and ways, but this must be the secret and fountain of them all. It is in Christ in the heart that we find the hope of the glory in which God will now irradiate the believer and the Church. What brighter, more blessed, and more practical stimulus can life have than that by Christ's power in me over the little things of to-day, I may contribute to the structure in which eternity and its inhabitants shall see, with wonder, and with joy, and with ever-growing knowledge of what God is Himself, a Church transfigured into his endless dwelling by the Spirit? So be it.

By REV. F. W. MACDONALD.

Like the previous speaker, I have felt myself driven to the Epistle to the Ephesians in preparing a few thoughts for this meeting. I will read some words in chapter v. 25, "Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it." We must give to the word "Church" there the widest, largest significance it bears. It stands for all it can stand for in its most august and complete meaning. Just as it would be impossible in translating the great verse, "God so loved the world," etc., to reduce the meaning of the word "world" to any races, tribes, or nations, so it is impossible to narrow the limit of the term "Church" to any of the communities or organisations of those who call Jesus Lord. And it is not quite the same thing as though Paul had written, "Christ loves the Church," graciously true as that is. The love of Christ for his Church is its perpetual endowment. But the Apostle's thought here is not moving within the sphere of time and history. Christ loved the Church before the foundation of the world. We have here, in fact, one more instance of that most mysterious, yet unspeakably precious, representation of our redemption with which the New Testament, and pre-eminently the writings of Paul, would make us familiar. Christ was crucified under Pontius Pilate, but he was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. As believers we were chosen in Christ before the Church was born. I do not think that any commentator or theologian is able perfectly and adequately to co-ordinate this aspect of the mystery of redemption with other aspects of it. It is revealed to be recognized; to minister to humility, to reverence and awe; to help us out of little narrow prudential ideas, into the region where angels veil their faces and cry, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God Almighty."

That love of Christ brought the Church into existence. The Apostle says, He "gave Himself for it." What does that term cover? The mystery of the Incarnation, the ministry, the service, the death upon the cross, resurrection, ascension, session at the right hand of God, all his mediatorial ministry. He gave Himself for it. His love for the Church was not kindled in Him by the sight of its actual qualities; something deeper, Diviner, far more mystic than that. He called his Church into being

TO ANSWER THE DESIRE OF HIS OWN HEART. The Church then rises into being out of the sacrifice of Christ. We do not find the word "self-sacrifice," just as it stands literally, in our English New Testament; but we need not be afraid to say that the world was redeemed by self-sacrifice.

And the goal for which Christ has loved his Church is, that He may present it to Himself a glorious Church. We might perhaps not unreasonably have expected that the Church, the object of the Redeemer's eternal love and choice, would have sprung into existence, clothed from the first with its beauty, radiant from its birth with all its destined glory. We might have argued that a Church purchased thus by the blood of Christ must in every feature correspond to the cost of its ransom, and show itself indisputably and unmistakably the glorious thing He desired it to be. So we might reason if we were reasoning in the air—the region where a good deal of our reasoning is carried on. When we turn to the New Testament and to the history of Christ's Church, we see at once that it was not so. When the Church was born it no more resembled a glorious Church, without spot, wrinkle, blemish, or any such thing, than the puling infant resembles the stalwart man or the beautiful woman. The Church of Christ has never answered to its ideal. We are here to-day members of many churches—English, French, German, Scandinavian, American. We are Anglicans, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, and so forth. Not one of us is here to apologise for his church; and not one of our churches is unworthy of our loyalty, our love, and our service. But there is not one of them that answers to the ideal, or forms a fit and adequate object for our devotion and admiration to rest upon. Some persons seek to secure for themselves delight and satisfaction in their own church by cultivating their churchmanship to such a pitch and point of exclusive devotion as shall give them the satisfaction they long for. I do not think it is by an intensive denominationalism that the yearnings of the churches can be gratified. Those of us who are engaged in their service, and who have to do with organisation and ministrations of many kinds, know full well their limits and inequalities, inconsistencies, shortcomings, and imperfections. To hide such facts from ourselves would not be for our health or happiness. The Jerusalem that now is in bondage; but it is in the charter of her existence that she shall one day be presented to her Lord a glorious Church.

* Notes of addresses at Mildmay on Thursday evening, July.

IN WHAT DOES THAT GLORY CONSIST?

For the full answer we must wait. There is room for devout imagining, but no man can give a full explanation of what the glory of the Church shall then be. Every now and again, amidst all that is common-place, there are flashes of that glory in the character of men and women, in the movements of the Spirit. Every Christian who is living in loving, true communion with his fellow Christians, feels that Christ is in his Church, and that there are already intimations of moral and spiritual glory in that Church. But between these beginnings and the final fulfilment there is scope and room for reverent thought. Presented to Himself without spot or wrinkle or blemish, or any such thing. The age of ingenious commentating and commentators has gone by. No one is likely now to explain the "wrinkle or spot" as a good old English commentator did when he spoke of the wrinkle as being original sin in us, and the spot as personal transgression. We do not get very far forward by ingenuity of that kind. But the Church of Christ, which is now witnessing, and over which the hands of the Redeemer are now spread in ceaseless protection and intercession, shall one day put on her beautiful garments, in a sense of which the beautiful garments of her militant career are but little rehearsals and beginnings. This glory of the Church will not be the crowning process of an evolution, but the vindication of an act of redemption. So we may patiently put up—I do not say with our own infirmities; let us cultivate a holy impatience with them but we may put up—with the obvious imperfections of the whole ecclesiastical area. We have this treasure in earthen vessels, but we are moving forward to a culmination of Christ's gracious ministry and guidance, and we shall share, through his infinite grace, in the manifestation of the sons of God.

Then let our songs abound,
Let every tear be dry;
We're marching through Immanuel's land,
To fairer worlds on high.

By DR. MONRO GIBSON.

The word "glory" is a very familiar one in Christian speech, and rightly so. But it is to be feared that sufficient care is not always taken to keep it up to its highest meaning. We are so apt to vulgarise the very words of Christ Himself; to drag them down from the pure atmosphere of his life and thought to the fogs, and damps, and malaria of the lower levels on which we live the most part of our lives. Is it not the case that there are many Christian people, who, when they think of the glory which Christ promises, rise scarcely any higher than a conception of material magnificence. They stop at the streets of gold, the gates of pearl, without passing on to the great spiritual realities of which these are intended to be the symbols. When they speak of going to glory, or meeting one another in glory, they have in their minds little more than the splendour of gorgeousness—

A KIND OF ETHEREAL LUXURIOUSNESS, which is about as far removed from our Lord's ideas of glory as anything could well be. We must remember that though Christ used the words of ordinary speech, or He could not have been understood at all, He, nevertheless, had to lift them up out of their grosser meanings, to baptize and consecrate them to the service of his kingdom. Therefore when we seek to get at the significance of such a word as "glory" we must not content ourselves with its dictionary use, or its vulgar meaning. We must carefully study how Christ used it, and how He expects us to understand it.

At the beginning of his ministry He uses it very little, and when He does it is to depreciate rather than to exalt. "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." If He had made glory a prominent thought in his early teaching, with the ideas on it then current He would have excited desires and stimulated ambitions, the very reverse of those He wished to encourage; so He keeps the idea in the background, until He has wrought out in his life

A TRUE CONCEPTION OF IT.

It is at the close of his ministry that for the first time the Lord brings the thought of glory into prominence; and He does it in such a way as to set the disciples to the study of his life, in order to discover the meaning of it. "The glory which Thou hast given Me, I have given them." It was a glory different from anything which eye could see or ear could hear, or the natural mind could even imagine. The words which follow are still further helpful in leading our minds in the right direction. "That they may be one even as We are one." Thou in Me and I in Thee. These words show the true nature of the Church's unity, but on that I do not dwell, as it has been dealt with already. We see here that our Lord finds the glory of his life in the Divine indwelling. "Thou in Me." And the same glory is to be ours. "I in them." It is the inner invisible glory of the Spirit—the Spirit of Christ in the lives of men.

That Spirit, remember, is, above all, the Spirit of the Cross. The whole intercessory prayer from which these words are taken was offered with the Cross full in view. In our Saviour's mind the thought of glory and of the Cross lay always very close together. It was so in his answer to James and John when they came with the request that they might share in his glory. So also in John xii. when certain Greeks expressed a wish to see Him: "The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." In other passages, too, we find that it was the Cross—glory; the Cross—glory. "Little children, yet a little while, I am with you." The Cross again. "A new commandment I give you, that ye love one another as I have loved you." Love to the point of self-sacrifice. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples: if ye have love one to another."

Thus we see what our Lord meant by glory—what was glory to Him and what ought to be glory to his disciples, and what will enter into the glory still when they are perfected into one. There is first the Divine presence in the life of man—"Thou in Me," his glory; "I in them," our glory.

Then as a direct and necessary consequence of this, in a world of sin and sorrow,

THE GLORY OF SELF-SACRIFICING DEVOTION.

If God is in us we cannot be selfish. It is unselfish devotion in the life of Christ's disciples that will at last compel the world to believe in Him and to gather lovingly around Him as the Son of God.

These are evidently the main thoughts in the mind of the Master when He says, "The glory which Thou hast given Me I have given them." He was about to send his disciples to bear their cross. Sometimes we think it a great thing for a believer to be taken away from the cross to the glory of heaven. Was it not a greater thing to keep them out of heaven in order to go and bear their cross for Him in the world? "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world." If they had been taken to heaven they would have missed altogether the bearing of the cross, the doing of something to bring the ransomed home. And when He proceeds in his prayer to speak of the heavenly glory—"Father, I will that they whom Thou hast given Me may be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory which Thou has given Me"—

—He gives no indication that the meaning of the word is changed. If in the one case He means the glory of love as shining in the sacrifice of the Cross, gathering his people round Him in blessed unity and in the spirit of consecration, have we any right to suppose that in the next verse He means the glory of magnificence and splendour? Certainly not. That there will be magnificence and splendour in heaven I make not the slightest doubt; but that magnificence and splendour shall constitute the glory of heaven I do not for one moment believe. There, as here, the glory that excelleth will be the glory of holiness, and the glory of love. Even there that exultant cry of the great apostle will not be obsolete: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Having quoted from Dante's vision a passage referring to the crucifixion glory of Christ, Dr. Gibson closed an impressive address by reciting with pathetic emphasis the words of John the Seer, as recorded in Rev. v.—

I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders stood a Lamb, as it had been slain.....

And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the living creatures and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

There is the unity of the Church, and of the whole creation, perfected in glory.

Not Forgotten.

Isaiah xlv. 21.

Is thy life very lonely and sadden'd?

Jesus tenderly speaketh to thee;

By his beautiful promise be gladden'd:

"Thou shalt not be forgotten of Me."

Is thy need for to-day great and pressing,

And no human supply left to thee?

Oh, depend on the words rich with blessing:

"Thou shalt not be forgotten of Me."

In much weakness and pain dost thou languish?

'Tis in love that He chasteneth thee;

Still, thine ear his dear voice can distinguish:

"Thou shalt not be forgotten of Me."

Do thy feet near the brink of the river?

Thy way through does the Lord guarantee,

While He whispers more sweetly than ever:

"Thou shalt not be forgotten of Me."

CLARA ST. CLARE.

Letters from S. Africa.—26.

ONE of the many ways in which the Rev. Andrew Murray has served his generation according to the will of God is seen in the fact that the seminary at Wellington has sent out 500 teachers all over South Africa. Between Wellington and Capetown is founded in 1679 by Governor Van der Stell. It is surrounded by a fine fruit-growing country, and is the chief educational centre in South Africa of the Dutch Reformed Church. It is from many points of view an exceedingly interesting locality. In 1880 the first stone of a new college building was laid. It was formally inaugurated in the year of the Queen's Jubilee, and then received the name of Victoria College.

STELLENBOSCH,

The following piece of information interests me much, gleaned from an article on "Stellenbosch" in The Cape Illustrated Magazine :—

There seems to have been some attempt made about 1798 and 1799 to instruct the slaves. Whether the movement was made by the authorities of the Dutch Church we have no record. From the extract given below from Mr. Borchers' Memoirs, it would appear as if it were a private effort, though, from the position of affairs, at least it must have been with the tacit approval of the Dutch Church authorities.

Mr. Borchers writes:—"Though some of the slaves in and about the village were in the habit of spending their Sabbath in working in their gardens or in other labour, yet there were at Stellenbosch several who attended a meeting held for their instruction in the afternoon or evening of each Sunday, by a Mr. Johan Nicholas Desch." All honour to the memory of this man, and his name ought to be recorded.

Mr. Borchers proceeds:—"They, that is, the slaves, were also admitted into church, and some regularly attended service." The coloured people had their seats apart from the rest of the congregation, and alongside the pulpit.

No further provision appears to have been made for the spiritual instruction of the slaves and coloured people until 1824, when a schoolroom and church were built by subscription, and solemnly opened on the 5th of February, the then Governor, Lord Charles Somerset, and the authorities of the village, being present.

Johan Nicholas Desch was not only then before his time; he would have been before his time had he lived to-day.

I passed two pleasant and profitable days at Stellenbosch, from Saturday to Monday, as the guest of Professor Marais, the president of the College. Rev. J. Neethling presides over the large and important congregation of the D. R. Church. Mrs. Neethling is a sister of Rev. Andrew Murray. The whole Murray family has proved one of God's good gifts to South Africa.

Professor Marais took me to Peniel, a missionary station at a few hours' distance, superintended by Pastor and Mrs. Stegman. A lovely drive, the place more easy of access than some other mission stations; well worth visiting.

The wine farmers pay their coloured labourers at the time of vintage ninepence a day, with wine six times a day. I heard of one who could not get workers because he offered a shilling a day and wine only three times. But the testimony was that the best labourers are those who take no wine. On the voyage home was a wealthy farmer, who grows grapes and makes wine and brandy, but drinks neither himself.

I was told in Capetown that farmers did not care to compete for prizes for raisins; it paid them better to make brandy. One of the judges said that no sample of raisins had been sent in for the recent exhibition which was worthy of more than a prize of the third rank. The women take to drinking liquor. I saw some shocking exhibitions of drunkenness among coloured women in Capetown.

THE INDIAN COOLIES IN NATAL.

I am indebted for the following information to Rev. Frederick Mason, of Durban:—

"In 1862, very soon after the coolies were introduced into Natal, the late Rev. R. Stott was sent out by the Wesleyan Missionary Society to labour amongst them. He carried on the work for eighteen years, and it has since been continued by his son. More recently, the Episcopalians established a mission to the Indians, to which Rev. Dr. Booth has devoted himself with great ability and zeal. For several years the Salvation Army has had an Indian department in Durban and its neighbourhood. At Durban, Verulam, Pietermaritzburg, and elsewhere, there are regular Indian congregations, and frequent services are held on sugar estates and in various other places. Many schools are maintained under missionary direction. Two or three Indian ministers are employed, beside a considerable number of teachers and other agents. Spiritual success may not be all that is desired, but there is diligent toil and wide sowing of Divine seed."

THE ORANGE FREE STATE.

An "Afrikander" in the Orange Free State writes:—"It is true that in the Free State, for divers reasons, native schools (with a single exception) receive no State support, but neither the Government nor individuals ever interfere where whites or native teachers undertake the arduous duty to educate the Kaffir. An English missionary of experience, at a conference in Johannesburg, asserted that the opposition by the Dutch to missionary effort, was more an error of the head than of the heart, he having known Dutch women, who never employed native labourers but taught them [without teaching them?] to read. To further prove that the welfare of the Kaffir is not disregarded by the Dutch, I may say that in the Free State, with a few exceptions, every Dutch Reformed congregation has its own native church, to the support of which, both as regards spiritual teaching and material help, the Dutch mainly contribute. These native churches have, besides a membership of 3000, numerous night and day schools. In my own employ I have a boy just now who, besides his native tongue, reads English well, and my wife sets apart an occasional half-hour for his further instruction.

"After a long residence in this country one would, with 'Ina Wooley,' 'strenuously object to any (further) association whatever with the natives' of South Africa; and my calm and deliberate opinion is that the Free State Government, after years of experience, deals, in spite of views to the contrary cherished in other quarters, with the natives in a way worthy of imitation. For instance, drink is withheld from them to prevent moral suicide. Natives cannot be controlled or governed from a distance. To be amongst them, to be daily dealing with them, must needs cause a change of view. Visitors even with the best intentions, will not alter the case in favour of the black, but will only run the risk of causing a further breach between the Afrikander and the foreigner, and create misunderstanding between Christians here and Christians across the water, especially when their communications are fraught with misrepresentations.

"Let me, in conclusion, say that the reading of THE CHRISTIAN for eleven years has brought distinct blessing, and that the above communication is destined to unite more closely members of one body living in different countries."

All honour to the Free State for debarring (so far as legislation can do it) drink from the natives. Would that it were done everywhere in Africa! But while "Afrikander," like the lady whom he quotes, "strenuously objects to any (further) association whatever with the natives" of S.A., I suppose I am not singular in saying that I have met some "natives" there, with whom I would far rather associate than with some white people whom I have met in England and in Africa.

A SIDE-LIGHT ON RHODESIAN TROUBLES.

In The Fortnightly Review for July "Olive Schreiner" speaks very highly as to the virtues of the Bantu women, adding in an ominous footnote, written in 1896:—

We are not referring to that which takes place when Englishmen, untrammelled by any public opinion or by British rule, are absolutely dominant over a crushed native race as in the territories north of the Limpopo to-day.

On which The Review of Reviews remarks:—

Great are the misfortunes of Rhodesia at the present moment, but if what "Olive Schreiner" implies be true, then for the first time there would seem to be some reason for the afflictions of the Rhodesians.

"For the first time"? What then is the testimony of the South Sea Islands, of India, of Burmah, of China, and of every other country, where the Englishman has left his trail? What of American slavery? What of Dutch slavery in South Africa? "Olive Schreiner" says that "Slavery bequeathed to the Boer, and to South Africa, through him mainly, its large half-caste population...the most painful, the most complex, and...the most insoluble portion of our South African problem." From this point of view might not the cases reasonably be reversed, and the natives "strenuously object to any further association whatever with the" whites? R. COPE MORGAN.

A Manchester Mission.

THE eighth annual report of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Methodist Mission describes in detail an all-round work—evangelistic and social. An extract from the introduction will afford some idea of the actual condition of things:—

"To the casual visitor, the membership of the several branches may present a surface of respectability; and if the visitor should penetrate below the surface and look in upon the people in their homes or in their daily employments, he would see in their thrift and sobriety and orderliness evidences that they were rising in the social scale. But if he could at the same time see the rock from which these same members were hewn and the hole of the pit from which they were dug, he would understand how true it is that this is a mission to the lost.

"For this reason the Mission is compelled to interweave with its evangelism a large amount of social work. The Central Hall congregations on Sunday afternoons and evenings afford ample proof that social elevation must be part of the task imposed. The men who crowded the morning chapel and one large section of the Hall gallery every Sunday afternoon last winter were at the far end of everything, except rags and wretchedness. Six or seven hundred of these unemployed men received a cup of tea and a piece of bread every Sunday afternoon before the services. At the Free Trade Hall the vast congregations which gather every Sunday night may not at first sight convey the same impression of social depression; yet, underneath the appearance of comfort and respectability, there is, as the workers know only too well, a vast amount of sorrow and suffering which cannot be relieved by the Gospel only, unless, indeed, one may regard the Gospel as inclusive of the saving message and the healing miracle. But cross the road to the Grand Theatre any Sunday night during the depth of winter, and again, as at the Central Hall and at Great Bridgewater-street and Daniel-street, the sight tells its own tale. No one would dream of attempting to deal with the people there gathered unless he was prepared not only to appeal to their consciences, but also to wrestle with their social condition.

"In its social work, the Manchester Mission is daily benefiting by its large experience. It is learning how to deal effectually with appalling demoralisation without destroying such traces of self-helpfulness as may survive. Many will be astonished to learn that the rent and taxes for the Labour Home and the Casual Ward, with all costs for food, coal, and gas, and also the expenses incurred at the labour yard, have all been met, and a little more than met, during the year, by the profits on the sale of firewood and the payments of the men. The spiritual work of the Mission has steadily prospered. To understand the full significance of the returns, it must be remembered that the standard of church membership is abnormally high, that the discipline is strict, and that losses from removal into better neighbourhoods are very numerous."

The report is amply illustrated. Communications regarding the work should be addressed to Rev. S. F. Collier, Central Hall, Oldham-street, Manchester.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 26.

"HE SET UP THE PILLARS BEFORE THE TEMPLE...
JACHIN AND BOAZ."—2 Chron. iii. 17.

THE meaning of these names is significant, He shall establish, and in it is strength. Each speaks of Him of whom the whole temple was a type. The Lord Jesus has established the work of redemption so that it shall never be removed; has established the covenant, ordered in all things and sure; has established his Church, so that the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it; has established us before the face of his Father for evermore.

There is much in the New Testament about the established life. It is the desire of Peter that the scattered saints should be perfected, established, and strengthened. Paul desires to see the Roman Christians, that he might impart some spiritual gift so that they might be established: he desires that the Colossians might be built up in Christ, and established in the faith. The Epistle to the Hebrews says that it is good for the heart to be established with grace. Let us ask that Jesus should establish us in the divine life, rooting and grounding us in love and faith, so that we may not be moved away from the faith, but may abound therein with thanksgiving.

The established life, however, must be based on something more than earnest resolutions and determinations. We must abide in Him; it is only as we do so that we shall become steadfast, and unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

But Christ is also our strong Helper. We have no strength of our own, but He is strong, and in Him we have righteousness and strength. Let us make our refuge in Him, as the conies, who are a feeble folk, do in the rock. They who abide in Jesus derive from Him fresh supplies of strength for each moment's need. They hear Him saying, "Fear not, I will strengthen, yea, I will help thee," and they realise that all things are possible to him that believeth.

MONDAY, July 27.

"THE WEIGHT COULD NOT BE FOUND OUT."—2 Chron. iv. 18.

This was as it should be. There was no attempt to keep an accurate account of what was given to the service of God. Even Solomon's left hand did not know what his right hand did. There is a tendency in all of us to keep a strict account of what we give to God. We note it down in our ledgers; we observe certain bounds in our service to Him, but the loftiest form of devotion overleaps such calculation.

This liberality of the people reminds us of Mary's. She never thought of the great cost of the most precious spikenard which she broke over the Master's person. "It was her joy to give her all; and it was only when Judas came on the scene, that we learn how many hundred pence it was worth. Thus the churches of Macedonia abounded from their deep poverty unto the riches of their liberality; so that, beyond their power, they gave to the cause of God.

This overflowing generosity is the reflection of God's. There is no measure in his bounty. It is heaped up, pressed down, and running over. He never says, I will give up to a certain amount, and hold my hand, but He continues to give like the overflows of the river of Egypt, or the abundance of the spring flowers, which cover the earth as with a carpet. Ah! what a God is ours, who loves with a love that passeth knowledge. How truly may we say with the psalmist, "Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works that Thou hast done, and the thoughts that are to us-ward. They cannot be reckoned up unto Thee, they are more than can be numbered."

[556]

TUESDAY, July 23.

"THEN THE HOUSE WAS FILLED WITH A CLOUD."—
2 Chron. v. 13.

This was the bright Shckinah cloud, the symbol of the Divine Presence, which had shone for Moses in the bush, and led the march through the desert. It was as though God had found a rest. And as it settled upon the Most Holy Place, it was as though God said, This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it.

The Most Holy Place is the symbol of our spirit, meant to be the abiding-place and home of God, and shall we not invite the blessed Shckinah cloud to enter thither, addressing it in the words of the Psalm, "Arise, O Lord, into thy resting-place, Thou and the ark of thy strength." Because where He comes to abide He abundantly blesses the provision, and satisfies the poor with bread, He clothes his priests with salvation, and makes his saints shout aloud for joy. He erects the horn of strength and prepares the lamp of light. What were the conditions of this incoming:—

First, UNITY.—"The trumpeters and singers were as one." We must put away strife, divisions, variance, and evil-speaking. Our heart and life must be full of love. When they were with one accord, in one place, the Spirit descended.

Second, HEARTINESS.—"They lifted up their voice." There was every symptom of sincerity and fervour.

Third, THANKSGIVING AND PRAISE.—"They praised the Lord, saying, He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever." No refrain occurs oftener in the Bible than this. Twenty-six times in one Psalm. It is a lovely expression of the heart's joy and rest in God. Let us sing it in our darkest, as well as gladdest hours, full of trust, thanksgiving, and praise, and to us also the golden cloud shall descend.

WEDNESDAY, July 29.

"WHEN THOU TEACHEST THEM THE GOOD WAY WHEREIN THEY SHOULD WALK."—2 Chron. vi. 27.

This sentence is exactly parallel with the previous one, When Thou dost afflict them. The obvious meaning then is, that God sometimes taught Israel the good way wherein they should walk, by afflicting them and shutting up the heaven so that there was no rain. This was notably the case in the days of Elijah. Possibly, these words were in his heart, when he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not for the space of three years and six months. Perhaps the noble prophet felt that in no other way could the people be brought back to their senses, and reconciled to God, except by learning the futility and misery of idol-worship. Therefore, he asked God to teach them the good way, by shutting up the bad one.

What a lesson for ourselves; often God teaches us by bitter disappointment and pain. All our familiar paths are barricaded by thorns, our familiar hiding-places are blocked up, our fountains are poisoned, and all our pleasant things are laid waste. We sometimes suppose that this is in wrath; may it not rather be in love? God is teaching us the good by showing to us the evil; is urging us to tread in the pleasant ways of wisdom, by allowing us to prove the sharp flints and thorns of transgression. Then Ephraim bemoans himself thus: Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a calf unaccustomed to the yoke: turn Thou me, and I shall be turned. Then the soul cries, I will go and return to my first husband, for then was it better with me than now.

Sit in God's school, and learn from his Word and Spirit, that He may not be compelled to have recourse to such severe measures as these.

THURSDAY, July 30.

"WHEN SOLOMON HAD MADE AN END OF PRAYING, THE FIRE CAME DOWN FROM HEAVEN AND CONSUMED THE BURNT-OFFERING."—2 Chron. vii. 1.

It was a very gracious and immediate response to the prayer of King and people. If we make room for God, He always comes and fills. If we seek Him, He is instantly with us. Directly the soul confesses, it is forgiven; or consecrates itself, it is accepted; or claims deliverance from the power of sin, it is cleansed. Do you want the Lord to come to you? His glory will at once begin to shine in on you, to grow and enlighten you for evermore.

The fire stands for the Divine Presence. Oh, to have always a consciousness of it! Nothing would so soon arrest and destroy the impurity and evil within, as sunshine does fungus-growth. We are told that the fire was always to be kept burning on the altar: it was never to go out. Thus, we should always perpetuate and practise the will of God, feeding the fire with the fuel of prayer and meditation.

Fire also stands for the Divine Purity. As the Plague of London was stamped out by the great Fire which destroyed the nests where it had bred, and as the furnace rids the ore of dross, so the Holy Spirit in thy heart and mine is a guarantee of holiness and righteousness all our days.

Fire also stands for Divine Fellowship. It consumed that part of the offering which was placed on the altar, and it seemed as if the Divine nature was therefore feeding upon the sacrifice, whilst the remainder of it was consumed by the offerer. Thus, also, we have communion with God, as we eat the bread, and drink the wine, in the Lord's Supper. We feed on Christ in adoration, faith, and identification. God feeds on the completeness of his obedience, and the glory of his character. Thus we have fellowship with the Father and the Son, by the Holy Ghost.

FRIDAY, July 31.

"MY WIFE SHALL NOT DWELL IN THE HOUSE OF DAVID KING OF ISRAEL, BECAUSE THE PLACES ARE HOLY, WHEREUNTO THE ARK OF GOD HATH COME."—2 Chron. viii. 11.

What a fatal admission! She was the daughter of Pharaoh, and therefore it was no doubt considered a splendid match for the young king; and yet she could not dwell within the precincts of the old city of David, hallowed by the presence of the ark. "He brought her out of the city of David, into the house that he had built for her." So from the very outset there was division of interests, making way no doubt for much of the waywardness of Solomon's character in after life, so that we are told "his wives turned away his heart."

One of the first questions that youth and maiden should put in considering the question of marriage is, whether there could be perfect sympathy in the best and deepest things.

The blessedness of the marriage tie depends on whether the twain are one in spirit, in a common love for Christ, and endeavour for his glory. Nothing is more terrible than when either admits in the secrecy of the heart, concerning the other, My husband or my wife cannot accompany me into the holy places where I was reared, and in which my best life finds its home.

All friendship should follow the same law. We must abide together in the secret place of the Most High, if our friends and we are to be friends indeed. All places may be made holy when the Ark of God's covenants comes. Where it goes, love may safely follow; but woe to the love that cannot. Its inability proves its lack of elements of permanence and perfect satisfaction.

SATURDAY, August 1.

"SHE CAME TO PROVE SOLOMON WITH HARD QUESTIONS."—2 Chron. ix. 1.

She came to the right place, for Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in wisdom, and all the kings of the earth sought his presence, to hear the wisdom that God had put into his heart. Bring your hard questions to Christ. Though He speak no audible word, He is greater than Solomon. To Him is given riches and wisdom, and He is made unto us wisdom. Before the touch of his light the darkest perplexities must resolve themselves.

She came in the right spirit, bringing him gold and spices and precious stones. Those who would get from Christ must be willing to give to Him. There must be a reciprocity, and if we hope to receive from Him from those infinite stores of which He has the key, we must count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, and must be prepared to count them as refuse if only we may win Him.

She came to a right conclusion. He answered all her questions, and she returned congratulating his servants and blessing God. To each of us life is full of perplexities, to which we can find no solution, however much we strain our eyes and weary our minds. But away there in the light Christ stands, with the perfect plan of every maze in his possession, with a key for every riddle, and solution for every enigma. Wait patiently. Each tough knot will be untied, and there will come into our hearts a radiance, a bounding joy like that with which the Queen of Sheba turned to go to her own home. The half of the greatness of thy wisdom, O Christ, can never be told.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

My Thoughts.*

Psalm cxxxix. 23.

THERE is something that we do all day long, and sometimes at night too, besides breathing, and that is thinking. Our thoughts are always busy. Have you ever been into a factory for weaving cloth, and watched the shuttles going to and fro, never standing still? So it is with our thoughts. How little we think of this, and yet our thoughts make us what we are. "As a man thinketh, so is he."

Our thoughts, then, are of great importance. All that we do we can trace back to a thought, just in the same way that we can trace back a river, going along its banks, as it gradually gets narrower and less until we come to the spring from which it began to flow. Our brain is the origin of everything. The beautiful things we see in art, and all the clever inventions, and the many useful machines all began with a thought.

We must always remember that God knows our thoughts, knows our bad thoughts, which are often like sparks that lead to a destructive fire. Peter said to Simon, "Pray God that the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Our thoughts are known to Jesus. Have you noticed how often we read in the Gospels, "Jesus knew their thoughts"?

Now we come to the thoughts themselves. Wandering thoughts specially trouble us when we kneel down to pray. They are like the birds that came down on Abram's sacrifice. God hears our thoughts when we pray, not our words.

I have a little story here that I have been treasuring up for you. It is about a London street boy, who, in some way or other, unfortunately got under the wheels of a heavy waggon, and both legs were broken. He was taken to a hospital and attended to in the best possible way by kind doctors and nurses. Bob was very ignorant; he had had a hard life, poor little fellow, with nobody to teach him any good, and plenty to lead him into evil. In the next bed to his at the hospital was another little boy, a frail child, worn and wasted with sickness. There was a depth of sympathy in his large soft eyes, as he looked across to Bob, and, putting out his thin, white hand to attract his notice, he asked "Have you ever heard of Jesus?"

"No," said Bob, "I never heard of Him. Who is He?"

"Teacher said as Jesus could cure sick folk."

"Can He?" said Bob, eagerly; "I'd like Him to cure me. Where does He live?"

"Oh, a long way from here."

The look of hope faded from Bob's face. "Then I can't go to Him," he said, "both my legs are broke."

"Teacher said that sometimes Jesus passes by. If we watch p'raps we shall see Him." But poor Bob's eyes were so tired that he could not keep them open, and he feared that Jesus would pass by while the weary lids were closed. What could he do? Again his friend was ready with a suggestion. "When we want to speak to teacher in our school we hold up our hand; so if you hold up your hand Jesus will know that you want to speak to Him."

Bob smiled and held up both arms; but very soon they dropped; he was too weak to keep them up. It was disappointing. The tears came into Bob's eyes.

"We'll manage it," said his kind friend. "You shall have my pillow to prop up your arm, and then Jesus won't pass you by." So the arm was propped up, and the tired eyes were closed, and there was sleep and quietness in the ward. Later on when the night watchers came to little Bob's bed they found his arm still propped up, but his spirit had entered into the presence of that Jesus whose notice he had been so anxious to attract.

* Notes of a sermon to children at Hastings, by Rev. C. New.

We get many idle and foolish thoughts, proud and vain thoughts. You must conquer them. They are like the ivy that you often see clinging round the forest tree, unless it is severed it takes the strength, and later on the life, of the tree. Wicked thoughts are like the spleenwort with its thousand seeds ready to produce any number like itself. Do you remember in the "Pilgrim's Progress" how evil spirits whispered to Christian as he went on his way? Do not listen to evil suggestions, turn from them.

Keep away from bad companions. Mind what you read. But above all look to Jesus. Bring every thought into obedience to Him. He can give holy thoughts, sympathetic, pure thoughts. Good thoughts will prevent bad thoughts. Cry to Jesus to help you to fight this battle with your thoughts. We all need to pray. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." "Search me, O God, and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts." M. BREEZE.

16, Linton-crescent, Hastings.

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

No. 19.—Anna Lombard, Una and Bessie Whitehead (South Africa). No. 23.—Charlotte Cane (Wiberg), Llewellyn and Queenie Dale. No. 27.—Gerhard Neuter. No. 20.—Minnie Lister (South Africa).

No. 28 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

Edie Simpson, Marjorie Williams, Fan Trotter, S. Eva and Ethel Hutchings, Florence White, Lily Clarke, Eva Wippeny, Alice Thompson, Margaret Shakespeare, Jessie West, Archibald Deasley, Dorothy Brewer, Evelyn Mair, Lizzie Hill, Hilda Meull, Marion Wilson, Susie Cumbers, Arthur Cordell, Aline Bazett, Winnie Shaw, H. M. Jordan, Emil Campbell, Alice Wardley, John A. Gibson, J. W. Ingle, Katharine, Lillian, and Teresa Blackie, Annie Cole, Lucy and C. W. Jacob, Dorothy Harris, May Dring, M. Gilson, Henry and Gerald Neligan, Mary Cavers, William and Mabel Fletcher, Maude Clarke, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Hugh Tunnell, Blanche Norcock, Jessie and Margaret L. Pook, Daniel Jack, Ernest Nash, F. D. B. Stalker, Norman Braby, Malcolm and Winifred Thomson, William Aston, Florence Judd, Maggie Buchanan, Ruth Braithwaite, Reginald Harris, Isabel Deane Roe, Amy Foston, Ruth Harrison, Raymond Theobald, Katie Welch, Susie Keen, John W. Thomson, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Arthur and Alfred Llewellyn, Maggie and Ada Palmer, Margaret Macphie, Maggie Goodall, Angus McKilgan, Walter and Maggie Colclough Jackson, John, Maggie, and Agnes Gonzales, Roberta Melko, Marcus King, Jenny Wright, Mary and Maggie Charles, Lily Boxer, Isabel Phillips, Minnie Giddings, W. Harcourt Hunter, Eva Gray, Kathleen, Ethel, and Geo. Pasley, Helen Willoughby, Elsie, Grace, and Ida Wright, Thomas, Bella, and Abraham Mack, Annie Lake, Ethel Zanker, Ethel Jenner, Bessie Cheate, Gladys Calvert, Willie Palmer, Frank Morris, H. F. Russell-Smith, Beretron Codo, Ada Heap, Sabina Mackintosh, Charles Hunter, Gladys Phillips, Dorothy Cooper, Stanley Boxer, Willie Charles, Jessie Carter, Irene and Edward Llewellyn, Willie Wheeler, Charles Welch, Leonard Drowne, Basil Jones, Mary and Willie Start, Mary Valery, Bertha and Arthur Courtenay, Louis Berthe, Theodore R. Palmer, Dorothy Stalker, Dorothy Heyan, Christine Parker, Theodore Hill, Theodore Roberts, Stanley Hoan, Florrie Smith, Bertie Walls, Margaret Hassé, E. Yerbury, Margaret A. Morris, E. B. Black, Harry and Bruce Malaher, James S. Ilov, Arnold and Ernest Allen, Marian Freagard, Sybil F. Forbes, Edith Quick, Mary and Tom Hunter, Bertha Seadman, C. A. Sargent, Kathleen Codo, Gladys, Llewellyn, and Gwendoline Shaw, Maggie Faithfull, Ruth van Millingen, Juliet Haines, Annie and Dorothy Grove, Dora Corrie, James Freagard, Muriel Shaw, Sisile Watts, Daisy, Ruby, and H. Allen, Ashley Bowker, Dorothy Vickers, May Greenbrook, Hetty and Harold Wodson, Kathleen Cole, M. T. Colville, Maggie Sargent, John and Margaret Edgar, Maurice Gant, Nettie Black, Ethel and Florence Mackenzie, Olive Tritton, Nellie Lovegrove, Helen Deckett, Florrie and Bell Dancy, Edwin Poole, Ethel Wails, Harriette Frixelle, Emma Goodier, Frances and Florence Hoyle, Annie and Mary Fleming, Maggie Morrison, Willie McMurray, Freda Hutton, Marion Connell, Christine Lawson, May Watson, Hannah Bower, Elsie Jackson, C. E. C. Day, Dora and Kate Symes, William Mackenzie, Winifred Nault, Muriel R. Palmer, Colin McKenzie, Nannie Tibbits, Barbara Macconchy, Nellie, Arthur, Henry, and Annie Conch.

LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 29).

1. Peter and John imprisoned by the Sadducees, set free the next day by Annas, the high priest, with the command not to teach in the name of Jesus.—Acts iv.

2. The apostles imprisoned by the high priest and the Sadducees. The angel of the Lord sent to deliver them.—Chap. v.

3. Saul committed men and women to prison.—Chap. viii.

4. Peter imprisoned by Herod. The angel of the Lord opens the prison gates, and leads him into the city.—Chap. xii.

5. Paul and Silas imprisoned by the magistrates at the desire of the people. An earthquake in the night opens the prison doors, but none of the prisoners escape. Paul and Silas set free by the magistrates next day.

6. Paul beaten and about to be killed by the Jews. Rescued by the chief captain and imprisoned by him. Appealed to Cæsar, and was sent prisoner to Rome.—Chap. xxi. to xxviii.

No. 29 (first list).—Correct answers received from:—

Clara Harwood, Rose Grace, John Scott, Gerald Meyer, Mary and Elizabeth Hill, May Hill, Anne Cooper, L. J. Jones, Duncan Payne, Ethel Williamson, Edith Harris, J. A. Chubb, Arthur Sanders, Ruth Coupe, Leonard Entall, Connie May, Jessie Smith, Susan Chambers, Selma Jack, Lillian Pook, M. G. Loe, Susan Edwards, Herbert Barron, Constance Schuler, J. P. and Edith McIlvaine, F. H. Beckley, Gerard and Ethel Morgan, Nellie and Gertrude Brookfield, May and Dorothy Vickers, Aline Bazett, Arabella Onslow, Dorothy Sharp, Florence and Frances and Stanley Hoyle, Arthur and Alfred Llewellyn, Great Eastern, "Benington, Muriel Harrison, Wallace and Millicent Bentley, G. Fisher, Nellie Decker, Nellie and Florence Bailey, Margaret Davison, Noel and Phyllis Wright, Rosalind Phillimore, Gertrude Scott, Henry and Gerald Neligan, Daisy, May, and Gordon Bligh, Jack and Vernon Clarke, Violet Ashworth, Owen Norrie, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Emily Bridgeman, L. H. and W. F. Williams, Elsie Brownfield, H. R. Compton, J. H. Goodchild, Edith Hayward, Ernest Spence, M. E. Alice Heddle, Reg. Harris, William Porter, D. Colbrook, Mary Platts, Edith and Annie Cole, Cecil Bradford.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 30).

Give references in Psalms to the word "Truth," and say to what it refers in each case.

Children under 10 give 6 references; under 13, 10; over 13, 15.

Personal.

I have to thank some unknown little friend or friends for sending two nice albums, which have been sent to the Ragged School Union Cripples' Home, Southend. NELLIE LOVEGROVE.—Thank you for your nice letter and the doll. I am sure it will give very much pleasure to some poor children. "ARDRISARG."—Thank you again for the flowers. ROSE GRACE.—If your answers arrive by the Thursday morning following they are in time. ERNEST SPENCE.—I am glad you have done so well the first time. LIZZIE HILL, FAN TROTTER, LLEWELLYN and QUEENIE DALE.—Thank you for your nice letters. CLARA BARNES.—Solomon was correct.

UNCLE TOM.

A Sparrow's Song.

ONLY a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree;
My life is of little value,
But the dear Lord cares for me.
I know there are many sparrows,
All over the world they are found;
But our Heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground.
Though small, we are never forgotten;
Though weak, we are never afraid;
For we know that the dear Lord keepeth
The life of the creatures He made.
I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree,
But I know that the Father loves me;
Dost thou know his love for thee?

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Kenwick, to Aug. 5. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with caravan No. 1, Burnham Market, to July 24. Mr. Hewlett, with caravan, Guiden Morden, near Royston, to 24th, then Dunton.

SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Herne Bay, to July 24, Mr. A. G. Doddridge Portrush, to July 27; Mr. Josiah Spiers, North Berwick, July; Mr. B. Herklots, Greystones, co. Wicklow, to July 27, August; Mr. A. J. Barff, B.A., Bezhill; Mr. G. Askwith and Mr. A. T. Frampton, Bournemouth and Boscombe; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, August 6 to September 6; Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey and Mr. H. Duncan, Carnoustie, N.B.; Mr. W. H. Wilson, Culcyn Bay; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Cromer and Sheringham; Mr. A. G. Doddridge, Eastbourne, from August 6; Mr. Phillips Welch, Eamouth; Dr. Barnes, Folkestone; Mr. Ernest Shaw, B.A., Freshwater; Messrs. G. Goodman and C. H. Collier, Herne Bay; Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Afracombe; Mr. Arthur Mercer and Mr. T. Craig, Langland Bay (Swansea); Mr. J. S. Tyler and Mr. G. A. King, Littlehampton; Mr. J. Russell Hill, Llanfairfechan, August 9 to 27; Rev. W. Senior and Rev. E. E. Nickison, Margate; Mr. Livesey Carrott, Mablethorpe; Mr. L. M. Miller, Paimpton; Mr. H. Steward, Port Erin, Isle of Man; Mr. A. C. Jewell, Rhyl; Mr. E. Collier and Mr. F. W. Bettaney, A. 1-15; St. Anne's-on-Sea; Rev. W. W. Martin, B.A., St. Leonards, August 10 to Sept. 9; Mr. G. Hanson Sale, Sandown and Shanklin; Mr. Bernard Herklots, B.A., Scarborough; Mr. J. Waters Coldcott, Southend; Rev. S. M. Warner, Southend; Messrs. E. Hughes and H. T. Sayer, Lymington, August 4 to September 4; Rev. G. C. Williamson, Westward Ho! Mr. H. Hankinson and Mr. E. J. Hopkins, B.A., Whitby, from 8th; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Weymouth, Aug. 10 to Sept. 10; Rev. C. E. Haynes, M.A., Worthing, from August 6; Mr. F. O. Lasbrey, West Kirby and Hoylake, Aug. 1-15; Rev. Norman Bennet (Church Parochial Mission Society), West Brighton, from Aug. 25.

Children's Scripture Union.—Portions for week ending Aug. 1, 1896.—Sun, July 26, Leviticus x. 1-11; Mon., July 27, xiv. 1-18; Tues., July 28, xvi. 1-16; Wed., July 29, xvi. 21-34; Thurs., July 30, xxv. 1-17; Fri., July 31, Psalm li. 1-19; Sat., Aug. 1, John i. 1-14.

The Limehouse Ragged School, which has done good work since 1856, reports that the past year has been one of steady fruitful effort. The Sunday-school is well attended by the poorest class of children. The Lads' Club and Bible class continue to attract the rough lads. The secretary is Mr. W. E. Kirkness, 26, Gough-street, Poplar.

Gospel Tent Mission.—Mr. J. Woodridge has issued a little report of his tent work, recalling the missions held last year at Leytonstone and elsewhere. A new tent has been secured, and there are many calls to hold missions this season; but little can be done without funds, and these are very short. Mr. Woodridge's address is, 19, Grove-road, Bow, E.

The Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess Mission exists to help London churches. The number of deaconesses employed is twenty-seven; they relieve the destitute, nurse the sick, watch over the dying, read the Scriptures—all these efforts having for their end the pointing of the lost and wandering to the Good Shepherd. The Society has promoted several conferences of evangelistic workers, and is constantly finding an enlarged sphere for its exertions and influence. The secretary is Rev. Robert Mackay, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

A Nestorian Missionary.—Marcus G. Daniel, a native of Kurdistan, was three years in Oroomiah Presbyterian College, Persia, and is now with Rev. C. Fisher, Grafton House Training College, Acton, W. He wishes to be trained as a missionary to his own fellow countrymen and brethren among the independent tribes of Kurdistan. When he has finished his studies he will work among Syrians, Armenians, and Mohammedans who are still groping in darkness. Mr. Daniel can speak many languages, and would be glad to receive invitations to lecture in native costume on the history and present position of his people.

"Thou Shalt Catch Men."

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

SOMETIMES in ones and twos, at others in a haul of 3000 at once; now by the line, and again with the seine-net; a houseful at Cæsarea, a city-full at Samaria, a nation at Pentecost; and forty years after thy death a continent shall bear such marks of thy toil, that the Roman Governor shall complain to the Emperor that the service of heathen gods is falling into disuse, their temples deserted, their sacrifices unrepresented, whilst all the people flock to the meeting-places of my disciples. "Thou shalt catch men."

The world is full of fish. They lie in deep holes, they flash in the torrents of great cities, they roam through the paths of the seas of human life. All the arts employed in the fisherman's craft have their counterpart here. The patience, courage, nerve, strength of sinew, swiftness of resolve, which made thee successful on thy native lake, will be called into requisition, as thou and I sail the sea of life together, with its calms and storms; its dimpling smiles and sudden blasts; its shoals, eddies, and sunken rocks.

It cannot be, O Master of Life. I am a sinful man; there is nought in me to attract men from sin to God. Besides, I shrink from Thee, and am oft-times conscious of moods in which I would have Thee depart. How can I bring men to one of whom I often have a mysterious and indefinable dread? Moreover, Thou knowest that I am Simon, timid, fluctuating, impulsive, strong where I should be weak, weak where I would be strong, driven by the wind and tossed like mine own boat in a storm, lacking in courage, perseverance, alertness, zeal. Turn thy hand on more promising material, nought but disappointment awaits Thee in me. My brother Andrew, here, is more likely to yield Thee the results Thou cravest; he brought me to Thee; or my comrades James and John; but Thou must spare Thyself from disappointment over me. What is this Thou sayest, Thou shalt catch men? No, Master, no, leave me to my nets and boats here on the lake; I understand its every mood, its currents and treacherous storms, its creeks and inlets and landing-places. Take others with Thee in that voyage at which Thou art dimly hinting, I dare not volunteer, or cherish ideals which are too high for me.

Listen, O timid heart, I would not foreshadow thy great future, if I were not prepared to work in thee, both to will and to do of my good pleasure. Be sure that out of the most unlikely materials, I can fashion the most efficient instruments. Indeed, this is the triumph of my art. My grace is sufficient, and it is made perfect in weakness. I give power to the weak, and to those that have no might I increase strength. Follow Me, and I will make thee to become a fisher of men. All I ask of thee is thy will. Art thou willing to endure the discipline; to drink of my cup, to be baptized with my baptism; to share my long patience for the souls of men; to face the shame, the taunts, the enmities, the strifes which such a life will involve; to suffer even to the death of the cross? This is all I require. Give Me thy steadfast will, and I will perfect all beside. The choice to be a fisher of men is thine, the realisation of the ideal is mine. If thou wilt yield to Me in this, thou shalt catch men.

I am willing, Master and Lord, more than willing. I earnestly long for this, and humbly yield myself to be moulded and fashioned as Thou wilt. Make me a sickle, or the sun-browned hand that wields it; a net, or the arm that casts it; a sword, or its scabbard; a basin for washing the disciples' feet, or a cup for the Paschal Feast; but count me worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of thy goodness and the work of faith with power, that thy name may be glorified in me, according to the grace of God. But what are the processes of this wondrous transformation?

(1) Thou must be clean. There can be no take of fish where the nets are heavy with entangled weed and grit. Therefore, though the fishers have been toiling all the night, they dare not take much-needed rest till they have washed their nets. It is equally certain that the cleansed motive and heart, the clean habit and life, are essential to successful soul-winning. Only the holy can convey the power by which others may become holy. Only to the pure is it permitted to pass on the secret of purity. The desert floor must be sprinkled with dew before angels' bread can be strewn there; the vessel must be clean before charged with the living water; the net must be cleansed ere it can gather the treasures of the sea.

I know it, Lord; but such cleanliness is beyond my reach. I am a sinful man. I always knew it; but since I have beheld thy burning purity I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

But this is my gift: I will sprinkle clean water upon thee, and thou shalt be clean; from all thy filthiness, and from all thy idols, will I cleanse thee; a new heart also will I give thee, and a new spirit will I put within thee, and I will save thee from all thine uncleannesses.

Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

(2) Thou must obey. At first in little matters, such as placing thy boat at my disposal, and thrusting out a little from the land at my request. Then in greater matters, such as abdicating thy position as ship-master, and allowing Me to take thy place, and issue my commands at will. It will not be easy at first; not easy to take the second place; not easy to do as thou art bidden, when my commands clash with the habits of thy life and the conclusions of thy experience. I may sometimes ask thee to launch out into the deep, when thou mightest be disposed to float over shallow water, to go fishing in daylight when thou hast toiled all the night in vain. But if thou wilt live according to my word, pondered reverently and obeyed precisely, I will make thee successful in catching men.

Absolute consecration is the secret of success. The ways of the soul, its needs, its peculiarities, the times and methods in which it can be best approached, are known only to the Heart-searcher; and those who would win men must abide in obedient fellowship with Him. He always knows where to find the individual and the crowd, the isolated Cornelius and the multitudes of the Day of Pentecost; and when we dare to listen to his voice in smaller spheres, He leads us gently forward to richer and fuller opportunities of gathering the harvest of the sea. Yield the boat for an hour, and it will be given back laden to the water's edge with spoil. Thrust out a little, and thou wilt be bidden to launch into the deep. Be faithful in the least, and one day the rare aloe-flower, that blooms but once in a hundred years, shall be thine. Art thou willing for this?

Be it to me according as Thou wilt.

(3) Thou must launch out into the deep. Beyond thy Jewish people, for generations taught in the law of God, there are the great deeps of humanity. Have great thoughts of the adaptation of my Gospel to the heart of man, and dare to launch out on a ministry not confined to a race or a people, but wide and free as the overarching sky and the boundless ocean. Thou must go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; must go into the house of the uncircumcised and eat with them; must make no difference between Jew and Gentile, because the same Lord over all is rich in mercy unto all that call upon Him.

Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean.

But my love is for all, my heart yearns for all, my blood shall be shed as a propitiation for all. See the world as I see it, enveloped in a great white sheet let down from heaven, and understand that my Gospel meets those deep cravings of the soul that are common to all the race. Launch out into the deep, and let down thy net for a draught. It is a mistake to be ever fishing in one pond, or at one corner of the lake, till the fish know thy bait and method. Thou must launch into the deep. Art thou willing?

Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God; thy Spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

(4) Cultivate a spirit of love to all whom I choose and love. There will be many boats beside thine floating over the ocean, and busily engaged in similar work to thine. I own flotillas of fishing boats. Sometimes thou mayest yield to temptation and become jealous of their success, or envious of the fishermen. But this shall be to thy hurt. For they are equally my servants as thou art, and thou as they. Their success will not interfere with thine, nor thine with theirs. There is plenty for all. When thy net is full do not keep it all for thyself; if thou dost, it will break, and thou wilt lose all. But if thou becomest to thy partners in the other ship to come to help thee, thy boat will be filled, and theirs also. Thou couldst not have more than this, and there will be the additional joy of ministering to their joy and well-being. If thou art miserly and grasping over the results of thy toil, and jealous of others, thou wilt see thy opportunities and success dwindle and cease. But if thy heart is large enough to share thy spoils with others, thou shalt have a superabundance, and they also. He that loveth his life, shall lose it, he that loseth his all for my sake, shall find it. Believest thou this?

Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief, and give me a baptism of holy love, which looks not only on its own things, but also on the things of others.

(5) Thou must follow Me. It will involve leaving Zebedee and the hired servants, boat and net, respect and home, and becoming a pilgrim and stranger. My way lies to Gabbatha with its shame, to Gethsemane with its bloody sweat, to the cross with its passion, to the grave with its death-sleep. Canst thou follow Me?

Yea, Lord, I will follow Thee to prison and to death.

But thou canst not follow Me thus, in the energy of thy self-life, in the thoughtless vaunting of thine own strength. Thou must be broken by failure, disappointment, and bitter tears, and afterwards thou shalt follow Me, placing thy feet in my steps, as they lead down to the dust of death and up to the light of the Ascension morning. Then thou shalt come forth into the great experiences of that day which I will make, when the sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood, and thou shalt receive the power of the Holy Spirit coming upon thee. So shalt thou be my faithful witness, and I will give thee a mouth and wisdom, that all thine adversaries shall not be able to gainsay, or to resist. Wilt thou follow Me?

Lord, to whom else can I go, Thou hast the words of eternal life. Whither Thou goest, I will go; and where Thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people; and thy God my God; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught shall part Thee and me.

Be it so; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

Clonmel Soldiers' Home.—The report speaks of steady work, of souls saved, and backsliders restored. Miss Gilder, who visited the Home, says:—"Nightly the soldiers met in the bright little Home, and many happy evenings were spent there. Bible classes were held twice weekly, but our great day was the Lord's day, when the soldiers gathered in for tea and a service. Many a conversation we had over the tea table. I was much interested in one lad who came out of darkness into light, and with whom I had several Bible studies by his own request. I feel sure a great but quiet work is going on, and one much needed." The hon. superintendent is Mr. E. Beale, The Island, Clonmel, Ireland.

Mr. Henry Conder, OF BOMBAY.

ALL those who are intimately acquainted with the Christian gentleman whose portrait we give to-day, agree in regarding him as one of the excellent of the earth. A friend who has had occasion to know him well, describes him, in homely phrase, as "one of the finest and best old fellows anywhere." We think it right to explain that our portrait makes Mr. Conder look somewhat more youthful than he is. One of his personal qualities is an extreme shrinking from publicity, and no recent photograph was available.

For more than a quarter of a century the name of HENRY CONDER has been a household possession in Christian as well as business circles in the Bombay Presidency. It is nearly thirty years since he left England to fill the highly responsible post of Traffic Manager of the Great Indian Peninsular Railway. He previously held an office of trust in the Great Northern Railway of this country, and it was the solid qualities he had shown in that service which caused him to be chosen for the wider sphere which he has most worthily and successfully adorned. Those who are conversant with the facts assert that the great success of the G.I.P. Railway during the last twenty-five years has been greatly due to the large share which Mr. Conder has had in shaping the policy of the company since he took the oversight of its increasing traffic.

Our province is to tell rather of Mr. Conder's Christian than his business career; though we hold it as an axiom that a man's Christianity, if it be of any real value, will colour every department of his life; as our friend has amply proved. Descended from one of the best-known families in England in Nonconformist circles, Mr. Conder was very active in his Master's service before he left our shores. When residing in London he was attached to a leading Congregational Church and took an earnest part in the aggressive work of the congregation. His zeal did not evaporate in the more trying climate of India. He joined the Free Church of Scotland, in Bombay, of which he still remains an honoured and leading member.

In 1875 Dr. A. N. Somerville, of Glasgow, one of the most effective gossellers that ever filled a Scotch pulpit in modern times, made an evangelistic tour in India. His visit to Bombay caused a considerable stir in the Christian life of the city, and many young men were won to a personal experience of spiritual realities, through the fiery appeals of the veteran evangelist. The congregation of which Mr. Conder was a member (with Dr. Macpherson as pastor) had already been taking a lively interest in the welfare of young men in the city, and they readily fell in with Dr. Somerville's suggestion as to the formation of a branch of the Y.M.C.A. The branch was duly organised, and the esteem in which Mr. Conder was even then held will be judged from the fact that he was appointed President of the Association, a post which he has since continued to fill, notwithstanding his many and arduous business occupations. He has been a working and not an ornamental President. We cannot do better than quote here from a well-informed article that appeared in the Bombay Young Men's Monthly last October, shortly after his leaving India for a period of furlough in the old country. The writer says:—

Mr. Conder, Dr. Macpherson, and others took up the work of providing the Association with a home of its own, and so well did they work that the present building was soon built, and the Association could there meet under its own roof. Through all these twenty years, whilst many, one after another, of the original members have been called away or left India, and others have had less leisure to give to the institution, which they cannot but regard with affection, Mr. Conder has held on with unchanging devotion, interesting himself in every phase of the Association's work, in its branches, and its new developments. His sympathetic nature, his earnest desire for the highest and best welfare of young men, and the unswerving rectitude of his personal life are too well known to need description. Generous in his support of religious and of philanthropic institutions and movements, Mr. Conder's leisure and his energies were given to the Bombay Y.M.C.A. Holding with all the strength of a strong and earnest nature the belief that success in life in its highest and best sense was impossible for anyone not reconciled to God through Jesus Christ, and with the conviction that young men were not equipped for the battle of life unless so reconciled, Mr. Conder strove, by his earnest words and his personal life, as well as by his support of everyone and every movement that had the same object in view, to commend the Gospel to the youth of this city. It is given to few to exercise so widespread an influence through so many years. Few, indeed, of those occupying high positions of trust and responsibility care for work of this kind, but Mr. Conder has held steadily on his way.

Another friend, writing about the same time in a Bombay secular journal, bears the following testimony:—

Mr. Conder's industry and his habit of "sticking at it" are quite phenomenal. When everyone else has been holiday-making he has been at his accustomed post, and friends have seldom been able to prevail upon him to take a holiday except at rare intervals. Notwithstanding this close and untiring attention to official duties, Mr. Conder, by the absolute sacrifice of his leisure hours, has been enabled to discharge a great variety of philanthropic and religious work throughout the whole period of his residence in this city. As was remarked at a farewell meeting, no Christian enterprise in Bombay has appealed to Mr. Conder in vain; he has been ever ready to promote any religious or philanthropic movement with his influence, his money, and his time. His interest, as everyone knows, has principally centred in the Young Men's Christian Association, which he was largely instrumental in founding twenty years ago, and over which he has since presided with untiring zeal and constancy. Not a day passed without Mr. Conder visiting the rooms, at Apollo Bunder, either to take part in a Bible-class, prayer-meeting, or some other gathering; to see the young men enjoying themselves; or to speak a word of cheer and encouragement to the youths and young men he happened to meet in the rooms. Nothing has been more to his liking than to get in a quiet corner with some soldier or sailor, to listen with sympathetic interest to all they had to say, and to give them fatherly counsel. He personally knew, and understood the character of almost every member of the Association, and certainly of every habitué of the rooms. Having no family claims upon him, the Y.M.C.A. President has delighted to take young men to stay with him for a short time in his bachelor home, and has always been most thoughtful in ministering to the comfort of his guests. Hundreds of young men have had good cause to be devoutly thankful for the influence of Mr. Conder's wise and helpful friendship upon their lives, and many a "shipwrecked brother" has through his instrumentality been enabled to "take heart again." It may be safely said that there is no man in India to-day whose name is more enshrined in the hearts of young men—some of them scattered to the ends of the earth—than Mr. Conder.

The opinions thus expressed with reference to Mr. Conder's character and influence would be fully confirmed by all who have had any close association with him in recent months during his stay in England. We cordially join in the hope, very warmly expressed by his Bombay friends when he left them for a time last September, that his sojourn in the home-land may result in complete restoration to health and strength, that his visit may have the result of arousing in England an increased interest in Y.M.C.A. work in India, and that in due time he may safely return to resume in that great Eastern city the good work which owes so much to his unflagging devotion and mature experience.

Work among Roman Poor.

MRS. E. J. WALL, in the annual report of work among the poor in Rome by means of medical missions, visiting, and Gospel preaching, says: "This, the twenty-fifth anniversary of our coming to Rome, takes us back to the time when those for whom it is our privilege to work had no one to care for them. It was for the very poor, those who by foreigners and Romans were treated with scorn and contempt, that we began our weekly meeting. Since then hundreds and thousands have heard the joyful news; many, very many, have exchanged their wretched dwellings on earth for the many mansions in heaven, and others, though still poor and suffering, are trusting in the Good Shepherd who speaks to them, and says, 'My sheep shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.'"

Among the several narratives in the report is the following:—"One of the Bible-women, when visiting only the other day, heard a little voice calling, 'Signora, Signora!' The voice seemed to proceed from behind a door, and on opening it she found one of her little girls ill with fever. The poor mother had gone out washing so as to earn a few pence to make a little soup. On seeing her teacher, the little girl said, 'I am so very glad you are come, because I want you to hear my lesson for last Sunday, I can say it all perfectly,' and she repeated the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Then looking up at a crucifix above her bed, she said: 'Mother put that up there; but that is not Jesus, that piece of wood cannot hear me nor see me, and I don't want it now, because I have the real Jesus and I can always talk to Him.' This single incident shows, better perhaps than any words, what is being done, and how the beautiful truths of the Gospel are penetrating into many families, and will some day, in God's own time, eradicate error and make Rome once more the home of a pure faith, as in the days of St. Paul."

Communications to Mrs. Wall should be addressed 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

The Parents' Mission.—The annual meeting of the Parents' Mission was held a few days ago in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe presiding. The report and balance-sheet, read by Mr. A. Webb, secretary, showed that the total income was £64 12s. 10d., and the liabilities £18 12s. Great interest had been manifested in the forty-two meetings, some of those in the open-air being attended by over 500 working men, who asked questions and received replies. After a hearty address by the chairman, the cause of the mission was advocated by Mrs. Finn (Syrian Colonisation Society), Rev. W. Windle (St. Stephen's, Walbrook), and Rev. F. W. E. Thomas (St. Nicholas, Deptford).

Notes on Mission Work.

JOHANNESBURG.

THE following are two replies received from the managers of Gold Mining Companies to written requests for permission to preach to or teach the natives in the employ of their respective companies:—

1. "In reply to your letter, your request has been carefully considered by the manager, who instructs me to say that he does not think it advisable to have a school upon the property. This decision is arrived at principally on account of boys writing passes for drink, and the fear that with a knowledge of reading and writing the pay tickets will be tampered with. I think that you will readily see that a grave difficulty is here presented, and that it is one that might result in much loss to the mines."

A further request for leave to erect a hall for preaching and temperance work, met with a refusal, but leave has since been obtained to hold evangelistic services.

2. "With regard to our native employés, I am strongly opposed to their being interfered with in the matter of religion on the company's property, as in my opinion, from experience gained both in India and Africa, nothing tends more to render them impudent and useless."

A lady worker, prominent on the "Holiness" platform, also expressed herself as directly opposed to all education of natives, and when met with the Saviour's express commission to his apostles, replied that preaching the Gospel to them was the utmost length disciples of Christ were warranted in going. Evidently, if this opinion is to be adopted, Philip the Evangelist's plain duty was to have rebuked the Ethiopian for having the effrontery to read the Prophets for himself. It is a very short cut from this teaching to Rome's dogma of "interpretation by the Church alone."

If the heathen are to be precluded from reading the Bible in their own tongue, how is the Holy Spirit to enlighten them? If it is wrong to teach them to read, how are they to search the Scriptures? To encourage a spirit of friendly intercourse and mutual help we have made it a practice whenever we have a pupil or attendant at our services who hails from any mission station, to write a friendly letter to his missionary, informing him of the facts, and asking his prayers and the prayers of his people for our work. The following is an extract from one of the fraternal answers received:—

"Now about yourself. Will you permit me to say a few straight things to you. The first is, that I am very sorry that you have given up your profession as a lawyer. The Christian Church needs Christian lawyers exceedingly, and I think Pretoria and Johannesburg need them most of all. The second is, that as a Christian lawyer I am sure you would do ten times more for Christ than you are now doing. The third is, seeing that you have given up your profession and become a missionary, I presume you have as much as you believe you need. If you had stuck to your profession and given all you made, you could have done a great work for Christ by the means of the men you would and could employ. If you had as your agent a warm-hearted able missionary, see how many native teachers and catechists he could employ with it, every one of them able to do more for the native than you."

I publish this letter without any suggestion as to who the author is, and without any personal feeling, but for the express purpose of showing how even men in charge of large and important missionary enterprises can be induced, even after the thing is an accomplished fact, to chide one who gives himself up entirely to the work of seeking the lost.

See how easy it is to impute dishonourable motives, to dogmatise as to the arithmetical proportion of good sacrificed, and to close up with a coldwater douche as to the comparative worthlessness of the worker's attempts. The most serious view of the matter is to observe how entirely the Master's right to give a personal call to his disciple, and the Holy Spirit's ability to equip the disciple so as to make him at least as useful as a native catechist or teacher, are ignored. According to this view, Matthew should have gone back to his flourishing business and sent out warm-hearted and able paid agents. Suppose, however, that Matthew obeyed the Master's "Follow Me!" and handed over the keys of his safe and his securities to the Master, preferring to obey, rather than to use the much-exalted discrimination and common-sense which nowadays are so often considered the God-given arbiters of every question of duty or inclination—shall we take it upon ourselves to say that he would then have done ten times more good at his business because Judæa badly needed honest tax-gatherers?

The foregoing letter is only a sample of similar arguments adduced by Christian ministers, until one has become astounded, and has wondered whether the reason so many mission workers go back into their secular callings may not be attributable to the wet blankets they gratuitously receive from those who should cherish and nourish them in their desire to be out-and-out and in-and-about for God among the perishing.

One aspect of this letter, however, is worthy of consideration, and I commend it to Christian lawyers who have not received or have not obeyed a direct call from God to exchange the intricacies of law for the simplicity of the Gospel of Jesus, namely, that they should devote all they make to equipping warm-hearted, able missionaries, teachers, and catechists, to preach and teach the Gospel of Jesus to these teeming thousands in the mines. I promise to lend them every assistance, and give them a hearty welcome to this very needy but glorious seed-bed. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."

Notwithstanding opposition on the part of relatives, we continue to have a fairly good attendance at our school. Three of our pupils were prohibited by relatives, but one of them, notwithstanding threats and ill-treatment, has returned, and gives very satisfactory evidences of conversion. We are praying for the others.

We have lately had a great accession to our preaching strength, having engaged three capable native evangelists, so that we now hold open-air services at other Compounds in this vicinity, visit the indifferent in their rooms, and carry on the hall services at the same time. Further European workers are on their way to join us, and we are now looking to the Lord to open the way into some other Compounds for their location. Several of our pupils have already returned to their homes wearing their blue ribbon, and with the first dawn of resurrection in their souls; and we are praying the dear Master to make the light clearer and stronger, so that others may see its outshining and be drawn to Him who is the Light of the world.

We have lately had another instance of how even among natives a word may come to have a restricted and localised meaning, which may convey a very different idea to the hearer than that intended by the speaker. In cross-examining the pupils on a passage read from St. John vii. 9, we found that the word "idhlelo" (something to eat), used as an equivalent for pasture, had been understood to mean "a chaw of tobacco," rather a heterodox rendering of the original. "By Me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find 'a chaw of tobacco.'"

A number of these natives carry a small pouch or bag with some cut tobacco in the pocket, from which a pinch or two is transferred to the mouth, this they call "idhlelo" (a bite, or something to eat), and thus inferred that the Good Shepherd would make this provision for his sheep. They probably wondered why a supply had not been provided for our converts.

In the 137th Psalm, through a lack of distinguishing clearly the difference in sound of the final "u" and "o" respectively in the words "izingubu" and "izingubo," some native pupils understood the Psalmist to say, "By the river of Babylon, there we sat down; yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our clothes (izingubo) — not harps (izingubu) — on the willows."

The result of this misconception was that they came to the conclusion that the captive Israelites whilst bathing had their clothes stolen by the Babylonians, who added insult to injury by asking them to sing some of the songs of Zion, provoking the very natural response, "How can we sing and be merry, when they have taken our clothes and we are in a strange land?" A very slight mispronunciation of a letter often represents quite a different word from that intended by the speaker.

A. W. B.

A Quiet Day at Jordans.

THIS gathering of Christians of all branches of the one Church reminded us of the olden days when the "Friends" assembled for worship from places within a circle of twenty miles. The only difference was that now the worshippers came in brakes and vehicles of various shapes and sizes, whilst formerly they came on horseback, with wives and daughters on pillions behind the men. The weather was cold and cheerless, but about 150 attended the meetings. Luncheon and tea were provided in a tent pitched in the old graveyard.

The subject selected for consideration was, "The Lord's Treatment of his Children—in Adoption, Redemption, and Sanctification." Mr. COLIN TAYLOR presided at the morning meeting, and briefly introduced the subject. He was followed by Dr. J. H. GARTON, who spoke on adoption especially. He laid stress upon our responsibility as sons of God; for as such we become subject to the rules and regulations of the Father's house. Mr. W. R. LANE spoke upon the "rest" provided for the children of God (Matt. xi. 28, 29). He gives "rest" to all his children, and as they "take" the yoke and "learn" of Him, they "find" the rest of soul that all long for.

In the afternoon, Mr. J. E. TAYLOR, of Aylesbury, presided. Mr. CHAS. INGLIS emphasised the fact that redemption is the foundation of the Bible. His remarks were upon the cost, the extent, the power, the beauty, and the practical outcome of redemption. Our redemption is plenteous (Ps. cxxx.), precious (Ps. xlix), eternal (Heb. ix). Mr. J. C. RAMEY and Mr. JOHN WOOD both gave very helpful words.

At frequent intervals a few moments of quiet prayer were taken. Then some one in the meeting would rise up and plead for the fulfilment of God's gracious promises and designs for his adopted sons. Joyful songs of praise arose from lips and hearts, and the quiet day of communion with God seemed like a foretaste of heaven to many.

Christ Church.—This day (Thursday, July 23) will be the last of Mr. Meyer's morning services for workers at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, till September 17.

In West London Slums.

THE eighth anniversary of the Shaftesbury Institute Mission was held on Tuesday week, in Stafford House, by the kind permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland. Sir Horace Farquhar, who presided, spoke warmly in support of the work, describing a recent visit, when he was greatly pleased with all he saw. Attacks had been made on the Homes and Shelters, but the most careful investigation showed that these rested on insufficient data. He maintained the Homes were well managed, and recommended all, puzzled by false reports, to visit the mission and judge for themselves.

Miss MEREDITH BROWN gave a verbal résumé of the report, showing that the aim is to reach the lowest strata of despairing humanity. The Mission, which began with rough factory girls, has spread out into numerous agencies for the outcast, homeless, and destitute. The Girls' Institute reports steady and cheering progress; the Women's Night Shelter has been the basis of most satisfactory work. There are, doubtless, dangers in connection with these, but a well-managed shelter is an enormous boon to the poor. "A mismanaged shelter may do more harm than good; women unwashed and unkempt, huddled together in an overcrowded room, may be the source of much evil. But we have eight separate dormitories; a register is kept, and the women are carefully classified.

"The cheaper part of the Shelter, or 2d. beds, is far more largely used than the 6d. beds. The object of the Shelter is to help those who are able to work and can earn a little, but not sufficient to maintain a home of their own, as flower and fruit-sellers, match-sellers, street-hawkers, rag-sorters, bone and bottle collectors, and dust-heap women. There are many who need only a little advice and temporary help, and who succeed in regaining their former positions as dressmakers, governesses, or superior servants."

The work among the factory girls is now telling among the rough West-end girls. In the Evening Home, Bible, needlework, and recreation classes, their confidence is gained, and gradually the whole life has been changed—though few can estimate what these girls have to endure should they seek to follow Christ.

In the Children's Evening Home excellent work is carried on among the little ones. The boys have their own club, while there is also a well-managed and very popular crèche. Mention was also made of the Girls' Training Home, in which eighteen girls can be received, and from which many have gone out to domestic service. Amongst the men also good work is going on in the Labour Home, the Shelter, and the Mission Hall.

Miss Brown closed by setting forth very strongly the claims of the Mission for larger help, making a special plea for a house for the workers, the present accommodation being very bad and inconvenient. Their rooms are close to the Shelter dormitories, and the only access to these rooms, after the Shelter inmates have come in, from the workers' sitting-room, is by a long circuit down a kitchen stair, through two kitchens, and then up two staircases. Besides this, the neighbourhood of Harrow-street is the very worst, their rooms are almost opposite a public house, and it is difficult to get the needed sleep. There is a small house which adjoins our block which is just suitable for the present requirements. A door could be made through, so that it would become part of the Institute. The purchase of a twenty-five years' lease of this house with alterations to adapt it for the purpose of a private house, and many other repairs so as to render it habitable, is £600."

Brief commendatory addresses followed by Canon Barker, Dr. Schofield, Mr. S. Smith, M.P., Mr. E. Boulnois, M.P., and Lord Overton, who very heartily supported the claims of the work. Describing his own observations in the various Homes, he bore strong testimony to the admirable and careful manner in which they are managed by Miss Meredith Brown and her helpers.

The Neglected Continent.

SOME of your readers who have so kindly in the past shown their practical sympathy with us in our attempt to make another organised attack on the kingdom of Satan in the South, may be interested to know how matters are progressing.

We left Liverpool on February 27, and reached Buenos Ayres on March 23, after a fair passage. There were many opportunities on board for personal dealing with our fellow-passengers; our testimony for Christ was received in every case with politeness, and in several with real interest. At Lisbon we went ashore and procured several hundred Portuguese and Spanish Gospels to distribute to the third-class passengers, of whom we took up large numbers at our different ports of call in Spain and Portugal. These Gospels we gave out on Sunday, and they were gratefully received and earnestly read in many cases. We were much impressed by the eagerness with which even rich, intelligent men came near us to receive a Gospel—these fields are indeed white unto harvest.

On arrival at Buenos Ayres we settled in Quilmes, a small suburban town about twelve miles from the city, until we should find out the best location and methods of going to work. The Lord opened the way for us to meet many of the most earnest Christian workers of this country, among whom I may mention Mr. Wm. Barnett, Mr. Torre, Mr. Milne (of the American Bible Society), Mr. Smith (pastor of the little Protestant Church here), and many others. We had hoped to establish a home here for the Mission, but my health has been such since I left home that it is deemed wise, if not necessary, to go for a time at least to the high and healthy district of Cordoba, which is the centre of the most bigoted Roman Catholicism, and entirely untouched by Protestant missionary effort. On the other hand, the province of Buenos Ayres is being worked to some extent at least by earnest men of God. Mr. Graham, of Las Flores, who has had a very successful and blessed work there, has asked for a young man to help him, thus enabling him to extend his work into the interior, where the need is so great. We see our way to respond to this call, and hope very soon to have a young man to fill this place. Mr. Torre has consented to look after the young men as they come and receive them into his home for a time until they can be located.

There is also a good opening now for a man in Cordoba, which we expect also shortly to fill, Mr. Torre having kindly opened his beautiful home, free of charge, to one candidate for six months, to teach him Spanish and to employ him in his mission work in Barracas as a means of training him for his future work in Cordoba if God should call him there.

There has been much said in former issues of THE CHRISTIAN about the great need of South America. One has only to reside here for a short time to find out that these accounts only weakly convey to the mind of the reader how great the need really is. If you would get a true picture of the spiritual darkness of this great continent, just take your Bibles and turn to the prophecy of Jeremiah (chap. xi. 7-14). Write across it South America, and you will have a more graphic and more true description of it than any words of mine could give you. The natives are kindly, simple-hearted, and very accessible to the Gospel. We have spent several afternoons in distributing Gospels, and to see their smiling faces as they received them, and to hear their "muchas gracias" was ample reward for anything we had done.

In one poor native hut here, where a woman was lying very ill, the first thing that would perhaps attract attention on entering was a little candle burning before a picture of the Virgin Mary, in the hope of propitiation and healing. This woman has heard the Gospel, and has been much impressed.

May God bring her into a saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. There is a very nice Roman Catholic church here, over the door of which you may read, "Gloria a Maria Immaculada" (Glory to Mary immaculate). This is the only Gospel heard from its sanctuaries, no Christ to pardon sin, no Jesus to bear the burdens, no Holy Ghost to be the comforter. Those of us who know how precious it is to have Him for our all and in all can indeed truly and deeply sympathise with these dark, dark souls, who have no other God than the wafer god. The two young priests who had charge of this church were living in the most terrible and open immorality. These are the pastors who have destroyed "my vineyard." The men for the most part never go to church at all; they have lost faith in the whole thing. There is no such thing as marriage among the poorer classes, owing to the immense fees the priests exact for performing the ceremony; consequently they just live together as they like and as long as they like, making a change when their fancy dictates. This, then, is their social condition.

I have returned from a visit to some of the northern cities of the Argentine, having spent one month with Mr. Barnett on his estancia near Rosario, where I was enabled to render some medical assistance to suffering ones, in whom he was much interested spiritually and practically. Mr. Barnett is carrying on a warfare here single-handed, but the seed is being sown, springing up, and bearing fruit. God grant that there may soon be many more workers scattered through this very much neglected field. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Me?" Let each of us, dear reader, pray over these words; they may contain a call for many who read these lines. May He lead such to respond, "Here am I; send me." We shall be glad to send our little occasional paper, South America, to anyone desiring it.

The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. W. J. Gibbs, 48, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

W. W. BREMNER,
South American Continental Mission.

Rev. E. P. Hammond in Montreal.

THOUGH wearied with a winter's campaign, and though it was only a visit en route to his home in Hartford, Connecticut, yet the visit of this evangelist to Montreal was certainly of the Lord. Christians were stirred up and felt the kindling of his zeal for souls, while many, old and young, were found weeping for sin, and led to the side of the Crucified One.

One of the most interesting features connected with this visit was the attention paid to the benevolent institutions of our city. The heart of the inmates seemed to open like the flower before the morning sun to the evangelist's message of love. How pathetic the appealing look, the tear-stained cheek of these fatherless, motherless, worse than homeless children, as the story of the Cross became to them a reality; how sweet their voices, raised in songs of praise. It was a touching sight as the evangelist moved out from the station to see a group of these young converts standing waving farewell to him. We believe that hundreds, especially among the young, will remember the spring of 1896 as the time when they took Jesus to be their Saviour.

The almond blossoms are gathering on the brow of this servant of God, and that indefinable tenderness which advancing years alone impart has thrown its halo about him; yet his step is firm, his voice rich and sonorous, his heart overflowing with love to God, to man, and to his erring brother. We trust Mr. Hammond may be spared yet many years to preach Christ and Him crucified. M. D.

Montreal.

Distributing Scripture Truth.—In a letter received by Mr. W. Brown, secretary of the Society for Distributing Scripture Truth, 65, South-street, Eastbourne, the writer says:—"Being greatly blessed by reading one of your books at a station recently, I would ask if you would be so kind as to forward to—Junction, Scotland, some of your books for the waiting-rooms." The committee earnestly ask for help in furthering the work of the Society.

The World's Student Conference.

By ROBERT E. LEWIS.

FOR eleven successive years the students of this and other lands have gathered in numbers at Northfield at Mr. Moody's invitation. One is impressed by this gathering, which has made definite impression on the students of many lands. The Conference is not a "meeting." It is an organised working body, of which Mr. Moody is the president. It is planned by the college department of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The Students' Conference can be little understood from the outside. Let us, therefore, consider its departments. All the students do not meet together at all the sessions. In the morning at eight o'clock the Missionary Institute opens each day's work. In this organised part of the Conference are two hundred men chosen from out of all the colleges to study the mission problem as it relates to students, and to be trained to lead classes in the study of missions next year in the various colleges. Secretary H. P. Beach, of the Volunteer Movement, plans for and directs this important phase of the Conference. The influence of such training as is given in missionary study can be seen from the fact that in over two hundred and fifty colleges the study of missions was established or carried on last year. A suggestion of the work done at the Missionary Institute is seen from the subjects taken up from day to day: Importance of Emphasising Missions in College, the Missionary Committee, Prayer and Missions, Missionary Literature, the Volunteer Band, Missionary Study Classes, the Volunteer Movement at Home and Abroad, etc.

At nine o'clock each day comes a discussion of the problems of "college work," organisation and teaching of devotional Bible-classes, definite work for reaching new students, the missionary department of the association, the religious awakening of the college, perils of college life. With such a group of problems to handle it is readily seen that for the various grades of institutions the solutions are different. The whole delegate body of nearly or quite five hundred breaks into sections. The professional (medical, law and technical) colleges, the larger universities, the smaller colleges, and the preparatory schools form classes by themselves. Here are taken up in detail phases of Christian work among students, definite plans settled upon, and special men set apart to systematically study and work out the problems.

One of the most urgent subjects considered is the maintenance of attractive and thorough Bible-classes in every college. A visitor would probably be surprised to hear the detail of plans by which these classes are introduced and made attractive. It is comparatively easy to enroll men in this study in denominational institutions, but the professional colleges present staggering situations. The great professional schools in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Toronto, Montreal and Albany have strong men at Northfield making a special study of this matter.

Two of the most practical features of the Conference are the normal Bible-classes, one studying Christ as a Personal Worker, and the other the life of Paul. Each of the classes is composed of two hundred men or more. Each man represents his college, and is taking the course that he may further equip himself for teaching classes of students in his own institution. The normal classes in personal work is under the charge of David McConaughy, who is back for a year from his duties as National Secretary of the India Young Men's Christian Association. He was one of the pioneers in this sort of Bible work before leaving this country, and gives his rich experience to the men. The following topics are suggestive of the work done: Christ's Relation to the Holy Spirit, His Prayer Life, His Use of the Word, How He Dealt with actual cases, (a) the anxious but hesitating, (b) the convinced but unwilling, (c) the indifferent and hostile. The Normal Devotional Bible-class is taught as last year, by William H. Sallmon, general secretary of the Yale Young Men's Christian Association. His "Studies in the Life of Paul," just from the press, form the best text-book on the subject for College Bible-classes. The work is carefully done, and covers such lessons as Paul the student, Paul the persecutor, Paul the convert, Paul the missionary, Paul the preacher, Paul the seer, Paul the apologist, Paul the author, Paul the poisoner, etc.

[662]

Probably the most impressive feature to the average student is the daily service under the trees on "Round Top." The impression about these daily meetings is the spiritual atmosphere. Here in past years hundreds of college men have volunteered to go to the foreign field, if God would send them. Yet there is no suspicion of fanaticism about the place. The hour is in the hands of Mr. Beach, formerly of China, and the men know that a fair presentation of the great Christian vocations will be made. Robert E. Speer hushed every heart as he pleaded for the darker world. Dr. A. F. Schaffler, standing for city missions, reasoned that such effort, if made in New York City, was practically "foreign mission" work. Dr. Alexander McKenzie, in presenting the ministry as a life work said:

"There is no dearth of ministers in New England, and will be no need here of you for thirty years...I would not have you, even if you all came and volunteered for the ministry. I would not take one in fifty of you, unless, when you volunteered, it meant you would go out to foreign lands, or into the West or South."

It is needless to say that the appeal of China, voiced by C. T. Studd, took hold of the student heart. Other Round Top meetings were given over to the presentation of home missions by Rev. C. W. Shelton, and to the Volunteer Movement.

The largest attended daily events at Northfield are the "platform meetings" at eleven in the morning and eight at night. The students crowd the pit of the great auditorium, and the visitors and guests are arranged around under the big gallery. This building in itself is a satisfaction; light, airy, easily emptied through twelve great doors on all sides, with acoustic properties good for so large a structure, with book-store, telegraph office, and ante-rooms under the same roof. Here Mr. Moody's genius as a presiding officer is revealed. He manages these sessions so that the cold and hyper-critical atmosphere in which student days are usually spent is soon supplanted by an earnest soul-searching. This came about this year in a remarkable manner. Robert E. Speer gave four addresses at the opening of the conference. At the close of his address on "The Spotted Life" an unusual scene was witnessed. Mr. Moody, together with the entire audience, was touched to the heart, and hundreds went down on their knees to pray for cleansing.

This narration cannot enter into the details of the platform meetings; but the conciseness of Dr. Scofield's addresses on "Spiritual Power" and "The Collapse of Self," the spiritual unction and warmth of Dr. McKenzie's addresses on "God the Spirit," Dr. R. A. Torrey's Biblical exposition of soul-winning, and Mr. Moody's wonderful addresses on the Holy Spirit and the requirements of service, together with the presence of Mr. S. M. Saylor, the college evangelist, who has just returned from the Pacific Slope—these cannot be passed by.

The character of this World's Student gathering is not wholly shown by the meetings. As nearly every one knows, the week-day afternoons are given over entirely to rest and recreation. The "rest" does not have to be organised, but the "recreation" is under the control of a student committee; bicycle runs, baseball games between nines made up from the larger delegations, a tennis tournament in which any man may enter, and which decides the championship of the conference; these are fortunately planned, and bring the men into good trim for attentive listening and study.

It seems, from the features and functions of "Northfield," that the students are enthusiastic with reason. There needs no extra explanation for the fact that Yale sends this year over sixty men, that they may be trained for leadership. We are not surprised to learn that students, poor in this world's goods, have come hundreds of miles and from various parts of the country to be present; that the smaller colleges strain every nerve to send their ten or twelve best men. And the wonder of it all is that an unlettered man holds this World's College Conference together year after year. The students love him. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."—N.Y. Independent.

Ashanti and the Gospel.

REV. F. HAMSEYER, of the Basle Missionary Society, who from 1869 till 1874 was in captivity at Kumasi, and has known Ashanti in various times and conditions, writing in February last, in conjunction with M. Perregaux, to the secretary of his Society, says:—

"The Lord has heard the prayers of his children, and here we are, free missionaries, and all Ashanti open for the Gospel. All the larger towns and villages are wide open for us, and we are receiving invitations to settle among the people. God has worked changes in Ashanti which the most sanguine friends of Christian missions dared not hope for. Kumasi itself is undergoing such a thorough transformation that I look on now as one in a dream. Where, years ago, substantial houses adorned the streets, hundreds of working-men are now busy uprooting the stems of the Fetish trees, under which, alas! human beings were slaughtered in such numbers that, according to the statement of English officers, fires had to be burning for days to consume the remains of the victims, whilst there are still mounds of human bones to be cleared off.

"Some people in Europe thought it was wrong to interfere with the cruel king; but a look at this awful place would at once silence such a reproach. After the king, with most of his chiefs, had been ordered to be conducted to the coast, only a few insignificant native magistrates were left as superintendents of the town. Then the Governor called them together and kindly invited us to be present at the meeting, where he mentioned that the whole country, as well as Kumasi, was now open to us, in order to begin work as soon as possible. Another large assembly of chiefs took place under the direction of the Governor, when they had come from all parts to sign their contract as loyal subjects of the British Government. Again the gracious Governor, speaking to the Chief of Mampong, declared that the whole country was now open to commerce and missionary activity. We are, of course, deeply thankful that now the people are aware of the Governor's thorough consent and appreciation of our Mission.

"We experience more and more that really all things work for good to them that love God. Even our four years' captivity, with all the cruel tortures of mind and body, may yet bear fruit, for at that time people were asked to call me 'Destroyer of the Nation,' and now they call me 'Saviour of towns!'"

Rev. J. D. Kilburn on Memory.

IN the intellectual and moral spheres man has no endowment more precious than memory. Yet how few have disciplined this endowment, and so brought it under control that it fully answers the Creator's design alike in the quest of wisdom and the service of conscience. Persons who have read to any extent will have some familiarity with systems of mnemonics and methods of memory-training; but comparatively few have indulged in the luxury of taking lessons from an expert, as these have generally involved a heavy demand upon the purse as well as bondage to irksome and cumbersome rules. Sometimes, indeed, the system of memory has seemed to bulk as an end in itself, rather than as a means of gaining knowledge,—has been an object of study rather than a vehicle of learning.

We note with interest that Rev. J. D. Kilburn, late of St. Petersburg, has been giving demonstrations in various Continental cities; and in newspapers and private testimonials hearty witness has been borne to his wonderful achievements. Moreover, the instruction he has imparted has enabled well-known ladies and gentlemen, among them many pastors and Christian workers, to recall words, facts, and figures, which otherwise they could not possibly have retained in their minds. Mr. Kilburn's system consists of two parts, the first being styled volitional recollection, and the second spontaneous recollection. The displays already referred to illustrate the volitional department. By far the most important part of the system is the "spontaneous," which is almost a new classification in mnemonics. Here is the sphere of mental training in the strict sense of the word. Mr. Kilburn claims that his system is based on the very laws of memory, applied with scientific precision. In due course he hopes to elaborate his views in London.

Protestant Deaconesses.

THE twenty-seventh anniversary of the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution and Training Hospital was held on Thursday afternoon in a marquee pitched in the grounds of the hospital. Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., presided.

The report, read by the director, Col. E. Swinton Skinner, stated that no report was issued in 1895, as the Institution was then passing through a period of great trial and anxiety following upon the death of Dr. Laseyron, the late director, who had guided the affairs of the Institution since its foundation with wisdom and tact. In order that an entirely independent judgment might be formed on all matters of organisation and management, a strong committee conducted an inquiry and made many recommendations, all of which had been carried out. As several of the changes involved considerable additional expense, the council earnestly appealed for help to take in a larger number of patients and to have more sisters under training. The sanitary condition of the hospital was excellent, and the number of in-patients had been 559, and the number of out-patients 9,834. The very heavy debt which had accumulated has been paid off through the kindness of a friend, who has lent sufficient to discharge all liabilities. The director also read a letter from Mrs. John Morley, who said that, in view of the interest her late husband took in the Institution, she desired to confer some benefit upon it, and accordingly enclosed a cheque for £1,000.

The chairman in his opening words touched on the serious trials and difficulties which the Institution has passed through since the death of the beloved founder, Dr. Laseyron. As the report puts it, "We are thankful to say these difficulties are passing away," and the whole work is now again on a sound and satisfactory basis. The hospital is in the first place a great benefit to the district of Tottenham, but this is not all, for in training and sending out Christian deaconesses—thoroughly efficient nursing sisters—it is rendering the utmost service alike to home and foreign missions.

A fervid address followed by Rev. J. M. GIBSON, in the course of which he dwelt on the catholic spirit animating the work, and maintained that in Christianity alone is there motive-power sufficient to make such healing institutions as these go. What this Institution aims at is not only to send out the patients cured, but also with a new idea of what Christianity really is. He would have all present pledge themselves to give the hospital a more loyal support than hitherto.

The Vicar of Leyton, Rev. T. H. WILSON, rejoiced that the trustees have proved themselves fully determined to stand by the terms of the trust committed to them, in maintaining in its integrity the religious principle on which the Institution was originally based. It was quite refreshing to hear a representative of the Church of England speak out so vigorously and well on the importance of adhering closely to Evangelical truth, and of providing nurses who will minister to the sick and dying on the simple lines of the Gospel without any sacerdotal admixture.

Dr. GILBERT SMITH opened a vigorous plea by recalling a yachting episode on the Clyde, illustrating the need of the utmost care in the minutest details. As one of the consulting physicians he looked to see the Evangelical Christianity, claimed in the title, bringing forth fruit in the daily life of staff, nurses, and patients; and he rejoiced to be able to bear testimony that such really is the case. He felt the hospital is worthy of all support.

Mr. ELIOT HOWARD urged that this Institution and hospital, needing about £6000 a year to support it, is really doing a great work, and is worthy of liberal and sympathetic aid. Unhappily at the present moment thirty-four beds out of the seventy are empty for lack of funds.

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

THIS Mission has completed its twentieth year; and Rev. John Wilkinson opens his new report with the information that it is forty-five years since he gave his life to work among the Jews and on their behalf. The operations of the Mission are described in the following extracts from the report:—

"The workers at home and abroad now number about sixty; and the work is being extended amongst the Jews all over the world. Our home work is largely concentrated in and around the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., where we conduct medical missions, sewing-classes, night-school, Bible-classes, public Gospel meetings, and a variety of other meetings. Our missionaries visit from house to house, speak to individuals and groups in the street, preach in the open air, and distribute tracts and New Testaments.

"We have also a workshop at the East End for teaching tailoring and shoemaking to poor Jews; a convalescent Home at Highgate, with a boarding house near for Christian Jews; and a Home for poor children situate on Newington Green. Besides a mission station at Liverpool, another at Birmingham, and another just now at Leeds, we have an itinerant mission to Jews in the provinces, and a mission band composed of Christian Jews and Gentiles who preach in various towns during the summer months. By all these means tens of thousands of Jews hear the Gospel in the course of the year, and many have been brought to believe in Christ to the saving of their souls. Abroad the work consists chiefly in the judicious and discriminate, though wide and free distribution of the New Testament Scriptures, Gospel portions, etc., in various languages, among the Jews all over the world. Through our own workers and other agencies, we have already distributed New Testaments and portions to the number of close upon one million copies."

Dr. Althausen, of Wilna, who has for years represented the Mission in Southern Russia, reports visiting a town entirely Jewish in population. He says:—"Not a single Christian lives here. I met a Rabbi; he was not strongly opposed to Christianity, and even knows the New Testament. As a rule the marks left by our New Testament distribution here seven years ago are easily traceable by the greater friendliness of the Jews towards us; they do not oppose us, and listen eagerly to what we have to tell them of God's plan of salvation through Christ."

Pastor Gurland, of Odessa, had hardly arrived in a certain town, when the Rabbi sent round messengers with the proclamation "Men of Israel! Watch! For men have come by night who will offer you forbidden Christian books to lead you astray from the faith of your Fathers. So be on your guard, let no one enter into conversation with them, or touch any of their books." The startling news went from mouth to mouth, and ere the day declined, every Jew in L. knew that Hebrew New Testaments were to be had at the inn, "London."

"Thus (writes the pastor) our adversary, without intending it, had rendered us a service by making the whole Jewish population curious. The first to come, secretly in the evening by the back staircase, were the four sons of the Rabbi! They only wanted to look at the dangerous guests from the passage, but they were soon sitting quite comfortably in our room—where they were attentively considering the forbidden book in their hands. The barriers erected were soon broken down; all the warnings and threats, from those afraid of the light, were in vain. The hungry souls came in ever-increasing numbers and received the Bread of Life, and many sat in earnest conversation with us, often until late at night. Ten days later our stock of Hebrew New Testaments was quite exhausted; heads of families received the last copies."

Country Towns Mission.—The report of this mission affords cheering evidence of revival in various villages, where God is blessing the quiet, faithful labours of the missionary. There are now fifty-one agents labouring in connection with the society, and many of these report good results. Besides the regular stations occupied, special missions have been held in many out-of-the-way places; while in the season special work is done among fruit and hop-pickers in Kent. The secretary is Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Rev. W. L. Holland and Convents.

SINCE leaving the Church of England, Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A., has been preaching and teaching in various parts of West London, and now he is ministering weekly at Addison Hall, Kensington. On Saturday last, at the close of a prayer meeting in the Hall he was presented with a cheque for a hundred guineas, the amount being made up of many small sums by members of the Talbot Tabernacle and other friends. After kind words by Pastor F. H. White, an address was delivered by Rev. Charles Stirling, who referred to Mr. Holland's noble efforts in the movement for convent-inspection, and expressed a hope that he would be richly blessed of God in his efforts to emancipate the poor nuns held captive in our land.

After remarks by Messrs. R. Cory, T. A. Denny, and R. C. Morgan, Mr. Holland acknowledged the gift and the kindness which prompted it. He rejoiced to be able to trust God for temporal as well as spiritual mercies. Passing on to the convent question, Mr. Holland spoke of the recent escape of a nun from an English convent, in which she had been subjected to a series of petty persecutions, and had been represented by the mother superior as mad, though she was perfectly sane. Such was the terrible mental thralldom to which these poor nuns were reduced, that they were terrified at the thought of violating the unhallowed and unnatural vows into which they were entrapped. In consequence, even when miserable they shrank from breaking away, and in some cases, in their infatuation, even went back after having escaped. He hoped it would not be so with this unhappy sister of theirs. She had brought a considerable sum into the coffers of this Romish institution, and it was to be noted that young ladies with money of their own would find themselves inveigled by the artful Romish priests, and assured that they had a special "vocation" for the "religious life," i.e., life within those convent walls. He hoped they would support him in a zealous and persistent effort for the removal of this evil.

From Night to Day.

DARK night—creation seems a void,
The stars are black with cloud;
Through waste, and wood, and wild ravine
The blast wails long and loud:
The heavens and earth are blotted out,
In one black, death-like shroud.

In vain the wanderer in the wild
Looks for a guiding star,
The summits of his native hills,
His cottage lamp afar;
The viewless night has locked him in,
As with an iron bar.

Bright morn—the windows of the east,
Are opened to the day;
The clouds are overlaid with gold,
The sunbeams flash and play
From hill to hill around his home,
He deemed so far away.

Thus night may thicken on the soul—
A night of want or pain;
Or, quenched, the blest Shekinah light
May let us grope in vain,
Out of the way, or wandering back
To Egypt's night again.

Darkened, we know not where we go,
We stumble in the night;
Yet with the King who governs all
The faith of man has might.
O Sun of Righteousness arise!
Repeat, Let there be light!

'Tis morn—and heaven and earth are clear;
We need not stumble more,
But humbly tread the King's highway
In sight of home before—
Lord, keep us in thy light, and lead
Us through the open door.

Donegal.

J. K.
[63]

Letters to the Editor.

A QUESTION FOR TEACHERS.

SIR,—I would like to lay before your readers a question which is to me of greatest importance. Is it right for a preacher or teacher to proclaim, as Evangelical truth, to a promiscuous congregation, any view or doctrine which is not definitely stated in the Scriptures, or generally accepted by Evangelical Christians as truth?

The older doctrinal controversies have, to a great extent, ceased to divide. We have, e.g., come to a pretty general conclusion that God's election and man's free agency are both facts, and there is now no practical or living controversy about them.

But a number of other views are taking their place and separating Christians into cliques and parties. Men of far less calibre than the great men and mighty controversialists of old, are tenacious in holding, and pertinacious in affirming, some peculiarity of doctrine, which cannot be demonstrated, and which, therefore, provokes opposition.

My position is—The Truth is one, and the Church of God is one. The utterances of the ancient Prophets and Apostles never contradicted each other, because they were inspired of God. Evangelists, pastors, and teachers, since their day, being uninspired, are liable to err; but they are instructed by an Apostle to "preach the Word" as they had previously been commanded by the Lord Himself to "preach the Gospel to every creature."

The greater part of every congregation are not qualified to form an intelligent judgment of any peculiar or special doctrines. They need to be taught foundation truths. They gather round their favourite teachers, and by their peculiarities of teaching they are encouraged to say, as they said of old, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ"—only that now other names are substituted for Paul, Apollos, and Cephas, and all claim to be of Christ.

Is it fair to affirm as the truth, before a promiscuous audience, incapable of forming a judgment, doctrines which are not definitely stated in the Word of Truth, and which are not accepted by the general body of believers?

Is it honest as witnesses of Christ, is it courteous to one another, to teach such doctrines authoritatively to an indiscriminate audience who naturally regard the teacher as an accredited exponent of truths upon which Christians are generally agreed?

Is not this the way to produce a number of sects smaller than those which they are superseding, narrow-minded and narrow-hearted in proportion to the emphasis laid upon one or another speciality of view?

I have spoken of promiscuous audiences because I do not dispute the right to discuss in private questions which we have no right authoritatively to declare in public. And I hold that every evangelist, pastor, and teacher is limited in his public utterances to those which he can speak with the authority of the written Word, and not views which he may individually deduce therefrom.

I have not expressed myself fully to my own satisfaction; I shall be thankful for the help of my brethren.—Yours, A DISCIPLE.

PETER NOT THE ROCK.

DEAR SIR,—I am pained to see that the Rev. F. B. Meyer, in his articles of July 2 and 16 on Peter, persists in calling Peter "the Rock." This is not a light matter, nor is it a trifling error, for it is the false foundation on which the Roman Church rears her monstrous assumptions. I must therefore beg of you to allow me to set forth the Bible and Protestant truth in THE CHRISTIAN, where the error has been promulgated. This is the more needful on account of the high character of your magazine for Evangelical consistency.

There is no Scriptural authority for calling Peter "a Rock" or "the Rock." To do so is not only unscriptural, it is anti-scriptural. It is a human device to raise an anti-Christ. There is only one Rock—there is only one Foundation of the Church. These are distinctive titles of the Lord Jesus Christ. There are not two rocks or two foundations. The one Rock is the one Foundation. As for those who hold any other belief, "their rock is not as our Rock." "Other foundation can no man lay but Jesus Christ."

It is wrong to speak of Peter as the Rock:—

1. For that is not the meaning of Petros in Greek. Our Lord (Matt. xvi. 16) said, "Thou art Petros (a moveable stone) and upon this Petra (an immovable rock) I will build my Church."

2. As a matter of fact Peter never became a Rock. Few minutes had elapsed after our Lord called him Petros when Jesus gave him the most severe rebuke ever given to any of the Apostles: "Get thee behind Me—thou art an offence." Again, Peter was no rock in the hour of Christ's betrayal. He was the only Apostle who denied his Master, adding also the guilt of cursing and swearing. Later in his life, after he had been for years a distinguished Apostle, Peter showed at Antioch how little there was in him of the rock, and how much of the moveable stone, by showing his fear of man and dissembling before the Jews from Jerusalem, so that Paul "withstood him to the face" (Gal. ii. 11-14). It is worthy of notice that in this place the best MSS. call him not Peter, but Cephas, as if to show that, however named, whether in Greek or Syriac, he was still a moveable stone.

3. Peter is not a Rock because there is but one Rock, who is the Author and Finisher of our faith.

Not to occupy your valuable space, I merely allude to the fact that the Latin Vulgate recognises the distinction between Petros and Petra. Also how careful Peter himself in his first Epistle is to use a word for stone which cannot be misinterpreted.

I write in no spirit of controversy, but in the interests of eternal truth, and I am, yours faithfully, Rock Ferry, July 18. JOHN HUNTER.

MR. MEYER'S REPLY.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to Mr. Hunter's letter, I have no desire to raise an anti-Christ, or furnish the Roman Catholic with an additional argument. Still, I want to be accurate in understanding and rendering our Lord's words. I have been looking up some authorities.

Alford says, in loco, "The name πέτρος, or κῆπᾱς, signifies a rock."

Stier says, "ὁ πέτρος signifies in Greek also rock, and in the Aramaic κῆπᾱς is not to be distinguished from πέτρα."

Godet says, John i. 42, "The Aramaic word Cepha signifies rock."

Dr. David Brown says, "Peter and Rock are one word in the dialect familiarly spoken by our Lord."

I am willing to admit a distinction between πέτρος and πέτρα. "The former," says Bishop Westcott, "is a mass of rock detached from the latter, the living Rock." Still, πέτρος is not stone (λίθος is stone), but a detached rock.

I am quite willing not to call Peter THE Rock, but he certainly is a rock; and the story of his transformation is the one on which I am engaged.—Yours truly, F. B. MEYER.

Our Donation List.—We would ask the friends who kindly send donations to our care to state explicitly and fully the titles of missions or institutions they desire to help. This will obviate much uncertainty and extra correspondence.

The "Indian Christian."—A new monthly in connection with the Indian Christian Association of Great Britain (published by H. B. Allenson), has a thoughtful paper, by M. Lal Mitter, on native Christians, in which the writer sets forth the difficulties, the sufferings, and persecutions of the Indian convert, who is treated as an outcast—"worse than a dog"—by his Hindu friends and neighbours, and adds:—The time has now come when we can with confidence state that India can only be evangelised through the Indian Christians.

Latest Phase of the Romanizing Movement.—Mr. S. W. Brett, organising secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society, describing a recent choral celebration (i.e., high mass) at the church of St. John the Baptist, West Kensington, says:—"There was a large congregation, but not one communicant. One of the clergy announced that the service was not for communicants, but 'for adoration and worship.' Those," said he, "who wish to receive the Holy Communion can do so at one of the early services." The whole service was contrary to the order and teaching of the Book of Common Prayer. 1. The rubric orders 'there shall be no communion except four (or three at the least) communicate with the priest.' This rubric clearly forbids any mere performance, show, or spectacle. 2. The minister is not only forbidden to enter upon 'the Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper' without a given number of communicants to partake thereof, but in the Exhortation which precedes the 'General Confession' he is bound to invite all who 'truly and earnestly repent to draw near with faith and take' the sacramental elements of bread and wine."

Tibetan Mission Band.

DEAR SIR,—From the correspondence I receive it appears that many friends of this Mission are under some misconception as to the position it now holds, and it therefore seems necessary for me to ask you to kindly publish this letter.

The Mission remains precisely as it was when Mr. Polhill-Turner took up the leadership eighteen months ago, except that it works in definite association with the China Inland Mission. I have within the last few days had the opportunity of conferring with Mr. Hudson Taylor specially over the matter, and it has been settled between us that whilst securing all the advantages of association with the China Inland Mission in the field, the home organisation shall remain entirely separate and independent, and all funds for the Mission be received by me as treasurer as heretofore, to be used for the support of the band. Most of the party are now making their way across China to the China-Tibetan frontier, where they hope to obtain that access to the country which has been denied them from the Indian frontier. It is probable that the remainder of the band still at Darjeeling will go round to the eastern frontier of Tibet in the autumn.—Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM SHARP, Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.
Rowyn, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood.

Philfrican Liberators' League.

IN a booklet entitled "The Open Sore of the World," Mr. Heli Chatelain, the well-known authority on African languages and life, gives some account of Africa's internal slave-trade and a practical plan for its extinction. The organisation of the Philfrican Liberators' League is, in fact, a movement having the sympathy and approval of the prominent philanthropists of the United States, and it will also have the support of others when its aims and objects are more generally understood.

In a word, the League sets itself (1) to gather and diffuse authentic information, regarding slavery and the slave trade in Africa; and (2) to found in Africa refuges and settlements of liberated slaves, in accordance with the Brussels Act. The booklet, giving particulars of the League's plan of campaign, may be had from Mr. Chatelain, 511, United Charities-building, New York.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.—Hastings, which of late has become associated with Mr. Wheatley's Mission by the opening of a Holiday Home, was chosen this year for the annual treat of the scholars attending the various Sunday-schools of the Mission. Nearly 1000 boys and girls gathered in the morning on the Lincoln's Inn Fields, marched to Charing Cross Station, and were carried to Hastings in two special trains. There a happy day was spent in rural and seaside delights. A heavy storm burst towards evening; but the National Schools were kindly thrown open to provide shelter for the children.

The Medical Missions of the C.M.S. are steadily increasing in number. The July issue of The Medical Mission Quarterly, says: "We have joyfully added six new names to the list of those who are actually located, one of these, Dr. Hall (a brother of Rev. Martin J. Hall), has only just been accepted for work in Cairo. We have now twenty-nine different stations, in charge of thirty-seven European and three native doctors, but as the workers increase the cost of the work must increase also. Will our friends remember that we shall need at the very least £5000 this year to make ends meet? We believe that God is blessing the work very abundantly, and it would be a grievous thing to have to curtail the supplies, which are urgently needed."

Manchester Sailors' Mission.—The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Sailors' and Boatmen's Mission was held in the Lord Mayor's Parlour at the Manchester Town Hall, on Friday afternoon. The annual report called attention to the steady development of traffic on the canal and the consequent influx of sailors from almost all parts of the globe, rendering the work of the society more and more important. The work, said the report, was primarily spiritual, and the attendance of the sailors at the regular services held by the missionaries was most encouraging. But apart from spiritual efforts, the missionaries were able to render valuable services to the sailor. To prevent his falling into the hands of "land-sharks" the missionaries met the seaman as he left the Board of Trade offices with his money in his pocket, and persuaded him at once to send a remittance to his home. The report went on to speak of the provision of a temporary home where the sailor may have a good bed at a small cost, and get his meals cooked for him as well. It might be well, the committee thought, to extend this branch of the society's operations, for a valuable auxiliary was thus afforded to the directly spiritual work of the missionaries.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

George Fox and the Quaker Testimony, a lecture by Henry Deacon, is as critical as well as descriptive. Occasionally one is disposed to question the critic's fairness and courtesy. (6d. Elliot Stock.)

Richard Reynolds is a brief but striking biography, by Mary Pryor Hack. (1s. nett. Headley Brothers.) Seven illustrations enrich this little book, which is appropriately dedicated to those who "through many difficulties are earnestly striving to glorify God by the wise distribution of their wealth in the service of their fellow-men."

Quaker Worthies. By W. Garrett Horder. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) Here are studies of John Wochman, Amelia Opie, and Bernard Barton, also discourses on John Greenleaf Whittier, as a man, a teacher, and a singer. Finally, there is a chapter on Tolstoi's doctrine of non-resistance. This is a very readable volume on Friends whose careers were at once charming and instructive.

Apples of Gold, by Jane M. Richardson, is a book for the young that will be heartily welcomed in the homes of Friends. (1s. 6d. and 2s. nett. Headley Brothers, 14, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.) After chapters on Christian doctrine, there are talks on the history of Protestantism and the life and times of the early Quakers. There are several illustrations. The first section of this useful little work, setting forth elementary doctrine, may be had separately as a booklet, entitled, The Children's Saviour (2d. & 3d. nett). All Christian parents will welcome such a guide to talks with the little ones.

Conversations with Carlyle, by Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, is a volume full of personal and historical interest. The new and cheap edition (1s. Cassell & Co.) will doubtless become very popular.

Jacob's Ladder, and How He Climbed It. By Rev. W. Griffith. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) The well-worn story of the supplanting patriarch, and how he got power with God and men, is here retold with freshness, and with many an accompanying lesson for the Bible student of to-day.

The Power of Pentecost. By Thomas Waugh. (1s. nett. Joyful News Depot, Rochdale.) In these chapters on the relation of the Holy Spirit to Christian life and service, Mr. Waugh is at once Scriptural and searching; holding the balance evenly between Divine prerogative and human responsibility.

The Bible and the Blackboard. By F. F. Belsey. (8s. S. Union.) In these "Scripture lessons for eye and ear" both author and artist have aimed at simplicity and expressiveness; the latter not always with success, we think. Mr. Belsey's lessons are brief but most suggestive and helpful to teacher as well as scholar.

Our Baby: For Mothers and Nurses. By Mrs. Langton Hewer. (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. J. Wright & Co., Bristol; Simpkin, Marshall & Co., London.) This is the fourth edition, revised, of a very useful little book. Surely no manual could be more practical! With deserved recommendation, it is bound to run through many editions.

The Transfigured Valley. By Rev. W. Miller. Second edition. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The Bible teaching on the subject of the believer's "falling asleep" is reviewed in this thoughtful little work; and much comfort extracted through the channels of revelation and experience. "Mourners in Zion" should read it and take heart.

Gathered Home (4d. Hudson & Son, Birmingham). Dr. S. C. Morgan says, in a prefatory note, "This little memoir of Edith Gibbs will show what a blessed, happy life a young girl may lead; how useful to the glory of her Lord and the good of others." This story of a bright, consecrated life, should be the means of blessing to many.

The Coming of the Lord, by A. T. Pierson, D.D., is a booklet for the times. The Blessed Hope is considered from two points of view—first, as the doctrinal centre of the Bible, and then as the practical centre. Needless to say the pages join together sound faith and good works, expounding the former, enforcing the latter. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.)

The Royal Invitation, or an Abridgment of "Daily Thoughts on Coming to Christ," by Frances Ridley Havergal, is a large-type roll, designed for display in hospitals and other institutions. The Invitations are taken from Scripture; the "Thoughts" are rich in grace and truth. (1s. E. Curless & Sons, Bridge-street, Bath; John Haddon & Co., Salisbury-square, London.)

The Treasury of Religious Thought, a well-known American monthly, is now to be had in London from Gey and Bird, 22, Bedford-street, Strand. (1s. nett, each part.) The July part gives an illustrated account of the Florence Crittenton Night Missions, and includes a sketch of the Salvation Army. The sermonic matter will be welcome to preachers and teachers.

Notes on the Life of Christ. By the late W. M. Whittemore, D.D. (2s. G. Stoneham.) A series of short and simple studies, for the children, of incidents in the earthly life of our Lord. The author's aim, from first to last, is to set forth Jesus Himself as Saviour, Master, and Friend. Parents and Sunday-school teachers will find herein a mine of helpful suggestions for talks with the little ones.

Jonathan, the Friend of David. By Rev. John Mackay. (3s. 6d. Melven Bros., Inverness.) These studies in the life of Jonathan are fresh, discriminating, and practical. The unselfish character of the young Hebrew warrior, and the traits of his memorable friendship with David are well portrayed. Mr. Mackay is very rich in apt and varied poetical quotation, and altogether he has produced a very readable book.

Ways of Working; or, Helpful Hints for Sunday-school Officers and Teachers. By A. F. Schauffler, D.D. (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union.) This is a manual by one who has had great personal experience, and who has been careful also to acquaint himself with the methods of other experts. Beginners in Sunday-school service should study these pages, which will also profit Christians who have been long engaged in the work.

Behind the Great Wall. By Irene H. Barnes. (2s. Marshall Brothers.) Dr. H. C. G. Moule, in a prefatory note, predicts for this book "a large circle of grateful friends, and a rich fruit-bearing from amongst them." The author gives a graphic account of C.E.Z.M.S. work in the Empire of the East, shows the life of the ladies in Chinese towns and villages, tells of the devotion and usefulness of the native women-workers, and closes with a thrilling chapter on the "Martyrs of Hwa-sang."

Seed Corn for the Sower, by Rev. C. Perren, Ph.D., answers well to its secondary title as a volume of "Thoughts, Themes, and Illustrations for the Pulpit and Platform, and for Home Reading." (5s. H. R. Allenson.) As a fact this is a selection from a Pastor's Note Book, gathered from various sources, the index showing that two hundred and fifty persons have been quoted or referred to, and that nearly two hundred Scripture passages are illustrated, while five hundred and fifty topics are presented. A good sower will know how to use this seed-corn.

The Doctrine of the Ages. By Robert Cameron. (7s. cents. F. H. Revell Co., Chicago.) A contribution to prophetic study, having for its special object the distinguishing of dispensations, and the outlining of Scripture teaching regarding "things that must shortly come to pass." Mr. Cameron writes with reverence; and in commending his very suggestive little book to students, we do not altogether overlook the philological crudities of his treatment of aiōn and its derivative, nor the summary judgment he occasionally pronounces on points in regard to which it is by no means unworthy to maintain an open mind.

The Captain on the Bridge: Pictorial Addresses in Outline, illustrating Gospel Truths and Holy Living. By Newton Jones, Sunday School Union evangelist. (Grapho Press, 77, Leadenhall-street, E.C. 2s. 6d.) These addresses are sure to be acceptable with those who have learnt the value and the impressiveness of pictorial teaching. That these charts and diagrams have already, in a larger form, done good service on platforms, and in connection with evangelistic work, is in itself a testimony to their interest and their excellence. We expect that they will be still more useful in their new errand, and will be practically helpful to many an appreciative worker. About 250 original and selected anecdotes and illustrations are appended to the Outline Lessons, and constitute the latter part of the volume.

The Thirty-nine Articles and the Age of the Reformation: an Historical and Doctrinal Exposition in the Light of Contemporary Documents. By Rev. E. Tyrrell Green, M.A., St. David's College, Lampeter. (10s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) A valuable text book on its subject. The Articles of the Church of England are exhibited in their origin and their relation to other formularies and confessions of faith, ancient and mediæval. They are represented to be not so much a body of doctrine as "a fair Scriptural account of the leading doctrines of Christianity, set out in a way specially suited to the needs of the time when they were composed, together with a condemnation of prevalent errors, both of the Roman Church and of Protestants." The author's standpoint is High Church; and this, of course, colours his expositions throughout.

The Heir of All Things; or, the Book of Revelation, the Unveiling of the Great Events which usher in the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. (3s. James Nisbet & Co.) The spirit in which this book is written, its reverent tone, and its courtesy toward other writers, are much to be commended. Many of its expositions and suggestions throw new light upon its subject. It is written on Futurist lines; it is uncontroversial; the author states his views without contradicting others. With many of its conclusions we cannot agree, but we feel all through that the anonymous writer is one with whom we could take sweet counsel together, and be increasingly convergent in love, even though we found ourselves increasingly divergent in view. But harmony of spirit would promote harmony of view, under the guidance of the ungrieved Spirit of power and of love and of a sound mind.

Messrs. Marshall Brothers have published four new booklets by Rev. Andrew Murray entitled LOVE DELIGHTS TO GIVE, THE CLEANSED HEART, FAITH THAT STANDS IN THE POWER OF GOD, AND THREE THINGS THE CHRISTIAN NEEDS TO KNOW. (1d. each.)

SACRED GRAI SERIES: Mr. G. Stoneham. Under this title tasteful illuminated cards (1d. each) are being issued, setting forth the Gospel plainly. The LADDER OF FAITH is another design with the same intent. New Year and Christmas Greetings are also ready.

THE GOSPEL IN UGANDA, by Messrs. Baskerville and Pilkington (3d. C.M.S.), is a most succinct and admirable addition to the literature of one of the most remarkable of modern missionary efforts. The excellent map and the chronological list of leading events in the history of the mission help to make up a valuable brochure.

SELF-IMPROVEMENT. By Rev. J. J. Ingram. (Culley, 2, Ludgate-circus-buildings.) Into this booklet is compressed a wonderful body of sound advice and counsel for young men in the matter of striving after true success in life. From the same publisher comes a little collection of homely rhymes, by Rev. W. Allen, entitled THE VILLAGE RECITER.

The two latest issues of "The Red Hot Library," published by the Salvation Army (6d. each), are DAVID STOKER, the shy preacher, a notable Wesleyan pastor in the beginning of the century; and RED FLOWERS OF MARTYRDOM, sketches of very young people who suffered for fidelity to Christ. Much stimulus to full surrender may be gathered from their perusal.

THE SMOKING CRAZE. By Frank Ballard. (9d. nett. Partridge & Co.) Despite the palpable hit in his preface at a certain Christian brother in the ministry, this powerfully-expressed protest by Mr. Ballard against tobacco in all its forms is fully justified, in our opinion. "Craze" is not a strong enough title to use; "indulgence," or even "vice," would have been nearer the right mark.

THE GOSPEL IN ROMISH COUNTRIES. By Fritz Fliedner, pastor in Madrid. (6d. Andrew Elliot, 17, Princes-street, Edinburgh.) These pages show the darkness of Spain in particular, and afford some idea of what it costs to profess Christ in such a country. A college in which to train Spanish preachers and teachers, colporteurs, and evangelists, is an urgent need to-day, and to such an enterprise any proceeds from this little book will be devoted.

Nurses on the Lebanon.

THE report of the Palestine and Lebanon Nurses Mission, in connection with the Church of England Women's Missionary Association, speaks of the troubled times on the Lebanon, and of the disturbances between the Druses, Maronites, and Turks. Throughout all God has watched over and preserved the missionary nurses at Baakleen, on a high peak of the Lebanon, twelve hours ride from Beyrout. Over two thousand patients attended the dispensary in 1895, and it is trusted that many of them received into good ground the precious seed of eternal life. The visiting of the families round makes a large circle for us, and taken in connection with attending to the dispensary patients gives to three sisters quite as much as they can do. In the morning it is a deeply interesting sight to see the patients collected and sitting patiently waiting their turn. A sister sits beside them often, ministering to many a weary and burdened soul, and telling them of the Good Physician. Details may be had of the hon. secretary Miss Lloyd, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

Yorkshire Militia.—Mr. and Mrs. Draper are holding open-air services in camp at Redcar among the militiamen out for annual training. Already there is evidence of cheering results. The men come round in hundreds to hear the Gospel. This is the fourth year these services have been held, and men are found in camp who profess to have been saved in past years. These workers—who may be addressed, the Militia Camp, Redcar—would be glad of fellowship in the cost of this special work (which goes on to the end of the month); also gifts of books and tracts suitable for such men.

The Victoria Institute.—The annual meeting of this Institute was held on Wednesday last week, at the Society of Arts House, under the chairmanship of the president, Sir G. Gabriel Stokes, Bart. A large number of members were present, including the Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor, Lord Kelvin, Sir J. W. Dawson, C.M.G., Sir Sidney Shippard, K.C.M.G., and others. The report was read by the hon. secretary, Capt. F. Petrie, and described the objects as tending to unite cultured minds in the investigation of questions of philosophy or science, especially where such are alleged to bear on the received truths of Holy Writ, in order that hasty conclusions on either hand may not be used to the hindrance of science or religion. The number of members had risen to 1500, of whom one-third were resident abroad. The President gave an address, in which he described the bearing of the laws of light on the question of the Röntgen Rays, which he considered merely transverse vibrations of very short period.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. AGIDE PIRRAZINI, of Italy, after spending two years at the International Y.M.C.A. Training School, Springfield, Mass., has returned to his native country, to take up the general secretaryship of the Association at Rome.

The seventeenth anniversary of the Adelaide Association was held at the end of May with great enthusiasm. Progress was reported in every direction. Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, the new Governor of the Colony, spoke warmly on Y.M.C.A. work.

On Monday, July 27, a party of cyclists from the Croydon Y.M.C.A. will leave North End headquarters at 8 a.m. for a tour in Ireland. They will travel via Bristol to Waterford, encircle the Emerald Isle, and return by way of Dublin and Colwyn Bay, visiting the various Y.M.C.A.'s and Soldiers' Homes. Members from any Y.M.C.A. are invited to join the party.

An "at home" was given at High Cross House, Benwell, the residence of Mr. H. Crawford Smith, on the occasion of the quarterly meeting of the council of the North-Eastern District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations, of which that gentleman is the chairman. Mr. F. Robson brought forward a proposal that the council offer for competition during next winter session prizes, with the object of encouraging the study of the Bible and Scripture history in the Associations within the District Union. It was decided to take steps to carry the proposal into effect, and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. It was agreed that the first examination should take place in April, 1897.

The secretary of the Y.M.C.A., St. Louis, writing of the havoc wrought recently in that city by the terrible cyclone, says: "The Young Men's Christian Association has not escaped the general wreck. Our railroad building at East St. Louis was totally demolished, and resembled nothing so much as a vast pile of kindling wood. Our South Side branch was badly wrecked, and the new central building was damaged. The latter damage the Association can easily care for, but our branches are paralysed, and can only hope to rebuild by the help of generous aid from abroad. The railroad companies have suffered such tremendous losses in East St. Louis as to preclude an appeal to them at this time, and our South Side branch, situated as it is in proximity to Lafayette Park, in the very heart of inconceivable ruin, where all the churches, English and German, were swept away, together with hospitals, orphans' homes, and institutions of every sort, will have its resources cut off for a long time to come by the impoverishing of its constituency, while the need for its work will be greater than ever."

A Census of Church Attendance.—The Newcastle Chronicle, in anticipation of the annual assembly of the United Methodist Free Church in that town, took a census of the morning attendance at all places of worship in Newcastle and Gateshead on Sunday week last. The result serves to show that church-going and chapel-going is declining. The same journal took a religious census on October 5, 1881, and it is with the results then obtained that a comparison is made, indicating that public practice is on the down grade in the matter of attendance at religious worship. The estimated population of Newcastle at the present time is 212,000, and out of this number 27,667 attended religious worship on Sunday morning, compared with 22,534 on October 5, 1881, out of a population of 149,549.

Anti-Opium Movement in Japan.—An agitation is now going on in Japan with regard to the sale of opium. The Japanese are seriously alarmed lest the habit of opium-smoking should reach their own shores from the newly-acquired island of Formosa, where it has long been widely practised. The Japanese Governor of Formosa issued in February last a proclamation bringing into force the Japanese law, which strictly prohibits the sale of opium, except for medicinal use, but making an exemption in favour of Formosans, who, having already acquired the habit, should obtain certificates enabling them to obtain their accustomed supply. At the same time the Government took into its own hands the monopoly of the drug, and established official depôts for its sale. These measures appeared highly satisfactory when the news of their adoption first reached this country, but it was somewhat startling to find that, notwithstanding their apparent determination to stamp out the opium vice in Formosa, the Japanese Government had presented to Parliament a budget for the new possession, which contained an estimate of three and a half millions of yen (nearly £400,000 sterling) as the probable yield of the new opium monopoly. The presentation of this budget, though it passed through the Japanese Parliament with little opposition, has given rise to a stormy agitation.

Y.W.C.A.

THE sale of work held in connection with the Edenbridge branch, to benefit the fund for "Our Bible women in India" realised £46.

Our Own Gazette for August will contain the portraits of the five British Presidents of the Association.

The commodious new rooms of the Neath Y.W.C.A. have been opened. Meetings were held during the day, chiefly conducted by Miss Porter, of Swansea.

The coin collection started by Our Own Gazette towards the purchase of the new headquarters is being taken up heartily by a large number of branches throughout the country.

The members of the Dundee Y.W.C.A. recently presented Lady Ogilvy Dalgleish with a handsome testimonial in acknowledgment of the generosity displayed by herself and Sir W. Dalgleish towards the institution.

The World's Young Women's Christian Association Quarterly, the new organ of the Y.W.C.A., addresses French, German, and English members in their own tongue. It is hoped it may become the medium of international communication.

H.R.H. Princess Christian presided at a sale of work, held in the Chapter-gardens, Windsor Castle, on the 14th inst., in aid of the Windsor and Eton branch of the Y.W.C.A. The Queen sent some Balmoral china, shawls, etc., for the Princess's stall.

Next week will be a notable one in the history of the Y.W.C.A. On Monday, 27th inst., will commence the removal of the Central Institute, the various offices, and the employment agencies from 316, Regent-street, and from 16A, Old Cavendish-street, to the new headquarters, 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

The Fulham branch has been compelled to move into more commodious premises at 1, Barclay-road. Increased bedroom accommodation has been secured and everything done to make the rooms homelike and comfortable. Sir George Williams formally opened the new home on Thursday, 9th inst., at 4 p.m. Lady Seafeld, Prebendary and Miss Webb-Peploe, and numerous other friends were present, and great interest in the success of the branch was manifested.

It has long been felt that there is in the Y.W.C.A. a great need of some place where a knowledge can be obtained of the methods and practical work of the Association, and it is, therefore, proposed to open a home for this purpose at 14, Finsbury-square, in October next. The mornings will be devoted to Bible study and lectures, and abundant opportunities will be given for gaining practical experience in the ordinary work of a Y.W.C.A. Institute, and in visiting and assisting Y.W.C.A. and factory club work in various parts of London. There will be two sessions of five months each, beginning in October, and closing in July. Miss L. Duff has consented to be hon. superintendent of the Preparation Home, and Miss Acheson will be her assistant. A prospectus, giving terms and full information, can be had on application to the hon. secretary of the Preparation Home, 14, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

Medical Mission Work in the Lebanon.—The first three months' report of the work at El Bourg, near Beyrout, by Miss Baroodi and Mrs. Lloyd, has now been published, and the results are very cheering. At the outset almost insuperable difficulties presented themselves; persecution had to be silently endured, and prejudice had to be "lived down." The patients number from seventy to eighty weekly, and come from miles round. Dr. Baroodi, brother of one of the ladies, prescribes; and Miss Baroodi, who is a native Syrian, and spent some time in England preparing for her work, attends to cases of eye affections. The Word of God is read to the patients while waiting, and loving words are spoken to them in the name of Christ. Copies of the report may be had from Miss K. Smith, 60, Grosvenor-road, Rathgar, Dublin.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society, like many other excellent philanthropic agencies, finds its income inadequate to meet the demands of the work. The report says: "That there is a large field for the Society to work in is shown by the last census returns, which give 3573 blind persons in the London district. Over 900 of these are visited and relieved, and 600 attend the various classes. The Samaritan Fund has been drawn on a little more extensively this year, but the fund has been administered with great care." In the words of the report, "It seems hard that a Society which, through its visitors, is in such close touch and sympathy with the blind poor, and which for sixty years has so largely helped them, should be compelled to curtail its beneficent operations." The office of the Society is 27, Red Lion-square, W.C., Mr. T. A. Wallis secretary.

Christian Endeavour.

THE Dundee and District C.E. Union have arranged for a series of three united open-air services during the summer.

At the meeting of the Methodist Conference, held in Dublin last week, the secretary, in presenting the report on C.E., said, among other things, the first year in connection with the history of the Methodist Young People's Society of C.E. had been one of considerable encouragement.

In furtherance of the contemplated new mission at Sua-bue, China (to be supported entirely by the Presbyterian Y.P.S.C.E. in England), a rally was held in Trinity Church, Newcastle, on 6th inst. Rev. Dr. Ross presided, and about 300 young people were present. Rev. P. J. MacLagan, from Swatow, urged the necessity of the mission; and Revs. R. Leitch and Jos. Rorke supported the movement.

The Presbyterian Christian Endeavourers held a missionary rally in Mount Pleasant Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, on Monday week. The object in view was to arouse interest in the "Christian Endeavour Fund," which the Foreign Missions Committee has opened for the establishment and support of a new centre at Sua-bue, in the Swatow district of their China Mission Field. Dr. W. Murray Cairns, late medical missionary, Formosa, addressed the meeting. Miss Mann, as the Convener of the Sua-bue Presbyterian C.E. Foreign Missions Committee, gave encouraging details as to the progress of the "Christian Endeavour Fund." The address was followed by a "Free Parliament," on the subject of "Missionary Enthusiasm," which was discussed as follows:—(1) In ourselves, introduced by Rev. P. M. Kirkland, West Kirby; (2) How best to arouse it in others, by Rev. S. Scott, Cloughton; (3) Its practical outcome, by Rev. W. Harvey-Jellie, Waterloo.

Irish Notes.

A SUCCESSFUL missionary conference has been held at Navan, co. Meath. It is believed that much stimulus has been given to missionary work in the neighbourhood.

The Bishop of Mashonaland, Dr. Gaul, is at present visiting Ireland. He has been preaching in Dublin on behalf of mission work in South Africa, where a large number of Irishmen have already settled.

The Archbishop of Dublin preached to a very large congregation in the mission church of the Irish Church Mission in Dublin on Sunday last, the occasion being the public reception of thirty-three converts from Romanism. The whole service was deeply interesting and impressive.

The Dublin Shelter for Men, which has been two years in existence, and which during that period has been self-supporting, is supplying a long-felt need. It had last year a nightly average attendance of over 100 persons. The Home of Rest at Bangor is also doing an excellent work; at present it has seventy-eight young women under its roof.

Open-air evangelistic meetings are being held every Monday evening in Phoenix Park, Dublin, and with very little disturbance. In Athlone no disturbance now takes place at the open-air meetings which are regularly held there, and even in Sligo the opposition appears to be dying out. Altogether, a great future seems to be presenting itself to open-air work in this country.

Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute.—In all its departments, this work, for the temporal and spiritual benefit of soldiers and their families, is maintained. There is constant barrack visitation; troopship work both at Portsmouth and at Southampton; parcels of good reading are distributed among soldiers in all parts of the world, and many letters written to them. Temperance and thrift are promoted; and the women are gathered in mothers' meetings. Mr. Sidney Smith, hon. superintendent, writes:—"We are losing many subscribers by death, and would welcome others. My wife and myself would be glad to give simple accounts of the work at drawing-room meetings."

The National Refuges.—The Earl and Countess of Jersey, on Thursday last, entertained at Osterley Park about 600 boys and girls of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, a society of which Lord Jersey is president. Thursday's fête is an annual affair, and the young guests included the sailor-boys of the training ships Arcturion and Chichester, moored at Greenwich, Kent. The boys' brass bands from the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools, Bisley, Surrey; Fortescue House, Twickenham, and the band of the Arcturion enlivened the proceedings. Two hundred girls from Sudbury and the Ealing Homes also participated in the festivities, which were arranged in a sumptuous manner by the Earl and Countess.

Temperance Notes.

FIFTY Bands of Hope took part in the annual gala at Sheffield.

An Essex Good Templar Cycling Corps for Temperance mission work has just been formed.

Good Templar Mission Van No. 1, has been travelling on a several weeks' mission in West Cheshire; while No. 2 van has ended a tour of some weeks in Essex.

Branches of the Temperance Ironsides are being formed in all the towns visited by Mr. Tennyson Smith. Mr. R. V. Holton has been appointed secretary, with offices at 337, Strand.

The Dover case as to the liability of objectors to a licence to the costs of subsequent appeals is likely to be carried to the House of Lords. The matter is in the hands of the Temperance Council.

A national conference of official temperance advocates, to extend over several days, is being held this week in London. On Saturday an At Home was given at Fulham Palace by the Bishop of London.

On account of leaving the neighbourhood, Miss Green has been obliged to resign the secretaryship of the Y.A.U. at Clapham. Mrs. Woodhead, 1, Nightingale-lane, Clapham Common, has accepted the office.

Reuter's agency wires from Pretoria that the Bill for the total prohibition of the sale of liquor to the natives has been carried by the Second Volksraad. The measure before becoming law has to be approved by the First Raad.

In some way or other Bishop Tugwell finds that gin has been getting into Lokoja, and he has held an important meeting, at which about 600 Mohammedans were present, most of whom were very strong in their desire to maintain the prohibition of the traffic.

A conference of representatives of the United Temperance councils which have been formed, throughout the country, was held at the Memorial Hall, at which it was decided to form a National Temperance Council. Mr. A. F. Hills presided, and the Dean of Hereford and Canon Barker were amongst those present.

Particulars are published respecting the twenty-five leading railway systems in America, employing 198,000 persons. Each of the twenty-five managers declares that habitual drinking renders the employees inefficient. Nineteen forbid the use of liquors by all workers when on duty. Eighteen require total abstinence on the part of their employees.

Sir W. Hart Dyke, in the House of Commons, asked whether the Government sanctioned the delivery of temperance lectures in schools receiving the Government grant. Sir J. Gorst, in reply, said the Committee of Council had sanctioned lectures on the use and abuse of foods and drinks, but had always declined to allow "Temperance lectures," commonly so-called.

The friends of Temperance do not feel at all discouraged by the evidence given to the Royal Commission on intemperance. Thus far experts on the present laws and their administration have been examined. Their evidence goes in the direction of greater rather than of less control in the regulation of the liquor traffic, though it is not cheering to see how magistrates and others give but little heed to the moral aspects of the question.

"Spirit-drinking," says Lecky, "the master curse of English life, to which most of the crime, and an immense proportion of the misery, of the nation may be attributed, began in the early Hanoverian period. About 1727 the passion for gin-drinking appears to have affected the masses of the population, and if we consider all the consequences that have followed from it this fact is the most momentous in the history of the eighteenth century."

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, returning to the subject of drinking-bars at the House of Commons, asked whether the Kitchen Committee had taken legal opinion as to the legality of supplying intoxicating liquors to purchasers without having obtained a licence. In answer, Lord Stanley said that no licence had been taken out, and, as far as he could ascertain, never had, and it was not considered needful to consult legal advisers as to the legality of this long-established custom.

A case of very great importance to licensed victuallers has been decided at Clerkenwell Sessions. The bar of a house in Chelsea had stretched along it an opaque screen with a little space at each end and underneath, by means of which drink could be served. Beer was supplied to a police officer on duty, and it was admitted that the person serving it could not, in consequence of the screen, see what he was doing. Mr. De Rutzen held that the licensed victualler had no right to obscure his view of his customers, and was liable to be convicted of having unlawfully supplied drink to a constable on duty, and the Sessions have now upheld his decision. If this case goes no further, or is upheld on appeal, licensed victuallers will have to look to their bars.

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, with his wife, will sail for New York in the Campania, leaving Liverpool on August 1. He hopes to preach at Christ Church on the first Sunday in September.

Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, of the Liverpool Town Mission, has broken down in health, through nervous collapse. His sufferings during the past fortnight have been great. He will be glad of prayer on his behalf.

Miss Clara M. S. Lowe, who has lately been co-operating with Miss Steer in work among poor lost girls, feels her strength failing, and would be glad of the prayerful sympathy of our readers. Her long service, both in India and in the East End of London, has endeared her to many who will be ready to bear her up before God.

Mrs. Booth Tucker is the victim of a bicycling accident at Orange, New Jersey. While watching a Salvation lass riding she was knocked down by the wheel and rendered unconscious. Her wrist was broken, and her internal injuries will necessitate rest for four weeks, during which time all engagements have been cancelled.

Dr. Barnardo is the subject of the character sketch in this month's Review of Reviews. The doctor and his successful philanthropic career are sketched with a very free and friendly pen, and the article forms the most comprehensive retrospect that we have seen of the achievements of "the father of nobody's children," as Mr. Stead graphically puts it.

Canon Wilberforce, in the course of his sermon at St. John's, Westminster, on Sunday morning, made a pathetic reference to the recent carriage accident from which he and his wife almost miraculously escaped with their lives. It occurred, he observed, nearly to a day on the anniversary of his father's fatal accident, when the Bishop of Winchester fell from his horse.

Evangelistic Notes.

Leyton.—A tent has been pitched in this district in which a mission is being held by Mr. Wooldridge. Many who go to no place of worship have been attracted to hear the Gospel in the tent. Sinners have been convicted and some profess conversion. Prayer is desired for continued blessing on this Gospel tent effort.

Harlesden, N.W.—Mr. Charles Inglis has held a mission at Harlesden. Christians from the various churches worked unitedly in gathering in the far-off from God, and God has given them to see many seeking and finding Christ. The tent was filled night by night for a fortnight, and on Sundays many were unable to gain admission. Mr. Inglis hopes to cross the Atlantic again very shortly.

The Good Templar Grand Lodge of Scotland has been in session in Paisley. The Provost and Town Council accorded a reception to 500 representatives. The report showed a membership of 70,000.

Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel.—In the July issue of The Scattered Nation Rev. C. A. Schönberger gives an account of the daily meetings for Bible study in the Lecture Hall, 114, Whitechapel-road. E. Rev. David Baron describes his last Continental tour. At Utrecht he was privileged to visit Pastor Schouten, who explained his beautiful models of the Temple Mount, and Tabernacle, and other subjects illustrative of Old Testament typology. It may be interesting to many to know that once every fortnight the pastor explains his models to all comers, and in this way has been able to preach the Gospel to thousands of people, with blessed results. (2d. Morgan & Scott.)

Austrian Alpine Mission to Scattered Protestants.—Mrs. Reinmuth has published a brief report of her work for the years 1893-5. A specially interesting part deals with the founding of Emmaus, the Home for aged poor who have been deserted by relatives and friends simply because of their age and poverty. The report says: "It has long been my heart's desire to furnish a little home for some aged Protestant women whom I knew, and our little Emmaus offers a shelter to such as are unable to earn their bread, and have no friends or relatives to support." This loving attention is a Christian contrast to the neglect only too common, which is thus described: "Though crippled with rheumatism, these aged persons are, in many cases, treated with less consideration than domestic animals; they are constantly made to hear and to feel that they are a burden to everyone, and it is easy to understand that they strain every nerve to postpone such a fate, and that many of them would rather die of starvation than become chargeable to the parish." Mrs. Reinmuth's address is 28A, Leechgasse, Grätz, Styria, Austria. Copies of the report may be had from Mr. W. McCluer, 52, Abchurch-lane, Highbury, London, N.

Obituary.

REV. DR. DAVID YOUNG, GLASGOW.

THERE was laid to rest last week in the quiet churchyard of Logie, under the western slope of the Ochils, the mortal remains of a good and true man and Christian minister, Dr. David Young. He was born at Bridge of Allan in 1822. Launched as a preacher, he was favoured with calls from Brechin, Glasgow, Perth, and Milnathort. He accepted Milnathort. After more than eight years he was translated to Montrose-street, Glasgow, in 1859. Ten years later he had the Rev. David Woodside, B.D., associated with him as colleague. The last occasion of his preaching was in 1888. The striking abilities of Dr. Young, his power as a preacher, his administrative qualities, his strong understanding, and firm grasp of public questions were soon recognised and in demand, and scarcely any department of Church activity failed to profit by his services. For ten years he was convener of the Theological Committee, now the College Committee; and he was one of the leaders in the movement for the reconstruction of the U.P. Hall, now twenty years since. He was convener of the committee which brought about the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches in England. One of the most interesting episodes in his life was a tour in the East, through Egypt and the Desert to the Holy Land, in 1870, in company with Professor Eadie, Dr. (afterwards Professor) Duff, Dr. James Brown, and Dr. Cameron Lees.

Caledonian Christian Club.

For some ten years this club has been doing good service on behalf of young Scots coming up to London, ignorant of its temptations, and in danger of going adrift in the great city. The work has proved itself most useful, and has thus gained the sympathy of many influential Scotchmen and Scotchwomen. These mustered on Monday, in goodly numbers, to rejoice in the opening of a new, commodious, and most suitable house at 48, Tavistock-square, close to Euston terminus. The Duchess of Sutherland, who was to have opened the Home, was hindered by illness, but in her place sent her mother, the Countess of Rosslyn, who spoke warmly and well. Mr. H. M. Matheson, president and host, reviewed the history of the work. Mr. Robertson, the secretary, who, with his devoted wife, has done so much to make the whole thing a success, spoke of the dangers besetting young men and women, strangers to London, showed what has been done for such, and how some have been saved from ruin, or reclaimed after a sad fall. As an enthusiast in this service, he maintained that fifty such clubs are needed in London, for Scotch, Irish, and Welsh, as well as English, newcomers to the metropolis. The first fortnight in the great city often shapes a young man's course for good or evil.

Amongst others who took sympathetic part in the proceedings were Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes, Mrs. Burnett Smith—"Annie Swan"—Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and Revs. A. Connell and Hugh McIntosh.

Requests for Prayer.—For services by Mr. William Forbes at Eastbourne.—For blessing on a month's labour by Mr. Albinson at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.

Corsica.—The McAll Mission Quarterly says:—"We are very sorry that M. Piguet is quite unable to continue his arduous work in Corsica. His health, and that of his sister who has been with him, has so severely suffered from the climate, that it is out of the question his returning there to settle in for work. M. Piguet has done a remarkable work in the villages, amid real hardships and dangers, and we greatly regret his enforced retirement from Corsica. We are now seeking a suitable evangelist to replace him, which is not an easy matter, and we ask that special prayer be offered for this matter, that we may be guided to the right worker."

Missionary Party for South Africa.—A large party of representative Congregationalists assembled at Waterloo Station on Saturday, to bid farewell to Rev. Arthur Giles, leaving for Bulawayo, and Rev. Henry C. W. Newell and Mrs. Phillips, leaving for Johannesburg by the Methuen Castle of the Donald Currie Line. Mr. Giles is to take charge of English work at Bulawayo, where a number of young Scotsmen as well as Englishmen have asked for Free Church services; Mr. Newell will superintend similar work at Braamfontein, Johannesburg; while Mrs. Phillips joins her husband, Rev. Charles Phillips, who has taken charge of the "Forward Movement" initiated among the coloured population of Johannesburg. During Mrs. Phillips' brief stay at home, she has secured several important gifts towards the work, including £100 given a few days ago by a Lancashire Free Churchman.

International S.S. Lessons.

August 2.

DAVID'S KINDNESS.—2 Sam. ix. 1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Rom. xii. 10.

DEAL with this story as revealing the kindness of David. It was more than twenty years since David and Jonathan had entered into covenant. Read the terms of it (1 Sam. xx. 14-17). Now that he is established in the kingdom, he remembers and seeks to fulfil his covenant obligations.

Mephibosheth was the son of Jonathan, born during the time of David's wandering and exile. At the time of Saul's death on Mount Gilboa, the child was only five years old. Tell the story of how he became lame (iv. 4). From that time, the fact of his existence seems to have been kept comparatively secret. Hence David's question (1), and the call for Ziba (2), from whom information might be expected. The kindness of David was of that excellent sort that does not wait for opportunities to present themselves, but seeks them out. The most deserving objects for our kindness are those who can only be discovered as they are sought.

When the King's message reached Mephibosheth he was at Lo-debar, on the east of Jordan, not far from Mahanaim. He was with Machir, a generous and wealthy friend, and one who afterwards showed such kindness to David (xvii. 27). It is not surprising if Mephibosheth received the message with alarm, for it was a frequent custom of Eastern kings to slay the kinsmen of their predecessors. What could the grandson of Saul expect but death? Would not David be avenged in him for all the unkindness he had received from Saul?

Yet how his fears were contradicted by the event! Saul's family estate was given him for the support of his household, while he was granted the privilege of sitting at the king's table (7, 9). David conferred upon the son of his friend the greatest possible honour.

This was a noble act of kindness on the part of David. It showed him capable of forgetting wrongs done to him, of returning good for evil, and of remembering the friend who had showed kindness to him.

But the story has another application. It is a beautiful illustration of the grace of God towards us. It reminds us (1) that the kindness of God is shown to those who are consciously unworthy of it. See Mephibosheth's estimate of himself (8). Why did he deem himself so unworthy? Because he represented the house of Saul, which had so persecuted David, and because his lameness seemed to unfit him for a place at the King's table. Such are the people whom God saves. Not those who suppose that their merits give them a claim to God's favour; but those who have wronged God, and who know it; who are unfit for the presence of God, and who acknowledge it. Recall the prodigal's "I am not worthy."

(2) That God seeks men before men seek God. David did not wait for Mephibosheth to come to him. He remembered his covenant with Jonathan, made diligent inquiry, sent for Mephibosheth, and "fetched him" (5). Down in Lo-debar he would have lived and died, if David had not sought him. And how should we ever get back to God if God did not seek us? When Adam had lost everything in the garden, it was not he who cried out after God, but God who came crying, "Adam, where art thou?" It is not the sheep that seeks the Shepherd, but the Shepherd who wanders far in search of the sheep. He seeks us by his mercies; by chastisements; by the messages given through parents and teachers; sometimes by the word of a little child. It was the prayer of a child heard by a drunken father that led the father back to God. He is seeking us; have we obeyed his message, and come back to Him?

(3) That God gives to men beyond their highest expectations. Poor Mephibosheth did not expect much. He feared rather than hoped (7). So do men act with regard to God. They fear Him as an enemy rather than welcome Him as a friend. Remember Moody's story of the woman who refused to answer a knock on rent day because she had not money to pay the rent. She thought it was the landlord coming to demand, while it was actually a friend coming to give the money she required. God calls us, not to take away the best things from us, but to give the best things to us. The inheritance He gives is better than that which Adam lost (1 Pet. i. 4); while He admits us to closest communion with Himself, and gives us a seat at his table! In order to imitate David in showing kindness to others we need first to experience the kindness of God towards ourselves. Have we done so?

Intending Visitors to Scarborough and Whitby will find useful information in the Official Guide of the Scarborough and Whitby Railway Company. Post free from the secretary, Alec. Wilson, Scarborough.

(668)

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

REV. F. V. KNOX has resigned the directorship of the C.M.S. Children's Home.

Rev. James Davis has been instituted to his new charge at St. Ann's, Warrington.

The Archbishop of Canterbury completed his sixty-seventh year on Tuesday.

The Dean of Worcester has, through ill health, been compelled to cancel all engagements and take complete rest for two months.

Rev. J. Gossett Tanner is resigning the charge of Immanuel Church, Maida Hill, where he has laboured nearly twenty-two years.

The committee of the Additional Curates Society have received anonymously a donation of £5000 to provide help for needy parishes.

By the will of Mr. James Arkwright, of Cromford Hall, Derbyshire, several church societies are benefited, namely, the C.M.S., the S.P.G., the A.C.S., and others.

The Bishop of Worcester has invited the Nonconformist ministers of his diocese to spend a day at Hartlebury on the 30th inst. Dr. Perowne, when Dean of Peterborough, inaugurated some joint meetings of Clergy and Dissenting ministers with great success, and as Bishop he is on the most fraternal terms with the Nonconformists.

The Church Congress meets this year at Shrewsbury, October 6-9. The opening sermons will be preached by the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Ballarat, and the Bishop of Rochester. According to the programme, the subjects will include Church Reform, Missionary Service and Training, the Church's Law of Marriage, Elementary Education, the Bearing of Evolution on Christian Doctrine, the Church and Industrial Problems, and the Tendencies of Modern Society. During the sittings there will be three meetings for women on women's work, to be addressed by ladies.

A meeting will be held this afternoon at 3 p.m. to bid farewell to the reinforcement for the Eastern Equatorial Africa Mission in the Lower Exeter Hall. Proceeding to the Coast District there are—Rev. T. S. England, Mr. W. E. Parker, Mrs. Gardiner, Mrs. Pickthall, Miss M. Culverwell. Proceeding to Uganda there are—Rev. G. K. Baskerville, Mr. G. L. Pilkington, Revs. J. L. Callis, H. Clayton, H. W. Tegart, H. W. Weatherhead, and B. E. Wigram, Dr. A. R. Cook, Mr. A. Whitehouse, Miss B. Taylor, and Miss K. Timpon. The closing address will be delivered by Rev. G. F. Head.

Congregational.

A new chapel is being built at Carnforth.

Rev. William Harrop has been recognised as pastor at Healey; Rev. L. H. Mills at Knottingley; and Rev. W. H. Pritchett at Repton.

The London Missionary Society have appointed Mrs. Scharlieb, M.D., formerly of Manchester, to confer with ladies wishing to go out as missionaries, and also to advise the society previous to their being accepted. Mrs. Scharlieb has lived for some years in India.

At the close of the summer session at the United College, Bradford, a special service was held for the purpose of ordaining Mr. Walter Jones to the pastorate at Homebush, Sydney, N.S.W., and Mr. W. C. Chisholm to the pastorate of the Reformed Church, Hamburg.

The vicar of Darnall, Sheffield, Rev. G. G. Swann, speaking at the anniversary of the Congregational Chapel, referred to the proposed enlargement of the chapel, and said no one would hail with greater satisfaction an extension of their work than he. There was need for the work of church and chapel in the village, and he would be pleased to give a subscription towards the enlargement.

The Canadian Congregational Union has held its annual meetings in Montreal, under far more hopeful circumstances than for many years. For the first time since 1885 there is a surplus in the treasury of its Home Missionary Society. Last year the debt burden was very oppressive, but a liberal challenge gift was cabled from England, with the result that in not a single instance has there been a diminution in the grants to the home missionaries, but in some cases an increase.

The Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion has held its annual conference at Tunbridge Wells, Rev. J. Mountain being elected president for the year. It was reported that there were thirty-six chapels, all of which, with one exception, were freehold property. They were free from debt, and during the past five years 2,657 members had been received. It was decided to send out a European missionary to Sierra Leone Mission, and to revise the Prayer-book used in the churches of the Connexion.

Calls.—Rev. G. Ward Siddall, of St. John's, Newfoundland, to Heath Chapel, Halifax; Rev. E. Keen, of Framlingham, to Sedburgh (accepted); Mr. R. E. Jones, of Menai-bridge, to Newborough, Anglesey; Mr. J. T. Rees to Pontymer.

Resignations.—Rev. Percy Francis, of Long Sutton; Rev. M. Owen Evans, of Chester-street, Wrexham.

Baptist.

Rev. J. F. Smythe has opened auspiciously his ministry at Coventry-road, Birmingham.

The jubilee of Grange-road, Darlington, has been celebrated by a series of special services.

Rev. T. M. Rees has left Holyhead for South Wales, having accepted the charge of a church at Barry Dock.

Memorial-stones of a new chapel have been laid at Merthyr. The new building is to provide accommodation for 900, and will cost £4,650.

Fourteen candidates have been baptized at North-street, Leeds, by Rev. E. W. W. Pugh, making fifty-six immersed at this church within the last two years.

Pastor T. J. Hazzard, of "The Lighthouse," Bow Common, E., is much in want of a piano in connection with the Sunday afternoon meetings for men. Perhaps some reader may help in this matter.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, on Monday week, Rev. C. Spurgeon presided over a meeting, at which Mr. William Olney gave an account of the journey to New Zealand from which he has only just returned. Rev. Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin, delivered an address, urging increased steadfastness in Christian work.

The German Baptist Mission shows a steady growth in prosperity. The membership in Germany for 1895 was 25,848, as compared with 24,344 in 1894, while throughout the whole Union it was 33,450, as against 31,099 in 1894. There are 126 churches in Germany, and 169 in the whole Union doing vigorous aggressive work.

The 30th anniversary of Warwick-street, Birmingham, has been celebrated, sermons being preached by Revs. J. A. Sharp, J. N. Knight, and Dr. S. W. Martin, founder and hon. pastor of the church. Mr. Alderman W. Cook, J.P., presiding at the public meeting, presented an address to Dr. Martin, in recognition of his thirty years' labour in Birmingham.

The Worthing Tabernacle, opened in February last, has gone on well with good gatherings. The Lord has given proof of his saving grace. The work is self-supporting—i.e. the offerings are sufficient for the support of the ministry and the general expenses. Help is needed towards the balance of the outlay for galleries, sittings, etc., etc. Friends have kindly come forward with temporary free loans, one of which must be repaid shortly. The amount is £70, and help is wanted towards obtaining this.

Calls.—Rev. D. H. Moore, of Barking, to Vernon-square, King's Cross (accepted); Rev. J. R. Fawcett, of Middlesborough, to Bacup; Rev. J. H. Boyd, of Lurgan, to Waterford.

Resignations.—Rev. H. F. Griffin, of Zion, Cambridge; Rev. A. J. England, of Rothbury Hall, East Greenwich.

Methodist.

New chapels are being built at Buckminster, Bolsover, and Nuneaton.

Dr. Marshall Randles has been elected as president of the Wesleyan Conference.

The erection of a new chapel at Ashopton, Derbyshire, has been commenced, in place of one built in 1840.

The John Wesley Mission Car is working its way through Lincolnshire. The Jubilee Car is at present in Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The mission at Archibongville, West Africa, reports prosperity. A new mission-house is being prepared in England, and will shortly be sent out.

Miss Costin, Bible Christian Evangelist, has offered herself to the committee for mission work in China, and has successfully passed the medical examination.

Dr. Savin, who left for China last December in company with the late Dr. Turner, of the L.M.S., has been wrecked on the River Yangtze. Most of the goods were rescued after being submerged. This makes the sixth Bible Christian missionary wrecked in this same river. Happily no lives have been lost.

Eighteen months ago the Wesleyans of Pontypridd hired a room in a public-house, the only place available, for religious services at Hopkinstown, where a rapidly increasing population is springing up. As there is now a congregation needing greatly enlarged accommodation, the memorial-stones of a new chapel have been laid. The miners, many of whom are very poor, have given generously to the new building.

The annual returns of Wesleyan soldiers and seamen show that there are at present 22,710 Wesleyans in the two services. There are twenty-seven Wesleyan homes for the use of the men, at which 37,300 have slept in the course of the year. In a strength of a thousand Wesleyan soldiers at Aldershot there has not been a prisoner for several weeks past. A site for a new church has been obtained at Sandgate, close to the John E. Gough Memorial Home.

Presbyterian.

The jubilee of Grange-road, Birkenhead, was celebrated last week.

St. Andrew's, Bolton, has been celebrating its fiftieth anniversary.

Rev. John Reid has been inducted to his new charge at Moseley, Birmingham.

The anniversary of the McGill Memorial Church has been observed at Bourne-mouth.

Presbyterian services are being held in a tent at South-end. A site has been secured for a church.

Rev. John S. Pollock, who is the Moderator of the Queensland General Assembly for this year, is a native of County Down, Ireland.

In the Presbyterian Church of Mexico there are sixty ordained missionaries, 111 native ordained ministers, 164 probationers, 17,000 communicants, 50,000 adherents, 444 organised churches, and 615 preaching stations.

Calls.—Rev. J. M. Hunt, of Perth, to St. Ninian's, Arbroath; Rev. J. Moffatt, of Liverpool, to Dundonald; Rev. D. M. Forrester, of Logiealmond, to Springburn; Rev. Evan Evans, to Llangamarch, Brecon.

Resignations.—Rev. T. Howell, of St. George's, Stockton; Rev. R. H. Evans, of Tremadoc.

Society of Friends.

Notwithstanding bereavements in and absence on furlough from India, much blessing attends the work there, and there is evidence that the Holy Spirit is mightily at work among the people. Hope is felt that revival is near, and that larger results than heretofore may be expected.

Bedfordshire Quarterly Meeting had the acceptable presence and help of Joseph Hingston Fox, of Cambridge, and Wm. Hobson, of London, at its gatherings in Northampton, on the 15th and 16th inst. These brethren were accorded a very hearty welcome, and the latter is likely to visit several of the particular meetings in the course of the autumn.

There will be wide-spread regret at the removal from London to Banbury of so noble and successful a worker in every department as Wm. Charles Braithwaite. It will be indeed difficult to fill his place in the Quarterly Meeting he has left, though doubtless Berks and Oxon will rejoice at his gain. The best wishes of his old friends follow him into his new sphere.

Henry E. Clark and daughter are on their way home from Madagascar, and are expected to arrive on the 31st inst. Joseph F. Radley was to leave that island about the end of June. These workers will be much missed, and those left are feeling their stripped condition. John and Emily Sims will have cheered them ere now by their presence and help. Yet the need for more workers is very great.

At London and Middlesex Quarterly Meeting, held on the 7th inst., much desire was expressed that there might be a variety of series of meetings held during the coming autumn and winter in London meeting-houses. Such service is surely needed, and could hardly help having a stimulating influence on the membership, as well as in some measure reaching the masses. Only the Gospel of Christ can uplift and gather in the fallen and lost.

Salvation Army.

An exhibition of the work of the Army in all lands will be held in the Agricultural Hall, Islington, August 1 to 10.

General Booth has finished his month's tour through Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, and Holland. It has been a marvellous time. Not a day has passed since June 10, when he left for Christiania, without some proof being given of blessing.

Mr. Ballington Booth has been holding services in Sing Sing Prison, which has 1400 inmates, many of them serving life sentences. Sixty expressed a desire to lead a better life, among them an ex-minionaire and John Y. McKane, once a noted political "boss."

(For "Fallen Asleep" see p. 28.)

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada	2½ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 " "	4s. " "
12 " "	6s. " "
24 " "	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad. Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Royal marriage last week was one of the happy occasions on which the nation is always glad, without distinction of class or party, to show its regard for the ruling dynasty. There is no feature of our sovereign's reign more worthy of honour and affection than the high ideal of family life which she has held up before her people for so many years, and which has become a tradition to the second and third generation of her descendants. The strength and happiness of all peoples centres in the home; and for those who occupy the highest places in the land to fulfil the responsibilities of home-life well is one of the most potent influences for good in all ranks and classes. May the young couple who have been joined in holy wedlock bear the standard of love and purity as high in their new home as they have been trained to do in their old.

The Students' Conference at Keswick last week was very largely attended. Remarkable progress was reported in Christian work among the young men and women in our colleges and schools, and those who have the direction of the movement are hoping for "greater things than these." We hope to give an account of the Conference in our next issue.

Dr. Randles, the new president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, thinks that the loyalty of Methodists generally to the doctrines taught by John Wesley is due largely to the influence of their Hymn Book and the mutual care and watchfulness one over another which they exercise. This testimony supports an observation which many Christians must have made of the influence of the devotional services upon hearers. The personal teaching of men may vary, but the hymns which are dear to thousands are still sung, and the mind and the heart are still lifted up to God on the wings of their truth. As long as ever "Rock of Ages" is a favourite, so long will there be a testimony to God's great love, to the value of our Saviour's death for sin, and to his power as a living Saviour to save to the uttermost.

Recent signs of national resentment of clerical interference, especially with education, seems to have taught the High Anglicans a lesson of caution. They are very angry at their rebuff, and the way in which School Board elections are going in many parts cannot reassure them. One of their organs is now busy in repudiating the charge of clericalism, and in fixing it on other persons. It gravely assures us that "our friends do not understand what clericalism really is," and proceeds to define it as the combination of the clergy as a political party, without any definite politics, in order to make their influence supreme in political questions." Such a state of things may be found in France, but not as yet in England. The English people have a simpler definition—the interference of priests as priests in things outside the church for the purpose of bringing men into bondage to themselves. This, we believe, would have been one effect of the Education Bill. All this explaining away will not throw intelligent people off their guard.

The philosophy of history varies with the philosopher; and the philosopher very likely varies with the times. If ever there was an intensely Protestant movement it was the Evangelical Revival of the last century; if ever there was a Roman Catholic movement within the Church of England it was the Tractarian movement of 1833. The two have always been regarded as different in principle, in aim, in method, in result. The one followed the other, but was not its effect, any more than the day is the cause of night. Now, however, The Church Times comes to tell us that this is all a mistake, and that the "Catholic Revival was the result of the Evangelical, a fulfilment of it, and in itself almost impossible of occurrence but for its precursor." The principal force of the Evangelical school was self-consciousness, which, we are told, is absolutely necessary in a living Church as a preliminary to the teaching of the Catholic school which leads out of self into "reverence for the diverse elements of God's creation."

The theory is little in itself; as a sign of the times it is significant. It shows, along with other things, that the High Church party having been rudely repulsed by the Papists in their efforts at reunion, are seeking to make peace with their neighbours, at least for the time being. They are also seeking to restrain the more forward of their own number, and to avoid some obvious dangers arising from this very "reverence" which they say it is their business to teach. Thus, The Church Times says that where an organ costing £1000 would suffice, it is "a sin against reverence to spend £2000 whilst thousands of people are left to perish in their sins for want of priests and sacraments." They will not lay themselves open to the accusation of thinking more of the material house than of "the stones now waiting for the touch of life which shall put them in their places in the house not made with hands." Part of this long leader reveals a change; another part shows no change at all—men are to be "saved by priests and sacraments." Evangelicalism knows nothing of such doctrine.

Dr. Fairbairn says that the first thing he asks of a man who comes to him wishing to be a teacher of others is: "Are you prepared to endure hardness, to carry in your soul the souls of men, to bear reproach, and never let it be known you bear it? If so, you are fit; but if not, seek some other work." The meaning of this question, so searching and yet so fitting, is, that the world is not on God's side, that it will not take meekly the reproof of its sins, and that he who will live godly must suffer persecution, although the persecution may not take the form of physical violence.

The question as to how far it is right to promote the circulation of religious periodicals by making use of Sunday services for the purpose is one that is assuming a serious aspect in the Principality. The Welsh Calvinists have recently started a publication department, and it is asserted that nearly all their literature is sold on the Lord's Day. However desirable it may be to encourage the dissemination of good books and periodicals, this method of doing so is more than questionable. No one who has any regard for the sanctity of the day would care to see this custom extended to other kinds of literature, but it is difficult to see how the line is to be drawn. Once the habit is formed of trading in the name of religion, those who wish to do so on their own account are not likely to leave a stone unturned to make their opportunity. There are other obvious abuses which may result from the same cause. The more jealous we are in guarding the Day of Rest from contamination, the better will its sacredness be defended. Some strong remarks have already been made in the secular press on the subject.

There are three methods by which the lives of men may be changed. The first is conformity to the outward standards of decent or desirable behaviour, the ideal of which is respectability. This may be good or bad, according to the standard of respectability which may be popular at the time; but it is at best a mere external medicine for an inward malady. The second is reformation, which is better, in that it presupposes a sense of wrong-doing and a real desire after self-improvement. But it is piecemeal at best, and does not touch the springs either of good or evil, and for lack of moral vigour and motive-power, it may fail to attain to anything high and effectual. The third is radical transformation, the renewing of the inward man of the heart, by the implanting of a higher nature, the New Man, Christ Jesus. Death and resurrection are the secret of the Christian life, and form the only true basis of it. No other goes to the root of the evil; no other rises to the heights of possibility in spiritual attainment.

True courtesy is of the heart, not of the manner, but it carries the manner with it as a beautiful form carries its garment, with ease, and lightness, and grace. We do not give this virtue its proper place in our religion, and yet it is one of the flowers of the religious life. No one was ever so courteous as Jesus Christ. He fulfilled all his social relations with a perfect grace, that exhaled like a perfume from his great and loving heart. He was thoughtful of all around Him in little things, paying attention to their wants, and meeting their needs with unfailing tenderness and loving care. We should not forget that in this He left us an example, that we might walk in his steps. As He was specially kind to the poor and the outcast, so we should try to lighten the burden of poverty and friendlessness, and ease the path of old age and weakness by the infusion of a bright and cheerful spirit into all our dealings with those who are thus weighted. And as He was ever thoughtful of those whom He lived and worked with, and was among his followers "as one that served," it should be a care to all who have servants and employes, to deal courteously and kindly with them all, knowing how hard their lot often is, and how much brightness and joy depends on trivial attentions and tiny acts of thoughtfulness.

There are signs of a longing for the prayer-meeting to be established in its old place in the heart and in the services of the churches. In many of them it has never been deposed; in too many it has; or has been replaced by the "week-night service," in which exhortation rather than prayer frequently predominates. "We don't have none of them things now," said an old caretaker to a young man when he revisited the church where he had first learnt to pray. A new minister had come who had discontinued the prayer meetings and outdoor preaching. It is cheering to hear men say, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord." As it is true that no good thing can be done without prayer, so also it is true that if we ask we shall have. Strange that the way should be so plain, and so few comparatively be willing to walk in it. It may be humbling to pride, but it is very honouring to faith, and the very joy of the heart that loves to see God glorified.

The horrors of cheap tailoring, and other similar iniquities, are from time to time revealed by some painful incident. A shout of indignation is raised; the evil is lost sight of and forgotten; the wronged and the wrongdoers are left face to face with each other again, and the whole bad system goes on unchecked as before. How much feeling has been spent on poor underpaid, overworked seamstresses since Hood wrote his "Song of the Shirt"? Yet the eyes still grow dim, the fingers weary, and the wages are often shamefully poor. For this the public is largely responsible.

There is at last some hope that Russia is going to wake up from the extraordinary lethargy which she has shown towards the rights of the Christian population under Turkish rule. The tone of the Russian press has materially altered during the past week on this question. It is stated that the cause is to be found in the fact that the Czar has recently really been put in possession of the case against Turkey from a reliable source, and that he has given vigorous expression to his disgust at the treachery and incompetence of the Porte. Almost simultaneously, the tone of the German press and court has undergone a salutary change in the same direction. If this really means what it seems to mean, we may hope to see the poor remnants of the Armenian people rescued from utter extinction, though it is too late to hope for more. Nothing can wipe out the record of shame and disgrace that Europe has incurred in this pitiful business. But it will be something if the horrors of Armenia are finally put an end to, and the Cretans saved from the same fate as has been brought on their fellow-Christians in Asia Minor. Meanwhile, we hear of a Turkish official being dismissed for humane actions.

(674)

Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

DEAR FRIENDS,—The following letter was written by Miss Bella Ferguson, a member of our Mission, for her personal friends. Thinking that it will be interesting to others, we send a copy to friends of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. We thank Him for sending us Miss Bella Ferguson, a worker so fitted for Tibet, being filled with his Spirit. The shop, which is very little trouble in itself, as Puntso helps with it, has drawn many to come and see us, and thus hear about Jesus, and get copies of the Gospels and Mrs. Grimké's text-cards. On the Lord's Day, when the shop is shut, we invite all who come in time to stay to the Tibetan service, and Tibetan friends often drop into family worship, which we hold every morning and evening.

The trials connected with the work have been not a few, but out of them all the Lord has delivered us, and they have tended rather to the furtherance of the Gospel. May the Spirit of prayer for Tibet abound in your midst, for God has said, "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

With Christian love to our fellow-workers for Tibet in prayer and gift.—Yours in the service of Jesus, ANNIE R. TAYLOR.

Yatung Tibet, via Darjeeling, India.

MISS FERGUSON'S LETTER.

I give some extracts from my diary of the journey here, and describe the present surroundings of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, in the expectation that you will pray more earnestly than ever for the further opening of the country, and of the hearts of the people, to the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

After a delightful voyage from Liverpool on board the s.s. City of Calcutta, I arrived in Calcutta on March 14, and was met by a friend from the Y.W.C.A. Home, where I boarded for the few days I was there, receiving practical kindness from dear Miss Beaton (the superintendent) and her workers, and enjoying sweet fellowship with them in our one Lord. On March 18 I left by rail for Darjeeling, a distance of 365 miles. Our first change was at Damooklea, where we crossed the river Ganges by steamer to Sara Station, and caught the train, in which we spent the night.

The first part of the journey from Calcutta is over comparatively level ground, but, next morning, on arriving at Siliguri, we changed to a tiny mountain railway, which mounts up through magnificent scenery to an elevation of 7,000 feet. This railway is considered a masterpiece of engineering. It winds along the mountain spurs, sometimes at the very edge of a steep precipice, when you can look down on the line over which you have already travelled. At times we catch a glimpse of the engine first on one side and then on the other as it crosses and recrosses the steep ascent, or the train describes a loop by a bridge over the track it has just passed, or the ascent is accomplished by a zigzag, when the engine alternately pushes and pulls.

At Kurseong we stopped for lunch, and I looked out for the members of the C.I.M. Tibetan Mission Band who, I had heard, were on their way to Shanghai, to work towards Tibet from the Chinese side, after a time of study in the C.I.M. Training Home. I saw five of them, and was glad to tell them how incessantly they were remembered in prayer by the Home friends. We parted after remembering together the prayer of our Lord Jesus, "That they all may be one," very pleased to have met for a few moments' fellowship.

At Ghoom I met Mr. C. Polhill-Turner, their leader, whose acquaintance I had the pleasure of renewing, as well as that of Mrs. Polhill-Turner, during my short stay in Darjeeling. He joined the train for Darjeeling, and on our arrival there introduced me to Miss Susette M. Taylor, who was on the way to Yatung to visit her sister Miss Annie R. Taylor, and had kindly waited for me.

I was lovingly welcomed and entertained by Pastor and Mrs. H. Rylands Brown, and had the pleasure of seeing a little of the work carried on by the Union Church, of which Mr. Brown is pastor, and of speaking a word to the Sunday-school children regarding their privilege in giving themselves in their early days to the Lord and to his work among the heathen.

I enjoyed visiting, at Miss Reid's invitation, the boarding-school of the Scotch Church Zenana Mission, and seeing the little Nepali girls cosily tucked in their native beds and the older girls knitting or sewing. The work amongst the British troops was rendered especially interesting by the visit of Mr. W. A. Harrington, who has been instrumental in securing prayer-rooms in almost all the barracks of India. The walls of the Jalapahar prayer-room, where I attended a meeting, are covered with Scripture texts. Meetings were held at both Jalapahar and Katapahar, about half-an-hour's climb from Darjeeling.

Before leaving Darjeeling, I had the privilege of addressing a number of friends interested in Tibet, whom Mrs. H. Rylands Brown and Miss Susette M. Taylor invited to meet me.

Before leaving home for Tibet the Lord had given me the text, "I am the way." On reaching Darjeeling I received from Miss Annie Taylor the pass for the journey through Sikkim and information that permission for me to reside at Yatung had been given. A journey of seven days, walking and riding, through unknown country, not knowing the language of the people, with the luggage to be carried either by coolies or mules, and all provisions to be provided in advance, would have been a serious matter. But the Lord had made gracious provision. Miss Susette Taylor had been as far as Gnatong before when visiting her sister last year, and knowing Hindustani could make necessary arrangements, besides being a delightful fellow traveller.

(To be continued.)

Sailors at Grand Canary.

AFTER a stay of over five months in the midst of mission work among our English sailors at Port Luz, Grand Canary, it has struck me that a short account of it might interest your readers. Five years ago Mr. and Mrs. Searle landed at Port Luz. The work began on a very small scale, but now there is a very comfortable Institute, and sleeping accommodation for ten sailors. The Sunday evening services have been a blessing to many. All present are dealt with honestly and lovingly, and whether the gathering be great or small the message is given as from dying man to dying men. Away from home associations, and in a place like Port Luz, the Christian Institute is a haven of refuge. There are lots of other places for our sailors to go to, but all are drinking shops, and of the very worst kind.

No kind of mission work can possibly appeal to us more than this, which holds out a helping hand to our own countrymen when far from home and hallowed influences, and surrounded by Satan's strongest wiles. A bottle of wine can be had for 3d. or less anywhere on the island, and to those whose temptation is drink this is insurmountable. But a vessel is no sooner seen in the harbour than it is boarded by Mr. Searle, who talks to the men, and invites them to the Institute, and many are only too glad to accept the invitation. They receive a warm welcome, and both the missionary and his wife devote themselves to them all through the evenings. Those quiet personal talks are the opportunities for sowing the good seed, which in God's own time is sure to take root, spring up, and bear much fruit.

It is a work that needs very specially the faith which wavereth not, for to the sowers is not often given the joy of seeing the fruit of their labours. Here the community is ever changing; a vessel comes in, stays ten days or so, and is off, with very little likelihood of ever returning with the same crew. The work is done for the Master, and He knows the results, and treasures each one.

On Sundays, and very often on week-days, Mrs. Searle is seen sharing her husband's labours on the ships, and it is a treat to see how she is welcomed and trusted by the men. Her ready tact and honest, straightforward way of speaking to them attracts and keeps their attention. Many a mother, if they know what their boys are saved from during those days on shore, would, I am sure, breathe an earnest prayer for a blessing on behalf of the hard-working friends in charge of the Sailors' Home in Port Luz.

I should like to enlist the sympathy of your readers in this noble work. There are many ways in which they could help it on. Magazines (more especially illustrated ones) are always welcome. Nothing could add more to the attractiveness of the Institute than a good piano or harmonium. Col. Morton, of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N., is treasurer. Above all, may the prayers of God's people ascend for a blessing on this good and noble work.

Edinburgh.

A. P. MAIR.

Requests for Prayer.—For evangelistic services to be held at Churchtown Presbyterian Church, Kileara, by Mr. B. Jackson. The Lyons (France) Y.M.C.A., on behalf of the present and coming season's work, that conversions may be numerous and permanent.—For blessing at Gilford Hall, Sandymount, Dublin.

The Missionary Problem.

By REV. W. CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B.

THE Missionary Problem is the greatest; and he who solves it is the wisest of ecclesiastical statesmen and Church leaders.

The solution is rarely found, where one would expect to find it, in missionary sermons, speeches, and books; and it is seldom there is any hint of it when Christian men meet in conference to discuss the affairs of Christ's kingdom.

An ancient Psalmist understood the problem, and had clear vision of its solution when he said: "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; THAT thy way be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations" (Psalm lxvii. 1-2).

In that prayer—in the structure and development of it—are outlined and shadowed forth the true method and procedure of missions, God's plan of missions. Spiritual revival within the Church first—the Church purged, and spiritualised, and filled with God first—and then, the outburst and overflow of the inward life, in salvations and evangelisations. That is the law of the matter. And every genuine aggressive movement of the Church, in the past, has observed it; and every genuine aggressive movement, in the future, will observe it. Nor is there any mystery about it. It is level to every man's common sense. The Church cannot give what it has not got, nor do what it has not the power of doing. The measure of the outward must always be the measure of the inward. Far, far back, the principle was laid down in God's promise to Abraham: "I will bless thee...and thou shalt be a blessing" (Genesis xii. 2)—I will bless thee first; and then, thou shalt be a blessing. And all through the ages, that has been the principle. Those who are a blessing are themselves first blessed. Revival within the Church; and then, the righteousness going forth as brightness, and the salvation as a lamp that burneth; the Gentiles seeing the righteousness, and all kings the glory (Isaiah lxii. 1-2). Repentance and remission of sins must be preached in Christ's name among all nations, but not until there has been the tarrying in the city of Jerusalem, and the enduement of the power from on high. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts i. 8). "God be merciful unto us"—unto us first—"and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us." For what purpose? "THAT thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."

THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD CONDITIONED UPON GENUINE REVIVAL WITHIN THE CHURCH! That is the teaching; and it is the great truth that has to be proclaimed, reiterated, and enforced with prophet voice and earnestness. It is the message for this missionary age, and for the new century of missions. The Church stands sacramentally between the living and the dead, between God and perishing men, and is a channel of life and a medium of saving energy, in proportion as she is spiritual, prayerful, holy, instinct with God. Oh, the Church's responsibility! and her glorious privilege and opportunity! exalted to that position, established in that connection, a kingdom of priests, the Body of Christ, the ful-ness of Him that filleth all in all! Into her, through her vital organic union with Jesus, and according to her receptiveness, is poured the river of living water, and from her it flows. Oh, the mystery of it! and the blessedness! and yet—and yet—the awful responsibility of it! Hindering, or helping, limiting, or giving free course to! It is unspeakably solemn; but when the arm of the Lord cannot save, the cause is with his Church.

What necessity, therefore—what urgent necessity—for the prayer of the Psalmist: "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; THAT thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." It is a prayer for the times. It is the prayer with which to inaugurate the new era of Christian missions. The prayer answered—and the answer means a purged, spiritualised, God-filled Church—God's way would be known upon earth, and his saving health among all nations.

The Prayer is THREEFOLD; there are three petitions in it.

(1) "God be MERCIFUL unto us." That is the first; and it is the first always, and with everybody. We begin with mercy; we deplore and confess our sins and shortcomings, and cast ourselves on mercy, the mercy of God in Christ Jesus. And it is there—down there—where the Church of God in these times has to begin. She has to deplore, and confess her sins and shortcomings, her many failures, and great unfaithfulness, and cast herself on the mercy of God. It is the indispensable initiative. The step must be taken if the Church is to be prepared for her new and great missionary enterprises. There have been thanksgiving services, and there ought to be these; but there should be humiliation also.

(2) After mercy comes BLESSING. "God be merciful unto us, and bless us." Repentance and forgiveness, then blessing. That is the order. And what blessing! The incoming of God; new measures of his life; the cleansed vessel is filled; there is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 38). "God be MERCIFUL unto us, and BLESS us."

(3) But there is a higher stage still, a loftier attainment—the culmination of the ascending spiritual gradation: "CAUSE HIS FACE TO SHINE UPON US." What exaltation there is there! From the valley of humiliation to that height, from mercy to that wondrous grace! A Church, so purged, and spiritualised, and consecrated, and indwelt by the Holy Ghost, that God looks upon it with approval, causing his face to shine upon it! What a Church! "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!" How attractive! And what a soul-saving, world-evangelising, all-conquering Church! What triumphs and progress for the Church upon which God "causes his face to shine," which God so favours! She shall no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall her land any more be termed Desolate; but she shall be called Hephzi-bah, and her land Beulah, for the Lord will DELIGHT in her, and her land shall be married (Isaiah lxii. 4).

Here, then, is the solution of the problem of missions. Here is the Divine plan of missions; God's method in all the ages; and his method for this age, with its vast opportunities. The world is all open to the Gospel; the fields white everywhere unto harvest. And this method apprehended, in this great juncture of missions, and believed in enthusiastically, and preached, and realised in practice—the motto and creed of a new propagandism within the Church—the device on the Church's banner—another device would soon be emblazoned there, by authority of God, and fulfilled: THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

It is all in the Psalmist's words—the whole philosophy of Christian missions—and plain to the most ordinary understanding. Oh, that the churches, and the missionary societies, in this special and pregnant time, had clear vision of it, and assented to it with a full-hearted assent, and set all their aims and efforts and praying in the line of it! Then would the world's "New Age" dawn, and the final triumphs of the Cross be achieved; the knowledge of the glory of the Lord filling the earth, as the waters cover the sea (Hab. ii. 14).

In the prayer of the Psalmist is the message for INDIVIDUAL CHURCHES also, in their LOCAL missions and work. We must begin with ourselves; the ascending gradation, "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us," having answer and realisation in our spiritual experience first. The practical heathenism around us can only be reached and converted by living, holy, self-sacrificing, God-filled churches. There is no other way; there is no other plan. Every plan fails but this; this never fails. But, alas! all plans are tried but this. Every congress, every conference has something new to propose, and to discuss. There is, somehow, a strange and perverse and sceptical reluctance to fall back upon and conform to God's plan. Would that there were another spirit in our gatherings, and another trend in our schemes and proposals. The cry is raised: "Back to Christ!" And we repeat it: "Back to Christ!" Yes, and back to his principles, and methods, and order; and back to his power; let there be uttermost faith in and reliance upon the Holy Ghost, and obedience to the Divine will, and prosperous days will come to the churches. Then prosperity will not be on the surface, a spurt and a spasm, but deep-rooted and permanent, the outcome and efflorescence of God's life. "I will bless thee...and thou shalt be a blessing"... "I will make them"—them first—"and the places round about my hill, a blessing" (Ezekiel xxxiv. 26)... "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; THAT"—IN ORDER THAT—"thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations"!

Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque.

EVER since the Sailors' Rest was opened, over three years ago, we have felt the need of a room on the ground floor for a coffee-bar, to counteract in some measure the evil attractions of the drinking saloons by which we are surrounded. God has given us a house in every way suitable, containing a good-sized mission hall, a reading-room, and coffee-bar on the ground floor, entered from the street, which was opened six weeks ago, and has proved successful beyond our expectations.

The Bethel services, English and Scandinavian, are well attended, results having already followed. At one of our meetings, noticing the earnest, anxious look of a young sailor we had frequently spoken to about his eternal welfare, we again spoke to him, and found he had decided to yield himself to Christ; his conduct during his stay in port proved the reality of the change. A few days ago we had the joy of leading two others to the same loving Saviour, both of whom told us that through coming to the Sailors' Rest they had decided to lead a different life.

Whilst thus blessed spiritually, the expenses incidental to entering our new premises, fitting up coffee-bar, etc., have emptied our exchequer, and we should be glad of help, so that this fresh departure in the work may not be crippled.

(Mrs.) A. STEWART MACKENZIE.

Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque, France.

Letters from S. Africa.—27.

CAPETOWN.

AT Wellington, C.C., on New Year's Eve, I met Miss McGill, a dear and valued friend of Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Murray; before I returned to Wellington, on my way home, she had been called to the Home above. She was a devoted friend and helper of the Y.W.C.A. at Capetown, and was highly valued by a large circle of Christian friends. The following extract from a communication by Miss Scott, hon. sec. of the Y.W.C.A., will interest not a few in Cape Town and in the Colony who hold Miss McGill in loving remembrance:—

I first met Miss McGill in April, 1888, at this Association, having landed the previous day from England. A little woman, with a kind, sweet, capable face greeted me—a face, as someone has said, you could never forget, a true index to her character. She had the rare talent of an attentive listener. Not only Christian workers of all ages came to her for advice and sympathy, but “all conditions of men” and women, good, bad, and indifferent, found in her a patient hearer, a wise adviser, and, wherever possible, a willing helper. Few could have been more generous with such small means; and over and over, when she came in beaming with joy, it was “a donation for the old ladies’ home,” where she had been lady superintendent at one time till her health failed, but still continued its main-spring and personal friend to each inmate.

“Comfort the feeble-minded” came to me with quite a new light as I watched “Aunt Maggie” day after day listening with a bright smile to one and another of the many uninteresting and rambling people who had but little to say, and did not know how to say that. Some came so depressed, body and mind giving way, that the cases seemed almost hopeless, and I have seen their very faces change till it was difficult to recognise them, after a few weeks or months.

The Lord was her physician for body as well as soul. Shortly before her seizure, being asked by a friend, “But what would you do if it came to a very dangerous illness?” she replied, “My dear, I have trusted the Lord with my body thirteen years, and I am sure He will make it perfectly clear to me and to my friends.” And so it proved. She was taken ill March 24th; became unconscious in a few hours; two doctors pronounced medicines useless; she lingered, lovingly and tenderly nursed, till Saturday night, March 28th, when she passed peacefully into the immediate presence of her Lord, in her seventy-fifth year. On March 30, amongst the very large gathering round the grave were few who did not feel they had lost a personal and loving friend.

She had expressed a wish that her place as president should be filled by Mrs. C. Cleghorne, who had been very closely associated with her in much of the work—a lady of like spirit, and a very fit successor to her friend.

Just after Miss McGill's death a member of Mr. Murray's family remarked, “Who now will sympathise with everybody?” I seem to hear “Aunt Maggie's” reply at my side, to each of us, “Well, you let the Lord Jesus so fill the gap in your life and heart, that He shall use you to sympathise with and to counsel others, and the wonderful promise shall be fulfilled, ‘The Lord is able to give thee much more than this’” (2 Chron. xxv. 9). Ask God to do the impossible” (Matt. xix. 26).

THE S.A.G.M.

I must mention the zealous work of the South Africa General Mission at Capetown, as well as at Johannesburg and elsewhere. Its chief directors in the Colony are Mr. Dudley Kidd and Mr. Frank Huskisson. They have a staff of ladies who do very effective work, both in their halls and out of doors. They had taken a great circus in Capetown, which drew a large number of people on Sunday evenings, and at their week-evening meetings in their halls there is close personal dealing with such as are willing to receive it. A very fine new hall has lately been opened in Johannesburg, and an out-and-out evangelistic work is carried on in ways appropriate to that very go-ahead city. Mr. W. A. Campbell, of Glasgow, whose gifts as an evangelist are well known at home, conducted a week's mission there at the opening of the new hall.

At Capetown a useful feature of the Mission is a depôt for Christian literature. Here a full and tastefully-printed report of the Wellington Convention has just been published, from which I extract an account of the Greytown Revival. I wrote of this in Letter 15, but other particulars are here supplied by Mr. Botha, with whose remarkable and decided conversion this most interesting work originated. The story was told at the informal open-air meeting on the Thursday of the Convention, at which also the stirring experience of Mr. Oudendal was given, as related in my Letter 19.

THE GREYTOWN REVIVAL.

Mr. Botha said: “In the year 1882 a thunderstorm burst over my farm in Natal in the Greytown district. A native was killed by the lightning while in the kitchen. The Holy Spirit used this event to awaken the question in my heart, ‘Where would you have been if that stroke of lightning had struck you instead of that native?’ I had been a religious man in a formal sort of a way. I was religious, but like so many round me I was quite unconverted. For six months I was under deep conviction of sin, but did not know the way of salvation. While in this condition Mr. William Murray, of Worcester, came to preach in the district, and so I said to myself, ‘I will go and hear him, and perhaps I shall get blessed.’

“Mr. Murray had been sent by the Synod to visit the Orange Free State and Natal. The sermon was on the text, ‘The love of Christ constraineth us,’ and the way of salvation was simply explained by the preacher. He urged the people to accept Christ then and there. Things became clear to me then, and four or five days after I was brought out of darkness into light. From that day I have never had a doubt as to my conversion. I then saw that the whole congregation was in the same state as I had been, and I prayed for their conversion, and went and spoke to them on the different farms.

“I told the minister of the change that had taken place in me, and soon the news spread all over the district. My relations came in to see whatever this talk was all about, and I explained to them that I had been religious before but now I had been born again. They could not understand this, so I said that God would never have sent his Son into this world if religious ceremonies could save them. They brought forward the case of Cornelius as a proof that God accepted religion, but it was clear that this religion brought him no peace. Soon all the excuses and reasonings were hushed and all the props were taken away, and many of them were converted. The work spread in all directions, and the women worked amongst the women on the neighbouring farms.

“Soon the Christians began to see their duty to the heathen on their farms. It is hard for many to understand the feelings of a Dutchman with regard to the natives, for they had seen their parents murdered by them, and had seen the little children butchered by the natives before the mothers’ eyes. They thus grew up from infancy with revengeful feelings against them. But God's Spirit came and broke down this feeling, which was so fearfully strong in their hearts. My wife was converted, and the two Zulu girls in the house noticed the change in her face and asked what it came from. When matters were explained to these heathen girls they became anxious about their souls. They had no Zulu Bible. So they wrote to Durban and asked for a native evangelist, as there was no missionary in the district. A man named Moses was sent up, and he was mightily used amongst the natives. Then the young Boer boys would gather them in all sorts of buildings, and would take the cart out of its shed, and hold a meeting for the Zulus.

“There are now 500 Zulus baptized members of the church, and they have their own missionary. This work has been going on ever since in a steady way, and visitors have often said that they felt a change in the atmosphere as they neared the district.”

The S.A.G.M. is doing excellent work among the railway men all along the line through Cape Colony. They have a Bible carriage with sleeping accommodation, which runs free of expense over the whole system, with free passes for the two brethren who have charge of it and who do the twofold work of preaching and distributing the glad tidings of the Kingdom of God.

THE SALVATION ARMY, ETC.

The Salvation Army is a power in Cape Town, as in other localities in South Africa. A very animated meeting in the street outside the Grand Hotel used to give the guests on the extensive balcony an opportunity of hearing a version of the Gospel very directly stated and personally applied. One of Mr. Murray's daughters is an enthusiastic worker in the South African S.A.

Among the many good works in Capetown is the Waterkant Mission, mainly carried on by Miss Mary E. Huskisson, on behalf of destitute men, many of whom have been saved for time and eternity by her means. She is a living illustration of the promise, “My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is perfected in weakness.” I quote from a brief note received from her:—

..I do feel grateful, first, to my Master for inclining you to help, and then to you for sending it. I have but two regular subscribers, and our expenses are £12 a month, therefore you may be sure, were it not for trusting my Master for the needed funds, I could not go on. But “hitherto the Lord hath helped,” which assures me to go forward and leave the rest with Him. Praise God! those whom the Lord has brought to Himself in our mission are now many, and, although scattered in all parts of the world, I keep in touch with them by prayer and correspondence, and feel sure we shall meet in the great harvest day. I do indeed ask your earnest prayers for this busy corner of the Master's great vineyard.

Cromwell Lodge, Upper Bree-street, May 20.

I must mention also the Railway Mission, with its reading-room and Gospel meetings, under the diligent and genial supervision of Miss Cleghorne and her fellow-workers.

I had the satisfaction on several occasions of addressing the Kaffirs and other coloured people at the Congregational Mission, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Burfoot, who were our fellow-passengers on our outward voyage. Friends desiring information as to work among the poor, coloured or uncoloured, may communicate with Mr. Burfoot, 10, Belmont terrace, Buitenkant-street, Capetown.

The visit of Mr. Yatman to Capetown closed with a mission carried on for several evenings at Clifton-hill Presbyterian Chapel. Quite a revival took place here. I had the gratification after his departure on two occasions of addressing the converts and the members of the church, and Rev. Mr. Yule, the warm-hearted pastor, entrusted me with a shilling to pay the fee for registering their Christian Endeavour Society, as affiliated to the societies in England.

“The Political Situation,” by Olive Schreiner and C. S. Cronwright Schreiner (Fisher Unwin, 1s. 6d.), is well worth reading. It states in a nutshell the evil, and suggests the remedy.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Soho and St. Giles.—The work of the Soho and St. Giles' Mission, so nobly begun by the sainted George McCree, is still being carried on. Two large mothers' meetings, Boys' brigade, girls' sewing classes, services (indoor and outdoor), gymnasiums, and children's classes occupy every evening of every week. We hope, as the autumn advances, to commence Saturday evening concerts for the people and public-house visitation. Gifts of old clothing, household utensils, small pieces of new calico, flannel, etc., will be very gratefully received by the Secretary or by the Mission Sister, Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho, W.C.

British Syrian Schools.—The objects of the Mission are education for children based on Scriptures, and the proclamation of the Gospel to the adult population of Syria, especially reaching the girls and women. There are day schools, with an attendance of 2700, special schools for the blind, a training institution for native female teachers, Sunday schools, night schools, Scripture readers and Bible women, Female Medical Mission, and evangelistic work among the Lebanon soldiers and the Bedaween. Lack of funds, a deficit of £600 on the year just closed (June 30), and a prospect of deficit in the first quarter of the new year, obliges the committee to write to Syria that—“Schools must be closed and reductions made.” Immediate and continued help is needed to prevent this turning away from fields white unto harvest, where on all sides the people are entreating for more schools. The secretary is Miss A. Poulton, 27, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

Washington C.E. Convention.

THE fifteenth annual Convention, recently held at Washington, reached a high-water mark of spiritual blessing. The delegates numbered close upon 40,000, and from first to last a seriousness was visible which speaks well for the usefulness of this inter-denominational and international movement. The opening meetings took on a high tone, and simultaneously in twenty churches meetings were held for the deepening of the Spiritual Life. This was followed by a Quiet Hour, during which the Spirit of God was manifestly working. During the night one of the large tents was wrecked by a heavy storm of rain, but apart from this, everything passed off without any hitch.

Praise is due to the local committee for the way the large gathering was managed. The delegates were advised to come together from the various States, and these were lodged by thirty churches, assisted by many outside friends. Each State had a church allotted for its headquarters, and the schoolroom was set apart for the accommodation of the visitors with everything but eatables. The church itself was devoted to religious meetings, and each morning at 6.30 a.m., the delegates assembled for prayer. Much fervour characterised these sunrise devotional exercises, and the various state delegations arranged for open-air services in the neighbourhood of the church where it was located. In this way quite a number of persons outside the churches were reached, and it was computed that upwards of 200 persons found peace with God during these Evangelistic efforts.

The second day of the Convention was devoted to good citizenship, and many rousing speeches were listened to, denouncing national sins. Dr. Clark, the founder of the movement, delivered his annual address and urged the Endeavourers to whole-hearted surrender of themselves to Christ. The address was characterised by simplicity and directness, and fittingly followed up the spiritual character of the preceding day. Speakers of every denomination were selected for the various events on the programme, including several Right Revs. and Lord Bishops, Canons, Presidents, Doctors of Divinity, and eminent evangelists. The singing was a special feature, a choir of upwards of 4000 persons having been formed and well trained. So much did the hymns "catch on" that the voice of praise was everywhere heard in the great capital. It seemed to resemble a Christian carnival to see the fleet cars gliding along the decorated streets of the city, and listen to the sweet singers trilling forth the praises of one King, Jesus!

Everybody joined in the welcome the chief city of America extended to the young people. The Government devoted the use of the White Lot for the three tents, each of which accommodated 10,000 people. They also had floral effects in the public parks of a very pleasing nature, including the C.E. monogram and cunningly devised "welcomes" done in foliage plants. The Capitol was also graciously devoted to a demonstration on "Good Citizenship," and the U.S. Marine Band (the only appendage of state which America grants to her President in the musical line) assisted the great choir in an open-air concert. It is supposed that 60,000 persons gathered about the piazza of the historic building, and the enthusiasm and throng of faces will not easily be forgotten.

True to its loyalty to the local Church of Christ, there were no meetings of the Convention planned for Sunday. The delegates attended the ordinary services at the various churches, with the exception that denominational missionary rallies took place in the afternoon. On the Monday the tents were thronged, and as the day wore on it became evident that the evening meetings were expected to be of a special character. And so it was, for solemn sermons were preached by men of fitness as a preparation for the consecration services which were to follow. The writer was present in Tent Washington, and listened to a memorable sermon by the Right Rev. Maurice S. Baldwin, Lord Bishop of Huron, whose subject was "The anointing of the Holy Spirit," which was followed by a consecration service conducted by Dr. Clark. It was well-nigh ten o'clock as the vast congregation broke up and dispersed to their lodgings, and it was felt that the spiritual uplift of the Convention must indeed be widespread in its results. Fervour joined on to practical methods of work, Bible study and prayer, and a full consecration to the Lord Jesus Christ were on every hand inculcated; and it was indeed refreshing for young Christians of many sections of the Church of Christ to meet together, regarding each other as brethren and Christ as common Master and Lord. May the good hand of our God be upon this young movement; and by making the Churches of Christ to be full of consecrated believers, may it become increasingly useful the wide world over. M. H. T.

At one of the afternoon meetings Mr. Ira D. Sankey spoke, alluding to the far-spread reports that he was no longer living, told an amusing story of his conversation on board a train in the West with an Ohioan, who was enthusiastic over the work of Moody and Sankey, and much regretted that it would be impossible for him ever to hear the latter because he was dead. Mr. Sankey, after enjoying the episode, disclosed his identity, but could not convince the man of his existence in flesh and blood. "To show you," said Mr. Sankey, "that I am very much alive, that I will sing for you a solo," and he then rendered with his old incomparable effect, "Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love."

When Mr. Sankey had finished singing, and the applause that followed was hushed, the first signer of a Christian Endeavour pledge, Mr. William H. Pennell, of Portland, Me., was introduced, and bowed his acknowledgment of the recognition of the applauding multitude.

Dr. Tuenis S. Hamlin writes to The New York Independent:-

No such impression of a vast throng has been made here this year as was made last year at Boston. This is partly due to the wideness of our streets and avenues, which are very difficult to fill, not to say to congest, and partly to the absence of suburban towns and cities. The registration this year from outside the city reaches to nearly 30,000, exceeding that of any preceding Convention. But one must stand in the White Lot, and see the throngs coming and going, or face them as they crowd simultaneously the three tents, while thousands are at the same time in the twenty or more churches constantly open, to realise how great is the multitude in attendance upon this Convention.

Bible study has held a large place in this Convention. Each morning President Boroughs, of Crawfordsville, Ind., has taken up some book of the Holy Scriptures for broad discussion.

Moreover, the Convention was very pronouncedly spiritual. This had been emphasised all the year preceding in every department of preparation. All the preliminary meetings of Wednesday evening in twenty churches were upon "Deepening the Spiritual Life." "Saved to Serve" was the topic on Friday. Simultaneous meetings for men only, for women only, and for children, were held on Saturday morning, and were of very profound fervour and power. The sermons on the Lord's Day in nearly all the churches of the city were by members of the Convention, and seem uniformly to have caught its spirit; while the final sermons and consecration meetings of Monday evening fitly reached the summit of a quiet spirituality.

The evangelistic meetings, which had proved so useful at Boston, were repeated this year, and Messrs. Chapman, Mills, and others did noble service; so did the missionary secretaries and the host of returned missionaries present.

The broad character of Christian Endeavour was brought out anew, and more plainly than ever, in this Convention; for example, its interdenominational character. It now reaches some fifty churches, and seems equally adapted to the internal economy of each. It is found, in practice, to increase and foster fidelity to the denomination and the local church, while bringing multitudes of young Christians together, so that they come to know each other, which means no longer to distrust each other. By very far the longest possible step toward the reunion of Christendom is thus being taken without a syllable of discussion on the subject. A generation is growing up accustomed to ocular demonstration that brethren may dwell together in unity. "These Christians love one another," and he will have a hard task who would make bigots of them hereafter. Moreover, the international character of Christian Endeavour has been anew demonstrated.

And, again, this movement is inter-racial. For the first time this year, two coloured men sat on our Board of Trustees—Bishops Arnett and Walters. No members could be more cordially received, and no counsels more carefully heeded than were theirs.

What now is behind this great Convention, of which these are some of the salient features? What makes such a gathering possible? The simple fact that fifteen years ago, a plain pastor, seeking some way of training young converts, was divinely guided to this way. Young people's societies were then no novelty, as President Clark points out in his book, "World-Wide Endeavour." But other plans, though locally useful, lacked the germ of growth. This plan had it. Whatever other discoverers set foot on the soil of this continent before 1492, Columbus discovered America, for he only gave it to the world. And so Francis E. Clark discovered Christian Endeavour. The world needed it, and was ready for it, and adopted it. After only fifteen years it exists in every nation but two or three on the globe. Its societies number 46,125, with 10,048 Junior, and its members 2,700,000. It is not surprising that a movement of such magnitude, but especially of such a character, has won such general, respectful, and cordial recognition as is now everywhere accorded to Christian Endeavour.

Holiday Home for Cripples.

A BEAUTIFUL new Holiday Home—specially built for crippled and afflicted children—was informally opened at Southend last week. For some years the Ragged School Union has had a small Holiday Home open at this watering place, and named after that life-long friend of poor children, Dr. Leone Levi. This, however, had become altogether too small. The recent and remarkable developments of the work among Home cripples has exceeded all expectations. The operations of the Christmas Hamper Fund, as well as systematic visiting in every part of the metropolis, have resulted in the addition of 6000 to 7000 names of little home cripples, weary prisoners of pain, weakness, and disablement, to the R.S.U. lists. Every effort is being made to carry relief and comfort to these, and, inasmuch as many are greatly in want of a change to the seaside, the need of a larger Holiday Home had become very pressing. Hence, while the formal dedication by a Royal Princess is postponed, the new Home has been informally opened by the Earl Compton, M.P., and is now in full and happy use by the first party of little holiday-makers.

Speaking, in his inaugural address, as president of the Ragged School Union, the Earl showed the need for the Home, and dwelt on its purpose, the physical, mental, and spiritual benefit of child sufferers from London. While seeking to do all the good possible to such, it must be borne in mind that the aim of the newer developments of the Ragged School movement is precisely that of the older operations—the winning of the children to Christ.

Amongst those who took part in the proceedings were Messrs. Henry Wood, J.P., Simeon Clayton, Noel-Cox, R. Stone, and John Kirk (secretary of the Ragged School Union).

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 2.

"FOR IT WAS BROUGHT ABOUT OF GOD."—
2 Chron. x. 15 (R.V.).

THIS revolt must have seemed to be the result of an unfortunate mistake on the part of the ill-advised young king. He and the young men that gathered around him thought that the best way of ruling people was by showing a strong hand, and adopting a policy of resistance to their very natural requests. But as the result, the Ten Tribes, never very closely bound to David's line, sprang away from him, leaving him, as Abijah had foretold, only two out of the twelve pieces of the rent garment. Here, however, a deeper explanation is given: "It was brought about of God." It seemed to be altogether a piece of human folly and passion, but now we are suddenly brought into the presence of God, and told that beneath the plottings and plannings of man He was carrying out his eternal purpose.

To detect this Divine purpose lying beneath the cross-currents of human affairs is the prerogative of the saints. In his recent book the Duke of Argyll has argued from the purpose-iveness of nature. With as much certainty he may apply that word to history, politics, the course of current events. All is under law. God doeth according to his will among the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth. Without contravening the action of man's free choice He carries out his great designs and works his sovereign will. Let us trust in this Almighty Providence, which underlies all events and catastrophes, and has a message for us out of each.

MONDAY, August 3.

"SUCH AS SET THEIR HEARTS TO SEEK THE LORD GOD OF ISRAEL CAME TO JERUSALEM."—
2 Chron. xi. 16.

All the tribes were represented in those great convocations around the Temple and Ark of God. The territory of the northern tribes was now under Jeroboam, the gulf between the two kingdoms was marked and distinct. Everything was done by Jeroboam to make it difficult for his people to cross the frontier; but their spiritual affinities prevailed. They were stronger than the antipathy which Rehoboam's haughty behaviour had excited, stronger than the fear of incurring odium with their own king, stronger than the inconvenience of the long journey. In spite of everything, those whose hearts were set on seeking the Lord God of Israel, came to Jerusalem to sacrifice to the Lord God of their fathers.

Does not this foreshadow the unity of the Church of Christ? Territorial distinctions, the risk of incurring disfavour, the necessity of making a sacrifice, these things are as nothing compared with the attraction of our common Lord. Amid wide disunion and disparity of every kind, there is one mighty bond which draws believers of every nation, kindred, tribe, and people together. Each morning we all ascend the steps of the same temple of prayer, each evening we join in one great hymn of praise, at each Lord's Supper, whether taken amid the stately ceremonial, or in the simplest conventicle, we sit at the same table. Eating of one Bread, we know that we are one Loaf; drinking of one Cup, we profess our indebtedness to the same precious Blood which is our hope and ground of acceptance.

TUESDAY, August 4.

"HE DID EVIL, BECAUSE HE PREPARED NOT HIS HEART TO SEEK THE LORD."—2 Chron. xii. 14.

In the margin of the A.V. for prepared the alternative rendering fixed is suggested. The R.V. gives set, "he set not his heart to seek the Lord." This is very true of all of us. Before temptation comes we almost always have a warning of some kind. The barometer falls, the sea birds come in to the shore, the leaves of the trees are bent back. The Spirit of God contrives to give the soul some signal that at any moment it may expect an assault. The question always is at such a time, Is the heart set on seeking and doing the will of God? If it be, if without reserve the whole nature is determined to do God's will at any cost, there is no fear of the enemy effecting an entrance. All day the thunder of its artillery may boom around, but from every side the foe will be repelled, until presently the storm will roll far down the wind.

If, on the other hand, there is any vacillation, if, whilst ostensibly avowing our determination to do the right thing, we secretly whisper in our deepest consciousness that we intend to go as far as we can in self-indulgence, and would be almost thankful if circumstances compelled us to yield, we are almost certain to fall. The will must be whole in its resolves, the heart must be consecrated in its most secret determinations; there must be no traitor permitted who may open the postern gate. Oh, to say with David, "My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed." But this steadfastness is one of those preparations of the heart which can only be obtained through the gracious indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

WEDNESDAY, August 5.

"BEHOLD, THE BATTLE WAS BEFORE AND BEHIND."—
2 Chron. xiii. 14.

Abijah's address is full of true and noble utterances, especially when he speaks of God as being the Captain of the Host, and this spirit had infused itself into his people, so that when the battle was sorest, and they were hemmed in by their foes, it was natural for them to turn to the Lord, and for the priests to give a blast on the trumpets, like that with which the new moon and the solemn feasts were inaugurated.

The point for us to remember is that our enemies may shut us in on all sides, preventing reinforcements from north, south, east, and west, but no earthly power can ever shut off God from above us. The way upwards is always kept clear; the ladder which links the beleaguered soul with heaven can never be blocked, except by transgression and sin.

The Priest is always with thee, child of God. His help is always at hand. Neither height nor depth, nor principalities, nor powers, can ever separate thee from the down-coming of God's love.

The battle is often before and behind. From behind come memories of past failure, the consequences of mistakes, the misunderstandings which have alienated us from others, and make it difficult for us to live as we would; on the other hand, perplexities and anxieties seem to bar our future path. But when the battle is before and behind, remember that God besets his people behind and before, and covers them with his hand. The invisible film of his protection makes the soul invulnerable. The life that is hid with Christ in God is beyond the reach of harm.

THURSDAY, August 6.

"LORD, THERE IS NONE BESIDE THEE TO HELP,
BETWEEN THE MIGHTY AND HIM THAT HATH NO STRENGTH: HELP US, O LORD OUR GOD."—2 Chron.
xiv. 11 (R.V.).

The rendering of the R.V. is extremely helpful. It is when we are face to face with the mighty, and have learnt our own strengthlessness, and have cast ourselves on God, that we estimate Him properly as the mightier than the mightiest. Probably the temptations and difficulties before which we fall are permitted to come to weaken our self-confidence, and to bring us nearer Him in whom our help is found. The mistake of our life, however, is, that we persist in looking at Zerah with his army of a thousand thousand, and his three hundred chariots, instead of towards Him who waits mightily to succour.

God never disappoints our trust when we make common cause with Him and can say truly, My cause is so identified with thine, that if any man prevails against me, he in effect prevails against Thee. It is a great matter when a small state is so identified with a strong European power, that an indignity to one of its slightest officials is viewed as an insult to the greater nation. Identify your cause with God, and yourselves with his cause. Let the interests be one. Then you may count on God's host. Note that the Ethiopians were destroyed before the Lord, and before his host, so that Israel had only to carry away the spoil. Does not that refer to the celestial warriors who flung themselves against the foe in Israel's behalf? Our God is Jehovah of Hosts, who can summon unexpected reinforcements at any moment to the aid of his people.

FRIDAY, August 7.

"THEY ENTERED INTO A COVENANT TO SEEK THE LORD GOD OF THEIR FATHERS."—2 Chron. xv. 12.

We hear but little talk in the present day of the covenant, the mention of which was dear to God's people of olden time. There is this difference between it and the covenants which we make with God. That is permanent, these evanescent. That is founded upon the oath and promise of God, these on the resolutions and endeavours of man. That is full of promises of what God will be and do, these recount what we are prepared to sacrifice and suffer. How evidently these must disappoint.

Do not think too much of entering into and keeping a covenant with God, but remember that the Lord Jesus, on our behalf, has entered into covenant relation with the Father, and the Father with us in Him. This is the new covenant. It is drawn out at length in Hebrews viii. It says very little about our side, but is full to overflowing of God's. Nothing is said of our fidelity to our obligations, because man has been too often weighed in the balances and found wanting; and because the Lord Jesus Christ, as our representative, has already fulfilled all the conditions of obedience and devotion on which its provisions depend; and has also graciously undertaken to realise those conditions by the Holy Spirit in us.

Every time we put to our lips the cup of the new covenant, we humbly remind God of all He has promised, and ask Him to do as He has said. At the same time we humbly ask Christ to accomplish in us such a mind as may love and keep our Father's law. Do as Thou hast said, is followed by the prayer, Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God.

SATURDAY, August 8.

"THE EYES OF THE LORD RUN TO AND FRO THROUGH-OUT THE WHOLE EARTH, TO SHOW HIMSELF STRONG ON BEHALF OF THEM WHOSE HEART IS PERFECT
TOWARD HIM."—2 Chron. xvi. 9.

The emphasis is clearly on the word perfect. That was the point between Hanani the seer, and Asa the king. Asa's mistake and sin lay in his resorting to Benhadad, king of Syria, as an ally against Baasha. Evidently he did not perfectly trust the delivering power of God. In this failure of his faith, he forfeited the all-sufficient help which would have more than availed. As the seer said very truly, simple trust in God had brought deliverance from the Ethiopians and Lubim, though they were a much huger host than Baasha's. What a mistake to send off to Syria when God was a sufficient and very present help.

Now, dear reader, this is very pertinent for your life and mine. We often complain that we are bereft of help, and send off for Benhadad. And all the while the eyes of the Lord are looking pitifully and longingly at us. Nothing would give Him greater pleasure than to show Himself strong on our behalf. But He cannot do this until, renouncing all other confidants and helpers, our heart is perfect in the simplicity and frankness of its faith. What an exquisite thought is suggested by the allusion to the eyes of the Lord running to and fro throughout the whole earth. At a glance He takes in our position; not a sorrow, trial, or temptation visits us without exciting his notice and loving sympathy. Oh, for the perfect confidence which will allow Him to act. It is for lack of this that we remain unhelped, and spend our days in the midst of wars and tumults.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

Katie Fisher's Birthday.

ALTHOUGH Katie Fisher was eight years old she had only had two birthdays before in all her life. I daresay you have already guessed how this came about. Katie was born in Leap-year, and born on February 29.

Now, there are many of us who would think it a misfortune to get a birthday as rarely as that; and I know of some young folks who would like, if it were possible, to have a birthday several times in the course of a year.

I expect many would get out of the difficulty by claiming the twenty-eighth of February as a birthday, but Katie did not think of that. Therefore it was no wonder that the little maiden had looked forward very eagerly to the rare event, although she, poor child, had little to look for beyond the importance of having a birthday of her very own.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher were poor, and worked hard for their bread. They could not afford to buy toys, nor pretty presents of any kind, for the many children of whom Katie was but one. If the little girl got a pair of shoes or a bright petticoat on her birthday it would be as much as she could possibly expect. There was only one thing upon which she could safely count, and that was a birthday pudding.

"When Katie's birthday comes we must have a big pudding," the mother had said long before, and Katie's brothers and sisters remembered it as well as she did.

Now a pudding was not a common thing at all, and an "Eve's pudding," filled with apples and a sprinkling of currants, such as Katie's pudding would probably prove to be, was quite an event in the family!

Katie was, however, to have something of even more importance than a pudding by which to remember her birthday.

It was not often that the postman called at Mrs. Fisher's door, so perhaps the little girl had never received a letter by post before; therefore her heart beat fast when a double knock at the cottage door was followed by her mother's appearance with a letter and a parcel.

"Both for Katie!"

"But, mother, who sent it?"

"Open it and see, my dear," said the mother, who knew very well that the writing was that of Aunt Julia, and was touched by her sister's remembrance of the little niece.

Katie's red little fingers fumbled at the seal, but it seemed a long time before the careful wrappings were all removed, and then the pretty little Bible was revealed. How pleased was the good mother, and how eagerly the children gathered round to admire and touch it.

"Four stamps on the wrapper! Only think! How rich Aunt Julia must be!" For to the little boys fourpence seemed a small fortune.

"Not rich, my child, but very kind and good," corrected Mrs. Fisher. "Katie, shall I read your letter?"

It was a kind letter, containing much good advice and many loving wishes for the little maiden. Aunt Julia hoped she would read her Bible every day and not keep it in the drawer always, not only for Sundays; and, especially, she hoped that Katie would learn to love the Word of God.

When Katie had spelt over the letter to herself, the Bible had to be put away for father to admire on his return from work. Meanwhile, the pudding was not forgotten.

The excitements of the day were not yet over. About an hour before dinner-time, when the children were playing in the garden, a servant girl arrived with a queer-shaped parcel done up in brown paper and tied with a very strong string.

"This is where Katie Fisher lives, isn't it?"

"Yes," was Katie's timed reply; but the boys added, "It's her birthday, and mother has made her a pudding."

"That's all right, then, and here is a parcel from our young ladies; something for Kate, and some apples for the rest of you."

The girl quickly departed, and the children were left alone with the apples, and Katie with her big parcel.

Oh the wonder caused by this parcel! Was ever knot so difficult to untie? Mrs. Fisher was careful not to cut the twine, so we must leave her to loosen it whilst we inquire how the package came at all.

We need not go far, for less than a mile from Katie's home stood a large old house, the home of a little girl with a large heart called Winnie.

When Winnie heard her sister's talking about Katie's birthday, and telling how long it was since she had a birthday, she felt very sorry.

"I wish we had something suitable for the child," Jessie had remarked. "If we had known in time we might have bought some little thing, or trimmed a doll. I am afraid there is nothing; but it seems a pity. Winnie, have you any toys you could spare?"

Winnie started. Ever since Jessie uttered the word "doll" there had been something in her throat; for she had several dolls, to which she clung with motherly affection; and now she felt the time had come for parting with one.

"There is my doll, you know, Jessie, but——"

"I do not think you must give away grandpapa's present, dear."

"Not that one Jessie—but one of the others."

"You must not part with Lady May either, my pet."

"No, not Lady May; but there is my big doll with the brown curls."

"So there is, the old fright! Would you give her to Katie, Winnie? Do run and get her, there's a dear. She is not fit for you now, with her flattened nose, and her washed-out cheeks."

Jessie did not see the troubled look on poor Winnie's face at these remarks on her poor doll, and no one saw the hug and kiss which were bestowed before they appeared together.

"Darling, I am going to give you away, to make a little girl happy who has no dolls, and only one birthday in four years! Just think of that, Dolly, dear! But you will not think of what Jessie said, will you? She did not understand how you and I feel. It is not because you are old, and have a broken nose and pale cheeks that I am sending you away. No, no, dear, nothing of the sort! Your mother loves you as much as if you had a nose as long as Jessie's own, and cheeks as rosy as Lady May's. Promise me you will not mind. That little girl has no children. You do understand, do you not, dear?"

If Dolly did fail to understand, she kept her feelings to herself so well that Jessie was quite pleased.

"Really, the old thing looks very well after all. Katie will be delighted. You are sure you like to give her away, Winnie?"

"I am sure, Jessie. I should like Katie to have her. I am glad you do not think her an old fright now, for she is a dear, good doll."

They also added a tiny teapot, some old teacups, a needlecase, and some books, to say nothing of the apples.

Can you imagine the joy it caused in Mrs. Fisher's kitchen when that knot was at last untied? Winnie would have been abundantly satisfied with the reception given to her beloved doll by its step-mother and all the new relatives; whilst the other gifts were as welcome as they could well be. I was going to say that there was no happier child that day than Katie Fisher, but if I said so it would be a mistake. We read in God's Word, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and the one child who was even happier than Katie herself was our little friend Winnie.

Some of you have already found out this happy secret for yourselves, and I hope my little story will lead many others to seek to brighten lives less sunny than their own.

The parcel which brought gladness to Katie's home contained nothing costly, nothing of actual value—indeed I think the joy would have been even greater if more self-denial had been represented by its contents—and almost any comfortable home would furnish materials for such a token of goodwill and remembrance. Illustrated magazines lying useless in the lumber-room; and even gay bits of silk or wool would be treasures to some sick child, if bestowed with a kind word. Kind parents will readily consent to any reasonable scheme of this kind, if you ask them to let you collect and bestow such trifles.

Let each one seek out some field of lowly service, and do a little to brighten the lives of those less favoured. Let it be done out of gratitude for all Christ has done for you, and with a remembrance of his own words, "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matt. x. 42).

L. A. B.

The Bible Searcher.

Foreign list:—

W. Arnot Craick and Jean Campbell Scott (Canada), 1st certificates. No. 21.—Minnie Lister (South Africa). No. 20.—J. A. Field (Australia). No. 27.—Jean Campbell Scott, J. R. Fortescue, D. H. Marshall, Pera and Frank Sjöström (New York). A. T. Henderson (Jamaica).

No. 29 (second list).—Correct answers received from:—

William Gavin, Dora and Kate Symes, Ethel and H. F. Bennett, Elsie Wright, William and Colin McKenzie, Archibald Bearsby, Ethel MacKenzie, Annie Baxter, Maude Tomlin, Alice Short, Mary Start, Bertha Fowler, Douglas Parkes, Marjorie Hoar, Edith Simpson, Harcourt Hunter, Malcolm Kirwan, Eva and John Gray, Ada Heap, Rene Benny, Jessie Bone, Emma Grodier, Wm. H. Squires, Kathleen Pasley, Lily Clarke, Eva Wimpenny, Hilda Schaeffer, Annie Fleming, Grace* and Kathleen* Dodington, Edith Paisley, Ethel Fielder, Dorothy Cooper, Nora Read, Lillian and Dorothy Bevan, Hannah and Christine Parker, Harcourt Hunter, Malcolm Thomson, Eva Monti, Ernest, Arnold, and Hugh Allen, Isabel Phipps, Elsie Warren, Ida Wright, Theodora Hill, Bessie Cheale, Gladys and Lionel Calver, Sinclair and Moffatt Jackson, Kathleen Cole, Maggie Menzies, Mabel Birney, Barbara Macdonald, Mary and Willie Charles, Thomas Stanier, Christabel Dickinson*, Elma Cheal, Gladys Shaw, Freddie Hutton, Marion Richards, Ethel Walls, Arthur Cordell, Edith and Jimmie Grieve, Bruce Malabar, Annie and Dorothy Grove, Louie* and Nannie Tibbitts, Angus McQuillan, Ada Palmer, Evelyn Moir, Eric Heaton-Smith, Sybil Forbes, Louis Berthe*, Louie Hooper, Norman May, Vera and Daisy Bates, Edith Quick, Miriam Hope, Margaret Hassle, Norman Braby, Minnie Giddings, Bessie Scutelloury, Grace Colvin, George May, and Daisy Greenbrook, Isa and Alex Kay, Cecilia Franklin, Fan Trotter, Nellie, Arthur, Henry, and Annie Couch, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Gordon Remington, Katie Welch, Victor Tanner, Dollie Salt, James and Marian Freear, Edwin Peters, Constance Scott, Christine Arnold*, Edna Poole, Elsie and Philip Willoughby, Jack and Walter Roberts, Margaret A. Morris, M. T. Colville, Eric Chance, Winifred Harvey, Evelyn, Dora, and Arthur B. Jones, Daisy Phillips, Marcus King, Edgar Yerbury, Edward Rainey, M. Lewis Jones, Esther Enderby, H. Robinson, Jessie Carter, R. Berta Melkie*, Harriet Horlock, E. V. Marchbank, Stanley Boxer, Theodore Roberts, Sydney C. Morgan.

LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 30).

1. Ps. xv. 2. To him "that speaketh the truth in his heart."
2. xxv. 5. David praying for God's help.
3. xxv. 10. The paths of the Lord.
4. xxvi. 3. David walking in God's ways.
5. xxxi. 5. "The Lord God of truth."
6. xxxiii. 4. God's works.
7. xl. 10. God's truth declared by David.
8. xl. 11. David praying to God for protection from evil.
9. xliii. 3. God's truth.
10. li. 6. David praying to be cleansed from sin.
11. lvii. 3. God's truth.
12. lviii. 10. God's truth.
13. lx. 4. God's truth.
14. lxi. 7. David praying to be kept in God's truth.
15. lxxi. 22. David praising God.

No. 30 (first list).—Correct answers received from:—

Annie Tawse, Stuart Ellicott, May Bligh, H. R. Compton, Edith Hayward, Muriel Harrison, Rosalind Phillimore, Arthur Courmay, Muriel Jones, James S. Roy, Willie Start, Susie Keen, Kathleen Dodington, D. de B. and Betty Stocks, Emily Bridgewater, Christine Arnold, Daisy Phillips, Mary Ormiston, Theodora Spencer, William Gavin, W. F. Williams, Rose Anton, Jack and Willie Gilson, Eva Monti, J. H. Goodchild, H. M. Jordan, R. Harbottle, Arthur Sanders, Harold Stevenson, Margaret Davidson, Alice Havelock, Douglas Parkes, Noel and Phillis Wright, John Seth, Herbert Braden, Violet Ashworth*, John A. Chamberlain, Arabella Onslow, Florrie and Bell Dance, Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Thomas Harris, Irene, Arthur and Edward Llewellyn, Edith and May Gilson, Allie Bazett, Melbourne and Myrtle Perry, Alice M. Palmer, Ada Heap, Nellie Dowse*, Annie M. Cole, Millicent Bentley, T. H. Beckley, Daisy Groves, May Fell, Dorothy Patten, Moffatt and Sinclair Jackson, Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, Fred Brand, Florence, Victor, and Willie Bellerby, Arthur Cordell, Charles and Tom Hunter, Leonard Browne, Noel Oswald Robinson, Mary and Elizabeth Hall, Cecil Bradford, Annie Cooper*, Juliet Haines, Dorothy and May Vickers, Henry Nelligan, Ethel and Gerard Morgan, Marion Richards, Clara Barnes, Ernest W. Spence, Norman Braby.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 31).

1. Which is the longest Psalm?
 2. How many verses does it contain?
 3. Write out a verse in it which says that God's Word is "sweeter than honey."
- [Children under eight stop here.]
4. Find another verse which speaks of God's Word as a "lamp," and write it out.
 5. Write out another which says it is "above fine gold."
- [Children under twelve stop here.]
6. God's Word is described by many different words in this Psalm, as "law," "testimonies," etc. Give a list of them.
 7. There are three verses in the Psalm, and only three, which contain no reference to God's Word under a variety of titles. Which verses are they?
- Children must please remember to put their age at the top of their papers, and sign their names in full.

Personal.

NORMAN BRABY.—Your cousin can enclose his paper with yours.

GEORGE TROTTER.—Please take a little more care in writing out your answers.

LOUIS BEAUB.—Send in your answers while you are away, and have each paper signed.

FRANK SjöSTRÖM.—Many thanks for your letter. I am glad you are going to answer the questions each week.

"ARDURSHATE"—Many thanks for the flowers, which were sent to the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street.

ALFRED LLEWELLYN.—I hope your wrist will soon be better. You unfortunately made a mistake in this week's "Searcher."

UNCLE TOM.

(For notices of Children's Special Service Mission, see page 24.)

"Wherefore Didst Thou Doubt?"

By REV. F. B. MEYER.

THY doubt has robbed thee of so much. It has prevented thee from enjoying the peace which can live in the midst of storm. It has hindered thee from having fellowship with Me in my walk across the waves. It has cut short the promising experience of the first few steps. Wherefore didst thou doubt? Oh, that thou hadst been full of faith, giving glory to God, assured that I would never have said Come, if I were not able to keep thee from falling, and realise in thee a perfect obedience. Why didst thou not remember that my biddings were enablings, and that when I work to will, I also work to do?

What doubt has done for thee it will do for tens of thousands in the troublous days which are as sure to break upon the Church, as squalls of storm through the ravines of the hills, churning the lake to foam. If only men would not doubt, storms would never affright, waves would never abash, promising careers would never wither prematurely, enterprises which had been taken in hand, presumably at my command, would never come to an untimely end, feet would never slip on the unstable water, reputations would never be lost. Where thou hast failed, millions will fail; where thou hast cried for help, millions will utter the same entreaty; where thou hast been almost overwhelmed, millions will be, though my sheep shall never perish, and no doubt, however unwarrantable, no tempest, however vehement, no storm fiend, however hungry for their life, shall ever pluck them out of my hand. For them, as for thee, I will immediately stretch out my hand and catch them, but they will miss untold experiences of my power and love, because they have admitted doubt to invade and unnerve.

But, Master, how could I do otherwise? All day long we have been pressed and hustled by the crowds, and have missed the quiet rest for which, in the early morning, we had crossed the lake. And in the evening we had to pass the bread and fish to more than ten thousand souls; and then, from sunset till now, the grey dawn appearing through the driving storm announcing that another day is at hand, we have been wrestling with the elements, straining at the oar, drenched with spray, and almost despairing of life. Thou knowest our frame, could I do otherwise than doubt? Besides, I saw, as soon as I had left the boat, how vehement the storm was, and as I saw the wind and wave conspiring together against me, I lost heart.

This might account for thy fear, but not for thy doubt. Amid the weariness of the body and the collapse of the soul, faith would have sustained thee and lifted thee into a region of such heavenly peace and power, that thou shouldst have been what I want to make thee, strong as a rock to resist the pressure of the storm. Weariness, overstrain, perception of danger, and a certain physical timidity are not incompatible with an heroic and unwavering faith, that makes the soul independent of outward circumstances, and fills it with a sense of security and peace when the atmosphere is charged with storm.

But how is that faith to be obtained? Give it to me, I pray, and give it now, that I may never again fail thee in the hour of trial, or lose my footing on the waves. What are the steps to an unwavering trust, never crossed by doubt?

These things are necessary to such a faith as this (1) Vision. Before the soul can step out to claim its possibilities, it must see them embodied in some heavenly vision, and the Son of Man became incarnate that He might offer Himself as the model and representative of what was within the reach of those whom He is not ashamed to call brethren. It is for this reason largely, therefore, that

I walked the waves. I desired to come to your aid, but I could have succoured you with a word spoken from the mountain where I was in prayer; my deeper and more cogent reason was my desire to show that God hath subjected the world of nature, even in its most wrathful moods, to faith, to incite you to pass unperturbed through its murkiest nights of storm.

WHAT I HAVE DONE, THOU MAYEST DO, whenever the need shall arise. The unstable waves shall make a pathway, difficulty and opposition shall yield a passage, the stormiest resistance of the Prince of the Power of the Air shall fall out for the furtherance of my cause. Remember, too, that my life in the flesh is a revelation of the possibilities of redeemed and perfected manhood. Ponder it well. I have left thee as example that thou shouldst follow my steps. Do nothing in the energy of thy own strength, or after the pattern of thine own imaginings, but make thy life on the pattern that I shall show thee. Often I will appear to thee in the reveries of thought, in the crackle of the thunder, in the ministries of love and home, in the hour of trial and temptation, beckoning thee towards Me, and opening the mystery and beauty of a new and better way of living; and whenever thou seest Me arise and follow, knowing that what I do, thou canst do by receiving from Me the courage, grace, and power by which alone such things can be achieved.

(2) Invitation. Thou must wait for this. Often there will be vision and revelation of some new possibility in thy life. Right before thee will stand a radiant figure beckoning thee, the Ideal Self, the Christ nature, the man thou mightest be. And it will fascinate and attract thee. Thou wilt be on fire to leave all things to follow, to renounce all else to realise. But beware, lest thou act on that first impulse, hard though it may seem to thy impetuous nature; be sure to wait till thou hast received from my lips the final word of invitation, Come. Do not doubt that it will be withheld. I long that thou shouldst attain all the possibilities within thy reach; I will present to thee ideals, not to thwart or disappoint thee, but to attract thee to obey, and thy desire to follow will be infinitely less than mine on thy behalf; yet, for all this, thou must leave with Me the appointment of the time and the issue of the final word. It is for Me to bid thee come.

But how shall I know thy voice, Master of my life? The world is so full of voices, and my heart most of all. I fear that I shall mistake some vagrant and ambitious impulse for thy call. So often I have started up thinking that Thou calledst me, and have had to go back again. What if I should mistake, and run before I am sent for!

My sheep hear my voice, and they know and follow Me. If thou art quiet enough and listen in the silence of thy soul, thou wilt hear Me speaking. My voice is always still and small; it can be heard only when the voices of pride and ambition are stilled; it does not vary or waver, or say yea and nay; it is persistent, always saying the same thing, again and again, unweariedly, patiently, with ever increasing volume and strength. Moreover, when I say, Come, there are CORROBORATIONS OF CIRCUMSTANCE, of friendly encouragement, of spiritual example and appeal, that I sometimes permit to accentuate and enforce my words. But thou wilt not stand in need even of these, when thou hast learnt to abide in Me, and listen to my speech.

But how, O Blessed Master, will the hearing of thy invitation promote the growth of my faith?

Because I will never bid thee to attempt what I will not enable thee to accomplish. I will never summon thee to an impossible task, so that, whenever the storm is high, thou mayest reason with thyself: "It is well. My Master knew of this before He bade me leave the boat; He would never have bidden me come unless He had been prepared to carry me through. These are the wonders of his deep counsel, but I am as safe on the heaving billows as on the solid land; the responsibility of maintaining me is with Him, at whose word I have stepped forth."

(3) Abandonment. Thou must leave thy boat. So long as thou art clinging to its side, one foot on the cross-seat and the other dipping irresolutely in the waves; so long as thou art calculating how to combine the safety of the boat and the walk of faith on the waves; so long as thou art resolving not to go too far beyond the gunwale or the help of thy companions—thou wilt never learn what my power is in answer to thy faith. Thou must be sure that thou art called; then step right out and on to the water, and begin to walk, as though thou wast on land. But there can be no fellowship between

THE CALCULATIONS OF THE FLESH and the faith of the spirit, between keeping a retreat open and the resolution of the soul that steps away from creature consolation and help to trust absolutely and nakedly on the Divine power.

This is where my brethren and I have failed before. We have not been shut up to faith: we have not burnt our bridges or destroyed our boats: we have always kept open one door of communication back to our base of operations: we have not absolutely committed ourselves to the power of God. We have been willing to trust God up to a point, but we have comforted ourselves by the secret thought, "If the worse comes to the worst, we can but retrace our way to our old position." Give us grace to trust Thee so absolutely that we may dare to step away from the boat of our own resources, resolutions, and endeavours, out on the heaving ocean, dependent only on God. "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

(4) Abiding Fellowship. Thou must look always and stedfastly to Me. The fulness of God is stored in Me for thee to draw upon. Wisdom, righteousness, strength, and love are mine, that from my fulness should all receive, of grace for grace. Courage to brave the fury of the storm, patience to wait, meekness to endure, power to overcome, are all prepared for them that abide in Me, by a simple living faith. But that faith must be exercised without intermission. Thou must look off to Me, who am the Author and Finisher of faith, and must draw from Me thy resources; and must never for a moment be distracted by the stress of the storm, but hour after hour endure as seeing Me who am invisible to all beside. It is by thy looks that thou wilt incorporate with thyself all my resources; nay, thou wilt incorporate thyself with Me, so that it shall no longer be thou and I, but thou in Me, and I in thee in

A HOLY AND INDISSOLUBLE UNION, which storms shall not fray, nor time impair. Would that such oneness might be mine. "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief." Is not faith thy gift; give me yet more and more abundantly, and nourish my faith that it may be able to receive into itself all that Thou art, and all that Thou canst do, for them that trust Thee.

The greatness of this faith is a growth. Through slighter exercises of soul thou shalt be trained to greater exploits. The young birds take smaller circles before they venture far into the blue vault. Use what faith thou hast, and it will grow; feed on my promises, it will grow more; live in fellowship with Me, and it will grow most. Thou mayest fail and begin to sink, but I will be ever at hand to stretch out my hand to save thee; my power will always lie between thee and the abyss; it is impossible for the weakest of my disciples to be lost if they sincerely desire to do my will; and I will lead thee on to even larger tasks; whereas thou hast run with footmen, thou shalt contend with horses; whereas thou hast stemmed the brook, thou shalt swim the swelling of Jordan; whereas thou hast been faithful on the lake, thou shalt stand like a rock amid the vehemence of the Sanhedrim; and nothing shall be impossible to thee. O thou of little faith, wherefore shouldst thou doubt?

Lord, increase my faith!

Dr. Gustavus Aird, CREICH, N.B.

THE subject of this sketch has long been a conspicuous figure in the ecclesiastical sphere in the Scottish Highlands. He was born at Heathfield, in Kilmuir Easter, Ross-shire, in 1818. His early years were spent among the pleasant surroundings of his father's farm. From his earliest schooldays he showed a ready aptitude for books, and even then possessed the germs of that historic and imaginative power which he has wielded with no small success in the pulpit, and more particularly at the great open-air gatherings at Highland communions. The writer has seen a congregation of two thousand or more sit listening to a sermon by Dr. Aird, seventy minutes long, with rapt attention.

Young Aird's mind gravitated to the more serious side of life, and he entered Aberdeen University, with a view to study for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. Of his University life there is not much to tell. At the close of his course he was duly licensed to preach the Gospel. Long before this time he had made up his mind on the questions which were agitating the Church of Scotland. From the first his sympathies were with the Evangelical party, and with all the catholicity of mind which is the outstanding mark of his maturer years, he has never swerved from his early attachment to Evangelical truth, and what are distinctly termed "the doctrines of grace."

The years between 1833 and 1843 were those during which State Patronage reached the zenith of its abuse of power in Scotland. The dominant party in the State legislature and law courts frowned on anyone suspected of "Non-Intrusion" principles. It was not till January, 1841, that Mr. Aird was appointed to the church of Croick in the parish of Kincardine. In 1843, just on the eve of the Disruption, Mr. Aird received from the congregation of Creich, Ross-shire, an invitation to become their pastor. This was repeated after the memorable Free Assembly of that year. The call was cordially accepted, and the young pastor settled down to the work of that rural parish with no thought of ever being lured away from the chosen sphere of his life's work. From that day he has consistently refused all overtures to change, and many wooers have left the manse of Creich sorely disappointed. The people had left the Established Church with Mr. Aird almost to a man, and for many a long day the clergyman of the parish church in Creich was looked upon as an intruder. Happily, most of the bitterness of those early days has passed away.

In this sphere, so limited apparently, and with surroundings hardly calculated to stimulate a man's higher powers and faculties, one of the most devout souls and massive intellects of the present generation has lived and worked for the long period of fifty-three years. That he should have impressed the stamp of his strong individuality and earnest piety on his own congregation and district is what might be expected. But his influence went far beyond the bounds of his parish, beyond the limits of the county, and in some measure affected the whole of the Scottish Highlands.

About nine years ago the General Assembly of the Free Church appointed Mr. Aird its Moderator, and at the same time the University of Aberdeen conferred upon him the degree of D.D. A man of many labours and indefatigable energy, Dr. Aird did his work single-handed till he had passed the four-score years. When already an octogenarian he travelled long distances and preached in the open-air to thousands with his old fire and fervour. Wrapped in a quaint blue mantle, the very picture of one of the old prophets, he would brave long drives over wind-swept moors to proclaim the message of the Master he loved so well; and in the evening he would shame younger men by his unabated vigour. Among his own people, by the sick bed, or with the bereaved and sorrowful, his very presence was like a breath of sunshine, and many a sore heart had its burden lightened by his wise words.

It is not easy to form a correct estimate of Dr. Aird as a preacher. None of his sermons could be published without material alteration, and this would probably deprive them of that subtle quality which gave him such power over an audience. To him the story of suffering and triumph beginning in Bethlehem and ending on Calvary was the one theme. To illustrate this; to press it on men's minds and hearts; to make it attractive and welcome, he used all his powers of imagination, his scholarship, his reasoning, his very heart. How many in Creich and far beyond its limits trace to his stirring words the first seekings after God and truth, only the Day will declare.

(From Photograph by Mr. D. Whyte, Inverness.)

During the last six months Dr. Aird has been doing the work of the parish single-handed, preaching in Gaelic and English every Sunday, besides giving occasional assistance at communions. In June last he preached to a great concourse of people in Sutherlandshire in the open air, and his voice, now the shadow of what it once was, carried to the furthest limit of a congregation of two thousand. Few men at eighty-four could do this. He is now the only Gaelic-speaking minister in active service of those who left the Church of Scotland at the Disruption. It is understood that he has for some time been engaged in preparing a record of his recollections in connection with Highland religious life and history during the last sixty years or more. This should be of more than local interest.

Loving the people and beloved by them he has spent his days in the Master's service, and as the shadows lengthen and the end draws nearer, one feels that he will not have left his peer in the "land of the mountain and the flood."

The Wesleyan Conference.

[By A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE sessions of the first week of the Pastoral Conference have been marked by large attendances and perfect harmony. Differences of opinion there have been, but the brethren have stated them in the spirit of consideration and charity.

The predominant note of the proceedings thus far has been the paramount importance of maintaining in undiminished power the Evangelical Faith and Doctrine. Dr. Marshall Randles, the new president, delivered an address on his induction into the chair, dealing with theological matters. His address was a trumpet call to his brethren to stand by the old truths, and a powerful plea for the need of distinct and definite doctrinal teaching.

The necessity of doctrine, he said, arose from the practical ends of their ministry. The doctrine of Christ was the light of heaven shining upon the path of duty and privilege. False doctrine was an ignis fatuus. They could not go on saving souls and leave theology alone. The two things were inter-dependent; sound doctrine and spiritual life were the safeguard and confirmation of each other. Then followed a word of warning to preachers. Unless they were to repeat the experience which long ago developed Unitarianism in this country and Moderatism in Scotland, theology must play a prominent part in their teaching.

The question of Sacerdotalism came to the front during the consideration of Book Affairs. Rev. R. Odery moved a resolution that in view of the growth of sacerdotalism and the persistent efforts to spread Popish doctrines among young people, the conference should recommend the Book Room to prepare a suitable manual for use in families and schools. Rev. H. Price Hughes seconded, and several brethren supported this. Rev. E. Lloyd Jones declared that the danger was not only among the children of the poor in the villages, but still more in their wealthier circuits, and amongst the children of official ministers. This brought upon him the rebuke of Rev. F. W. MacDonald, who said that in defending evangelical truth they would need not only zeal but discretion. Some part of the movement in favour of Ritualism in well-to-do families arose from crude and unmeasured denunciations. It was agreed to recommend the proposal to the favourable consideration of the Book Committee.

The state of the work of God received the serious consideration of the Conference during almost the whole of one session. There was no disposition to exaggerate the importance of the decrease of over 2000 in membership during the past year, but the difficulties presented by present conditions were earnestly faced.

The conversation closed with a powerful address from Rev. Samuel Chadwick, the successful mission-preacher, now engaged in the work at Oxford-place, Leeds. He said they wanted no more organisation at any rate. They must be free from political partisanship, and the official leaders must take their place in the forefront of spiritual movements. Each man's influence was measured by his personal consecration, and they could not raise their hearers to a higher level of Christian experience than they themselves enjoyed.

On Thursday evening the Bishop of Liverpool gave evidence of his broad sympathy and Catholic spirit by inviting to luncheon the President of the Conference, Drs. Waller, Rigg, Jenkins, Stephenson, Rev. H. Price Hughes, and other leading ministers. The venerable Evangelical leader rejoiced that the barriers between them were so low that they could shake hands over them; but there could be no Home Reunion while there was a party in the Established Church holding out its hands to Rome.

(To be continued.)

KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 27 to AUGUST 1.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Convention at Keswick is now in session for its twenty-second year. There is the usual assemblage of Christian people from all parts; visitors from continental countries are exceptionally numerous, several of these having prolonged their stay in England after coming to attend the recent Evangelical Alliance Jubilee celebration at Mildmay. The programme specifies many meetings, to be held in four places—the Tent, the Pavilion, the Lecture Hall, and Victoria Hall. So far, there is every reason to hope that the convocation will issue in results as rich as its predecessors.

For days before the beginning of the meetings, some of the more regular attendants were settling into comfortable lodgings in the town, and were helping to swell the large gatherings held during the preceding week in connection with the Summer Conference of the British College Christian Union. In the midst of that week the fine weather of the season seemed to break up, and for days there were repeated and heavy showers of rain, which those who were of a hopeful mind, as regards heavenly things, were gladly disposed to regard as tokens of good, and prophetic of coming "showers of blessing." One need not move much among the visitors before ascertaining with a certain precision that lie at the root of this coming together apart, for a season of rest and reflection. Many have come in the hope of gaining further profit from teaching which has in the past been blessed to their souls. They have drunk of the springs of abundant life, and they desire to drink more deeply, for their own refreshment, and in order to more effectual service for Christ. Others have come with deep longings, such as they know to have been satisfied in the experience of friends and acquaintances. These visitors will have the sympathy of all who have passed through a time of soul sterility and come into the liberty and joy of a life of spiritual surrender and fruitfulness. Again, there are others who know not what they need, only they are sick at heart, and subject to a distressful bondage, arising from petty cares and repeated failures. So they have come to a place where, and under conditions which, as many are able to testify, God has oftentimes "commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." More or less distinctly the needy souls say, "Hast Thou not reserved a blessing for me? Bless me, even me also, O my Father."

THE MOTIVES AND EXPECTATIONS

In these days of intellectual conflict and mental movement there is a real necessity for seasons when the mind can cast itself back on God, and the heart can be brought into a condition of spiritual receptivity. Who will show us any good? is the yearning inquiry of many a soul; and these conventions supply the answer by taking us to the Word of Truth, and showing us that the Lord God hath taught us what is good. The Convention invitation contains the timely word: "Thank God, in meeting together we have not only warnings, but abounding consolation laid up for us in God's Holy Word, and in the assured presence of our loving Master and Lord, in the midst of his people; may we know the joy of 'abiding in Him,' and as a consequence, and condition, abiding in love one toward another."

THE OFFICIAL PROGRAMME

sets forth a list of about fifty meetings, some for prayer, others for Bible study; some as general convention meetings, others for evangelisation and testimony. The large hall called the Pavilion is being used, for the most part, for simultaneous meetings of a like character to those held in the spacious tent. The meetings for ministers and young men are being held in the Drill Hall, those for ladies in the Lecture Hall, and those for girls in Victoria Hall. These last are in charge of Mrs. Tottenham and Miss M. Gollock, while the ladies' meetings are conducted by Mrs. Baunister and Miss Nugent. The missionary prayer meetings, held in the Pavilion during four mornings of the week, are presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock. The list of speakers numbers upwards of thirty, two of them Continental brethren—Pastor Theodore Monod and Pastor Stockmayer—and several from the foreign mission field, including Mr. G. L. Pilkington, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and Canon Taylor Smith.

THE OPENING PRAYER MEETING.

The weather cleared up in some degree for the opening prayer meeting on Saturday evening, which was attended by an audience that nearly filled the tent. There were many young people in the company, but as the Students were not yet free from the engagements of their conference, the number of lads and lasses was not so large as gathered on Sunday and following days. The chairman, Mr. ROBERT WILSON, was attended on the platform by several familiar leaders in the movement. The proceedings were opened with the well-known hymn:—

Spirit Divine! attend our prayers,
And make our hearts thy home;
Descend with all thy gracious powers,
O come, great Spirit, come!

This was followed by a season of waiting upon God in silence, after which Dr. T. H. WHITE led in audible prayer. He invoked the Divine blessing on the Convention, and asked that the grace of humiliation might be given to all in attendance, in order to a fitness for the Holy Spirit's indwelling and working. With obvious appropriateness Dr. Watts's hymn—

When I survey the wondrous Cross, was then sung, for, as the chairman said, humbling must begin in the presence of the cross of Christ.

Rev. G. C. GRUBB next engaged in prayer, asking for the voice of the Lord to speak a blessed silence in the hearts of all, that there might be no glorying in the flesh. After reading Luke xxiv. 25-31, narrating the Lord's appearance on the road to Emmaus, the CHAIRMAN further voiced the petitions of the assembly, specially asking the blessed Master to come among his disciples and abide with them.

THE PRAYER OF JABEZ

formed the ground-work of the opening address by Rev. J. J. LUCE. He said: Are there not many Christians to-day of a sorrowful spirit, who keenly feel the disadvantages and drawbacks under which they labour?

Some may have physical difficulties, some mental, while others may suffer from natural incapacities; others again may encounter difficulties due to their social position in life, and may feel that, so to speak, they are left behind in the race, and have not such opportunities as they desire. One single prayer can turn the whole current of a man's life. We know absolutely nothing of Jabez but this one thing—he prayed a prayer (1 Chron. iv. 10), the result of which was that, though he doubtless had a very sorrowful life (his name meant Sorrow), he became more honourable than his brethren.

God can do to-day the same wonders as He did of old. The Holy Spirit is with the Church to-day as at Pentecost; shall we not re-echo the prayer of Jabez, so definite in itself and accorded to it. If God gives us such an answer, we shall leave Keswick with a blessing that will be realised in our homes, felt in the towns, cities, and villages from which we have come, and that will abound in glory and praise to God.

SO DEFINITE IN THE ANSWER

Observe, first, that Jabez wants Divine Blessing. "Oh, that thou wouldest bless me indeed!" I think he wanted to know that the heart of God was towards him. He speaks afterwards of the hand of God, but first he wants to be sure that the heart of God is towards him. I remember, years ago, laying my hand upon one of my little ones, and I happened to say as she was leaving the study, "God bless you, child!" She looked up, and, smiling, nodded assent, and said "Yes." What a lesson one may learn from such a child-like act! There is your heavenly Father full of love to you and ready to bless you. Look up into his face, and smile, and say "Yes." It is no use our praying in the words of Jabez unless we believe that God loves us and means to bless us. If we were all at rest on this point, and believed that God loves us better than we love ourselves—and we are generally very fond of ourselves—better than our nearest and dearest earthly friend loves us, with what an open heart and receptive mind should we look up to the Father's face and say, "Oh that thou wouldest bless me indeed!" We must begin with we must make certain that we ourselves are blessed. "I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing." What we want, first of all, is that God Himself should come and set us right, then keep us right, and fill us with his love, removing from our hearts all doubts and fears, all uncertainties and vagueness, all mists and fogs. If, through our indifference or carelessness, our positive sins and backslidings of heart and life, our unfaithfulness and want of courage and manliness in the service of the Lord, we have a cloud between ourselves and God, the first thing is to get that cloud removed, so that our spirits may be at liberty, and we may look up straight into the face of God.

A PERSONAL BLESSING;

I wonder what blessing means to you. Does it mean the removal of the guilt of years from your conscience, the lightening of the spirit from a heavy burden, deliverance from doubts and fears, unbelief, or from some secret sin? There the Lord opens the door of heaven and says, "My child, I will bless thee." Another thought: "There the Lord commanded the blessing." Where? Where his people were at one. I am burdened to-night with this—oh that we may be as one in our gatherings here during the Convention. Oh that we may humble ourselves, and love until we become in sympathy, in heart, in will, subject one to another in the fear of God. Oh that the Holy Ghost may melt us into the oneness of the love of Christ! There will be the blessing. We do not all think alike. Why should we? We have our particular thoughts; and the Lord knows that. We do not all agree; and the Lord knows that.

BUT WE CAN ALL LOVE!

And if we get low enough at the pierced feet of Jesus we shall love one another with a pure heart fervently.

Then Jabez says that he not only wants Divine blessing but Divine Progress:—"Oh that thou wouldest enlarge my coast!" God can enlarge our capacity for receiving blessing, for understanding his truth and purposes, for receiving more of Himself in our actual experience. What a sad mistake it would be if there were any notion of finality in our minds in regard to Divine blessing—if we thought that we were going to get a blessing that would lift us up to a height above everybody else, and beyond which, so far as this world is concerned, we could not go. If we have learned one thing more than another, it is that we know our need of learning, and that there is much more blessing before us than we have ever dreamt of yet. May God enlarge our view of his grace according to his blessed Word. May we be subject to Him, and his Spirit, and his truth, and so be enlarged.

Do you not think we may also pray the words in this connection—that our usefulness may be enlarged as well as our spiritual capacity; that God may make greater use of us than some of us feel. How much more God may do with the weakest of us than we have any conception of! May He give us large, wide thoughts, a very deep practical aim, a desire and ambition to become something more in Christ and for God than we have as yet been. We shall need to get very low down for this. Oh that we get low enough to desire that God shall be more to us, and in us, and then through us, than He has been hitherto! What does it matter if we get just a little blessing for ourselves? Rather, what matters is that

THE WHOLE CHURCH SHALL GET BLESSED, that we shall be blessed with all saints. May God enlarge our desires that we may receive greater blessings to pass on to others.

Again, Jabez wants not only blessing and progress, but Divine Power: "Oh that thy hand might be with me!" He wants the power of that hand to uphold him, that he may keep the blessing. We never need that hand of the Lord more than just when He blesses us. The higher you get the more you need that hand to sustain, to protect, to guide. One feels like this—I dare not ask, I dare not receive a blessing, unless my God will undertake to keep me with the blessing.

Then he prays for Divine Keeping: "and that Thou wouldest keep me." We need to be kept from all conscious sin, that nothing may be between us and God, that the Spirit of God may not be grieved, and that our own spirit may not be grieved. Oh to live this life! We may, thank God, not only pray the prayer of Jabez, but have the answer. We read, "God granted him that which he requested." May it be so with every one of us in this tent! May those who come for the first time find out that God is to them more than they ever knew before, and may they have a very definite blessing. Let none of us limit God, but let us expect and receive all that God is able and willing to give unto us, according to the measure of our faith.

Several prayers followed the address. General HATT-NORLE besought that the Convention might leave its mark in results in the mission field. Rev. HUBERT BROOKS asked for blessing upon the world and more power in the Church. Then the solemn prayer-melody was sung, "Oh, my Father, take me, make me," and more prayer was offered, Rev. EDGAR THWAITES acknowledging the kindness of God in once more gathering the people to Keswick. Captain TOTTENHAM also led the devotions.

Rev. G. O. GRUBB delivered an address suggested by 1 Chron. xxii. 19: "And David said, Now set your heart and your soul to seek the Lord your God." If (said the speaker) anyone asks you why you have come to the Convention, answer with a true heart, "I have come to seek Jesus." If an angelic voice were preaching here to-night, I doubt not the message to each one of us would be, "Fear not, for ye seek Jesus, who was crucified. He is not here (in the tomb). He is risen, as He said." Praise God, we seek a risen Saviour, who is at the right hand of God, with his entire being full of life and love and eternal blessing for every soul that really wants it. I desire to encourage you to seek God, for He is the rewarder of those who diligently seek Him.

What now, is the preparation of the heart? Hosea says: "Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord, until He shall come and rain down righteousness upon you." Fallow ground is ground that has lain unproductive for some time. Our being, spirit, soul, and body, are thus compared to a farm, and God wants to be the farmer, and desires that our whole being should be fruitful towards Him. He wants me to bring forth the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, goodness, faithfulness, self-control. May the Lord enable us to bring forth that fruit! God take me, and break up the fallow ground of my heart! Maybe we have come to Keswick so hardened by sin, or by prejudice, or by something else, that no matter what is said, it may have no effect upon us, because our hearts have not been softened. O Lord, and prepare our hearts; break up the fallow ground, that the seed may fall into the soil of honest and good hearts, and bring forth fruit, some thirty, some sixty, some a hundred-fold.

SEND DOWN THE RAIN

I want still further to encourage you. Let me tell you what will happen. First of all, you will get newness of life in your soul. "Seek ye Me, and your soul shall live," says Amos. Jesus came down from heaven, and was incarnate, and crucified, and has gone back to his Father's side, in order to put the very life of heaven into my soul. He wants to transplant heaven to earth, and to cause me to live the life of heaven down here. Let me seek Jesus until my soul lives by his life. "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." They will have perfect satisfaction. If you are conscious to-night of a deep and unsatisfied want in your heart, it is because you have not been thoroughly seeking Jesus. You have been seeking Jesus and something else. We read that on a certain occasion, the people came not only to see Jesus, but also Lazarus, whom Jesus had raised from the dead. May the Lord keep us from seeking others at this Convention, and may our one desire and our sole object be to seek Jesus, the real wonder-worker.

Let us seek the Lord and his strength and seek his face for evermore. Mrs. Pennefather, in one of her books, tells us of a specially happy servant in a Christian home, whose life had become a blessing to nearly all in the household. On one occasion, a lady of the household said to her, "Mary, I wish I had your energy; you never seem to get tired." "Madam," said the servant, "it is not my energy, it is only the strength that I get by looking up." The Lord enable us to seek his face and his strength, that we may be strengthened with all might, unto all long-suffering, with joyfulness. To any sad and depressed heart afraid of that God will do to them at the Convention I would say—Your thoughts are unworthy of God; there is no disappointment in this search after Him. "Said I unto the seed of Israel, seek ye my face in vain?" No, if we, the spiritual seed of Israel, seek our Lord Jesus, we shall not be disappointed. What is the only thing that will prevent us from getting blessing during the Convention? There is only one thing, and that is pride, some form of pride. We read that "The wicked, because of the pride of his heart, will not seek after God"; the lawless man, because of the pride of his heart, refuseth to seek after God. May the Lord sweep away from our hearts all the remnants of pride! Humble yourselves in the sight of God, and He will exalt you in due time. Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Resist the devil; for the devil will try to resist you if you seek God.

ALL THE AWFUL THINGS

THE DEVIL HAS COME TO KESWICK.

He will do all in his power to prevent you from seeking the Lord with your whole heart. If he can make you admire the speakers and the singing, and prevent you from having personal dealings with God after each meeting, he will carry off the victory, and you will go away empty; although even admiring the truths taught, you will have no blessing in your soul. In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, let us set heart and soul to seek the Lord our God, and He will come among us and rain down from heaven the righteousness of his Spirit, the love of his Spirit, and the power of his Spirit.

The meeting, which concluded with prayer, was a solemn hour to those whose hearts were set to seek the Lord in sincerity.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Considering the rain, there was a goodly gathering at the early prayer-meeting on Sunday. Rev. J. J. LUCE presided, and after petitions had been offered by brethren and sisters on the platform and in the body of the tent, he spoke a few words on the consecrated life, basing his remarks on Hannah's vow and its performance, as recorded in 1 Sam. i. 27, 28. As a first principle of consecration, he mentioned a recognition of the fact that what we have we have received of the Lord. Moreover, the Lord has a right to the enjoyment and use of all that He gives. We cannot take the gifts apart from God; we cannot receive anything and enjoy it without God. If so, we should be independent, whereas, in fact, we live and move and have our being in God. If this applies to the physical life, still more does it apply to the new life which we receive by faith in Jesus Christ, and which we live in union with Him through the Holy Ghost. Consecration is not a case of our struggling to give ourselves up to the Lord, but rather an acquiescing on our part in the will of God, and due recognition of the fact of our relationship to Him. Let us grasp the fact that we are the Lord's and the Lord is ours, and that all that we can give Him is his own already, to dispose just as He may wish.

There were special preachers at the various places of worship—at St. John's Church, Rev. F. S. WEBSTER (Birmingham) in the morning, and Dr. HANDLEY MOULE (Cambridge) in the evening; in the Congregational Church, Mr. W. R. LANE, of London; in the Wesleyan Church, Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, of London. In all cases there were good congregations.

There was a large muster at the morning overflow in the tent. Rev. J. J. LUCE presided, and the time was largely occupied in prayer and praise. Dr. WHITE read Exodus xvi., in which the provision of the manna is recorded, and Captain TOTTENHAM that portion of Matt. xiv. which narrates the feeding of the five thousand and our Lord's walking on the sea. Subsequently Mr. WILSON, in prayer, remembered those who in distress of soul look at the waves rather than the Master. It is upon the waves of trouble that the Lord comes for the relief of his loved ones. Beseeching God to advance union of heart among his people, Mr. WILSON asked that Christians might see that when they are not in loving agreement they are breaking the family rule. (663)

THE TRUE BREAD.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR spoke on John vi. 35: "Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to Me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst." He said: When He provided the manna, God sent a heavenly gift for the sustenance of his people in the wilderness; when Christ fed the multitude there was an abundant supply for such as were in a desert place. There was more manna than was gathered by the Israelites; and when the five thousand were fed, five baskets full of fragments were gathered. In the New Testament story, the disciples thought it was needful to send the people away, but Jesus said, "Let them not depart."

When the disciples said, "We have only five loaves and two fishes," how like to ourselves they showed themselves to be! How prone we are to look at our resources or the resources of our brethren, and our friends, instead of looking to Christ's inexhaustible fulness! What the Master did then He can do to-day, and is prepared to do for a multitude at Keswick as well as for the multitudes in Galilee. He is prepared to supply the needs, whatever they may be, of anyone who comes; and it is to Him that we must look, and not to our brethren, whose faces we shall be glad to see, and whose voices we shall be glad to hear. That which will satisfy our souls must come from their Master and ours, from Christ through them.

What a sweet word is that word "satisfy." The world knows nothing about it; some Christians know little or nothing of it. We have come here to be satisfied, to be satisfied with the bread from heaven—to be satisfied with the Lord Jesus Himself. Let us expect to find everything in Him, and to receive all from Him, and we shall go away rejoicing that He fills the hungry soul and satisfies the thirsty with goodness. When Christ said, "I am the bread of life," He gave us, I think, the key to the great miracle of feeding the five thousand. We have there not only the secret of the feeding of that multitude, but the secret of the feeding of every multitude everywhere.

GOD'S GRACIOUS GIFT—

Christ reminds the people that it was not Moses who gave the manna; he only announced that God would give it; and God did give it. God gave fresh manna every day, and the supply was not limited to the wants of the day, as was shown on the preparation day, when double the amount was given with perfect ease. It is a blessed thing to know that our Father has an abundance for all his children, and that He likes them to trust Him. One who has now gone in to see the King remarked to me some years ago, that it is clear that God likes his children to trust Him for daily food, for He sent three million Israelites to bed every night without a crumb in the cupboard; and before they were up in the morning they were supplied for breakfast, dinner, and supper. There is instruction to be derived from the fact that when the sun was hot the manna melted away. Those who know will see what this means. If we lose the morning opportunity, we cannot make it up during the day.

THE VALUE OF THE MORNING WATCH

The bread which was given in the wilderness was perishable, and could only nourish the corruptible life. Christ is the incorruptible food, the "living bread" that does not perish; He "cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world." What are we to understand by the true bread? In a certain sense all food is true bread, true nourishment. I think our Lord intended us to gather that the food which nourishes the body is the type of the true, and that the reason why God made food for us is found in the Lord Jesus Christ. If we had been like the angels, and never known what it was to be weary, and weak, and hungry, how should we have learned the true rest and strength and satisfaction that are provided in Christ?

Now the Lord Jesus is to be to us all that food is to the natural man. You see a little child—how shall it grow without food? How, too, shall we have fellowship with the Lord without rest from our work? The Puritans used to say that "prayers and provender hinder no man's journey" and a little pause in the midst of the day, in order to look up, will not prevent us from doing our daily duty. The child grows, and the man grows strong, by partaking of food, and that food not only enters the mouth, and is made pleasant to the taste, but it enters into the very fibre of our being. In like manner the Lord Jesus would have us so thoroughly to assimilate Him by faith, that our union shall be such as is described in John xv. by the words

"ABIDING IN HIM."

Our food "abides in us," and it affords the strength on which we work by day, and on which we sleep by night. As we feed on the Lord Jesus Christ, He becomes one with us, and we with Him, and we grow up into Him, in a union which should day by day become more intimate and sweet.

Christ is not merely bread, but living bread, life-imparting bread. It is Jesus Himself; not doctrines about Jesus, not a mere intellectual truth. "He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son hath not the life"—whatever else he may have. As the Lord Jesus said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Those who have never fed on Christ are destitute of spiritual life. However much we may have grown as Christians, we need to go on feeding, or our strength will soon be lost. It is the little children who grow, and it is our privilege to be God's little children.

The children have the best portion, after all. They have no anxiety; and the Lord would have us in the same case, free from anxiety. The little ones are carried about; and so also we may be, in the arms of God's love. The little ones get the fondling and the sweets; and God's children know that their experience harmonises with this.

What are we to understand by this hunger and thirst? These both tell us of

REAL WANT, REAL NEED.

The Lord Jesus tells us that these wants and needs may all find their supply in Him. He goes further, and says they will find their supply in Him. "He that cometh to Me shall never hunger." You may come to Keswick and go away hungry. I have known people who have done so; and if anybody has come this year, thinking that mere coming will satisfy, they will go away hungry and prove the truth of what I say. A dissertation on food will not satisfy the hungry. We must be filled first, and then we can hear the lecture. Let us be certain that we receive Him, the Living Bread. Further, what are we to understand by the coming? I would speak very simply, for I remember that before I knew the Lord Jesus, I had difficulty just here. Is not coming to Jesus and believing in Him, the same as seeing Him with the eyes of the soul? The Lord reminded Nicodemus that the serpent of brass raised on a pole had to be looked at by the smitten people. Those who believed God's word concerning the serpent were healed; and those who believe God's testimony concerning his Son will in the same way look to Jesus and receive blessing thereby. "Coming" is just raising your eyes and accepting the testimony of God about Jesus.

How sure is the blessing pronounced by Christ—shall never hunger, shall by no means hunger, shall not at any time hunger, or thirst. There will never be a case of disappointment. Oh that God may drive home this lesson to those who may attend the Convention! Then we should go home as the five thousand men, women, and children did, able to say, "We have all fed, and have been satisfied. There was abundance, and to spare." I think we should then take some of the basketfuls of pieces and carry them to the places where they never get bread at all. How many there are to whom of this blessed bread has yet been broken! The loaves were brought to Jesus, also the fish. He gave to his disciples, and his disciples to the multitude; and through their ministry the multitude were fed and satisfied. I trust that those who come here will have bread and fish placed in their hands, which they will convey to those who stand in need.

NOT EVEN A CRUMB

During my last visit to China I heard of many who have never heard of the Saviour. One man said to me, "I have lived eighty years, and never heard of this Saviour before." Let us feed and be satisfied, and then be distributors to those who have not received. Our Lord said "Go"—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." If you begin to distribute the bread, you will find that the supply increases upon you; the disciples did not lose their meal by giving to the multitude.

A Chinese pastor, meeting a young convert, asked him if it was true that he had known the Lord for three months. The reply was "Yes; it is blessedly true." The pastor continued—"And how many have you won for Jesus?" "Oh," said the young convert, "I am only a learner, and never possessed a complete New Testament until yesterday." The pastor inquired—"Do you use candles in your home?" "Yes," was the reply. Continuing, the pastor inquired—"Do you expect the candle to begin to shine when it is burned halfway down?" "No, as soon as it is lit." The young man saw the point, and went to work. Within six months several of his neighbours and others had received the light. Why should we not be light-bearers, feeders of others? As we distribute the food, we shall find out how good it is, and enjoy it more than would otherwise be possible.

There were evangelistic meetings in the afternoon and evening, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. There were exceptionally large attendances, and, needless to say, the Gospel was presented in a very forcible manner. Keswick never forgets the children, and six or seven hundred of the little folk were assembled in the afternoon in the tent, with several hundreds of adults. The proceedings were in charge of Mr. W. Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission, and a deeply interesting and instructive object lesson was given by Canon Taylor Smith upon our Lord's words, "Consider the lilies."

PLEASING GOD.

The evening overflow in the tent was large. Rev. G. C. GRUBB presided, and the well-known hymns, "Loved with everlasting love" and "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," were sung by way of opening the proceedings. Mr. Grubb delivered an address on John viii. 29, 30, with special reference to the words, "I do always those things that please Him. As He spake these words, many believed on Him." He said: There was such an evident conjunction of truth in the words and reality of the life of the Lord Jesus, that a strange convicting force went forth from his person as He spoke these simple, non-exciting words. The crowd that was listening felt that they could not contradict the Lord Jesus, for Jesus alone of all men could say, "Which of you convicteth Me of sin?" Looking at his wonderful face, and into his wonderful eyes, out of which the essence of heaven beamed, the people were convicted. If multitudes are to be brought into the fold of Christ by us, we must attend to this same condition. Here is the true secret of work at home and missionary power abroad—to find out the secret of always pleasing God.

But you say, Is that possible? Yes, because we are commanded by the Holy Ghost to do so. It is absolutely impossible in the flesh, but it is possible in the Spirit. For example, in Col. i. 9, 10, Paul tells the converts that he prayed that they might "be filled with the knowledge of God's will...that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing"—that is

TO PLEASE JESUS IN EVERYTHING.

Again, in 1 Thess. iv. 1, the apostle exhorts the converts that, "as ye received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, even as ye do walk, that ye abound more and more" (R.V.). Then, 1 John iii. 22 gives us the condition of successful prayer: "Whatsoever we ask we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." So the condition of perpetual answers to prayer is that we should find out the secret of perpetually pleasing Jesus. And if you ask what is the object of the Keswick Convention, or of any holiness convention, I reply that it is neither more nor less than to find out the secret of pleasing God. Have I pleased my blessed Saviour to-day? Have I the same testimony in my heart that was borne of Enoch before he was translated—that he was well-pleasing to God?

Let me mention two states of soul in which it is absolutely impossible ever to please God—two states that the Holy Spirit reprobates, and of which He says that so long as anyone continues in them it is impossible for him to please God. The first is set forth in Rom. viii. 7, 8: "The carnal mind (the mind of the flesh) is enmity against God...they that are in the flesh cannot please God." The Apostle adds: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God abide in you." So the carnally-minded man, either the unconverted man that is in the flesh, subject to the law of the flesh, or the man who has not had his heart renewed by the indwelling Spirit—no matter how respectable, civilised, or æsthetic he may be—cannot possibly please God; his very worship, hymn-singing, and kneeling in prayer are

AN ABOMINATION BEFORE GOD.

And the carnally-minded Christian, who is full of envy and strife and puffed up, is in the same case—he cannot please God.

Another state of soul in which you cannot please God is set forth in Heb. xi. 6, "Without faith, it is impossible to please God." So long as my heart is in an unbelieving condition, and thinking that God does not mean exactly what He says, so long I shall find it impossible to please Him or to have the power of His Spirit in my life. Look at Israel according to the flesh, for they are our example. Were they not all baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea? Did they not all eat of the same spiritual meat, and drink of that spiritual Rock that followed them, which was Christ? (1 Cor. x. 1-6). But with most of them (see R.V.) God was not well pleased, and their carcasses were overthrown in the wilderness. If you want to know why God was not well-pleased with them, look at Heb. iii. for the reason. Although the people had been redeemed and saved out of Egypt, by the blood of the slain lamb, they grieved God for forty years, and "they could not enter in because of unbelief"—or disobedience resulting from unbelief (see R.V. verses 18, 19). When God gave the command to go up and possess the land, Israel, in the majority, hearkened to the spies, who said, "We are not able to go." The minority had the truth with them, as often is the case, and Joshua and Caleb were for going up and possessing the land. But the people would not believe the Word of the Lord, and the consequence was forty years of displeasing God in the wilderness. As God brought Israel out of Egypt, so He has redeemed us, and told us to go forward and possess Christ, who is our promised land, our Canaan. "In Jesus all the promises of God are Yea, and in Him Amen, to the glory of God by us." But if we are to please God we must put our foot down upon these promises, and go forward without fear.

What would please Jesus to-night? First, that we should present our bodies a living sacrifice unto Him, holy, acceptable (i.e. well-pleasing) unto God, which is our reasonable service (Rom. xii. 1).

PRESENTING THE BODY TO JESUS,

though so reasonable and well pleasing, is about the last thing a Christian does. God's work begins in the inner sanctuary of the spirit, then it dominates the region of the soul, and then the body is taken. That is entire sanctification—spirit and soul and body being presented to God. Have we made this offering? I will give you a test whereby you may tell. What about your tongue? Have you presented it to Jesus? St. James tells us that if any man is able to bridle his tongue the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle also the whole body (James iii. 1-5). So what I have chiefly to care about, in order to be certain that my body is handed over to Jesus, is to know that my tongue is in the possession of the Holy Ghost. Does the Lord Jesus Christ speak his words by me or not? Does He give me a message for the person in the house, for my brother and sister, and do I refuse to deliver it? Then my whole body is not the Lord's. After the heart has been cleaned, it is always the tongue that is most affected by the Holy Ghost. The tongue is the outward and visible sign of the inward yielding of the body to God.

The second thing that would please Jesus is given in the same chapter (Rom. xii. 2): "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed (or, rather transfigured) by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable (or well-pleasing), and perfect, will of God." That is, our minds must experience a transfiguration. Many Christians who have given their bodies to Jesus have not had

THEIR MINDS TRANSFIGURED.

Hence, instead of being occupied with the things of heaven, they have a hankering after earthly things. They have a craving for intellectual excitement, and want to read every nonsensical theological book that issues from the press. That shows that the mind is not transfigured—that it is not satisfied with the Bible, the Book of God.

How is this transfiguration to take place? We learn this in 2 Cor. iii. 18, "We all with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed (i.e., transfigured) into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." In a word, looking off to Jesus only, you are transfigured by the power of the Holy Ghost. That is, after the veil has been removed from your heart; while that veil is there you cannot behold the glory of Jesus (verse 16). The veil, though not exactly a sin, is something that hides Jesus from us; and at length the Holy Ghost says, "Will you yield me this thing, this recreation? When the heart shall turn to the Lord, 'the veil shall be taken away' (verses 15, 16). Blessed Jesus, take away our veils; let those little thin things disappear! Free us from the power of things which, although not sinful, prevent us from looking straight to Thee; and unveil our hearts for the reception of thy glory!

The third thing that will please Jesus is found in thanksgiving. In Psalm lxxix., after giving expression to sorrow and pain, the writer says, "I will praise the name of God with a song, and magnify Him with thanksgiving. This also shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock." That is to say, Jesus takes delight in perpetual song in the hearts of his people, and I also think He has no objection to perpetual song in their lips. Let this be a singing convention. Let us praise Jesus, our blessed Redeemer.

O ye saints that dwell in the mountains of Zion,
Praise Him! praise Him! ever in joyful song.

In prayer, after his address, Mr. Grubb asked God to give the mind of Jesus to his people, and to take all unbelief from their hearts.

The early prayer-meeting on Monday was devoted to supplication for the cause of God in Ireland. The attendance was remarkably large, and there was much freedom in utterance. Rev. G. C. GRUBB thanked God for all that had been done, prayed that the Protestantism of Ireland might be transformed into the religion and power of the Holy Ghost, that the workers might be united in testimony and labour, and that many Roman Catholics might be brought to Gospel light and liberty. Among others who took part were Dr. WHITE and Rev. J. J. LUCE. Captain TOTTENHAM, who presided, read Mark xi. 20-26, and Professor MACKINTOSH spoke a few words on Isaiah lxiv. 9, "We are the clay, and Thou art the potter." From the roughest of material the potter can make a most beautiful vessel, but there must first be a process of shaping and moulding; also subjection to its scorching heat. If we would be vessels meet for the Master's use, we must place ourselves unreservedly in the hands of the Great Potter.

MONDAY EVENING.

The Convention proper opened on Monday evening when simultaneous meetings were held in the tent and pavilion. The tent was quite full, with many standing at the entrances. Mr. ROBERT WILSON presided.

After prayer by Revs. C. A. Fox, E. H. Hopkins, and Dr. Elder Cumming, an address was delivered by Dr. HANDLEY MOULE on "The Broken Heart and How to Obtain it." Every hearer must have been impressed with the fulness and force of the utterance, at once practical in character and appropriate as the initial note of the Convention. Taking as a text Psalm li. 17, "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise," he showed that in the Bible the word "heart" includes will and conscience—in fact, everything that we understand by that inner world of our being, which is made to know God and enjoy Him for ever. "Contrite" means broken up, crushed. In the parable of the sower there is a reference to the stony or rocky, that is, unbroken, ground on which nothing can come to fruitful maturity. It is the tendency of broken rock to gather below the earth, and undergo a sort of coagulation. In like manner, in the life of Christian people, there may be a petrification which calls for a repetition of the Divine operation of breaking up.

How are we to get the broken and contrite heart? For one thing, by an honest and simple self-examination, with the Book of God in our hands. Also by looking to our Lord Jesus Christ, and crying for the light of the Holy Ghost. In an earnest application Dr. Moule showed that the broken and contrite heart desists from harsh judgment and criticism; is patient, yielding, and considerate; and by no means disparages those who do not profess the same spiritual attainment. It is scrupulous, watchful, and tender with regard to what we call "small sins." Only such a heart is capable of receiving the Spirit of power and the grace of Christ. It will be receptive of the presence of the Lord who died for us, that He might not only live for us on the throne, but live in our hearts. He can only get into a broken and contrite heart. That is the law of his dealing. He must break before He enters. He must break again if He is to enter again. May we obey the heavenly calling, and seek the broken and contrite heart. May we be kept ever certain that in ourselves, taken in any sense apart from Jesus Christ, we are hopelessly and utterly unworthy to the end; and that also, to the end, we can ask for no greater blessing in ourselves than more breaking and more contrition, in order to a deeper entrance of the showers and a deeper striking of the roots down to the stratum of the eternal water.

In the Pavilion, Gen. HART-NOBLE presided, and the address was by Prebendary WEBB-PERDUE, who spoke on 1 Peter, i. 14-16, dealing in particular with the descriptive words, "obedient children," and the promissory command, "Be ye holy, for I am holy." (685)

The address was directed to believers, and it was shown that with the command there comes an enabling for its fulfilment. Holiness means absolute separation from evil; also the possession of a positive power of virtue, beauty, nobility, grandeur, and everything that we understand by splendour of character and conduct. Mr. Webb-Peploe maintained with expository force and argument that our holiness begins by our being placed in Christ Jesus by faith. Disclaiming that the Keswick platform has any knowledge of "perfectionism," the speaker dwelt on the glorious life that may be lived. "If you ask me with regard to the possibilities of the future I say, first, they are practically unlimited with regard to faith and hope; second, they are limited in that the body remains dead, and that our capacity is limited; third, they are so far imperfect that there will always, I believe, be a discovery unto the child of God every day and hour, if he is on the watch tower, of fresh blots and fresh roots of sin, fresh defilements, corruptions, failures, and follies. But as by the guidance of the Spirit and the working of the Light these are discovered, there is the precious blood of Christ that cleanses and keeps us from all sin."

The early prayer meeting on Tuesday was largely attended. Dr. White presided, and prayer was offered by various brethren. The weather has brightened up considerably, and there is every indication of pleasant and profitable gatherings.

The Month & its Lessons.—8.

AUGUST.—The Harvest Month.

IN the old Roman calendar August had but twenty-nine days. Julius Cesar, in reforming the calendar of his nation, extended it to thirty days, and took one from February and added it to August. He did this, it is said, to perpetuate his gratitude for some special mercies he had experienced this month. Each month of this year bears some mark of special blessing, for which we can praise God. August tells us of God's goodness in the harvest.

LESSONS FROM THE HARVEST.

1. Harvest Promise. A Cheer for the World (Gen. viii. 22; Ps. i. 3).
2. Harvest Hope. A Call for the Labourer (John iv. 35; Jer. v. 24; James v. 7).
3. Harvest Time. A Charge for the Christian (Matt. ix. 37, 38; Jer. i. 15, 16).
4. Harvest Fruits. A Compensation for the Toiler (Ps. cxvii. 5; Joel iii. 13).
5. Harvest Workers. A Co-operation for the Worker (Isa. xvii. 5; Matt. ix. 37; John iv. 37).
6. Harvest Joy. A Comfort for the Weary (Isa. ix. 3; Ps. cxvii. 6).
7. Harvest Home. A Consummation for the Hopeful (Matt. xvii. 39; Rom. xiv. 15).

Blessings of the month of August are the fulfilment of promises of the spring, the increase of the earth, and the crowning glory of summer. It is the emblem of the time when believers shall be gathered into Christ's garner as sheaves of corn fully ripe. "The angel-reapers shall descend, and Heaven cry 'Harvest Home!'"

O Thou, whose silent beauty flows,
To bless the sower's art
With gifts that ever claim for us
The harvests of the heart;
If thus thy goodness crown the year
What shall thy glory be,
When all thy harvests, whitening here,
Are gathered home to Thee?

A young man came to a man of ninety years of age, and said to him, "How have you managed to live so long, and be so well?" The old man took the young man to the orchard, and pointing to some large trees full of apples, said, "I planted those trees when I was a boy, and do you wonder that now I am permitted to gather the fruit off them?" We gather in old age what we plant in our youth. Sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind? Plant in early life the right kind of a Christian character, and you will eat luscious fruit in old age, and gather these harvest apples in eternity.

C. EDWARDS.

In Southern Morocco.—Doors stand open which cannot be entered for lack of workers. Miss Taylor, writing of her work in Marakesh, says:—"God has indeed given us an open door in this city. During the past year I have obtained access to over 100 new homes." She adds that there is not an important house in the city into which, with a little tact and patience, she could not find entrance; but as the workers are not sufficient for those already open she has almost ceased trying to find access into new houses; and for hundreds of miles east and south there is no single witness for the risen Christ and his glorious Gospel.

[686]

A Polytechnic Cruise.

IN these days of travelling facilities, the difficulty with many persons is not whether, but where, to go. There are so many beckoning hands to mountain and glacier, sea and lake, that it is not easy to make a selection.

Among the host of claimants, the trips connected with the Polytechnic are year by year taking a more honourable place. Indeed they have now come to be recognised as affording perhaps the most wonderful value for money to be found in the tourist world. It was my good fortune to secure a berth on the newly-acquired vessel, the Ceylon, for one of the Norway trips, some features of which, being unique in conception and arrangement, are deserving of mention.

From a purely business point of view, the arrangements leave nothing to be desired. The traveller takes his luggage (the less the better) on board at Harwich, and has no more anxiety about anything until, twelve days later, he lands again at the pier from which he embarked. No bewildering foreign time-tables, no haggling or bargaining over conveyances, no risk of unaired beds or unwelcome companions, no worry of any kind, but just rest to the mind and increased vigour to the body.

Our party consisted of 196 passengers, which afforded ample opportunity for pleasant social intercourse, and the formation of acquaintances and friendships which carry with them many happy memories after the trip is over. The presiding genius of the company was Mr. Josiah Nix, whose geniality, tact, and all-round capacity of management contributed in a most important degree to its well-being. At each stopping-place in the indescribable fiords his plans were all laid beforehand. No sooner had the capacious ship's boats, in tow of a steam launch (also belonging to the vessel), landed us with expedition and ease, than we found sufficient carriages in waiting to convey us to waterfalls or whatever other places of interest were accessible. Sometimes it would be a drive of five, nine, or, in one case, thirty-five miles: sometimes a mountain climb; a visit to a glacier, a quiet stroll along a beautiful valley, or through a quaint, old-fashioned town; but never any undue haste or rush, plenty of time being allowed before the boats were timed to convey us on board again. It is not the purpose of this notice to describe the magnificent scenery through which we passed. Neither voice nor pen could do it justice; the eye alone can estimate its wonderful beauty and grandeur. Norway must be seen to be conceived; and to those whose means are somewhat limited it is welcome news to learn that for nine guineas they can be housed and fed for twelve days, and carried 3000 miles to boot, the only "extras" being a uniform charge of 7s. 6d. for fees and 34s. for all the land trips. How it is done I do not pretend to explain; but done it is, and done well.

But one of the happiest features of the undertaking is that the Ceylon is a temperance ship. No drink is sold or allowed on board, and this restriction can be fully appreciated by those who have experienced the annoyance and unpleasantness which accompanies the free sale of liquor on any vessel upon which even a day or two's sojourn is made. Nor is gambling in any form permitted. That a few individuals, whose only object in selecting this vessel is to economise, should try to evade the rule as to drink, is perhaps not unnatural; but the vigilance of the officers makes it impossible for any such to have even a surreptitious "nip" except in the seclusion of his own cabin. The fact that a little may be sometimes smuggled on board concealed in personal luggage will probably lead the managers of the Polytechnic to insist on a written undertaking from each passenger, when taking his ticket, that he will not infringe, even in secret, such a beneficial rule. Indeed, it is manifestly unfair for anyone to avail himself of the exceptional privileges of the trip, and endeavour to evade its regulations, and the managers can afford to be absolutely firm, so well assured is the position of their undertakings.

Berths are being already booked for the Norway trips, timed to commence in June of next year. Little more need be said, therefore, as to the high esteem in which they are held. The difficulty of obtaining a place within even two months of their commencement is sufficient proof of their popularity.

G. E. M.

Alone in British Guiana.

